Herr Emil Naumann, Royal director of church music, has left for London, where his oratorio of Christus is to be produced at the Harmonic Union, under the direction of Mr. Benedict. He will himself conduct the work, and Mdlle. Jenny Ney will sing the first soprano part. We believe it is Herr Naumann's intention to make a long stay in London.—Neue Berliner Musik-Zeitung.

---

Mr. Howard Glover's Concert.—Mr. Howard Glover annually provides one of the most attractive miscellaneous concerts of the season—engaging the best artists available, foreign and native, introducing great variety into his programme, and rendering the performance long enough to satisfy the most ravenous musical appetite. To give some idea of the array of talent Mr. Glover brought together on Monday night, at St. Martin's Hall, we need only mention, that among the vocalists, were Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mad. Amedei, Mdlle. Rita Favanti, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Mdlle. Norie, Miss Fanny Ternan, Miss Grace Alleyne, Miss Messent, Miss Stabbach, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Augustus Braham, Sig. and Mad. F. Lablache, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, Sig. Belletti, Herr Reichart, and Herr Formes—although many others assisted, who have a right to be called "favourites of the public," such as the Misses Brougham, the Misses McAlpine, Miss Bleaden, and others who have really escaped our memory. The instrumental force was no less strong. It included Herr Ernst, Herr Molique, M. Sainton, Messrs. F. Chatterton, Blagrove, and Benedict, Miss Arabella Goddard, etc.

The first great "hit" of the evening was made by Mr. Sims Reeves, who sang Beethoven's "Adelaida" with singular finish and purity of style, and a warmth of feeling which such divine music could hardly fail to elicit from one who has poetry in him. The audience redemanded the song; but Mr. Sims Reeves wisely contented himself with acknowledging the compliment. Mad. Clara Novello was in splendid voice, and never sang "Come per me serene," with more admirable effect. Mdlle. Rita Favanti displayed so much energy in "Una Voce," and so many novelties of style, attacking high and low notes and difficult intervals with an audacity which rarely proved misplaced, that she created a furore, and was re-called with acclamations. This lady has undoubted talent, and appears to be getting rid of her ancient tendency to sing out of tune—the great drawback to her advancement when engaged at Her Majesty's Theatre. Her singing belongs essentially to the Italian school, which she must have studied with extreme perseverance and assiduity. Mdlle. Sedlatzek attempted the rondo finale from Cenerentola, which was an unwise choice on her part. Miss Grace Alleyne was more at home in an aria of Mercadante, and Miss Julia Harland sang a ballad by S. Glover very nicely. The instrumental display in the first act consisted of Spohr's duet for two violins, by Messrs. Sainton and Blagrove; and Benedict and De Beriot's duet for pianoforte and violin on airs from La Sonnambula, by Mr. Benedict and Herr Molique—both masterly performances. This section of the programme concluded with a vocal selection from the works of Mr. Howard Glover, comprising miscellaneous songs, and concerted pieces taken from his operas of Attila and Amista, sung by Mad. Clara Novello, Misses Dolby, Messent, Bleaden, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, Mr. Sims Reeves, Herr Reichart, and Herr Formes, as principals, with all the lady vocalists in the chorus. The selection commenced with songs, airs, romances, etc., written to some of the exquisite lyrics of Shelley. Mr. Howard Glover evidently understands the great poet, whose burning thoughts he has thus endeavoured to illustrate by music; but his compositions, not being written in the ad captandum style, are exclusively addressed in the present instance to the more refined and cultivated taste of real connoisseurs. The beautiful lament, "Swifter far than Summer's Flight," is set with true feeling; the Arab love-song, "My faint Spirit is sitting in the Light of thy Looks, my Love," is wedded to music which is appropriately wild and passionate; and the same must be said of the Indian serenade, "I arise from Dreams of Thee." These three songs were expressively sung in the order we have given them by Miss Dolby, Mad. Clara Novello, and Mr. Sims Reeves, and were greatly admired. A clever song, "The Wind is a Bard," to some verses by Mr. Ernest Jones, and a very spirited bacchanalian, "Fill up" (from Attila), were respectively sung by Mr. Weiss and Herr Formes. The last was encored unanimously. There was also another air, "A wild Disorder dwells," which, melodious and graceful in itself, was sung with the right feeling by Herr Reichart. A well-written quartet, and a remarkably effective sestet, both from the opera of Amista, completed the selection, which was highly creditable to Mr. Howard Glover's talent as a composer, and was listened to throughout with undiminished interest. Mr. Glover himself played the accompaniments on the pianoforte.

Of the second and third parts of this real "monster" concert, we are unable to say more than that the instrumental features were the Elégie of Ernst, performed by himself on the violin, and a fantasia of Thalberg, by Miss Arabella Goddard, with both of which the audience were delighted; that a new nautical song, "Ready! aye ready,"* written by Mr. Charles Jefferys, and composed by Mr. Howard Glover—a kind of patriotic apostrophe to the hero of St. Jean d'Acre—was sung with fervid enthusiasm by Mr. Sims Reeves, and vociferously encored; and that all the catalogue of singers set down by Mr. Glover in his programme, appeared in succession, and sung some of their most popular morceaux in their best manner. To describe these in detail would take up a whole page of the Musical World, and, as we have singled out all the novelties, we abandon the task as unnecessary. It was past midnight before the concert came to an end. St. Martin's Hall was crowded to suffocation, and the audience was one of the right sort, enjoying everything, and applauding the best performances.

Misses Cole's Concert.—The "Misses Cole" is a misnomer, one of the sisters having some time since become Mrs. Alfred Gilbert. The first performance of Classical Chamber Music, however, given by Miss Susanna Cole and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gilbert, came off at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday evening. The programme was excellent. Beethoven's trio in C minor, Op. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was very ably executed by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, Herr Jansa, and Mr. Lucas, and much applauded. The two part-songs of Mendelssohn, "On Deck, beside the Mast," and, "Can I light-hearted," were charmingly given by Mr. Alfred Gilbert and Miss Susanna Cole. The sisters sing together with great precision and perfect taste, which was again evinced in Mr. Macfarren's sparkling duet, "Two May Gipsies." The solos were Mendelssohn's scena, "Infelice," by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, and Schubert's "Thine is my Heart," by Miss Susanna Cole, both of which were much admired by the audience. The sisters also joined Mr. Adlington Wallworth in a trio by Morlacchi. Mr. Adlington Wallworth likewise sang "Deh! vieni alla finestra," from Don Giovanni,

---

* The motto of the Napiers.

Digitized by Google

and "My Heart's on the Rhine." The other instrumental pieces were Mendelssohn's sonata in D, Op. 58, for pianoforte and violoncello, played with great spirit by Messrs. Alfred Gilbert and Lucas; a solo on the violin by Herr Jansa; a fantasia on the harp by Mr. J. Cheshire; and two pianoforte solos by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, all of which were well played. Mr. J. Cheshire's harp performance was entitled to special praise. The room was full. It is a pity that the Misses Cole should have excluded so many of their admirers from Willis's Rooms by the high charges of admission. It is not all who would like to hear them can pay half-a-crown for that pleasure.

CHRIST CHURCH HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place at the Music Hall, Store-street, on Tuesday, when Mozart's 12th Mass, Spohr's Sacred Cantata, "Oh, God, Thou art great," and a selection, were given. The singers were Mrs. John Rae, Miss Arabella West, Miss Hayes, Messrs. Martin, S. Clifford, and Skelton. Mrs. Rae was encored in Guglielmi's well-known "Gratias agimus." Miss West, a very young vocalist with a sweet voice, obtained a similar compliment in Handel's "What though I trace." Mr. Taylor and Miss Hayes took the duet in Spohr's Cantata very creditably, and Messrs. Clifford and Martin exerted themselves with equal success. The room was well attended.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"All they that trust in Thee, Lord"—the 125th Psalm, for tenor solo, chorus, and orchestra—dedicated to his friend, G. A. Macfarren, by Ferdinand Hiller. J. Alfred Novello.

THERE is a gravity and at the same time a simplicity of style about this version of the 125th Psalm, which are eminently appropriate to the text. M. Hiller is one of the most learned musicians of Germany, and besides an oratorio has composed a great many sacred pieces. The present work (Op. 60) is a valuable contribution to our Protestant church-music. It was played for the first time at the Düsseldorf Festival, in 1853, with great success, under the direction of the composer. The opening chorus, in E major, is full of grand and massive harmony. A recitative and air for tenor solo and chorus, "Lord, do Thou well to those that are good," follows. The effect is one of contrast and repose; while the movement is of remarkable beauty, and distinguished by an ingenious accompaniment. A longer and more elaborate chorus, again of a very opposite character—"As for all those that turn back to their wicked counsels"—succeeds, and gives way to another short recitative, for tenor solo. This finally conducts to an animated chorus—"Peace shall be upon Israel"—in the key of the opening, with which the Psalm concludes in a most satisfactory and effective manner. We recommend this work to our sacred musical societies. It would be an attractive feature in their miscellaneous performances. Moreover the name of M. Ferdinand Hiller has weight with the musical public; and novelty of some kind has long been wanted.

"Six Mélodies, en forme d'Études," pour le piano—dediées à Rossini—by Mdme. Montignani. Boosey and Sons.

THE idea of Mdme. Montignani, in these studies, which were composed for the use of her pupils at the college in Cheltenham, was happy; and she has accomplished it gracefully, and with no small degree of ingenuity. No. 1 (in G minor) is the beautiful melody of the Gondolier, from Rossini's Otello, arranged in such a manner as to form a useful and agreeable practice of full chords for both hands. No. 3 (in A flat) is the barcarolle of Dulcamara, from Donizetti's Elisir d' Amore, distributed partly in widely extended chords, and partly in arpeggios for both hands, and in each case with capital effect. No. 4 (in B flat) is a kind of bravura on the well-known unison chorus in Nabucco—one of Sig. Verdi's most striking and genuine melodies. The arrangement is elegant and at the same time showy. No. 5 (in G minor) is a clever and sparkling "transcription" of Mdme. Montignani's own pretty romance, called the "Plainte de l'Exilé." Here the left hand has no easy task to perform, in the arpeggio chords of twelfths, double octaves, etc.; while the second verse sets a regular Thalbergian task to the right hand, in the shape of a combination of the melody with brilliant arpeggios of octaves, up and down the key board, which are further enriched and made more difficult (in the last two pages) by being filled up with harmony. No. 6 (in D flat), an arrangement of a graceful melody (preghiera) of Sig. Gordigiani, is one of the most useful and effective of the set. It requires a competent hand, however, to make the simple tune stand out clearly from the florid arpeggio, with which ordinary left hands will be not a little perplexed. Indeed, if any of Mdme. Montignani's pupils can play these studies even decently, all we can say is—they must be very decent players.

We have purposely omitted No. 2 from our catalogue, since we can find no excuse whatever for submitting the profound and passionate slow movement with which Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" opens, to such treatment. "Let sacred things alone"—should be a maxim as inviolate as it is wise, to all makers of variations, fantasias, and such entertaining trifles for the pianoforte and other instruments.

DRAMATIC.

MARYLEBONE.—On Saturday last, the dramatic season closed with Mrs. J. Wallack's benefit, on which occasion she performed Julia in The Hunchback to a crowded house. Mrs. Wallack's conception of the character was correct and impassioned, and she looked the part well. Further experience will supply ease and repose, the want of which was her chief defect. Mr. Wallack's colloquial points, as Master Walter, were his best. His brief remonstrance with Sir Thomas Clifford, at the end of the second act, produced a call; and from his ease and pleasantry in the little piece of My Neighbour's Wife, we are induced to think that this gentleman's abilities are rather on the side of the comic than the tragic muse.—The theatre will open with an operatic company on Easter Monday.

STRAND.—Mr. Hodson has been amusing the visitors of this theatre during the week with his sketches of Irish character; and we have had the gymnastics of Mr. Lavine and his two boys, whose feats are certainly among the most startling of their kind. This house has been exceedingly well attended.

PROVINCIAL.

OXFORD.—The degree of Bachelor of Music has been conferred by the University of Oxford on Mr. Walter B. Gilbert, organist of the parish church, Tunbridge. The exercise was performed at Magdalene Hall, Sir H. R. Bishop presiding, and the composer conducting.

MANCHESTER.—The last concert of the twenty-fourth session of the Gentlemen's Glee Club, took place in the concert-room at the Albion Hotel, Mr. Henry Marsden, locum tenens for Mr. Charles Swain, occupying the chair. The programme was under the direction of Mr. W. Barlow. The selection concluded with "Rule Britannia," the chorus to which was enthusiastically joined in by the company. After supper, a number of songs were given, amongst which Mr. Delavanti introduced a new national song, by Mr. G. Hargreaves, of Liverpool, entitled "Success to England's Sailors." The entertainments terminated with the National Anthem, in which all present took part. —Mr. Glover's Emanuel was performed on Tuesday evening at the Mechanics' Institution, in aid of the Soldiers' Wives' Relief Fund.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—(From a Correspondent).—Two oratorios have been given by the Sacred Harmonic Society in this town, with an orchestra numbering upwards of two hundred performers, vocal and instrumental—Samson on Tuesday the 28th ult, and Elijah on Thursday the 30th. The principal singers were Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Jane Collins, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Lawler, who sang con amore, and in their best style. The voice of Miss Collins is a fine contralto. She sang with feeling, and honourably maintained her position among the "old stagers." The band (ably led by Mr. Aldridge) and chorus, had evidently been well rehearsed in Elijah. Mr. Redshaw presided at the organ; and Dr. Iona, who directed the whole performance, proved himself a zealous and efficient conductor. Crowded audiences attended on each occasion. The performances were the most successful ever given by the Newcastle Sacred Harmonic Society.

Digitized by Google

CANTERBURY.—The Canterbury Theatre, which was the scene in bygone days of many of the histrionic triumphs of Edmund Kean, Macready, Young, Dowton, Farren, Miss O'Neil, etc., has been sold by auction. Mr. Small was the successful bidder, at £550. The theatre was built in 1789 by Mrs. Sarah Baker, Mr. Dowton's mother-in-law, and first opened on the 21st of January, 1790.

LIVERPOOL.—The performance of the Messiah, at the Philharmonic Hall, when the public were admitted to the stalls and galleries for a shilling, was very successful, every part of the building being crowded. The vocalists were Mrs. Scarisbrick, Miss Stott, Mr. Millar and Mr. Armstrong. Mr. Hirst presided at the organ, and Mr. Wm. Sudlow conducted. The oratorio was divided into two parts, instead of, as usual, into three parts, the first part terminating with the chorus "He is the King of Glory." The same performers intend giving Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, early next month.—The Theatre-Royal re-opens on Easter Monday, when Miss Cushman will appear as Meg Merrilies in Guy Mannering. It is said that Mr. Copeland will shortly produce Macbeth, in the same style as Mr. Kean at the Princess's Theatre.

IRID.—It has been announced, to the great disappointment of our town's people, that there will be no musical festival at the opening of St. George's Hall, on the ground that no available talent can be procured at the time. If this be the case, why cannot the opening be postponed for a week; though we cannot see why the Norwich or Worcester Festivals should be allowed to regulate the social affairs of Liverpool. Surely those two great festivals cannot absorb all the principal musical talent in Europe. We feel assured that if Cramer, Beale, and Co., Mr. Mitchell, or Mr. Jarrett, of London, are supplied with funds, they will undertake to provide an array of vocal and instrumental talent amply sufficient to gratify royalty itself. It certainly seems preposterous, that, after spending so much money on St. George's Hall, and the great talk there has been about it, we should fail, for want of energy and through paltry local jealousies, to benefit our charities, and reflect honour on ourselves. We trust the matter will be re-considered, and that we may yet be enabled to welcome our Queen next autumn in one of the finest public buildings ever erected in her dominions. It appears that the Council have taken the initiatory proceedings into their own hands, and the festival committee, offended at their long-acknowledged claims being set aside, have declined to act. The result is, that between the struggle of the two contending parties, the "Grand Opening Festival" of St. George's-music-hall—so long looked forward to as its only appropriate inauguration—is to prove a "myth and a delusion." For the sake of the charities, on whose account the hall was originally projected, the Council ought to waive considerations of right and privilege in favour of the other body, so that the festival—which the public have been promised, and are entitled to—may be proceeded with.—Liverpool Mail.

MANCHESTER.—The fourth and last of Mr. Harris's Musical Evenings took place on Thursday the 6th instant. The programme was as follows:—

Sonata, Piano and Violin, Op. 47 (Beethoven); Song, "Ah! why so sad?" (J. Thorne Harris); Selection, Pianoforte Solus: "Lied ohne Worte," No. 6, Book 5 (Mendelssohn), "Nocturne," No. 17 (Chopin), "Caprice, La Truite" (Stephen Heller); "Andante Cantabile," Piano and Violin (J. Thorne Harris); Vocal Quartet, "Fly hence with Me" (Mendelssohn); Solo, Violin, sur "Le Désir" (C. Bastens); Selection, Pianoforte Solus (Prudent).

The instrumental performers were Messrs. Bastens (violin) and Harris (pianoforte), as on the previous evenings. The music was listened to throughout with the utmost interest and attention. Mr. Harris's solos were, as usual, examples of intelligent and spirited pianoforte playing. If one out of many gems may be particularized, we would cite the Nocturne in B of Chopin, which Mr. Harris played with perfect taste, and the enthusiastic applause of all present. The Lied of Mendelssohn, equally well played, is one of the most striking and original in the whole of the Seven Books, and, perhaps, the most difficult of all. It is very rarely performed. The new ballad, "Ah, why so sad?" was sung by a lady, and warmly encored. The music is extremely simple and melodious. This was the last soirée, but the subscribers, we understand, were very anxious to induce Mr. Harris to extend the series to six.

WORCESTER.—A matinée musicale was given by Mr. M. Von Holst, on Wednesday, the 22nd ult., at his rooms, No. 9, High-street. Among the company (necessarily not numerous) were many of the élite of the county and city, and we pay no small tribute to the talent of Mr. Von Holst, when we state, that by his unaided exertions he succeeded in riveting the attention of such an audience, and eliciting from them frequent and well-merited expressions of approbation. The most difficult passages were executed with facility by this artist, whilst his touch and expression left nothing to be desired. The programme included selections from the works of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and other celebrated composers. The instrument used by Mr. Von Holst is one of Erard's.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE following are the names of the first ten boys and girls who were elected at the institution of the Academy in 1822:—

| GIRLS. | BOYS. |
|---|---|
| Mary Euphrasia Lawson. | H. A. M. Cooke. |
| Catherine Smith. | Henry Greatorex. |
| Mary Chancellor. | Thomas Mollison Mudie. |
| Susannah Collier. | Henry G. Blagrove. |
| Emily Waring Jenkins. | John Kellow Pye. |
| Mary Ann Jay. | William Henry Phipps. |
| Charlotte Bromley. | Alfred Devaux. |
| Hannah Mary Little. | Charles Alex. Seymour. |
| Josephine Palin. | Edwin John Nielson. |
| Catherine Porter. | Charles Sandys Packer. |

"In the examination of these youthful candidates," says a musical journal of the time, "no great deal of talent was manifested, except by the son of Mr. T. Cooke, who distinguished himself much, by performing upon several instruments, and as the reward of his ingenuity and industry was placed by the ballot at the head of the list. Most, if not all, of these children have entered for the purpose of being instructed on the pianoforte or harp; a great proportion desiring to be taught the latter—claiming Mr. Bochsa as their master! But for the bassoon, hautboy, horn, and other instruments, so much wanted in our orchestras, not one pupil appeared; so that a principal object intended to be accomplished by the Academy, will not, for the present certainly, be carried into effect. If we are not mistaken, there are upwards of forty professors at this institution, and twenty scholars, which is at the rate of one pupil to two masters. No great fear, then, need be apprehended from a rebellion here."

A month later the following were elected as extra students, or "scholars, who contributed towards their maintenance and instruction:"—

| GIRLS. | BOYS |
|---|---|
| Elected 9th of April. | Elected 5th of April. |
| Eliza Mary Atkinson. | Thomas William Cooke. |
| Frances Eliza Dickins. | Henry John Crawley. |
| Caroline Foster. | William Martin Daniell. |
| Alice Goodwin. | Richard Fowler. |
| Margaret Morgan. | Charles Gwatkin Hill. |
| Mary Ann Price. | Charles Lucas. |
| Eudocia Shee. | David Smith. |
| Eliza Walton. | |

From the number of the above only three were to be prepared for the orchestra, and only one professor employed in that department, facts upon which the journals of the time inveighed strongly.

On Thursday, the 24th of the same month in the same year, a concert was given at the King's Theatre, in aid of the funds of the Academy, and all the artists in London, foreign and native, tendered their gratuitous services. Among the names of the singers we find Mesdames Camporese, Caradori, Ronzi de Begnis, and Vestris, Mrs. Salmon, Miss Stephens, Miss Paton, Miss M. Tree, Mr. Braham, Mr. Sapio, Signors Curioni, Begrez, Placci, De Begnis, and many others. The first part of the concert was devoted to selections from Doctor Crotch's oratorio Palestine. There were three conductors—"Leaders," as they were then called—Mr. F. Cramer, Signor Spagnoletti, and Mr. Mori. The theatre was filled in every part.

Digitized by Google

ORGAN INTERLUDES.

THE playing of interludes between the verses of church hymns has grown into an abuse. The interlude has its use, but its abuse is heard every Sunday in our churches. Interludes are chiefly abused in strictly devotional hymns, in which, during a direct appeal to the Supreme Being, the organist takes occasion to interject, between every verse, a long (often tiresome), disconnected, irrelevant musical episode of his own, a flourish or drawl (as the case may be) dpropos of nothing but the vague, straggling fancies of the player.

As the interlude commences, the minds of the worshippers wander, and are occupied with bonnets, ribbons, and laces. Some, perhaps, listen to the interlude, and those who have a refined musical taste are tortured with bizarre flourishes on swell-organ and fancy-stops, coupled, perhaps, with the thunder of heavy sub-base pipes: or their pulse throbs with impatience at the dull, drawling chords, on each of which the organist portentously pauses, uncertain what to strike next—producing a timeless, tuneless, miserable rhapsody.

Interludes are the cause of a vast deal of quiet though resigned suffering on the part of church-goers, who, supposing it all right, never think of expostulating on the subject.

Few organists can play an interlude. Interludes, like all extempore performances, demand inventive powers—the ability to suddenly conceive and instantly carry out a subject in an artistic manner. Few ordinary organists are capable of this.

The interlude may have originated in the combination of a fine organ, an organist who could play well, and a congregation whose pride it was that their organ should be displayed to advantage. Perhaps it had a more praiseworthy origin—namely, a desire to relieve the choir, when a clergyman insisted on having the entire hymn performed. In such a case, interludes are indispensable. The reason of interludes, then, may be found in organ display and choir relief. This relief, however, would be superfluous, if musical tones were but naturally produced: with throat open instead of being squeezed, as is too generally the case, the unfortunate tones being painfully forced through this contracted aperture. Even in an eight-verse chorale, a good singer ought not to be fatigued, any more than an orator who speaks for an hour. But how few have we, who open their mouths and let the tone out, instead of pinching and forcing it.

When the words are subordinate to the music, interludes are in place—the musical effect being the principal thing. But when the music is subordinate to the words, they being addressed more or less directly to the Supreme Being, any needless interruption is not only improper but irreverent. In hymns of a hortatory or general character, not embodying the idea of worship, the organist may suit himself as to length, although an interlude ought to be in proportion to the length of the verse. Those which occupy as much time as the whole verse, or even more than two lines, where the verse consists of four, are out of proportion. A verse of six or eight lines warrants a longer interlude than one of four. The interlude, moreover, should always be a continuation or a development of the sentiment contained in what has been expressed.

The style and construction of interludes must depend on the talent of the organist, who holds the sensibilities and nervous susceptibilities of the whole congregation at his mercy, under his fingers. In devotional hymns, where an act of worship is involved, interludes are rarely in good taste. In the German church, interludes, strictly so called, are never played. At the close of each verse, there is a short prelude of a few notes, leading to the succeeding verse. There is thus no unseemly interruption of the sense; the thoughts of the audience are not distracted by a long hiatus, after every verse of the hymn. In England, a strong feeling, indeed, is beginning to prevail against interludes altogether. But when a distinction is made between impressive and devotional music—between the musical offices of the choir and the congregation—between hymns implying an act of worship and those not implying it—the interlude may be used at discretion. It is, however, not good to break off abruptly at the end of a verse, and commence the next as abruptly again, the organ ceasing altogether between the verses. The organist should join the verses together, or make them flow one into another, even in a devotional hymn. This, a player of ordinary capacity can easily do; giving the worshipper a moment's rest without interrupting the sense of the hymn. There are occasions, even in devotional hymns, when a regular interlude is in place—as, for instance, after the "Gloria Patri." Here, when the sense of the hymn of worship is concluded and another literary period commenced, there is a proper opportunity for an interlude. If in devotional hymns no interlude be played, the number of verses should always be limited to four at the most. It is a very commendable custom in the Episcopal Church to sing but three verses of the hymn, the "Gloria Patri," or "doxology," forming the fourth; and where the verse has six or eight lines, three verses are quite enough.

Nothing is more crude in interludes—and indeed in all improvised performances—than a constant succession of full stops or cadences; and the first thing that a young composer has to learn, is to go on. The gracefully-avoided cadence is an accomplishment of Art, which every composer should acquire. An organist who understands what is beautiful in music will try to avoid the tiresome monotony of this constant ending and beginning of four-line tunes, not by closing his interlude on the tonic, but by leading it through the dominant harmony to the next verse. To recapitulate—the interlude is only in place where music is the aim, and the words more or less subservient, as in the impressive or ornamental style of church music (represented by choir), and in hymns where the words do not embody the idea of worship. It is out of place in hymns which involve an act of solemn worship and a consecutive address to the Deity. Here, a very few notes should lead unostentatiously, like a prelude, from one verse to another. The sense of the entire hymn will thus be left intact, and the act of worship be uninterrupted by anything foreign and extraneous.

---

A LETTER from St. Petersburg states that, at a grand dinner given to Madlle. Rachel, by the officers of the Imperial Guard, one of them proposed as a toast, "To our next meeting in France, where we shall drink champagne to our 'grande artiste.'" "Très bien," answered Madlle. Rachel—"champagne is good for prisoners."

HAYDN'S STABAT MATER.—With the appearance of the Stabat Mater, about the year 1770, the star of Haydn, and, with it, that of modern music, arose. Of all his early compositions, none contributed so much as this to bring him before Europe as a great innovator and reformer. If unable to bear a comparison with much that has been done since, it must ever remain a work of great interest to the enlightened amateur, as germinating that revolution in musical thought of which its author was the undoubted parent. Haydn did for music what Lord Bacon did for science. He cleared the temple of impostors, and exorcised the incubi that were squatting, toad-like, upon its altars. As has been said of his great prototype, he was the "pioneer of knowledge." The early works of such men as Haydn and Palestrina, should never, in common gratitude, be suffered to die in oblivion. They are "the bright morning stars, day's harbingers," less brilliant than the orb of day which they usher in, but still beautiful for what they announce. The Stabat Mater of Haydn, allowing for a little heaviness in the choral part, is full of spirit and vivacity. Though inferior to the "Passione," perhaps his finest sacred work, written many years after, it teems with bold and original thought. The alto solo and the finale chorus, are good specimens of the work, albeit, as aforesaid, its strength lies generally in the choruses.

Digitized by Google

M. Hector Berlioz.—A letter from Hanover informs us that M. Berlioz has given a concert there, with a success almost unprecedented. Among other compositions, his overture to Le Roi Lear and his Sinfonie Fantastique were performed. M. Berlioz was enraptured with the orchestra; and with reason, since it is one of the finest in all Germany. Every possible attention was paid to the eminent French musician, not only by Concert-master Joseph Joachim, but by the King and the Royal Family. The warm reception accorded to M. Berlioz in some of the German towns is likely, in the end, to induce him to abandon Paris and the Journal des Débats for ever.

Madlle. Vestvali.—In noticing the arrival of this eminent contralto in our last, we announced her as Mdme. Vestvali instead of Mademoiselle. We are requested to rectify the error, which we need not say was inadvertent. Our readers may not generally be aware that Sig. Verdi wrote his last new opera, Il Trovatore, expressly for this lady. Mdlle. Vestvali is engaged to form part of the company at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane.

Signor Pavesi, who made so successful a début, some time since, at the Italian Opera, Amsterdam, will appear at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane, on Monday next, as Pollio in Norma.

Handel's Messiah.—This masterpiece has been performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the London Sacred Harmonic Society, at Exeter Hall, to overflowing audiences—which is always the case in Passion Week and Christmas week. At the former (on Wednesday—conductor Mr. Costa), the principal singers were Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes; at the latter (on Thursday—conductor Mr. Surman), Misses Louisa Pyne, Messent, Dolby, and Clara Henderson, Messrs. Donald King, J. Marshall, and Lawler. Nearly "700" performers, vocal and instrumental, were presumed to take part in the performance at the first; nearly "800" at the last.

State Bands.—The following extract from Pepys' Diary, dated 1666, will show how munificently court musicians were paid by the "merry monarch"—"For want of pay to the household, many of the music are ready to starve, they being five years behindhand: nay, Evans, the famous man upon the harp, having not his equal in the world, did the other day die for mere want, and was forced to be buried at the alms of the parish, and carried to his grave in the dark, at night, without one link, but that Mr. Hingston met it by chance, and did give twelve pence to buy two or three." Evans was a native of Wales.

Grand Concerts.—A correspondent asks us, what our idea of a grand concert is; he calls the Philharmonic Concerts, Old and New, and the performances at Exeter and St. Martin's Halls, worthy of the title; but he cannot bring himself to call those concerts grand, that have only three or four singers, chanting to a pianoforte accompaniment. He is led (he says) to make the inquiry, by observing a concert announced in a provincial town, as grand, with only one female singer, and a guitar performer from London, as grand objects of attraction.

The Conservative Land Society.—The seventeenth public drawing, for seventy rights of choice on the society's estates, took place on Saturday, at the offices, 33, Norfolk-street, Strand, in the presence of the Rev. D. Worthington, the Rev. Dr. Dodsworth, and a large number of shareholders. The numbers drawn belonged to members in various counties. The reverend chairman announced that the allotment of the St. Margaret's estate being fixed for the 7th of June, the executive committee had resolved to open the mansion and park to public view for a few weeks, and that cards might be obtained from the secretary. In answer to a question as to the mode of allotment, it was stated that the surveyor's plan would not interfere with the beauty of the grounds, as ornamental gardens would be laid out with the villas. This announcement gave great satisfaction to the meeting. The secretary stated that the eighteenth public drawing was fixed for Saturday, the 13th of May, and that thirty-one members would be added to the rotation list of seniority, making upwards of nine hundred out of the first thousand, who were on the order of rights by date of membership, although the society had only been in existence eighteen months.

New Orleans.—We are informed by a letter, that Madame Sontag sang in La Figlia del Regimento as Marie, on March 12th. She and Signora Devries gave a concert on the 13th, assisted by the Italian company and orchestra, under the direction of Signor Arditi.—Jullien gave, in the same city, an extra solo night (the last) on Saturday, March 11th.

London Assurance.—Mr. Boucicault, (according to his own account), started in life as a poet, with a capital of five sovereigns and a five-act tragedy. He engaged an attic, and sent his play to Mr. Robert Bell. In a few days he called to learn that gentleman's opinion of it. "My dear young friend," said Mr. Bell, "I am sorry to say there is just enough merit in this play to encourage you. But are you not aware that the drama is the luxury of literature? You have begun at the wrong end—you have eaten the dessert. There are tons of the finest poetry cumbering the shelves of managers, which can't get played." Mr. Boucicault put his play into his pocket, and went to Covent Garden Theatre. The attempt to see a manager was desperate enough. "However," said Mr. Boucicault, "I had the courage of a mother, for I had got my child in my pocket. I forced my way into the manager's room. 'What, in heaven, does this young man want?' demanded the amazed manager. 'I want to read my tragedy to you, and I shall not go away till I have done so,'" replied Mr. Boucicault. The manager was engaged to dine with two noble lords, in one of whom Mr. Boucicault said he recognised an old schoolfellow. An introduction to the manager followed, and Mr. Boucicault was invited to make a fourth at dinner. "At the table," said Mr. Boucicault, "I wanted to eat and read my play at the same time, but my proposition was overruled. After dinner, however, I read it. At the end of each act, the noble lords woke up and said, 'Cawpital.' 'Vewy good.' At the end of the reading the manager slapped me on the back. 'That's immortality,' he said; 'yes, there's immortality in that play.' 'Oh, immortality!' lisped the lords.' 'I don't want immortality,' said Mr. Boucicault; 'I want to get it played.' The manager thought it unsuitable for the stage. 'Oh, unsuitable, certainly,' echoed the lords. 'Now, I'll tell you what I'll do,' said Mr. Boucicault. 'You profess a wish to serve me. You are sincere in your professions, of course. You can't play my tragedy. What shall I write that you can play? Come, that's business.' The manager started: the noble lords were taken aback. 'What does he mean by our being sincere in our professions?' asked one of the other. 'Dem'd if I know,' was the reply. 'Write,' said the manager, 'a five-act comedy, depicting London fashionable life as it exists to-day.' 'What can he write about?' asked one of the lords. 'Oh,' replied Mr. Boucicault, 'I'll find enough to write when I set about it,' and I took his measure as I said so. In a month from that time he figured on paper as Sir Harcourt Courtly, and my comedy of London Assurance was in rehearsal at Covent Garden."

NOTICE.

Managers of Theatres, Concerts, Exhibitions, etc., are politely informed that NO ONE has any authority to ask for orders or admissions on the part of the Musical World. All applications of the kind should be refused.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

Monday.—Mr. Travers's National Entertainment, Music Hall, Store Street. Eight o'clock.

Mr. W. L. Philips's Grand Concert, St. Martin's Hall.

Wednesday.—W. H. Holmes's Performance of Pianoforte Music, Hanover Square. Two o'clock.

Mr. Hullah—Acis and Galatea, &c., St. Martin's Hall.

Friday.—Mr. Walter Macfarren's Soirée Musicale, 27, Queen Anne Street.

Mr. Lucas's Classical Chamber Concert, 54, Berners Street. Half-past Eight.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NELSON—THE LIFE OF A SAILOR. Illustrated by Dibdin's Songs. Mr. TRAVERS' NATIONAL ENTERTAINMENT every Monday Evening, at the Music Hall, Store-street, at Eight o'clock. Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d.; Private Boxes of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street, and of Mr. Travers, 48 Torrington-square.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL OPERA,

DRURY LANE.

ESTABLISHED FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF

GRAND OPERA,

IN

GERMAN AND ITALIAN,

WITH GRAND BALLET,

ON A SCALE OF MAGNITUDE AND COMPLETENESS SIMILAR TO THAT OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTINENTAL THEATRES,

And at Ordinary Playhouse Prices.

THE THEATRE WILL OPEN

On MONDAY, April 17th,

WITH BELLINI'S OPERA

"NORMA."

Norma ... ... ... Mdme. CARADORI.
Adelgisa ... Mdlle. SEDLATZEK. Clotilda ... Mdme. SONDHEIM.
Pollio ... ... Sig. PAVESI.
Flavio ... Sig. SANTI. Oroveso ... Sig. ARNOLDI.
Conductor ... ... Herr LINDPAINTNER.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Stalls, 7s. Dress Circle, 5s. Upper Boxes, 3s. Pit, 2s. Gallery, 1s.

 The Prospectus, with full particulars, will be published on Monday.

ADDRESS.

The establishment of a New Operatic Institute claims from its directors a statement of their views, and the means at their disposal.

It has been a standing reproach "that England is not a musical country." Nothing can be further from the truth. In no country is musical talent more readily appreciated, or more liberally rewarded; yet in no country are so few able to enjoy it. The love of music in England is unquestionable, and exhibits itself on all occasions where the price of admission does not act as an impediment. While in London advances have been successfully made in every branch of concert music to supply the wants of the public at moderate prices—witness the performances of M. Jullien, Mr. Hullah, the Sacred Harmonic and New Philharmonic Societies—Opera has comparatively stood still, if, indeed, it has not retrograded. It is true a second Italian Opera was established some seven years since—but with little benefit to the general public. Appealing, like Her Majesty's Theatre, exclusively to the wealthy, it has created no new class of supporters; and the consequence is that the London public have continued to remain without an Opera of any kind, except at a very high price of admission.

The Germans, Italians and French, in their own countries, can command an Opera at such moderate terms, that it is to them a popular and habitual, not an exceptional entertainment. The average prices of admission are even less than those at our minor theatres. The English, equally appreciating operatic music, are debarred from its enjoyment by prices which prudence rejects, often even where the means permit. The Directors of the Royal Opera believe it essential to a popular opera, that while its artistes must be of undoubted talent, the works performed of the highest order, and the execution as complete as possible, it should be not less available to the public, at a charge so moderate as to come within the means of all classes. The closing of Her Majesty's Theatre having left a great number of eminent artists disengaged, the Directors believed the present a favourable opportunity for the establishment of the Royal Opera. They trust to be able to prove their claims to public encouragement. Upon the support of those who have hitherto been debarred from such an amusement, they especially rely; and they are not the less confident of being able to deserve the patronage of the aristocratic and wealthy.

The Directors are happy to announce that they have concluded an engagement with the lessee of the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane (E. T. Smith, Esq.), on most favourable terms, for the use of his theatre (which will be thoroughly cleaned and redecorated), from Easter to September of the present year, with the right of renewal for a similar term, in 1855 and 1856—before which they trust that the Royal Opera may be established on a firm basis.

With this preliminary, the Directors beg leave to submit their Prospectus to the nobility and the public in general. They solicit patronage with the conviction that their claims are legitimate, and will ultimately enable them to create a class of supporters of their own, without prejudice to others.

---

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Handel's Acis and Galatea, Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, with the Overture, and a Selection from Weber's Oberon, will be performed on Wednesday, April 19th, under the direction of Mr. John Hullah. Principal performers—Madame Weiss, Miss Dethridge, Miss Poole, Mr. Augustus Braham, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Weiss. Pianoforte—Herr Pauer. Tickets, 1s.; Galleries, 2s. 6d.; Stalls, 5s. Doors open at Seven, commence at Half-past

---

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S FIRST CHAMBER CONCERT will take place on Friday Evening next, when he will perform Mozart's Fantasia in C minor, Mendelssohn's Fantasia in F Sharp minor, and Solos of his own; also Beethoven's Violin Sonata in F; a Violin Sonata (MS.); and a Pianoforte Duo (MS.) of his own composition; assisted by Mr. Blagrove and Mr. Lindsay Sloper. Vocalists—Miss Amy Dolby, Madame and Signor Ferrari. The Second Concert will take place on May 12, when Miss Dolby, Mr. Weiss, Mr. W. H. Holmes, and Mr. Lucas, &c., will appear. Subscription, 15s.; double ditto, 25s.; single tickets, 10s. 6d.; to subscribers, 7s. 6d.; to be had of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street; and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58, Albert-street, Regent's-park.

---

MISS GUSELDA ARCHER (Pupil of Mr. Aspull), has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, the 10th of May, 1854. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Katharine Smith, Miss Marion Adam, and Miss Binckes; Mr. Frank Bodda and Herr P. de Becker. Harp—Mr. Chatterton. Pianoforte—Miss Guselda Archer. Conductor, Mr. Aspull. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; Single tickets, 7s., and family tickets to admit four, one guinea. To be had at the Music Warehouses, and of Miss Archer, 451, Oxford-street.

---

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her Two Annual Matinées of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), under the patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, The Most Noble the Marchioness of Camden, The Right Honourable the Countess of Bradford, The Honourable Lady Isabella Stewart, The Honourable Lady Molesworth, Lady Carmichael Anstruther, &c., will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, on Saturday, May 20, and Wednesday, June 14, when she will be assisted by M. Sainton, Signor Piatti, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, with other distinguished Artists. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, Reserved Seat, 15s.; Ticket, for either Matinée, 7s.; Reserved Seat, 10s. 6d.; to be had at Ebers' Library, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

---

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

---

PHILHARMONIC ROOMS, Newman-street, Oxford-street.—These elegant, commodious, and fashionable Rooms, capable of containing upwards of 1000 persons, are open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Entertainments, Public Meetings, &c. For terms, address to Mr. CHARLES COTTON, proprietor, as above, where also all letters, respecting engagements, &c., for him are requested to be addressed.

---

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

---

MR. FRANK BODDA begs to inform his Friends and Pupils he has removed to No. 2, Nottingham-terrace, York Gate, Regent's-park.

Digitized by Google

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

UPRIGHT GRAND PIANOFORTES, with PATENT METALLIC ENTIRE FRAME, for all Climates, and NEW ROYAL VICTORIA REPEAT. Pianists, and the Musical World, are respectfully invited to inspect and test these Pianofortes, which have now attained the long-sought properties of permanence, quantity, and quality of tone, standing well in tune, with the most prompt and light touch. The purchasers of Pianos have now the advantage of selecting an Instrument to their own taste, which, being of itself permanent, can be sent to any distance without injurious effects. The great improvements taking place around us in the mechanical arts and manufactures, has rendered it necessary that the Pianoforte should be included in the number. The difficult obstacles to conquer in the making of Pianos is, without doubt, that which results from the pressure occasioned by the extreme tension on the strings, and also from the dryness or humidity of the atmosphere, causing the wood placed at the back to expand, sometimes to unglue, and always to force them to rest upon the sounding-board, rendering the instrument (sooner or later) valueless, and significantly expressed by the common observation of "My Piano has lost its tone!" The defects of the ordinary, inefficient, and too weak construction in wood—or with metallic plates—is completely superseded by WOOLLEY'S PATENT METALLIC ENTIRE FRAME, FOR ALL CLIMATES. The frame consists of an entire construction of iron, preventing the possibility of the least shrinking in any direction, and producing positive permanence; a frame of wood is also attached to the iron, which gives it the desired quality of fulness, and greatly increased duration. It is obvious that any thickness of stringing can be put on these frames, without fear of giving way—the tone is increased in volume—is rendered perfect in quality—and from the enormous resistance contained in the frame, the strings throw off their "Real Harmonics."—MECHANISM.—THE NEW ROYAL VICTORIA REPEAT. The power of tone and resistance in the frame, suggests the desirability of a very powerful blow in the hammer. This is completely effected by the "New Royal Victoria Repeat;" the addition to these Pianos having a blow much more powerful than any hitherto produced—combining all the requisites of force, ease, variety of light and shade, superior damping, perfect check, and an untiring repetition, which is produced from an action not likely to get out of order. Mr. Woolley begs to draw attention to the applause which M. Billet elicited at his Classical Concerts at St. Martin's Hall, for the beautiful intonation of this instrument. These Pianos may be seen and purchased at L. L. Lee's Warerooms, 48, Albemarle-street, London; and all the principal Provincial Towns. Woolley and Co., Patentees and Manufacturers.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed. J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

MADLLE. RITA FAVANTI leaves Town to-day, the 15th, to fulfil an engagement at Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Belfast, and will return to London on the 10th of May. All letters to be addressed to her residence, 13, Baker-street, Portman-square.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

HARMONIUMS AND SERAPHINES cheaper than at any other house in London, commencing at Six Guineas. Concertinas in great variety, with the latest improvements, from Two Guineas. Several Finger Organs and Pedal Harmoniums on sale. Vibrators supplied to order. Pianofortes, new and second-hand, on sale or hire, at prices to meet the views of all classes—Manufactory and show rooms, 7, Finsbury Pavement—William Sprague, proprietor.

I and I. ERAT, PATENT HARP MANUFACTURERS, 23, Berners-street, Oxford-street, beg to inform the nobility, gentry, and the public, that they are now manufacturing a light and elegant, small-sized double-movement HARP, strongly recommended by the faculty for the use of young ladies and those of delicate health, the large Harp being found much too heavy for general practice. A large assortment of instruments, harps, and pianofortes for sale or hire on moderate terms. Harps and pianos taken in exchange. Repairs of all kinds executed. The suspension sounding board, as invented by I. and I. Erat for N. C. Bochsa; see his First Six Weeks' Instruction for the Harp. Tunings attended to. Strings and every requisite always on hand.

A NEW APPROPRIATE SONG, by CAPTAIN ARMSTRONG.—"WARRIORS OF THE WAVE," splendidly illustrated with a portrait of Nelson in colours. Price 3s.

I.

I sing of England's glory, of her glory and her pride;
For I toast the true, who fight in blue, upon old Neptune's tide;
Britannia's sons of battle, who Vict'ry's laurels reap,
At valour's shrine, in ev'ry clime, as pilgrims of the Deep.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

II.

There's not a wave in any sea but British tars have plough'd;
There's not a shore but's heard the roar of Britain's thunders loud;
There's not a tongue but's quick to tell how valiantly they fight;
Nor woman's eye but beams with joy when sailors heave in sight.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

III.

Yes, England's floating bulwarks, bathed with her NELSON'S blood,
Shall nobly ride, in conqu'ring pride, sole rulers of the flood;
To guard their Queen and country, that home they'd die to save,
Their birth-isle dear, that loves to rear the beauteous and the brave.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

By the same author, "WELLINGTON'S MARCH OF VICTORY," with portrait of Wellington, 2s. 6d.

MADAME MONTIGNANI'S COMPOSITIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Six Melodies en forme d'Etudes ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Nuits d'Italie—Cantilene ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Pensée d'une Jeune Fille ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Souvenir d'Italie—Air Variée ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Allegrezza Etude ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| La Festa—Morceau brillante ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Premier Amour, Romance ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |

Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

Just Published, Nos. 1 to 12 of

CHAPPELL'S HARMONIUM JOURNAL,

BEING A SELECTION OF

CELEBRATED OPERATIC AND SACRED SUBJECTS,

Arranged expressly for the Harmonium, by Dr. RIMBAULT.

Price of Each Number, 2s.

ALSO A SELECTION OF

FAVOURITE PSALM AND HYMN TUNES,

Arranged for the Harmonium, price 2s. 6d.; and as Duets for the Harmonium and Pianoforte, by Panseron,

BEETHOVEN'S ADELAIDA, Price 4s., and BEETHOVEN'S CELEBRATED ANDANTE, Price 4s.

OSBORNE'S SUMMER'S EVE.

Just Published, by this popular Composer, price 3s., a Companion to his "EVENING DEW" and "SUNBEAM."

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

---

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Marche Turque ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet No 1, Op. 23 ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in C major, No. 3, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in A minor, No. 4, Op. 20 ... ... | Silas. |
| March composed for the Sultan ... ... | Rossini. |
| Marche aux Flambeaux, 5s. ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Fantasie de Salon from "Le Prophète" ... | Oesten. |
| Marche des Slovaques ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| La Source, Caprice ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Marche Militaire ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Estelle ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. Richards. |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

---

"SAY, MY HEART, CAN THIS BE LOVE?"—Composed by W. Vincent Wallace, is published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., London. Price 2s. Who also publiah Silas' "Oh, would I were yon Silver Moonbeam," sung by Madame Castellan. Price 2s. May be had of all Music and Book-sellers.

---

"PASSED AWAY TO HEAVEN."—"Joyful, Joyful Spring." "The Spring and the Summer both are Past." "Say, my Heart, can this be Love." By W. Vincent Wallace. "These four songs, within the compass of a moderate mezzo-soprano voice, are among the best English songs that have been published."—Athenæum.—Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street, London.

---

TEN NEW ITALIAN SONGS and DUETS by GORDIGIANI, published this day by BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.

1. O Miei Pensier, Canto Popolare, 1s. 6d.
2. Esicenza, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
3. La Ciambella idem idem, 1s. 6d.
4. La Pipa del Nonno, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
5. Amora t' amo, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
6. Il None di mia Madre, Canto Popolare, 1s. 6d;
7. Canto e Ballo, Scena a due Voci, 2s.
8. La Cerca, Duettino, 1s. 6d.
9. Il Maggio, Notturnino a due Voci, 2s.
10. Pastorale, a due Voci, 2s.

---

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ.—The applause which has greeted the performance of this Waltz every evening during the last week at the Argyll Rooms, has been quite unprecedented. It is published this morning, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. The band parts will be ready on Tuesday, price 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

---

"YES! 'TIS A SPELL:" Romance, sung by Mr. ELLIOT GALER, with nightly double encores, in Duggan's successful opera of "Leonie," as performed at Drury-lane Theatre. "The gem of the opera was a delicious little romance, 'Yes! 'tis a spell,' which was twice encored. This will, unquestionably, become one of the popular songs of the season."—Sunday Times. Campbell, Ransford, and Co., 53, New Bond-street.

---

GOD DEFEND THE RIGHT!—Inscribed to Admiral Sir C. Napier, by GEORGE LINLEY. 4s. (post free for stamps.) John Shepherd, Newgate-street.

---

THE MUSICAL TIMES, No. 122, for April 15, price 1½d., stamped 2½d., contains an Article on Mozart's Masses, by E. Holmes; Fétis on Choir and Chorus; Singing; Brief Chronicle of Musical Events, and three pages of Music; The Battle of the Baltic, a Choral Song, by Miss C. A. Macirone. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

---

NOVELLO'S GLEE-HIVE, a collection of popular Glees and Madrigals, in Vocal Score, with ad lib. Accompaniment for Pianoforte, complete in three volumes, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt lettering, price 8s. each volume. Each Glee and Madrigal may be had separately, from 2d. to 6d. each. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

---

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL ROUND-BOOK; a collection of Fifty Rounds and Catches, arranged according to their relative difficulty. Edited by the Rev. J. Powell Metcalfe. Second Edition, revised and corrected, price 1s.—No one, who, in instructing children in music, has employed both rounds and harmonized airs, can doubt which style is more easily taught; and even where there is no experience to guide, reason alone can determine the matter. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

---

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, fingered by Carl Czerny. 54th Edition, price 4s. London: Cocks & Co., New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen. "The most unmistakeable proof of popularity that any work can give is the number of its editions and the extent of its patronage. To arrive at a third or fourth reissue, literally speaks volumes in its favour, but when a book has reached twelve times the latter number of editions, to say one word in its commendation would be but waste of time. 'Hamilton's Instructions for the Pianoforte' now comes under our notice in a FORTY-EIGHTH edition, and thus silently proclaims its own inherent excellencies. We are tolerably familiar with all works of its class, both celebrated and obscure, ancient and modern, and we hesitate not to say that Hamilton's is decidedly the most complete we ever met with. It progresses from the first rudiments in such a charming accessible manner (if we may be allowed the term) as to win the attention of the pupil and to impress the mind with its valuable lessons more easily than any other. The lessons gradually increase in difficulty, and with every variety of style combine the works of composers of every land. It is no small advantage to the work to unite the perspicuity of Hamilton's instructional style with the masterly fingering of the great Czerny. Neither pupil nor teacher should be without a copy of this invaluable production. We have had occasion so often to commend the spirited exertions of Messrs. Cocks and Co., as publishers and contributors to the musical world, that we can only add what is patent to all who know anything about the matter, that this firm has not only done the most, but the best, for the propagation of sound musical knowledge, of any other house in the world.—Vide Port of Portsmouth Guardian, January 4th.

---

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, I'Amo, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L'Elisir d'Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

---

SCHOTT and Co., 159, REGENT STREET, have just published the following works of Mr. ELLERTON:—Three Quartets for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello, in A, E Flat, and G, in score; dedicated to H. R. H. the Dowager Duchess of Nassau—Op. 61. Three Quartets for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello, in B Flat, D, and G, in score; dedicated to H. R. H. Prince George of Prussia—Op. 122. Three Quartets for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello, in D, C Minor, and A, in score; dedicated to Herr Graf Von Flemming—Op. 124.

---

VILIKINS WALTZ, by LAURENT, as performed every evening at the Argyle Rooms, with the greatest possible success, is published this day, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. By the same author, Leonora and Belle Francaise Waltzes, both illustrated, price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

---

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 16. SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

MENDELSSOHN.

(Continued from page 223.)

We may here speak of the extraordinary success which Mendelssohn's works encountered in various parts of the Continent. The Forty-second Psalm, and the Meerestille und Glückliche Fahrt overture were given at the Swiss Festival at Basle, in July of this year. The public journals spoke strongly of the effects produced on the minds of audiences hitherto unacquainted with his inspirations. On the 8th of July, St. Paul was performed, under the composer's direction, at Schwerin; on the 21st of September, at Reichenberg, in Bohemia; and, in October, at Dresden and Mayence. In the year 1841, Mendelssohn reappeared at his post in the Gewandhaus, and we read in the Leipzig newspaper of the furore he created by his playing Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in G major, at the twelfth subscription concert of that season.

"The gem of this day's concert," says the writer, "was the Beethoven concerto, played by Mendelssohn Bartholdy, to whom we are indebted for the revival of so many great works. The cadenzas he introduced in both movements, not inferior even to those of the well-known concerto in E flat, were those of a master of his art, and he reaped the well-earned applause of a discerning public."

After this meeting, Mendelssohn gave three historical concerts, and filled his programme with specimens of Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, reserving for himself the choice of compositions, and never introducing more than two of these masters on one occasion. At the first of the three meetings he played the chromatic fantasia of Bach, and a theme with variations written by Handel in the year 1720. At the third and last, he accompanied Schröder Devrient in "Adelaide," and directed the performance of the D minor symphony. This last-mentioned work was received with great enthusiasm.

"We heard," says a correspondent of the Leipzig paper, "a new tone in the scherzo, and a vigour and life were given to passages quite foreign to anything we have heard before—das einzige D einer Bassposaune macht dort eine erstaunliche Wirkung und giebt der Stelle ein ganz neues Leben."

I think it worth while to subjoin the selection for the Haydn Concert, since the warmest partisans of that composer cannot quarrel with the taste and judgment evinced in the choice of such pieces as the Imperial quartet, the Motet "Du bist's, dem Ruhm und Ehre gebühret," the symphony in B flat, the Hunt and Vintage from The Seasons, with recitative, air, and chorus from the Creation. The beautiful huntsman's song by Eichendorff, "Wer hat dich, du schöner Wald, aufgebaut so hoch da droben?" with Mendelssohn's music, was introduced for the first time at the seventeenth meeting of the Gewandhaus. The combination of sweet words, and still sweeter sounds, has made this song a favourite with half Europe, and who, that has once heard, can ever forget the mournful "Lebewohl, du schöner Wald?" When the spring comes round again, and the leaves of the wood burst into life, shall not this melody call up the memory of the departed, and hallow the recollection of him that is gone? At the nineteenth subscription concert, we had the good fortune to hear Beethoven's "An die ferne Geliebte," sung by Herr Schmidt, principal tenor at the Opera. Mendelssohn accompanied him, and they understood each other so thoroughly, that the performance of this expressive lyric left nothing to be desired. On one occasion, Schröder Devrient was called to repeat the "Zuleika" song of Mendelssohn, and substituted the "Es ist bestimmt in Gottes Rath." It was known that the composer had accepted an engagement at Berlin, and the words "Doch musst du dieses recht verstehn, wenn Menschen aus einander gehn, so sagen sie auf wiedersehn," seemed to have a pointed application, which was at once felt by the singer, and recognised by the audience. Mendelssohn played again, on the 31st of March, one of his pianoforte duets with Clara Schumann; and brought out, on the same occasion, a new symphony by Robert Schumann. When we remember that he seldom neglected to attend the quartet association, started by his friend David, we can understand that the time and abilities of Felix were not squandered and misused by a desultory and inactive course of life. The greatest proof of his talents as a director, however, was yet to come. On the 4th of April, 1841, Bach's Grosse Passions Musik was executed, under his direction, by a large chorus of German amateurs, who had applied themselves most vigorously to the study of a work of which musicians alone can know the extreme difficulty. He, Mendelssohn, began rehearsing it in February; and surely our admiration of his patience and perseverance is enhanced by the recollection of the feeble state of his health, which never once hindered the performance of duties requiring physical no less than mental power. The herculean difficulties of the first double chorus in the Passions Musik, seemed at first insuperable; the case appeared hopeless, but cheerfulness succeeded despondency, and Mendelssohn could not resist a hearty fit of laughter at the continued Babel of sounds which he eventually brought into order and harmony. At last, when each individual member of the chorus was certain of his respective part, the character and expression suitable to each movement were studied, and the chorales, sung pianissimo, produced their intended effect. The concert came off on Palm Sunday, the 4th of April, 1841, in St. Thomas' Church; and the proceeds were devoted to the contemplated statue of the great musician. In 1728, Bach had himself conducted his Passions Musik in the very same church where, now more than a century afterwards, one of the great lights of the present age was presiding at a festival in honour of his predecessor.

We find the ever active Felix at Weimar on the 15th April, conducting his oratorio St. Paul; and, in the same month, by the invitation of the artists of Dresden, directing a festival in honour of Cornelius, the great fresco painter of Munich. Honours of every description had been showered upon Mendelssohn for some years previous to the time of which we are treating; and none could complain that they were unworthily bestowed. In the year 1836, the University of Leipzig created him a Doctor of Philosophy—"propter insignia in arte musicâ merita"—and in June or July of 1841, he became Capellmeister to the King of Saxony. From the earliest part of his reign, Frederic William IV. of Prussia, who had brought together in his own capital the most eminent men of the day, anxious to gain the services of Mendelssohn, offered him a handsome salary as conductor at Berlin. Felix could scarcely do otherwise than accept the royal offer, and the King bestowed much attention in employing him on subjects well adapted to his exalted powers, which may well be believed by those who know that the idea of Mendelssohn's setting the Antigone of Sophocles to music entirely originated with his illustrious patron. But Felix, not content with devoting his time and labour merely in accordance with the wishes of the King, felt anxious to do something for the Berlinese also. He was, as he himself said, "dem Preussischen Cultus Ministerium zur Disposition gestellt," and any restriction on his independent and restless mind was irksome to one accustomed so long to follow the bent of his own genius. Probably, for the first time in his life, Mendelssohn complained of the duration of his leisure hours; and it is certain that Leipzig presented greater advantages to the musician than the city for ever memorable as the place where the overture and the choruses of Antigone were written. This music was composed during a summer residence at Berlin, in the wonderfully short space of eleven days, a fact which itself refutes the notion that it was a laboured work, rather than one of those real inspirations only vouchsafed to great and original artists. Mendelssohn had read Antigone in the original Greek; and it is clear that his thoroughly classical mind, imbued with the spirit of the old drama, enabled him to supply so wondrous an accompaniment to the Sophoclean tragedy. The piece was first placed on the royal stage at the palace of Potsdam under the superintendence of Ludwig Tieck; and, on the 15th of October, being the king's birthday, the play was given with the music before a select circle of hearers. Of Mendelssohn's further labours in Berlin little more need be said than that he confined himself to active attendance on the rehearsals of his oratorio, St. Paul, which was performed twice under his direction. Mantius, who sang the part of St. Stephen, seems to have distinguished himself as the best vocalist on these occasions.

Digitized by Google

In November, Felix returned once more to the Gewandhaus, which had prospered under no less conscientious a deputy than Ferdinand David, one recognised by all at Leipzig as the most efficient representative of his absent friend. The oratorio of St. Paul in this year won an European reputation for its composer. It was given at Reichenberg, in Bohemia; at Freiberg, in Saxony; at Rochelle, in France, by the Congrès Musical de l'Ouest, with the text translated by Garnault, and, in 1842, was heard for the first time in Paris. The chief events in the first three months of the following year were the appearance of Mrs. Alfred Shaw, Clara Schumann, and the productions of Verhulst, a Dutchman, who had studied composition under Mendelssohn; but an all-absorbing topic was the symphony in A minor, given on the 13th of March for the first time under the bâton of the composer. This was the third* symphony he had written, but the first which was destined to command European fame during the author's lifetime. He attached little value to his first symphony in C minor, a production of his early years;† his second‡ was composed expressly for the Philharmonic Society in London, and had not yet been heard out of England; so we could only compare the later with the earlier work, and give our preference to the former. In this wonderful symphony, Mendelssohn has shown a profound knowledge of instrumentation, though I cannot go along with critics who assert that the earliest commencement of the work dates from his visit to Rome, and that southern influences are clearly traceable throughout. A plaintive spirit of melancholy pervades the work, which contains no strained effort to gain effects, but speaks by simple means to the feeling heart. Of the whole four movements the graceful scherzo and the adagio have met with the most favourable reception from the public, though the whole symphony was heartily appreciated at Leipzig, and won universal favour on a second hearing. I ought to have mentioned, antecedent to my brief account of the production of this symphony, that Antigone was brought out on the Leipzig stage, on the 5th of March, with Donner's translation, and Mendelssohn's music. If we had not the σαλπιγγες, φορμιγγες and συριγγες of the ancient Greeks, the spirit of antiquity was not lost even upon a modern audience; and so great was the interest excited on behalf of the tragedy, that a meeting of philologists, convened at Cassel in the following year, signed an address to Mendelssohn, thanking him "for having substantially revived an interest in the Greek tragedy by his own music to the Antigone of Sophocles." The chorus on the love of the All-Powerful, the "Bacchus" chorus, with its thyrsus and wild cries of inspiration, the melo-dramatic passages where Antigone descends into the vault, and where Creon brings in the corpse of his son—in all these well-known pieces, Mendelssohn has sustained and strengthened the power of the old tragic muse. The parts of Creon and Antigone were filled by Reger and Mdme. Dessoir, and left little to be desired; indeed, the only reason we can suggest for Antigone being neglected now-a-days, is that no singers§ (we suppose) are to be found competent to sustain the chief characters. The play was performed at Leipzig on the 5th, 6th, and 8th of March; and, though some ill-natured critic complained that the libretto was formed "von bleiernem Versgeklapper," it outlived criticism, and was pronounced by men of all classes as a worthy adaptation from the original.

[To be continued.]

* The fourth, counting the Reformation symphony, in D.—Ed.

† The world, in this instance, is more indulgent than the father to his child.—Ed.

‡ In A major—the "Italian."—Ed.

§ Why should the principal parts be entrusted to singers?—Ed.

Cheltenham.—Madame Montignani has announced an evening concert for the 28th instant, for the benefit of the wives and children of the expeditionary army. The programme contains many attractions.

Herr Reichardt is engaged at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane, as principal tenor.

Miss Arabella Goddard has gone to Bath, to perform at a morning and evening concert, under the management of Mr. Case.

Herr Ernst is playing at a series of concerts in Dublin. The great German violinist, who is already well know to the Hibernian public, is creating (as our letters inform us) a furore, and is called on three times every evening.

Digitized by Google

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)*

(Continued from page 246.)

CHAPTER XII.

(1780—1781.)

In spite of the attempts which had been made by interested persons to prejudice him against Mozart, Carl Theodore, now Elector of Bavaria, remembered the young musician, whose services he had rejected, with feelings of kindness. This prince was very fond of music, and the Munich orchestra, with which was associated a company of eminent singers, was, perhaps, the best in Europe. The Elector, thinking that a task more worthy the talents and reputation of the members of his chapel could not be proposed than the execution of a work by Mozart, our hero was formally asked, in the name of his Royal Highness, to write an opera seria for the carnival of the following year, 1781. Mozart consented, and, with much difficulty obtaining six weeks' leave of absence from the Archbishop, set out for Munich, in November. For the production of a grand lyrico-dramatic work, it was, above all things, necessary that the poet, composer, and singers should consult together. On such occasions the poet invariably showed himself the most obliging—like all petty authorities in their dealings with great ones. The libretto was to be entitled: Idomeneo, Re di Creta, osia Ilia e Idamante. The author, a certain Abbé Varesco, who resided at Salzburg, was unable to go to Munich. Mozart was, therefore, obliged to communicate with him through the mediation of his father, who forwarded the musician's observations to the poet, and received the words, as soon as they were ready or had been altered in accordance with Mozart's instructions. The letters on this subject give frequent proof of Mozart's remarkable tact in perceiving what was fitted for the stage—which, by the way, had no little to do with the dramatic excellence of his music. His suggestions show, even to those unacquainted with Idomeneo, that, from his entrance on the career of musical reformer, Mozart trod in the footsteps of Gluck, wherever Gluck was a thinker and logician, and that he had well considered the true relations between dramatic and musical effect. We quote a few passages:

"I have one request to make of the Abbé. In order to render it what I want, I should like the aria for Ilia, in the second act, to be somewhat altered. There could not be a better strophe than 'Se il padre perdei, in te lo ritrovo.' But one thing always strikes me as unnatural, N.B., in an aria—the 'asides.' In spoken dialogue these are natural enough, since a word or two 'aside' may be quickly uttered; but in an aria, where the words must be repeated, they have a bad effect.

"The second duet is omitted altogether, and with more profit than loss to the opera. You cannot fail to observe, if you read the scene through, that it is rendered dull and cold by the introduction of an aria or duet, and is, moreover, very gênant for the other actors, who are obliged to remain doing nothing; besides which, the magnanimous contest between Ilia and Idomeneo would become too long, and, as a natural consequence, lose its effect."

The Abbé Varesco introduced a cavatina for the King of Crete, between the choruses at the end of the second act.

"Here," Mozart remarks, "it will be preferable to have a simple recitative, in which the orchestra can be well employed. In this scene—which, on account of the action and the groupings, as we arranged them a short time since with Legrand, is likely to be the most striking—such a tumult and confusion will take place on the stage, that an aria would cut a sorry figure; besides, there is the storm, which the aria of Herr Raff (Idomeneo) will not allow to end so quickly. A recitative between the choruses is incomparably better.

"Apropos! The scene between father and son, in the first act, and the first scene in the second act, are both too long; they will certainly be tiresome, especially as, in the first act, the two actors are bad, while the one in the second is not much better; besides, the whole is nothing more than a description of what the spectators have already seen with their own eyes. The scenes may be printed as they stand. All I want of the Abbé is to tell me how they can be curtailed, and that, as much as possible; otherwise I must cut them myself, for they will not do as they are—for musical purposes, of course."

Idomeneo, whose son, devoted by his father's oath to the vengeance of the heavenly powers, is restored by the oracle of Neptune, expresses his joy in an aria, which is introduced at the end of the opera.

"This aria," writes Mozart, "pleases neither Raff nor myself. It is not at all what we wished. It should convey nothing but a sense of tranquillity and contentment, and this it does only in the second part. We have seen, heard, and felt, throughout the whole opera, quite enough of the misfortune of Idomeneo; but it is quite proper that he should speak of his actual condition."

A more important suggestion follows:—

"Do you not think that the answer of the subterranean voice" (the Oracle of Neptune), "is too long? Consider this point carefully. Picture to yourself the theatre. The voice must be horrible—it must penetrate to the heart—the audience must believe it true, and how can this be, if the answer is too long, and makes the spectators every moment more convinced of its unreality? If the speech of the Ghost in Hamlet were not so long, the effect would be greater."

An author of taste might express himself with more eloquence, but certainly not with better sense. And yet it is remarkable that the same man, who spoke thus, was destined, at a future time, to bring upon the stage an apparition which is before the audience much longer than Shakspeare's Ghost, and whose protracted presence, far from weakening the effect, strengthens the illusion and raises the unearthly feeling of dread to a pitch that no dramatist, novelist, or musician has ever yet attained, and in all probability ever will. From this we may conclude, that in art there is no truth so firmly established but genius can sometimes overthrow it. I feel convinced, moreover, that it was possible for music alone to sanctify an exception of this kind.

The first two acts of Idomeneo excited such enthusiasm, at the rehearsals, among the musicians and connoisseurs of Munich, that Mozart's friends began to grow apprehensive about the third, which was not yet finished. The adage, Finis coronat opus, seemed, in this case, almost impossible, and it was doubted whether the composer would be able to preserve, to the end of his work, the high flight he had hitherto taken. Mozart himself, feeling no anxiety, merely redoubled his efforts:—

"Both my head and hands," he writes, "are so full of it, that I should not be astonished if I were to be transformed into the third act myself; this alone costs more trouble than an entire opera, for there is hardly a scene in it which cannot be made highly interesting."

In another part of his correspondence he writes as follows:—

"The third act will be, at least, as good as the other two—for my own part, I believe it will be far better, and that we shall be able to say with justice—Finis coronat opus."

Mozart was not mistaken. The third act turned out far better than the others; and, if it cost him more pains than

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

"an entire opera," we shall find that it alone out-weighed in the scale all the tragic operas of the last century.

The rehearsals went off capitally, the Elector himself being present, and conversing in the most condescending manner with the composer. "I am delighted at seeing *him again," said he, on first encountering Mozart; and a few days afterwards he observed to our hero:—"The opera will be charming. He will assuredly gain honour by it. One would hardly imagine that such great things were concealed in so little a head." The musicians, most of whom were well-informed and highly talented artists, openly expressed their admiration of a work that far surpassed everything they had previously heard. Mozart himself was in an atmosphere of delight, as is manifest in all the letters he wrote at the time. The flattery of the great, the homage of his equals, the intoxicating influence of genius—so unmistakeably apparent in his first great work—the unerring presentiment of a deathless reputation, and, in addition to all this, the charms of love—requited and happy love—made up a sum of happiness as much as the human soul could possibly endure and enjoy at one and the same time.

No wonder that Idomeneo, produced under such circumstances, should ever afterwards have remained one of its parent's best loved children. Never did Mozart conceal his partiality for the first-born of his genius; he even placed it side by side with Don Juan, that terrible younger brother, whose loftier stature, in the eyes of all but its composer, made a favourable comparison impossible. Was it a mere delusion, which brought to mind the sweetest moments of Mozart's life—or a partiality founded on the real truth? We shall discuss this in its proper place.

Since the rehearsals of the opera had begun, the reports of its extraordinary merit had been spreading far and wide. In Munich, and the neighbouring towns, nothing was talked of but the new opera, which was to create an era in music. These flattering accounts soon reached Salzburg and came to the ears of Leopold Mozart, confirming the intelligence he had received from his son and from other correspondents. All this was in the highest degree satisfactory. The person most interested in the events, namely, the composer, entertained no doubt whatever of the result. When I said the person most interested, I forgot that there is a feeling which surpasses personal interest and induces more care than self-love itself. While Mozart indulged in a sentiment of perfect security, his father thought of nothing but preventing, by his foresight and advice, the thousand and one unlucky turns of fortune, the possibility of which, in spite of all the most favourable reports, he was unable to banish from his mind.

"You know," he writes to his son, "that we cannot expect every one to be friendly; there must always be a certain amount of doubt, and a but mixed up in the most promising affairs. It was doubted whether the second act would be as new and as good as the first. This point has been set at rest, but there will still be some distrust about the third. I would, also, wager my head that some will even doubt whether the music is calculated to produce the same effect on the stage as in a room; and, indeed, to accomplish this, the greatest zeal and the best feeling are necessary on the part of the orchestra. Endeavour to keep the musicians in good humour, and to inspire them all with favourable sentiments towards yourself. I know your manner of writing requires unflagging and studied attention on the part of the instrumentalists; and this is no joke, when all the members of the orchestra must, for three hours, apply themselves with equal zeal and interest. Even the meanest fiddler is most sensibly flattered, when praised in a tête-à-tête; he is thereby rendered still more anxious and attentive, and a civility of this description costs nothing."

In another letter, Leopold Mozart says:—

"I recommend you, in your work, to think not only of the musical but of the unmusical public. You know that for every ten judges there are a hundred who understand nothing about it.* Do not, therefore, forget the so-called popular element, for it tickles the long ears."

To this, Mozart replied:—

"Do not be alarmed about the 'so-called popular element.' My opera contains music for all classes—the 'long ears' excepted."

Leopold Mozart had not long to wait for an account of the first representation of Idomeneo. Had he deprived himself of the pleasure of assisting, he would not have reaped the full reward of twenty years' solicitude and exertion. He arrived in Munich the 26th of January, the day fixed for the production of the opera, and that immediately preceding Mozart's birthday. Many other persons were also attracted from our hero's native place, to be present at the first performance of their fellow-townsman's admirable work. The opera was greeted with tremendous applause, the public vociferating and applauding with hands and feet. But who can describe the feelings of Mozart's old and venerable father? I picture him to myself seated in a corner of the orchestra, listening to the music, without daring to trust his own ears, lost in the gigantic proportions of the quartet† and the magnificent choruses, in which the applause of the audience disputed the palm with the rage of Neptune himself. Let the reader imagine a man who, after living sixty years, experiences the greatest pleasure of his whole life—a learned musician, plunged into a state of ecstacy by a work of the beauty of which nor he nor any one else had entertained the slightest notion—Mozart's own teacher, sharing in the first lesson of a universal system of music, which the world was to receive from his pupil—the pupil whose little fingers he had guided, when they were too weak to write down what a head of five years had conceived—that pupil whom Heaven had confided to him, and who was the grand object of his life, his boast, his pride, his joy, his all—in a word, his only son! From this moment, the old man's task was at an end; the line of demarcation was distinctly drawn between paternal authority and the complete independence of a son, in whose emancipation Idomeneo had a greater share than his four-and-twenty years. We now virtually take leave of Leopold Mozart for the days he has yet to live, since he is no longer so immediately concerned in our hero's destiny. He cannot be reproached with having shared our attention too long with his son; and, besides having been the principal personage of the drama, in so far as the action was concerned, I am pleased to think that Leopold Mozart has, also, earned the friendship and respect of the reader. An excellent man, endowed with rare qualities, he devoted the capabilities which Heaven had given him, with great prudence and wonderful self-denial, to develope the far superior powers of his son. Thus, also, does the lapidary, when he reduces ordinary diamonds to dust, in order to cut and polish the incomparable and priceless brilliant, which is destined to adorn the crown of an emperor.‡

Mozart's genius for sacred music manifested itself during the period at which he re-modelled the lyrico-dramatic art.

* See note, page 50.

* If so favourable a state of things really existed in Munich, no other city was ever so full of connoisseurs.

† In the third act.

‡ Leopold Mozart died on the 28th May, 1787.

Digitized by Google

The celebrated Offertorium, "Miserecordias Domini," dates from the same time as Idomeneo. This fragment of a mass, composed for the Munich chapel, is, with the exception of the Requiem, the most perfect specimen of church music ever composed by Mozart. He himself entertained this opinion, and, subsequently, regretted, with the greatest naïveté, that he had not preserved a copy of the original manuscript, which he left in Munich. One thing is certain—if Mozart alone could write so many beautiful works, he also alone would have forgotten to have them copied out and published. Others were, fortunately, more careful; and any music-publisher of the present day would be ashamed to own that he had not the lost Offertorium in his catalogue.

In his joy, at Munich, Mozart entirely forgot that his leave of absence had expired three months, when a letter from the Archbishop summoned him to Vienna, whither the prelate had gone. The transition from freedom and happiness, from flattery and caresses, to the archiepiscopal rule, was too sudden and violent for Mozart, who felt it all the more keenly. He arrived in Vienna at nine in the morning, and was immediately informed that he was required to be present daily at half-past eleven, the hour appointed for dinner. At this time of the day he was never hungry. It was better, however, to dine without appetite than not to dine at all. But his companions at table were the Archbishop's two grooms of the chamber, who always took the best places—two cooks and a confectioner, with Cecarelli and Brunetti, who were members of the Salzburg Capelle. The artists of the kitchen enlivened the repast with highly-seasoned jokes, which Mozart could only avoid by silence. The company into which the Archbishop had forced him could have little attractions for one who had sat at table with princes. Brunetti informed him that all the members of the chapel, according to invariable custom, were obliged to play either in the Archbishop's rooms, when he gave a musical party, or at the houses of other noble gentlemen, where he might condescend to lend out his people. One of the prelate's grooms of the chamber was always stationed at the door of the reception-rooms, and, on the arrival of a musician, would call a lackey to show him to a corner of the apartment, where he had to remain, without moving, until the concert began. This kind of etiquette was as little to Mozart's taste as the dinner. The composer of Idomeneo was of opinion, that he had no occasion for a master of the ceremonies in livery, to conduct him to a drawing-room, and acted accordingly. On the following day, a Russian nobleman, Prince Galitzin, who resided in Vienna, gave a concert. Although neither the Emperor nor the nobility could endure the Archbishop, he was always invited to their parties, as that was the only means of securing the members of his chapel. Mozart proceeded to the party alone. He went up stairs, passed the groom of the chamber, outstripped the lackey, who had been summonsed to receive him, hurried through the rooms, advanced straight towards the Prince, to whom he "made his bow," and remained fixed at the post of honour, which he had thus bravely gained. While talking in the easiest manner with the master of the house, his comrades, Brunetti and Cecarelli, were sitting in a corner of the orchestra, not daring to move hand or foot. Such an act of audacity as that committed by Mozart excited, in the highest degree, the anger of the Archbishop, who would have thought himself guilty of a breach of duty, had he allowed our hero to escape one iota of the penance to which he had, as the Archbishop considered, rendered himself liable. Mozart was, every day, compelled to hear the most insulting epithets applied to him. In order to crush that pride to which the applause of the world too easily gave birth, and to deliver him from the temptations to which a well-filled purse might expose him, the Archbishop refused him permission to give a concert, and even went so far as to forbid him to play gratuitously at a performance for the benefit of the widows of musicians, in which all the artists and dilettanti in Vienna took part. On this occasion, however, the entire aristocracy interceded for the culprit. They represented to the Archbishop that to deprive the concert of an artist of talent, new to the Viennese public, was to rob the widow of her mite, of which, in his character of spiritual shepherd, he was the proper guardian. These and other such allusions reminded him that charity belongs to outward appearances, for which the Archbishop cared not a little; and Mozart was finally allowed to take part in the charitable work. Such a pianist as our hero, then without an equal in the world, of course made a most successful début in Vienna, the classical home of the piano. The public received him with enthusiasm. His friends were loud in their congratulations, and urged him to give a concert on his own account, the ladies undertaking to dispose of the tickets. All, however, was in vain; the Archbishop remained inflexible.

Mozart had for some time thought of quitting the service of the Archbishop altogether. The prelate's harshness and avarice, the contempt he always manifested for the members of his chapel, and the insulting expressions to which he continually submitted them, finally exhausted the patience of our hero, who had only accepted the place out of deference to his father. There are, and must be, however, certain limits to filial devotion. The caprice of a tyrant, whom he was obliged to obey, deprived Mozart of the only resource by which an artist can earn his bread. A single concert in Vienna would have brought him in double the wretched pittance he received at Salzburg. Although aware of this, he still hesitated; and it was not until he had been subjected to the most degrading treatment, that he could make up his mind to break the bonds which attached him to his unworthy master. The words "knave," "scoundrel," "rascal," and "blackguard" tingled in his ears. Such were the shameful epithets applied on one occasion to the composer of Idomeneo; while he who made use of them was an Archbishop, and a preacher of the Gospel. The effect upon Mozart was such that he was compelled to take to his bed for two days, but he previously sent in his resignation.

(To be continued.)

---

M. Thalberg, the pianist, is going to Vienna, to be present at the festival in honour of the Emperor of Austria's marriage.

M. Demunck, a young Belgian violoncellist, of great promise, died lately, to the great regret of those who knew him, both in his public and private capacity. M. Demunck was as well known in London as in Brussels, his native city.

Carlo Evasio Soliva, an Italian composer of eminence, died recently aged sixty-two. He wrote many operas, and among others several for the Scala.

Prague.—The municipal authorities have advertised for plans of a new national theatre. The prize offered for the best design is 1,000 florins (£104), and for the second, 300 florins (£32). The plans must be sent in to the authorities within six months, and a committee will be appointed to decide upon their respective merits. They will be exhibited for a fortnight, previous to the committee coming to a decision. The theatre is not to cost more than 150,000 florins (£18,500).

Milan.—Mendelssohn's St. Paul has entirely succeeded at the Conservatorio. It is now the turn of Elijah.

Digitized by Google

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER.

"In 1832, travelling through Spain, Rossini met with M. Aguado, the Spanish banker, who entertained the warmest friendship for him.—'My dear Rossini,' said M. Aguado—'I have a favour to ask of you. The Abbé de Varéla, an influential personage at Madrid, wishes to have a sacred work from your pen; will you sit down at the piano and compose a Stabat? The reverend father will pay handsomely. You must dedicate it to him, and allow it to be performed in a convent.' In two months the Stabat was completed and transmitted to Father Varéla, in acknowledgment of which a snuff-box, worth 5000 francs, was presented to Rossini, through the agency of M. Aguado. The composer little thought that, ten years later, his Stabat would be the subject of disgraceful law proceedings and the fiercest controversies. In 1841, however, M. Aulagnier, a music publisher in Paris, announced his intention of publishing the Stabat Mater, having purchased the manuscript of Father Varéla's executors. M. Aulagnier conceived himself perfectly justified; but unfortunately his bargain only secured him the possession of the manuscript, without the right of publishing or producing it in public. Being informed of what was going on, Rossini was extremely angry. The score which M. Aulagnier threatened to publish, without his permission, was incomplete. Rossini had composed only six pieces of the Stabat, the others being the work of Sig. Tadolini, then directeur du chant at the Italian Opera in Paris. This annoyed him more than anything else. Moreover, the work had been scored for a small orchestra, and was therefore not calculated to satisfy the public, whom he had accustomed to the richest and most elaborate instrumental accompaniments. He immediately wrote to M. Troupenas, his friend and publisher, to say that he was entirely remodelling the shapeless Stabat, and authorised him to arrest, by every legal means in his power, the publication and performance of the original work dedicated to Father Varéla. His letter was as follows:—

"'My dear Troupenas,—I received your letter of the 16th instant, and intend at once to set about marking my Stabat by the metronome, as you desire. M. Aulagnier presumes, upon the copy in his possession, so far as to threaten me with an action, suggesting that the present made me by the reverend gentleman, constituted, so far as he was concerned, an act of sale on my part. This is highly amusing. He, also, says he will have the ancient Stabat performed, at a monster concert, as he calls it. If he seriously intends to carry out such a plan, I hereby give you full and unlimited power to prevent, by means of application to the courts of law, and the police, the execution of a work under my name, in which there are only six pieces of my composition. I forward you, also, by this post, three more pieces which I have scored; so that all I have now to send you is the final chorus, which you will receive next week. Try not to blaguer the merits of my Stabat too much in the papers. We should avoid anything that may enable people to turn us both into ridicule. I send you two letters from M. Aulagnier, that you may know what are his views. The letters, of course, are intended solely for your perusal. It is as well, also, that you should know I never signed a deed of sale with the Reverend Father Varéla; that I merely dedicated the Stabat to him; that the greater number of the pieces are not composed by me; and that I am ready to pursue to the last, either in France, or elsewhere, any publisher who may try to swindle me.

"'Bologna, 24th September, 1841. GIACACCHINO ROSSINI.'

"This letter was accompanied by a deed of assignment, drawn up in the following terms:—

"'I, the undersigned, Giacacchino Rossini, composer of music, now residing at Bologna, in Italy, hereby assign, without reserve, to MM. Troupenas and Co., the music of a Stabat Mater, composed by me in the aforesaid city, in 1832. This assignment—which has been made with a view to the publication of the work in question, in whatever form the assignee shall consider most suitable, either with an accompaniment for the orchestra, or for the piano alone, for France as well as for every other country, is in consideration of the sum of six thousand francs, French money, payable on the 15th February next, at the house of MM. Rothschild, Brothers, at Paris. I engage to acknowledge, if necessary, any subsequent assignment M. Troupenas and Co. may make of the aforesaid composition, and declare that, up to this day, I never gave any one else authority to publish it.

"'Done in duplicate between the contracting parties.

"'Bologna, 22nd September, 1841. GIACACCHINO ROSSINI.'

"The action had hardly commenced before the work began to create some noise in the artistic world. At a private party in the house of the late M. Zimmerman, the Stabat was tried for the first time, in the presence of a few of Rossini's friends. Shortly afterwards, on Sunday, the 31st October, 1841, M. Troupenas invited several well-known musicians and representatives of the press to the residence of M. Henri Herz, when six pieces of the Stabat were performed. M. T. Labarre presided at the piano, M. Panseron directed the choruses, M. Girard conducted the double quartet, and Mesdames Viardot Garcia, and Labarre, MM. Alexis Dupont and Géraldy sang the solo parts. The action at law, however, still proceeded, and the legal possessor, M. Troupenas, did not know what means to adopt in order to procure for Rossini's new work the publicity it merited. Two months passed, and every one knew that there existed a sacred composition by the author of Guillaume Tell, although not more than fifty had heard it tried.

"After the first private hearing, we proceeded to M. Troupenas, and proposed that he should make over to us the exclusive right of performing the Stabat, in Paris, for three months, for the consideration of eight thousand francs. 'The work only cost me six,' said the publisher; 'your offer seems acceptable. In an hour, M. Masset, my partner, shall call and bring you an answer.' The answer was favourable. We paid the eight thousand francs, in return for which we received a copy of the manuscript.

"It was now our turn to knock at the doors of theatres, only to encounter disappointments. M. Léon Pillet, then director of the Opera, told us that his theatre was not the place for church music, and that we ought to take the Stabat to the Madeleine. M. Dormoy, the manager of the Italiens, was equally doubtful of its success, and declined to entertain the matter. We had nothing left but to hire the Italian Opera, and provide solo-singers, choristers, and orchestra at our own risk. The first thing was to ensure the co-operation of the principal artists. Mad. Giula Grisi and Signor Mario listened to our proposals with indifference. Signor Tamburini alone appreciated the importance of the work, and, after going through the 'Pro Peccatis' twice, and glancing at the whole composition, exclaimed, 'It is grand; it is admirable: I will speak to Mesdames Grisi and Albertazzi, and to M. Mario; meanwhile, you may reckon upon me without reserve.' The same evening, M. Dormoy informed us that the artists had consented to sing in the Stabat. We deposited six thousand francs for the expenses, which ultimately amounted to eleven thousand. The only condition for which we stipulated was, that no one should be admitted into the theatre during the rehearsals.

"The Stabat was immediately advertised in large letters in the bills of the Italiens. Two days afterwards, the chorus and orchestra were called for the first rehearsal. More than six hundred persons applied for admission; but M. Dormoy was true to his agreement with us, and refused. On the day of the first trial, there was no one in the front of the theatre but the manager and ourselves. At the conclusion of the rehearsal, a unanimous shout of admiration arose from orchestra and chorus. The effect produced at this rehearsal was soon published abroad; and, in twenty-four hours, every place was taken for the first performance. At last, the eventful day arrived, when the Stabat Mater was executed, before an immense audience, on the 7th January, 1842, in the Théâtre Ventadour, at two o'clock in the afternoon. At the end, Rossini's name was pronounced amidst thunders of applause. Three pieces: the 'Inflammatus,' the unaccompanied quartet, and the 'Pro Peccatis,' were encored, and the audience left the theatre deeply moved, and with a general feeling of admiration.

"Up to this period, the Théâtre Italien, under M. Dormoy's management, had dragged along a wretched existence. The Stabat endowed it with fresh life. M. Dormoy felt this, and regretted that he had declined to associate himself with us in the speculation. The next day, very early, however, he called, and entreated us to resign the Stabat, and aid him in restoring his tottering fortunes. It was in his power to refuse us the use of his theatre for any future performances of the work; and, although we might have gained one hundred thousand francs by the new chef-d'œuvre, we ceded our right for a net sum of twelve thousand francs. The Stabat was performed fourteen times during the season, and brought the management one hundred and fifty thousand francs.

Digitized by Google

"Two months afterwards, Rossini, who is not so callous as people would make him out, addressed us the following letter:—

"'My dear Sirs,—I have heard all that you have done for the performance of my little Stabat Mater, at the Théâtre Italien. I was not aware that M. Troupenas had ceded his right to you; but I am doubly pleased at the circumstance, because it has turned out profitable to yourselves, and, thanks to your valuable friendship for me, my work was confided to artists whose talents ensured its success. Receive my sincere thanks, which I hope to be able to repeat to you at Bologna, since, as M. Troupenas informs me in a letter, you will soon be there.—G. ROSSINI.'

"The action to which the Stabat gave rise was at last concluded. M. Aulagnier lost his cause, and M. Troupenas was declared whole and sole proprietor of the score.

"Since 1842, there has not been a single season, in which the Stabat Mater has not been performed, at least once. M. Ragani, remaining faithful to the old tradition, entrusted its execution to the élite of his company, and in 1854 Rossini's sacred work has had the same success as in 1842. ESCUDIER."

DRAMATIC.

LYCEUM.—The Lyceum, in all but language, is a French theatre. If it were suddenly transplanted from the Boulevards to the Strand, it could not be more thoroughly Parisian. French taste governs it entirely. The decorations, appointments, and dresses, are all in the French style; a French manner is assumed by the artists; a French atmosphere pervades the stage, and the interior of the house. Every thing produced is got up with deference to French goût. Mr. Charles Mathews gives a decided preference to French pieces, and admirably mimics the French actors. Hence, to go to the Lyceum is to go to the Variétés, or the Vaudeville, with the pieces "done into" English.

In the present dearth of dramatic writers in England, Mr. Charles Mathews could hardly do anything else than depend upon French writers for his entertainments. In fact, we seldom see any thing in the bills, but what are translations, or adaptations from the French. Latest of these was a new Proverbe, called Give a Dog an ill Name, produced on Tuesday. It is a translation from MM. Barrière and Lorin's Quand on veut tuer son Chien. (The title, at all events, is no translation.) The plot consists in the attempts of a coxcomb to seduce his friend's wife; the perfect confidence of the husband; the momentary hesitation of the wife; and the ultimate defeat of the coxcomb. This story might be treated seriously, or humourously, according to the inclination of the writer. Had it been written seriously, however, the story would have been repulsive. Nothing can more deeply shock an audience, supposed to preside in a theatre as moral arbiters, than the representation of a virtuous wife about to yield to the impudent addresses of a scoundrel, who has not even the art to conceal his indifference. Indeed, with an actor of less consummate coolness and imperturbability than Mr. Charles Mathews, or, perhaps, at any other theatre than the Lyceum, where French morality is accepted as a fixture, we are inclined to think, that Give a Dog an ill Name, would have met with a very different fate. Nevertheless, the "dangerous" position excepted, the Proverbe is one of the most commendable pieces of the kind ever seen at the Lyceum. The dialogue is spirited, and the interest well sustained throughout. At the termination, when the shallow rascal is dismissed to contempt and ridicule, morality is somewhat appeased, and poetical justice satisfied. We may remark, however, that the portrait of the all-loving and half-failing wife, is much too subtle for the province of mere farce.

The acting was excellent. Nothing could be better than Mr. Charles Mathews, as the smooth and imperturbable seducer; or than Mr. Frank Matthews, as the hearty and confiding husband; or than the gentle and susceptible wife, Miss M. Oliver, who was all, and more than the twin-authors could have dreamed of. The proverbe was received with loud applause, and the author called for at the end. He did not appear, being only a translator; or was, perhaps, ashamed to receive the applause due to the two French gentlemen whom he had so successfully pillaged.

HAYMARKET.—Mr. Buckstone—

"Ille caput flavum lauro Parnasside cinctus"—

finding the trip he took some time since, to the home of the Muses, so profitable, set out, last Monday, on a longer excursion. We had the good fortune to accompany him, and can express our satisfaction at his Voyage Round the Globe (in Leicester-square). The idea of the piece is similar to that of Mr. Planché's last. Mr. Buckstone is again at a loss for a subject for his burlesque. In this dilemma, he meets an author (Mr. W. Farren), with whom he proceeds to the monster globe of Mr. Wyld. At the foot of the stairs, they both fall asleep, and dream that they are making a voyage in quest of novelty to the four quarters of the world. Such is the gist of the plot, "qui brille par son absence." The dialogue, however, is so elegant, clever, and witty, the scenery so excellent, the allusions to passing events so happy, the dresses so gorgeous and chaste, and the grouping so classical, that Mr. Buckstone will be doomed, like the Wandering Jew, or the ghost of Hamlet's father, "to walk the earth" for a considerable time to come. Mrs. Fitzwilliam played the part of Cybele with great taste. Miss Featherstone, who impersonated the Spirit of the Overland Mail, would be much better could she divest herself of the idea that she is a favourite (which she certainly is), and of the rather flippant manner assumed by her in consequence (which, with her real talent and personal attractions, is unnecessary). The house has been crowded during the week.

ADELPHI.—The Overland Journey to Constantinople as undertaken by Lord Bateman, formed the Easter novelty at this theatre. The author, Mr. R. B. Brough, has, in a manner that must be seen to be appreciated, connected Lord Bateman, of legendary notoriety, with the present war against Russia—the young gentleman being crossed in love by Cæsar de Byzantium (Mr. Selby), no other than a certain Imperial personage who has lately earned for himself an unenviable notoriety. The dialogue is full of telling jokes and inuendoes, which were exceedingly well received by the audience. The mise-en-scène even surpasses the usual Adelphi "effects." We may mention, more particularly, the "Fairy Camp by Moonlight," the view of the "Golden Horn," and both scenes in the second act. Nothing, again, could be more admirably managed than the Fairy (French and English) armies, whose evolutions reflected credit on Mad. Celeste, the clever directress. Mrs. Keeley made much of the small part of John Thomas, Lord Bateman's "Proud young Porter," and was the neatest tiger we ever saw. Last, not least, Mr. Selby's "make-up" and acting, in mimicry of the Czar Nicholas, were "most tolerable and not to be endured." The piece was quite successful.

PRINCESS'S.—The new drama, Faust and Marguerite, produced on Wednesday night, is from a French drama of the same name, which appeared at the Porte St. Martin, in 1850. The plot in the main follows Göthe's poem, but deviates from it in the details. The piece, in its French dress, is highly melo-dramatic, and well fitted to the stage. The cast embraces Mr. Charles Kean as Mephistophiles; Mr. Ryder, Faust; Mr. Cathcart, Valentine; and Miss Lecleroq as Marguerite. The piece obtained a great success, which must be partly attributed to the splendour and completeness of the mise-en-scène. Particulars in our next.

KÖNIGSBERG.—Mr. Benedict's Kreuzfahrer has been produced here, with success.

GLOGAU.—Herr Wagner's Tannhäuser is the last novelty at the theatre.

CARLSRUHE.—Mad. Howitz-Steinau, the prima donna, has been appointed Grohherzogliche Kammersängerin (Grand-ducal Chamber Singer).

GOTHA.—Herr Lampert has been appointed Hofkapellmeister, in the place of Herr Drouet, who has tendered his resignation. Herr Drouet, who will be remembered as a very celebrated flautist, is going to settle in the United States.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE.

ADVERTISEMENTS cannot be received after 1 o'clock, P.M., on Friday.

The Publishers will be glad to purchase copies of Nos. 1 and 3 of the present series of the MUSICAL WORLD.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. T. L. F. (Uxbridge.)—We admire the hymn, but it would be against our rule to insert it.

W. C. S. (Birmingham.)—We have had so many kind offers of a similar nature, that as we cannot accept them all, we are compelled to decline them all. Our correspondent calls attention to a paragraph in the Memoir of MR. SIMS REEVES, which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD, where it is stated, that on a particular occasion, MR. REEVES "was appointed organist and choir-master of North Cray Church." According to W. C. S., however—who was at North Cray when MR. SIMS REEVES was singing there—"there never was an organ in the church," and consequently "no organist."

ERRATUM IN OUR LAST.—In an article on the MISSES COLE'S Concert, for "it is not all who would like to hear them can pay half-a-crown for that pleasure," read, "it is not all who would like to hear them can pay half-a-guinea for that pleasure." The error might have been at once guessed from the context; but we prefer making the amende honorable to the two charming young singers.

H. F. (Nottingham.)—Our correspondent informs us that MR. H. C. COOPER, has already performed Beethoven's violin concerto in public.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 22ND, 1854.

IT being holiday time, we may be excused from saying anything serious about music in our leading columns. Although music is the grand topic to which this journal is devoted, a few words apropos of the theatres, and their various contributions to the festivities of Easter week, may not inappropriately usurp the space usually devoted to discussions exclusively musical.

The Drama is not exempt from the common fate of all things substellary. It suffers change and undergoes decay. That particular class of entertainment which delights the public one year, may be despised the next; what flourishes to-day, may die to-morrow. Time was when Pantomime at a theatre, on Boxing-night, was as indispensable as plum-pudding on Christmas Day, or pancakes on Shrove Tuesday. No manager would venture to present even the most startling novelty at Christmas in lieu of pantomime. If he dared, the public would, in all probability, either stay at home or "damn" the innovation. A sort of religious feeling, coeval with the "mysteries," extended to the exclamation d' intrata of the clown—"Here we are!"—and to the famous aria buffa of "Hot Codlins!" Not to be irreverent, Pantomime to the masses was a kind of missa solennis, deprived of which in Christmas time, they would be like fish out of water. Centuries later, a new kind of chronic entertainment began to w up at Easter, and Easter Monday became, as it were, a Spring Boxing-night. The conclusion, that Easter, being a holiday as well as Christmas, should have also its dramatic specialty, was natural enough. It being essential that the new amusement should differ as much as possible from Pantomime, Fairy Spectacle was originated, and for years remained the exclusive prerogative of Easter at our theatres. Fairy Spectacle, however, in time gave way to Burlesque, which now, for many years, has kept possession of the stage, and superseded all the periodical entertainments that, until then, had ushered in the summer, with spangles, elves, blue-fire, and necromancers, forlorn princesses, valiant knights, giants, ogres, and so on. Burlesque was hailed as much a matter of course at Easter as Pantomime at Christmas.

The days of Pantomime are fading fast: it is no longer a sine quâ non at Christmas; while, on the other hand, Easter is gradually losing its prescriptive property in Burlesque.

Where Pantomime once displayed its glories, Burlesque may now be seen to encroach; and, in the garden of Burlesque, plants of exotic growth choke up the native produce of the soil. To France and Italy the chief cause of this must be assigned. The former sends by hundreds her piquant farces, drames, vaudevilles, proverbes, comédies, and ballets; the latter, its countless and often worthless operas. These chasseurs of the drama have nearly picked off and mown down our battalions of pantomime, burlesque, travestie, spectacle, burletta, musical piece, comedy, and broad farce. The French and Italian writers are our true dramatic invaders, and have occupied our stage—provisionally, let us hope, as Nicholas, the Czar, the Danubian banks.

In the conflict, Pantomime and Burlesque have suffered most. The place of the others may be filled up; but, for these two hardy children of the stage, no substitute in kind can easily be found.

Speculations akin to the above, in all probability, suggested themselves to the play-goers on Monday night, on perusing the bills of the performances at the various theatres. In lieu of the customary Spectacle and Burlesque, which were wont to constitute the principle features at our most popular establishments, might be seen, at Drury Lane, an Italian Opera; a five-act Tragedy and a French Farce at the Princess's; and four "petites comédies" at the Lyceum. Drury Lane is a comet in the managerial system. It is, therefore, a matter of little surprise what face (or tail) it may exhibit, what course it may take, what parabola (or hyperbola) it may describe. The Princess's, although it departed from the ancient custom on Monday, announced a "Grand Magical Drama," for Wednesday, under the title of Faust and Marguerite. That the Lyceum, so celebrated for its Easter pieces, should have entirely eschewed them, was, however, a matter of no small surprise. A new proverbe from the French, entitled, Give a Dog an Ill Name, was the only novelty in the bills; but even of this the visitors were deprived, in consequence of the illness of one of the ladies engaged in the cast; and thus, for the first time in our recollection, there was nothing new at the Lyceum. Where was Madame Vestris?—and what of Mr. Beverley, of the unrolling leaves, expanding buds, and polycoloured gas-lights? Mr. Charles Mathews had, doubtless, his reasons; but the public was left uninformed of them, and had to grope its way out of the darkness of disappointment. There was delusion instead of illusion—no Beverley no brush (or rush), instead of no song no supper.

At the Olympic, too, the performances were confined to a new drama, called The Happiest Day of my Life, and two stock pieces from the old répertoire. Mr. Robson, it is true, appeared in all three, and Mr. Robson is a host in himself. But had Mr. Robson been a host in a burlesque, he would not have been less welcome; while he would have been more àpropos to the time, and still more acceptable to the folks in the holidays, who, like those out of the holidays, go "to see Robson" at the Olympic. "Seeing Wright," we have seen, but we prefer seeing Robson, who is the veritable witch of Wych Street—the legitimate Wizard of Wigan House, to which he attracts all passers-by through the potent spell of genius. A Night with Robson was, after all, the best apology the manager could offer for the absence of burlesque and spectacle. Mr. Robson, in short, though a little man, is "a great fact."

Digitized by Google

The Haymarket adheres to the ancient system; and Mr. Buckstone has produced one of the best burlesques we have seen for years, called Mr. Buckstone's Voyage Round the Globe in Leicester Square, and from the experienced and pungent pen of Mr. Planché.

The Adelphi follows suit, with an excellent burlesque, called An Overland Journey to Constantinople by Lord Bateman; with interesting particulars of the Fair Sophia, written by Mr. R. Brough. Mr. Allcroft, at the Strand, has provided two Easter pieces—one, an Irish legendary Drama, entitled The Enchanted Lake; the other, a grand historical Burlesque, called King Richard the Third, according to Act of Parliament, with Notes by Malone. The characteristics of both are purely Georgehodsonian. At the Marylebone, the Easter piece is called The Magic Branch and the Golden Glories of Fairy Land. The theatre opens on Monday with the late operatic company of Drury Lane. Old Sadler's Wells—under the management of Mr. Payne for the summer season—has revived Mr. Talfourd's burlesque, The Willow Pattern (played at the Strand some time since), as their Easter offering, and the ex-Olympic drama, called The Times. The Surrey and Victoria theatres have joined issue in providing entertainments with a view to inculcate good faith towards the Turks, and animosity towards the Russians in the minds of their holiday visitors. The name of the Surrey piece is The Sultan and the Czar; that of the Victoria, The World's War: or, The Turk's Honour and the Christian's Valour. By a coincidence, both conclude with burlesques on the same subject—Villikins and his Dinah, an old song which has been exhumed from oblivion by Mr. Robson, and endowed with a thousand times its old vitality. Astley's Royal Amphitheatre presents A Tale of the Spanish War; or, The Horse of the Wreck; and a dramatic piece, called Dalrymple versus Tubbs. The horses have the best of it.

To conclude—many holiday folks were disappointed in having no Easter piece at their favourite theatres, and the dramatic week by no means wore a very brilliant or imposing aspect. The fine weather, moreover, enticed the crowd away from shut-up places of amusement to the half open air of Greenwich, Cremorne, and the Surrey Gardens, where tea and toast, with ginger beer and bottled stout, made the enlivening strains of the quadrille bands still more pleasant, and caused the note of "the loud bassoon" to be listened to with double glee.

---

PRESENTATION TO MR. G. HAYWARD.—On Saturday last, a very handsome silver snuff-box was presented to Mr. G. Hayward, musical director of the Theatre Royal Drury Lane, by Mr. E. T. Smith, the lessee, and a few of the gentlemen of the orchestra, as a mark of esteem.

M. LE COMTE DE SAYVE, a well-known French musical composer, died last week in Paris, aged 63.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

ROSSINI'S Matilda di Shabran, one of his latest works, can hardly be called one of his chefs-d'œuvre. It was written for the carnival at Rome, in 1821, produced at the Apollo Theatre, and received with favour, though not with enthusiasm. If it be true that the opera was composed—as is affirmed and as we believe—in ten days, it is only another instance added to the many we hear of Rossini's prodigious quickness of invention and facility of accomplishment.

Matilda di Shabran is the last example of the real opera buffa, which Rossini brought to perfection. With it he laid down his comic pen; since the Comte Ory does not come within the same category, but rather belongs to that of the opéra comique, which is very different in every respect.

The last performance of Matilda di Shabran in England took place about twenty years ago at Her Majesty's Theatre, when the cast comprised Mesdames Persiani and Albertazzi, Signors Rubini, Tamburini, and Lablache. With such an unparalleled array of talent, nevertheless, the opera failed to excite enthusiasm, and was soon abandoned. A few years previously, it had been performed at the same theatre, with Madame Ronzi de Begnis, Signors Donzelli, Zuchelli, etc.

The libretto of Matilda di Shabran gives the musician no chance of distinction. Never was there a more unmeaning book. The plot (which we shall not attempt to describe) is absurd and inexplicable, and the dramatis personæ without interest. The incidents occur to the spectator like scenes in a kaleidescope, rather than matters of life. Notwithstanding this, some of Rossini's most melodious and brilliant music is to be found in the score of Matilda di Shabran. Among many other fine pieces, we need only instance the introduction, the quintet, and the finale, in the first act, to show how, in this, as in his other operas, he maintained his supremacy over all the Italian composers for the theatre (except, perhaps, Cherubini). Moreover, there are many exquisite morceaux interspersed throughout the opera; and the easy hand of the master is invariably evident in the concerted music. The opera is, nevertheless, unequal, and occasionally flags. The composer was evidently not inspired with his task; and the genius that flashed so brightly in the Barbiere, the Turco in Italia, and Cenerentola, but flitted at intervals in Matilda di Shabran. Besides, the opera is full of reminiscences of himself and others, and is thus deprived of all the charm of individuality. Nevertheless, the production of Matilda di Shabran, as the last opera buffa of one so justly renowned as Rossini, and as a work which has not been given in this country for twenty years, was highly creditable to the management of the Royal Italian Opera. That Matilda di Shabran is well worth hearing we can assure our musical readers, who, if they hear it once, will be probably tempted to hear it a second time, when, having been initiated into the mysteries of the libretto, and having fathomed the fathomless character of the hero, Corradino, a kind of man-devil, warrior-brigand, woman-hater, and half "spoony," they will be the better enabled to enjoy and appreciate the music.

The performance, on Tuesday night, was, in most respects, admirable. Mad. Bosio, who, with every successive part, makes an advance in public favour, sang magnificently, and with invariable good taste. The music of Matilda, though written in the most florid style, was executed by this talented lady with an ease and fluency which could hardly be surpassed. No bravura singing could be more brilliant than that of Mad. Bosio in the rondo finale. The duet with Mdlle. Marai (Edoardo), in the same act, was an equally striking example of florid vocalisation. In quality of voice, moreover, which constitutes so great a charm, Mad. Bosio is equally gifted. Few voices are more felicitously pure and clear than her own. Sig. Ronconi was as irresistible as ever in the wandering minstrel. Were there no stronger motive for bringing out Matilda di Shabran than the introduction of this great artist in a buffo part of the true Italian carnavalesque style, of which he is almost the only living representative, the directors would have been amply justified in reviving it. A more droll, amusing, fantastic, and thoroughly original performance than Ronconi's Isidore it would be impossible to see. His singing was on a par with his acting. Always quaint and humorous, it was always in the highest degree artistic. In the first air—a capital pendant to "Largo al Factotum," which in some respects it strongly resembles—where the character of the charlatan is humorously unfolded, Sig. Ronconi was full of strange whim, and mercurial vivacity, and convulsed the audience with laughter. Signor Luchesi, notwithstanding the hardness and uncertainty of his upper notes, is one of the most accomplished singers of florid music on the modern stage. His execution is very fluent, and he has the true feeling, and manner of the old Italian music. From first to last he mastered the music of Corradino with the utmost ease. The Contessa was played by Mdlle. Albini, who, as our readers may probably remember, came out last season as the heroine in Maria di Rohan. Signor Tagliafico, who is zealous and efficient in everything he undertakes, gave unexpected importance to the small part of Aliprando, Corradino's doctor and confidential adviser. Aliprando has some difficult and florid music to sing, and is continually employed in the morceaux-d'ensemble. Mdlle. Marai (the young and interesting new-comer) sang the music of Edoardo exceedingly well, and, in the duet with Mad. Bosio, impressed the audience by the brilliancy and finish of her execution. Signor Susini played the gaoler in a careful manner, and sang his share of the music to the very best of his ability. One of the great musical "hits" of the evening was the septet in the finale to the first act, which was superbly sung and encored unanimously. The last movement of the duet between Matilda and Edoardo (Mad. Bosio and Mdlle. Marai), and the rondo finale by Mad. Bosio, created the same enthusiasm. At the conclusion, all the principal singers were re-called, and honoured with loud and prolonged applause. The opera is to be repeated to-night. Next week we shall have more to say about the music (space allowing), which is worth the trouble of analysing. Indeed, when it becomes more familiar to the public, and custom begets toleration for the libretto, Matilda di Shabran will stand a chance of becoming an established piece in the répertoire.

Digitized by Google

The ballet divertissement, called Fleurette, produced at the latter end of last season, introduced Mdlle. Quineaux, from the French Opera, for the first time. She is a clever and graceful dancer, and will doubtless prove an acquisition to the Royal Italian Opera. Guillaume Tell was repeated for the third time on Thursday, a subscription night. The performance was magnificent. Sig. Tamberlik was greater than ever in the slow movement of the grand trio, and "Suivez-moi," in both of which he was encored and recalled. Sig. Ronconi was wonderfully fine in the scene of the apple.

Meanwhile, we may announce, that it is intended to produce Fidelio on Tuesday (which is impossible); but that more probably it will be given on Thursday, with the following distribution:—Florestan, Sig. Tamberlik; Rocco, Sig. Susini; Pizarro, Sig. Tagliafico; Marcellina, Mdlle. Marai; and Fidelio, Mdlle. Cruvelli. Mdlle. Marai, having undertaken the part of Marcellina, will give completeness to the cast—which wants nothing but Herr Formes in Rocco to be faultless.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

CERTAINLY no theatre witnesses such changes and transformations as Drury Lane. At one time, it upholds the legitimate drama; at another it exhibits feats of horsemanship; again it encourages Indian jugglers, or walkers on ceilings; by-and-bye, we behold the pit covered in, and promenade concerts taking place, or a masked ball is given, which, in turn, yields to opera, English, German, or Italian.

The Royal Operatic Company, on Monday night, which gave Norma for its first performance, did a good turn for Drury Lane. It lent the theatre an air of respectability, and made it look unusually important. This was not to be wondered at, considering that a numerous and excellent band and a very efficient chorus were provided, and that Herr Lindpaintner, the eminent musician and renowned conductor, presided in the orchestra. Moreover, among the singers were Madame Caradori and Herr Formes, in themselves a vocal host; and, altogether, the performance was got up with so much care and completeness, that nothing could have been more satisfactory, and assuredly nothing more promising.

The prospectus issued by the directors of the Royal Opera is, to a certain degree, encouraging. We are perfectly satisfied with their intentions; but, as the list of singers has not yet been announced, it is impossible to draw any inference as to the ultimate success of the undertaking. There is no absolute first tenor at present in the company; but Herr Theodore Formes, brother to the great basso, is, we understand, engaged to fill that important post. Mdme. Caradori and Herr Formes, however great, cannot constitute a company in themselves, and, if the directors would hope to obtain the liberal support of the public, they must show themselves liberal in advance, and provide a company efficient in all points, and equal to every exigency.

The performance of Norma on Monday night was an admirable commencement. Mad. Caradori made a powerful impression as the chief druidess, singing and acting with immense energy and feeling throughout the opera. After the "Casta diva," and the movement "O non tremare," in the grand trio of the first act, she was vociferously applauded and unanimously recalled. In short, Mad. Caradori created quite a furore, and sent away the holiday visitors enraptured. Mdlle. Sedlatzek, the young lady who made so favourable a début at the last concert of the New Philharmonic Society, was a highly competent Adalgisa, and acted and sang with equal intelligence. Of the Pollio, however, we cannot speak in terms of unqualified praise. Signor Pavesi, the tenor, is new to this country, although he has attained some name on the continent. The part of Pollio is evidently out of his line; and we must see him in another before we can decide as to his merits. Signor Arnoldi—who, if we mistake not, was heard at Her Majesty's Theatre, some few years since—took all possible pains with Oroveso. He has, at any rate, a fine voice, which is one great step in public favour. But why did not Herr Formes assume a part of which he made so much at the Royal Italian Opera, and in which he appeared with such éclat at Drury Lane, last autumn? The cast would have been greatly strengthened by his co-operation, and the attraction heightened in proportion. The subordinate parts of Flavio and Clotilde were efficiently filled by Signor Santi and Mdlle. Sondheim. The orchestra under Herr Lindpaintner, who was warmly welcomed, was effective throughout.

Digitized by Google

After the opera, the National Anthem was sung by the whole company, the solos by Mdme. Caradori, Sig. Pavesi, and Herr Formes. The popular German basso was received with loud cheering, and, after the anthem, recalled. The entertainments concluded with a short ballet divertissement, which was creditably performed, although no stars shone among the dancers.

The theatre has undergone a thorough cleansing, and has had the advantage of the painting brush in many places. It has not for years worn so cheerful, bright, and pleasant an aspect. The house was crammed to the ceiling; while the audience, although frequent and enthusiastic in their applause, were uniformly attentive. We believe that Mr. Jarrett, who is taking a prominent position among our theatrical entrepreneurs, is the projector and manager of this speculation, which, under the name of the Royal Opera, has been thus auspiciously inaugurated.

MR. W. H. HOLMES'S CONCERT.

Mr. W. H. Holmes gave the first of three concerts of pianoforte music, on Wednesday morning, in the Hanover Square Rooms. To judge from the selection on this occasion, the series will be both instructive and interesting. Mr. Holmes is well known to amateurs and musicians as one of the first masters of the pianoforte, and, as a teacher, without a superior in this country. Some of our most accomplished pianists have been educated by him; and, although the position they have attained is in a great measure owing to their own talent and perseverance, not a little is due to the system of teaching which Mr. Holmes has been used to adopt, and the first good example of which was set by his own brilliant and admirable playing.

The concert began with Mozart's double concerto for two pianofortes and orchestral accompaniments, in E flat, a work of great merit even for Mozart, and the more interesting since it is so rarely played in public. It was very finely executed by Mr. Holmes, and Mr. S. J. Noble, one of his most advanced and talented pupils. The allegro was given with energy and decision, the melodious slow movement with the true expression, and the quaint and cunningly-worked finale with equal brilliancy and point. This piece was alone worth going to the concert to hear. The next morceau of prominent interest was a concerto fantastique for pianoforte and orchestra, entitled Consuelo—a composition of Mr. Holmes.* There is a vast deal of fancy in this work, which is original in form, and, as might be expected from the author, written with great and varied effect for the instrument. Miss Southgate, a very young and very promising pupil of Mr. Holmes, mastered the difficulties of this new concerto (which, by the way, was presented for the first time in public), with singular ease, and her performance was as remarkable for good taste as for fluency. Mr. Holmes seems to be raising up for the public a new race of pianists, who, if they progress as may be expected, under his tuition, will be able to supply the place of the others when they retire upon their laurels. Another of his pupils, Mr. Gibson, gave the first movement of Herr Theodore Kullak's pianoforte concerto in C minor, which is full of showy and difficult bravura passages. Mr. Gibson is not so advanced a scholar as Miss Southgate, nor so thorough a master as Mr. S. J. Noble; but he is likely, in time, to do credit to his instructor. Herr Kullak's music was a trying task for a beginner. Mr. Gibson, nevertheless, exhibited both energy and good intention in his performance. Another young pupil of Mr. Holmes, Miss Vinning, in the barcarolle and finale from Mr. Sterndale Bennett's admirable pianoforte concerto in F minor, made a highly favourable impression. Her reading of the barcarolle was charming, and though she took the finale too slow, she executed it with neatness and precision. Miss Vinning is a lady of more than ordinary accomplishments. She plays the harp as well as the piano, and sings as well as she does either. A proof of the last acquirement was given in a new song by Mr. W. H. Holmes, called "The Timepiece," in which Miss Vinning displayed both an agreeable voice, and a vocal expression which left nothing to complain of. The song itself is a happy musical illustration of an elegant poem by Mr. J. Montgomery, which will be recalled to the memory of all readers of modern English poetry by the first stanza:—

"Who is He so swiftly flying,
His career no eye can see?
Who are They, so early dying,
From their birth they cease to be?
Time:—behold his pictured face!
Moments:—can you count their race?"

Mr. Holmes has completely caught the spirit of the poem, and his accompaniments, for pianoforte obbligato and orchestra, are, as effective and appropriate as the melody is graceful and continuous.

Thalberg's Mose, the best and most popular of his fantasias, was produced in a new form—arranged for three pianofortes, with orchestral accompaniments, by Mr. Holmes. It was played by Miss Southgate, Mr. Holmes, and Mr. S. J. Noble, with wonderful exactitude and brilliancy; and many of the passages in triple unison, if we may so express ourselves, came out with immense effect. A masterly performance by Mr. Holmes, pianoforte solus, of a selection of short compositions, was not the least interesting feature of the concert. We give the list of these small pieces—all gems in their way—

Prelude, C sharp minor, W. S. Bennett; "Murmurs of the Seine," Nocturne, Chopin; Etude in G minor, Potter; Etude in G major, Cramer; "Fairy Fingers," W. H. Holmes.

Not the least pleasing and effective of these was the last—a light and elegant morceau, à la valse, with variations, executed by the composer with singular grace and delicacy.

The remainder of the concert must be briefly dismissed. Mr. Blagrove played two movements from the second violin concerto of M. De Beriot; the same gentleman, with Mr. Pegler, gave the duet on Guillaume Tell, for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Osborne and M. De Beriot; and Mr. R. Blagrove performed a fantasia on the concertina, upon Scotch airs. There was also some good vocal music. Sig. and Mad. Ferrari both sang admirably—the gentleman in a new and very graceful Italian canzonet, "La Partenza," by Mr. W. Lovell Phillips; the lady in the splendid aria from Mozart's La Clemenza di Tito—"Parto, ma ben"—which had the great advantage of Mr. Lazarus' finished talent in the clarinet obbligato. The duet, "Quis est homo?" from Rossini's Stabat Mater, well sung by Mrs. Alfred Gilbert and Miss Susannah Cole, completed the vocal selection, which, like the instrumental, afforded the highest satisfaction.

The applause awarded to the pupils of Mr. Holmes, and to Mr. Holmes himself, was of the most flattering description. The room was crowded by an audience of fashionables and connoisseurs, all of whom seemed pleased and interested.

* Mr. Holmes should dedicate it to Madame George Sand.—Ed.

St. Martin's Hall.—The director of the Wednesday Evening Concerts at Exeter Hall gave a very attractive entertainment at the above locale on Monday night, under the tempting name of "A Musical Jubilee." A numerous and efficient orchestra was engaged, under the able direction of Mr. W. Lovell Phillips, and a varied and excellent programme was provided. The vocalists were Mesdames Newton Frodsham, Dolby, Poole, Lablache, Grace Alleyne, Cicely Nott, Hemming; Messrs. F. Lablache, Augustus Braham, and Lawler. The solo instrumentalists included Miss Arabella Goddard (pianoforte), Mdlle. Louise Christine (harp), and Mr. Lazarus (clarionet). Seldom has an audience been more pleased with a performance, of twenty-eight pieces no less than fifteen being encored. Among the "encores" we may name Miss Arabella Goddard, who performed Moscheles' "Recollections of Ireland," for pianoforte and orchestra, in her most effective and brilliant style; Mdlle. Christine, who executed a solo by Bochsa, on the harp; Miss Poole, in a charming ballad by Mr. Lovell Phillips, called "As if you did'nt know;" Miss Dolby, in an Irish song; Miss Grace Alleyne in an Italian bolero; Miss Cicely Nott in M. Jullien's popular ballad "The Echo of Lucerne," and Signor and Madame F. Lablache in "Dunque io son," and Gnecco's buffo duet from La Prova. The graphic and splendid fantasia of Moscheles, into the strong national spirit of which Miss Goddard entered with the right sort of energy and feeling, was a real treat for the connoisseurs in that genuine school of pianoforte music of which its composer was one of the foremost representatives. The cadenza, where the three Hibernian melodies are so ingeniously worked together, produced a marked sensation; and there was no reason why Miss Goddard should have declined the hearty encore with which her performance was greeted. The last time the "Recollections of Ireland" was given in London was, if we are not mistaken, at the farewell concert of Mr. Moscheles, in 1846, previous to his quitting England for Leipsic, when of course it was performed by the composer himself. The band were also encored in an effective "Selection" from Robert le Diable, with solos for Messrs. Lazarus, Baumann, Barret, and Trust, which was played admirably. The overtures to Zampa and Fra Diavolo, and the Wedding March from A Midsummer Night's Dream, were also well performed. Mr. Lovell Phillips is as good a conductor as a musician, which was amply proved on this occasion. In short, Mr. Willott, the enterprising director of the Wednesday Evening Concerts, had the gratification of furnishing the holiday folks with one of the most capital entertainments of the Easter Week. The hall was well attended, though not crowded.

Digitized by Google

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The attraction during Passion Week has been Rossini's Stabat Mater, at the Théâtre Italien. On the whole I have never heard it better executed. The chief force of the company, including MM. Mario, Neri-Baraldi, Graziani, and Florenza, Mesdames Alboni, E. Grisi, Frezzolini, and Weith, exerted themselves to the utmost to give effect to the music. Madame Alboni and Signor Mario were transcendent in the "Ut portem" and "Cujus gementem." It is superfluous to add that the performance was highly advantageous to the theatre in a pecuniary point of view. M. Duprez also gave selections from the Stabat at his Théâtre-Ecole; after which he introduced, for the first time, a trifle in the form of a comic opera, of his own composition, the four principal parts being sustained by MM. Roger, Mocker, and Duprez himself, with his charming daughter (Mdlle. Caroline). The entertainments concluded with M. Michotte's mattauphone, M. Reichart's double flute, and a trio for three tenor voices. We have had a deluge of concerts. Mad. Ucelli, composer and singer, gave one, the feature of which was a vocal piece of her own called "Omaggio to Donizetti." Another Omaggio, under the title of Les derniers Moments de Donizetti, by M. Montuora, was sung at M. Pleyel's rooms, by M. Roger. M. Schulhoff has re-appeared, after an absence of six years, in the salons of M. Erard. The celebrated pianist played three new pieces of his own—Chant du Pêcheur, a Tarantella, and a Marche, which are in his most graceful, spirited, and piquant style. His execution is more easy and brilliant than ever. The day after, in the same rooms, some new compositions of M. Félix Godefroid, the harpist, were performed by two young artists, M. Bizet and Francis Planté, with success. Mdlle. Marie Damoreau, likewise, the promising daughter of Mad. Cinti Damoreau, also appeared, and as usual enchanted the audience. This young lady must be heard in London. A concert was given last week in M. Erard's salons, at which Mad. Iweins-d'Hennin, MM. Félix Godefroid, Levassor, Paul Malézieux and others, gave their services gratuitously. Mad. Gaveaux-Sabatier (la "Fauvette des Salons," as she used to be called) has also announced a concert. I believe Mad. Sabatier will defer her projected visit to London till next season. The long anticipated "Lunch" of the versatile M. Levassor (of the Palais Royal) is exciting universal curiosity. "What's in a name?" M. Levassor could answer, if he pleased, and to good purpose. Wait till the "Lunch," about which all Paris is talking, takes place, and we shall see. Beethoven's Choral Fantasia for orchestra, piano, and chorus, the chorus of Dervishes, and Turkish March from the Ruins of Athens, were given at the sixth and last concert of the Société Sainte-Cécile. M. Camille St. Saens (the successful composer of a new symphony, and a Belgian to boot), played the pianoforte part in the fantasia with great talent. The other pieces were the finale to Mendelssohn's unfinished opera of Lorely, a symphony in C major, by M. T. Gouvy, and Cherubini's "Ave Maria," sung by M. Alexis Dupont. MM. Seghers and Wekerlin brought their season to a close, on the 14th, with a sacred concert. The programme included Mendelssohn's magnificent overture to Athalie, the "Kyrie" and "Gloria," from Beethoven's First Mass, La Fuite en Egypte, of M. Berlioz, andante from a symphony of Haydn in G, and the Pastoral Symphony. Mdlle Marie Dussy sang the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's Stabat. Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was also performed at the last concert of the Société des jeunes Artistes, followed by a Requiem from the pen of M. de Liguoro, a Noel by M. Adolphe Adam, and an "Agnus Dei" by M. G. Bousquet. The two last pieces were quite out of place, and have no merit. M. Gounod's parody on the first of the "48" preludes of Bach (for violin, organ, and piano!!!) and extracts from a symphony by M. Lefébure-Wély (organist at the Madeleine) completed the programme. Mad. Stein Müller has had the honour of appearing before the Emperor and Empress at the Tuileries. She sang an air from I Puritani, in Italian, a scena from Der Freischütz, in German, and a Tyrolienne, by M. C. Haas, in French.

Mdlle. Carolina Rosati has re-appeared at the Grand Opera, in the ballet Jovita ou les Boucaniers. The opera on the same night was the Maître Chanteur of M. Limnander—a very "so-so" affair. Mdlle. Dussy has been re-engaged for two years. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli leaves for London in a few days. Her superb performance in Spontini's La Vestale has increased in attraction. When she has gone, M. Meyerbeer, with his Etoile du Nord, which fills the Opéra Comique to the ceiling whenever it is given, will have the field to himself. The Nonne Sanglante of M. Gounod will, it is expected, be produced about the 14th or 15th of June.—At the Théâtre Français there has been a grave dispute between Mdlle. Rachel and M. Legouvé; owing, it is said, to the intervention of an exalted personage, however, matters have been amicably arranged, and the great tragic actress will appear as Medea, in M. Legouvé's new tragedy of that name, so long announced, so long expected, and so long delayed.—Mdlle. Lefebre has re-appeared at the Opéra Comique, as Angèle in Le Domino Noir, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge was present at one of the representations of L'Etoile du Nord. Besides M. Victor Massé's three-act opera, now in rehearsal, the management has accepted a work by M. Duprato, and another by the Prince de la Moskowa. Mdlle. Ney, premier prix du Conservatoire, is announced to make her début at the Opéra Comique, as Anna, in La Dame Blanche. The season of the Théâtre Lyrique terminates on the 1st of June. The theatre will re-open in September. The company will, in the interim, proceed to London, to give thirty-four representations at the St. James's Theatre, under the management of M. Lafont, the celebrated comedian. Mdme. Marie Cabel will appear in her two most favourite parts (in the Bijou Perdu and La Promise). The new comedy, by MM. Emile Augier and Jules Sandeau, entitled Le Gendre de M. Poirier, has been well received at the Gymnase. Mdme. Rose Cheri was greatly applauded as Antoinette. At the Variétés, a one-act farce, entitled Un Mari qui prend du Ventre, has proved a "hit." It is from the pens of MM. Labiche and Marc Michel, the principal part being sustained by M. Arnal.

VIENNA—(From our own Correspondent).—Haydn's Creation was given in the Kaiserlich-Hofburgtheater, under the direction of Concertmeister Assmeyer, in such a slovenly manner that the less said of it the better. About the only exceptions to the general faultiness of the performance were in the singing of Mdlle. Tietjens and Herr Staudigl.—The concert season is drawing to a close. Herr Stockhausen's fifth and last concert took place in the rooms of the Musik-Verein, when he was assisted by M. Géraldy from Paris, who sang "Non più andrai," and three French songs, in one of which, "Le Vieux Caporal," he was encored. Herr Stockhausen, among other things, sang "Largo al factotum," and some Lieder by Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Schubert. The room was well filled.—Mdme. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt's third concert took place in the grand Redoutensaal. The attendance was, if possible, more numerous than on the two former occasions. She sang the air from Der Freischütz, "Und ob die Wolke sie verhülle," with a feeling and tenderness that elicited thunders of applause, and was not less successful in an air from Rossini's Il Turco in Italia, which, with deference, I think was less worthy of her talent. Mdme. Jenny Lind also delighted us with Mendelssohn's lovely "Hirtenlied" and Herr Taubert's "Morgenlied." The enthusiasm of all present was excited to the highest pitch. Her last song was the Dalecarlian Invitation à la Danse, which she accompanied herself on the piano. The instrumental part of the concert included the overture to Der Freischütz, together with the first movement of Chopin's pianoforte concerto in E minor, two "original Salon-Stücke," (not very "original," by the way), and one of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte, performed by Herr Otto Goldschmidt.

Digitized by Google

The tenor, Dr. Rademacher, is engaged at the Imperial Opera House. Mesdames Marlow, Schwarzbach, Herren Staudigl, Hochheimer, Kraus and Steiner have seceded from that establishment. Herr Ander, in company with his brother Ernest, has gone to fulfil a "starring" engagement at Frankfort-on-the-Maine. The third concert of the Männergesang-Verein is fixed for the 17th.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent).—The brothers Wieniawski (violinist and pianist) have given their seventh concert in the large room of the Royal Opera House, and have also appeared at a concert in the theatre itself, on the 11th, at which Mdlle. Schultz was engaged, and sang the grand scena, "Wie nahte mir," from Der Freischütz, etc., with great applause. The overtures to Fidelio and Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor (the last a very poor affair), were played by the orchestra. Both concerts were under the direction of Herr Leopold Ganz.—On the 7th, the Königlicher Domchor gave a concert in the St. Petrikirche, for the benefit of the Königin Elisabeth-Stiftung; and, on Sunday, the 8th, there was a concert, for charitable purposes, in the great room of the Royal Opera House. The brothers Stahlknecht and Herr Löschhorn played a trio of Beethoven. Mdlle. Johanna Wagner, Herren Theodore Formes, Pfister, Krause, and Bost, sang various songs, and Herr Gareis played a clarinet-solo.—Herr Josef Gungl has given a farewell concert, previous to his departure for St. Petersburg.—A young pupil of the Academy, Herr Hugo Schwantzer, has lately given a matinée musicale in the Stöcker'scher-Saal, on which occasion a quartet for stringed instruments, of his own composition, was produced for the first time.—Mdlle. Trietsch has signed a fresh engagement, for several years, with the management of the Royal Opera House.

MUNICH.—A grand musical festival is to be given here in the beginning of August, on three successive days, under the direction of Herr Lachner. There is some talk of erecting a large temporary building for the occasion.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Weber's Der Freischütz has been played here for the 150th time. A musical introduction was composed in honour of the event, by Herr Harald Von Brackel. The house was crowded. La Part du Diable, by Auber, has been produced with decided success.

STUTTGART.—Madame Marlow, from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, is engaged here.

METZ.—The most important musical event that has taken place lately is the production of M. Meyerbeer's Huguenots.

HAMBURGH.—The second part of Göthe's Faust has been produced at the Stadttheater with music by Mr. Pierson, an Englishman, author of an oratorio called Jerusalem.* It was completely successful.

ROSTOCK.—There have been a great number of concerts lately. Among these were the quartet soirée of Herr Schulz, at which a quartet in F, by Benincori, Mendelssohn's in E minor, and Mozart's in E flat, were played; the concert given by the Liedertafel for the benefit of their director, Herr L. Hagen, at which the principal features were the overture to Dr. Spohr's Jessonda, and M. Félicien David's Désert: and Herr Schulz's concert, the programme of which contained the overture to Weber's Oberon, a concertino by Herr F. A. Kummer, a fantaisie caractéristique, for the violoncello, by M. Servais, a symphony in D, by Herr Carl Schwenke, besides a number of songs and instrumental pieces, too numerous to mention. M. Vieuxtemps has also given a concert, at which he performed the adagio and rondo from his concerto in A major, some original variations, and Paganini's Variations Diaboliques, concluding with Herr Ernst's Carnaval de Venise. He was most rapturously applauded in all of them, and it was a subject of great regret that, on account of previous engagements, the celebrated virtuoso could not give a second concert. Herr Marschner's opera Der Vampyr has been given, for the benefit of Herr Schaeff, the barytone.

AGRAM.—The Musikverein gave a musical soirée, on the 15th, to which only members and their friends were admitted.

BRESLAU.—Herr von Flotow's Indra has been produced with success.

BONN.—The fifth Subscription Concert was well attended. The programme consisted of Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, the scena for soprano from Beethoven's Fidelio, "Spring," from Haydn's Seasons, and Schubert's symphony in C major—a very curious, lengthy, and interesting work.

---

NEW ORLEANS.—(From a Correspondent.)—The following flourishing apostrophe to Jullien is by a writer in the Delta newspaper of New Orleans, who sees a close affinity between the orchestral effects of the renowned chef-d'orchestre and the military grandeur of the States:—

"That Jullien was a great musician, we knew; that he was a still greater organiser of musicians, we saw no reason to doubt; that he was the most accomplished conductor of his day, we believed. And yet, perfectly aware of the magnificent re-union of talent which he has effected—aware, too, of his great reputation in Europe, and of the celebrity of his principal supporters—we confess that we were not prepared for the grand festival of the soul which we enjoyed last night at his second concert in this city. It was the true sublime of music.

"We do not pretend to the professional coldness of critics. We prefer to give our involuntary enthusiasm its full sweep and swing, and honestly to declare the impressions created by the grand maestro. He has triumphed here as everywhere else. He has aroused patriotic feelings which seemed to slumber amongst us. He has done more by fifteen minutes of his weird enchantment to awaken the American idea—somewhat too latent in modern days—to place us face to face with the grandeur of our country, to recall our military glory, and, at the same time, define our military genius, than all the orators, or writers, or artists of the world could effect, even if different ages lent their united strength—if Demosthenes joined with Raphael, and Shakspere with Henry Clay—after years of ceaseless labour and combined effort.

"This may appear sad rant. But the enthusiasm created by M. Jullien is too deep-felt and genuine not to be expressed. When his grand American piece was played, the passion of the audience broke forth into a wild cheer; and, during the battle-scene, the crashing of the cannon, the roll of the drums, the thunder of the conflict, and the clear notes of König's cornet ringing above all, like an angel's voice proclaiming victory to the Americans, all finally settling down into the triumphant national air,—men and women leaped to their feet, every face glowed with passionate delight, tears of pride and pleasure ran down many an aged cheek, an electric pulse beat through the whole assemblage, and, as the upraised finger of Jullien pointed to the final swell of the anthem, there was not a heart which did not throb with ecstacy, as each remembered at last that these victorious sounds were heard in the city of the great battle, where the foreign foe went down before the headlong charge of America! It is a noble custom, that of rising to salute our country's fighting-tune; and to Jullien is due the honour of establishing it amongst us. The oldest lady in the room rose to her feet from the same impulse that inspired the boys, and in the entire audience there was but one idea,—the martial glory of our nation."

Whatever opinion may be entertained of the judgment of the critic who thus gives the reins to his Pegasus in prose, none will deny that he is an enthusiast of a high order of enthusiasm.

Mad. Sontag appeared, at the St. Charles Theatre, on the 17th of March, in the Figlia del Reggimento, and on the 20th in Sonnambula. She also assisted Mad. Devries in a concert at Armory Hall.—Meyerbeer's Prophète was produced at the Orleans Theatre on the 21st, and Lucia di Lammermoor on the 17th.

MOBILE.—Jullien's farewell concert was given on the 15th of March, at Odd Fellows' Hall. The performances were received with enthusiastic applause, and Jullien himself obtained an ovation.

CHARLESTON.—Jullien gave two concerts on the 27th and 29th of March, with the utmost éclat, at Military Hall.

* Produced in 1852, at the Norwich Festival.—ED.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

MONDAY.—Philharmonic Society, Hanover-square, Grand Concert. Eight o'clock.

Mr. C. Cotton's Concert, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, Oxford-street.

Mr. Travers's National Entertainment, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, First Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Half-past Three.

C. Salaman's Amateur Choral Meeting, 36, Baker-street. Eight o'clock.

FRIDAY.—Sacred Harmonic Society, Exeter Hall, Beethoven's Grand Mass in D, &c. Half-past Seven.

Miss Alleyne Goode's Concert, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.

SATURDAY.—The Misses Mascall's Concert, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.

Grand Concert for the Benefit of the Italian Exiles, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NELSON—THE LIFE OF A SAILOR. Illustrated by Dibdin's Songs. Mr. TRAVERS' NATIONAL ENTERTAINMENT every Monday Evening, at the Music Hall, Store-street, at Eight o'clock. Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d.. And at Deptford, Tuesday, April 25th; Woolwich, Thursday, 27th; Liverpool, May 13th. Address, 48, Torrington-square, London.

MUSICAL UNION.—Tenth Season.—Tuesday, April 25, Willis's Rooms. Ernst, Goffrie, Hill, Piatti, and Sterndale Bennett will play Quartets, No. 70 in D, Haydn; No. 7, E minor, Beethoven; and Trio, D minor, No. 1, Mendelssohn. Solos on the Pianoforte by W. S. Bennett. Single admissions, half-a-guinea each, to be had of Cramer and Co., Regent-street; Chappell and Ollivier, Bond-street. Members can pay for visitors, and also their subscription, at the rooms, to Mr. Ollivier. For other particulars address by letter. J. Ella, Director.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL—Conductor, Mr. COSTA.—On Friday next, April 28th, will be produced, for the first time by this Society, BEETHOVEN'S GRAND SERVICE IN D. Principal vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes, with orchestra of nearly 700 performers. Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each; or subscription, one, two, or three guineas per annum, at the Society's office, No. 6, in Exeter Hall.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Second Concert for the Exhibition of the Students will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Saturday morning, April 29th, to commence at Two o'Clock. Single tickets, 5s.; Family Tickets to admit Four, 16s.; to be had at the principal Musicsellers', and at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—THE THIRD GRAND CONCERT will take place at St. Martin's Hall on Monday Evening, May 1st, instead of April 26th, as previously advertised.

SIGNOR NAPPI begs to announce that his SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Monday, May the 1st, when he will be assisted by Mesdames Newton Frodsham, Ursula Barclay, Fanny Rowland, Rosa Schott, and Ransford, Messrs. Benson, Paravicini, Li Calsi, Briccialdi, and Giulio Regondi. Conductor, Signor Negri. Tickets, 7s.; to be had at Mr. Lonsdale's, 26, Old Bond-street, and of Signor Nappi, 31, Newman Street.

SIGNOR ENRICO VERONI begs to announce that his MORNING CONCERT will take place, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday, the 9th of May, on which occasion he will sing for the first time in England. The following eminent artists, among others, have been engaged:—Madame Clara Novello, Madame Amedei, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Benedict, and Miss Arabella Goddard. Full particulars next week.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S SECOND CHAMBER CONCERT of PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place on Friday Evening, May 12th, at 27, Queen Anne-street, when he will be assisted by Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Lucas, and Mr. W. H. Holmes, &c. Single ticket, 10s. 6d.; double ticket, 15s.; to be had of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street; and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58, Albert-street, Regent's-park.

MISS GUSELDA ARCHER (Pupil of Mr. Aspull), has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, the 10th of May, 1854. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Katharine Smith, Miss Marion Adam, and Miss Binckes; Mr. Frank Bodda, and Herr B. de Becker; the Misses Brougham. Harp—Mr. Chatterton. Pianoforte—Miss Guselda Archer. Conductor, Mr. Aspull. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; Single tickets, 7s., and family tickets to admit four, one guinea. To be had at the Music Warehouses, and of Miss Archer, 451, Oxford-street.

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday morning, May 11th, commencing at Half-past Two. Vocalists—Mdme. Hermine Rudersdorff (from the Berlin Opera), Mdlle. Marie Sedlatzek (from Vienna), Miss Messent, Herr Reichart, and Herr Formes; Violin, Herr Ernst; Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar; Accompanyist, Mr. Brinley Richards. The London Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Frank Mori, will perform, among other pieces, Mr. Aguilar's Concert Overture, "Alpheus," his new Symphony, and the Overture to his MS. Opera. Tickets, 7s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. Aguilar, 69, Upper Norton-street, Portland Road.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her Two Annual Matinées of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), under the patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, The Most Noble the Marchioness of Camden, The Right Honourable the Countess of Bradford, Lady Isabella Stewart, The Lady Molesworth, &c., will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, on Saturday, May 20, and Wednesday, June 14, when she will be assisted by Herr Ernst, M. Sainton, Signor Piatti, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mrs. Endersohn, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, with other distinguished Artists. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, Reserved Seat, 15s.; Ticket, for either Matinée, 7s.; Reserved Seat, 10s. 6d.; to be had at Ebers's Library, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

"RULE BRITANNIA," with Variations for the Pianoforte.—Composed by Brinley Richards. Dedicated to, and played by Miss Arabella Goddard, with distinguished success. Price 4s. This popular morceau will be played by Mr. Brinley Richards, at Mr. Ransford's Benefit at the Theatre Royal, Haymarket, on Wednesday evening, May 3rd, and is published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

MADAME NISSEN SALOMAN begs to announce that she has arrived in London for the season. All communications for concerts, &c., &c., to be addressed to her residence, 48, Duke-street, St. James's.

WANTED.—In one of the principal cities in the West of England, an experienced Tuner (for out of doors). Satisfactory references as to ability and character will be required. Address M. G., Post Office, Bath.

MADLLE. E. ST. MARC begs to inform her Friends and Pupils, that she has removed to 70, Torrington-square.

HERR REICHART begs to announce that he has removed to 98, Manchester-street, Manchester-square.

HERR HILDEBRAND ROMBERG begs to announce that he has returned to town. For professional engagements address to Messrs. Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent-street.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

Digitized by Google

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

UPRIGHT GRAND PIANOFORTES, with PATENT METALLIC ENTIRE FRAME, for all Climates, and NEW ROYAL VICTORIA REPEAT. Pianists, and the Musical World, are respectfully invited to inspect and test these Pianofortes, which have now attained the long-sought properties of permanence, quantity, and quality of tone, standing well in tune, with the most prompt and light touch. The purchasers of Pianos have now the advantage of selecting an Instrument to their own taste, which, being of itself permanent, can be sent to any distance without injurious effects. The great improvements taking place around us in the mechanical arts and manufactures, has rendered it necessary that the Pianoforte should be included in the number. The difficult obstacles to conquer in the making of Pianos is, without doubt, that which results from the pressure occasioned by the extreme tension on the strings, and also from the dryness or humidity of the atmosphere, causing the wood placed at the back to expand, sometimes to unglue, and always to force them to rest upon the sounding-board, rendering the instrument (sooner or later) valueless, and significantly expressed by the common observation of "My Piano has lost its tone!" The defects of the ordinary, inefficient, and too weak construction in wood—or with metallic plates—is completely superseded by WOOLLEY'S PATENT METALLIC ENTIRE FRAME, FOR ALL CLIMATES. The frame consists of an entire construction of iron, preventing the possibility of the least shrinking in any direction, and producing positive permanence; a frame of wood is also attached to the iron, which gives it the desired quality of fulness, and greatly increased duration. It is obvious that any thickness of stringing can be put on these frames, without fear of giving way—the tone is increased in volume—is rendered perfect in quality—and from the enormous resistance contained in the frame, the strings throw off their "Real Harmonics."—MECHANISM.—THE NEW ROYAL VICTORIA REPEAT. The power of tone and resistance in the frame, suggests the desirability of a very powerful blow in the hammer. This is completely effected by the "New Royal Victoria Repeat;" the addition to these Pianos having a blow much more powerful than any hitherto produced—combining all the requisites of force, ease, variety of light and shade, superior damping, perfect check, and an untiring repetition, which is produced from an action not likely to get out of order. Mr. Woolley begs to draw attention to the applause which M. Billet elicited at his Classical Concerts at St. Martin's Hall, for the beautiful intonation of this instrument. These Pianos may be seen and purchased at L. L. Lee's Warerooms, 48, Albemarle-street, London; and all the principal Provincial Towns. Woolley and Co., Patentees and Manufacturers.

I. and I. ERAT, PATENT HARP MANUFACTURERS, 23, Berners-street, Oxford-street, beg to inform the nobility, gentry, and the public, that they are now manufacturing a light and elegant, small-sized, double-movement HARP, strongly recommended by the faculty for the use of young ladies and those of delicate health, the large Harp being found much too heavy for general practice. A large assortment of instruments, harps, and pianofortes, for sale or hire on moderate terms. Harps and pianos taken in exchange. Repairs of all kinds executed. The suspension sounding board, as invented by I. and I. Erat for N. C. Bochsa; see his First Six Weeks' Instruction for the Harp. Tunings attended to. Strings and every requisite always on hand.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

MR. FRANK BODDA begs to inform his Friends and Pupils he has removed to No. 2, Nottingham-terrace, York Gate, Regent's-park.

HERR ERNST requests that all letters and communications for him may be addressed to Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street—until May 8, when Herr Ernst will return from Dublin.

PHILHARMONIC ROOMS, Newman-street, Oxford-street.—These elegant, commodious, and fashionable Rooms, capable of containing upwards of 1000 persons, are open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Entertainments, Public Meetings, &c., &c. For terms, address to Mr. CHARLES COTTON, proprietor, as above, where also all letters, respecting engagements, &c., &c. are requested to be addressed.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

GOLLMICK.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons have just published Four New Morceaux for Pianoforte, by Herr Gollmick, of the most attractive character:—1. Chanson à boire; 2. Farewell, a transcription of a celebrated song; 3. German Volkslied; 4. Minerva, Grande Valse, as a solo and duet. Also, another edition of the same author's celebrated Europa-Galop de Concert, Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

TEN NEW ITALIAN SONGS and DUETS by GORDIGIANI, published this day by BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.

1. O Miei Pensier, Canto Popolare, 1s. 6d.
2. Esicenza, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
3. La Ciambella idem idem, 1s. 6d.
4. La Pipa del Nonno, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
5. Ancora t' amo, idem idem, 1s. 6d.
6. Il Nome di mia Madre, Canto Popolare, 1s, 6d;
7. Canto e Ballo, Scena a due Voci, 2s.
8. La Cerca, Duettino, 1s. 6d.
9. Il Maggio, Notturnino a due Voci, 2s,
10. Pastorale, a due Voci, 2s.

Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

GOD DEFEND THE RIGHT!—Inscribed to Admiral Sir C. Napier, by GEORGE LINLEY. 2s. (post free for stamps.) John Shepherd, Newgate-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 58, New Bond-street, London.

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ.—The applause which has greeted the performance of this Waltz every evening during the last week at the Argyll Rooms, has been quite unprecedented. Is now published, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. The band parts will be ready on Tuesday, price 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

Just Published, Nos. 1 to 12 of

CHAPPELL'S HARMONIUM JOURNAL,

BEING A SELECTION OF

CELEBRATED OPERATIC AND SACRED SUBJECTS,

Arranged expressly for the Harmonium, by Dr. RIMBAULT.

Price of Each Number, 2s.

ALSO A SELECTION OF

FAVOURITE PSALM AND HYMN TUNES,

Arranged for the Harmonium, price 2s. 6d.; and as Duets for the Harmonium and Pianoforte, by Panseron,

BEETHOVEN'S ADELAIDA, Price 4s., and BEETHOVEN'S CELEBRATED ANDANTE, Price 4s.

OSBORNE'S SUMMER'S EVE.

Just Published, by this popular Composer, price 3s., a Companion to his "EVENING DEW" and "SUNBEAM."

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MEYERBEER'S NEW OPERA.—Unauthorised Editions of portions of my Works having appeared, I hereby give Notice, that I have sold the Copyright for the British Dominions of my New Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, to Messrs. CRAMER, BEALE and Co., of Regent-street, and they and Mr. Chappell, of New Bond-street, alone in England, have my authority to publish any of the Music of L'Etoile du Nord, including also, those Pieces from the Camp of Silesia that I have introduced into the Opera of L'Etoile du Nord. I have also accorded to them the Right of Publishing my Marche aux Flambeaux, and the Ninety-first Psalm that I have composed.—Paris, March 30, 1854.

GIACOMO MEYERBEER.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Marche Turque ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet No 1, Op. 23 ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in C major, No. 3, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in A minor, No. 4, Op. 20 ... ... | Silas. |
| March composed for the Sultan ... ... | Rossini. |
| Marche aux Flambeaux, 5s. ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Fantasie de Salon from "Le Prophète" ... | Oesten. |
| Marche des Slovaques ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| La Source, Caprice ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Marche Militaire ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Estelle ... ... ... ... ... | B. Richards. |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

EWER and CO.'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Mendelssohn.—Wedding March, full score ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " " orchestra parts ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Mendelssohn.—Cantata, "To the Sons of Art," arranged as Pianoforte Duet ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Fanny Hensel (née Mendelssohn Bartholdy).—Song without Words (as performed by W. Sterndale Bennett), Pianoforte Solo ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Scarlatti.—Sonata for Pianoforte (as performed by Mdlle. Clauss), | 1 | 6 |
| Chopin.—Deux Valses Mélancoliques, for Pianoforte (Posthumous Work) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Evers, C.—La Coquette, Pièce de Salon ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Chipp, E. J.—3 Romances for Pianoforte ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Schramm, C.—Grand Fantasia on "God save the Queen," for Pianoforte (left hand only) ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Schallehn, H.—Galopade, "Death or Glory" (dedicated to the Officers of the 17th Lancers) ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Schallehn, H.—The Julie Polkas, Pianoforte and Cornet ... | 2 | 6 |
| Schallehn, H.—The Rosalien Waltzes, ditto ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Kalozdy.—Marionette Quadrilles, ditto ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Kalozdy.—Rococo Polka, ditto ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Lichtenstein, G.—Fantaisie Hongrois, Pianoforte ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Egghard, Jules.—Chanson Érotique, Pianoforte ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Lindpaintner.—"Stars of Night," Canon for Soprano, Tenor, and Bass, with Pianoforte ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Dürrner, J.—3 Songs (dedicated to Herr Formes) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " singly, each ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| McDermott, T. H.—6 Songs, with Pianoforte ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| " singly, each ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Dixon, R. W.—2 Four Part Songs, Score and Parts ... ... | 2 | 0 |

GREAT GOD OF HOSTS: Hymn for the Fast Day. Price 1s. Words and Music by THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE. Clergymen may obtain copies of the words, gratis, for their Congregations, on application to J. A. Novello, 69, Dean-street, Soho.

NOW READY.—ORATORIOS, NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION.—In a new handsome binding, whole scarlet cloth, gilt.

| | |
|---|---|
| Haydn's "Creation" ... ... ... ... | Price 3s. |
| Handel's "Messiah" ... ... ... ... | " 4s. |
| ——— "Judas Maccabeus" ... ... ... | " 4s. |
| ——— "Samson" ... ... ... ... | " 4s. |

JUST PUBLISHED.—NOVELLO'S ANALYSIS OF VOCAL RUDIMENTS, by Question and Answer, 18mo., price 6d. sewed, 1s. cloth.

"I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you Gamut in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectual,
Than hath been taught by any of my trade:
And there it is in writing, fairly drawn."—Shakspere.

Novello: London and New York.

"YES! 'TIS A SPELL:" Romance, sung by Mr. ELLIOT GALER, with nightly double encores, in Duggan's successful opera of "Léonie," as performed at Drury-lane Theatre. "The gem of the opera was a delicious little romance, 'Yes! 'tis a spell,' which was twice encored. This will, unquestionably, become one of the popular songs of the season."—Sunday Times. Campbell, Ransford, and Co., 53, New Bond-street.

A NEW APPROPRIATE SONG, by CAPTAIN ARMSTRONG.—"WARRIORS OF THE WAVE," splendidly illustrated with a portrait of Nelson in colours. Price 3s.

I.

I sing of England's glory, of her glory and her pride;
For I toast the true, who fight in blue, upon old Neptune's tide;
Britannia's sons of battle, who Vict'ry's laurels reap,
At valour's shrine, in ev'ry clime, as pilgrims of the Deep.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

II.

There's not a wave in any sea but British tars have plough'd;
There's not a shore but's heard the roar of Britain's thunders loud;
There's not a tongue but's quick to tell how valiantly they fight;
Nor woman's eye but beams with joy when sailors heave in sight.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

III.

Yes, England's floating bulwarks, bathed with her NELSON'S blood,
Shall nobly ride, in conqu'ring pride, sole rulers of the flood;
To guard their Queen and country, that home they'd die to save,
Their birth-isle dear, that loves to rear the beauteous and the brave.
Then here's to each true blue one, with three times three—hip, hip!
Whose freehold is the Ocean, and whose homestead is a Ship.

By the same author, "WELLINGTON'S MARCH OF VICTORY," with portrait of Wellington, 2s. 6d.

MADAME MONTIGNANI'S COMPOSITIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Six Melodies en forme d'Etudes ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Nuits d'Italie—Cantilene ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Pensée d'une Jeune Fille ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Souvenir d'Italie—Air Variée ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Allegrezza Etude ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| La Festa—Morceau brillante ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Premier Amour, Romance ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |

Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 17. SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)*

(Continued from page 265.)

CHAPTER XIII.

(1781.)

From this time, Mozart renounced all idea of official appointments. He no longer sought them, nor did they seek him, till the day of his death. He now changed his wandering and adventurous mode of life for the settled domestic existence of a citizen, and took up his permanent residence in Vienna. With his free and open character, his love of agreeable society, his admiration for handsome women, and his partiality for good living, Mozart necessarily sympathised with a people, whose chief business was pleasure, and whose chief pleasure was music. Seen on the Prater; at a masked ball, disguised as harlequin or Pierrot;† a constant visitor to the billiard-table; drinking champagne in the company of ladies of the theatre, or of Schikaneder,‡ Mozart was the type of a perfect Viennese. Vienna could justly claim, as its own, the pianist unrivalled and composer of so much music, which, with irresistible power, invited its hearers to pleasure and to love. But, as we shall subsequently see, there was a second and very different man in Mozart—melancholy in the highest degree, always thinking of death, passing whole nights at his piano, and raising himself, on the pinions of phantasy, to those unknown regions, the secrets of which can only be revealed hereafter. It was long before the city of Vienna could appreciate either the character or the works of this second individual self.

Independently of the manners and peculiarities of its inhabitants, the capital of Austria, to an artist like Mozart, presented other attractions, no less agreeable than those already cited. Vienna was the rendezvous of the virtuosi of Europe, as much on account of the hospitable welcome they received and the generous appreciation of their efforts, as of the endless pleasures at their disposal. It was, moreover, the usual residence of Haydn and Gluck, two masters, whom Mozart considered it more honourable to regard as friends and emulate as models than to look upon in the light of rivals. He knew which was the better course, and selected it accordingly. The geographical and topographical position of the city, too, was as admirably suited as the character of its inhabitants to make it a very agreeable place for a musician to dwell in. The climate is magnificent, the situation splendid, and the environs apparently laid out by Nature herself for extensive and beautiful walks. On one side lay Italy, and, on the other, Bohemia—the land of music, if there is such a place in the world. Lastly, there was at Vienna an Italian theatre, for which the most celebrated composers of the time were accustomed to write, and to which Metastasio, the king of libretto-makers, was attached as poet. A short time afterwards, too, a native company, rich in talent, which only wanted an opportunity—in other words, a composer—to obtain a fair share of consideration, was destined to make public on the banks of the Donau the first strains of that national muse, which, up to the time of Mozart, had merely stammered forth a few weak melodies that found no echo in the rest of Europe.

From the foregoing, the reader will of course conclude with Gerber, author of the Lexicon der Tonkünstler, that in Vienna Mozart's style had naturally attained that degree of popularity and attraction which subsequently laid open for him the way to every heart. The biographer adds, however:

"Mozart's earlier works exhibit a certain stiffness, as well as want of polish and colour, which rendered them, when compared with his later productions, insupportable. His style gives evidence of certain tendencies which might have caused him to become a sombre and half-demented contrapuntist. If the pleasant and sportive Muses of Vienna had not cast around him their garlands of roses in time, he would, most undoubtedly, have fallen into the manner of Friedemann Bach.* His masses, especially those in D and B flat, and still more his Requiem, prove this incontrovertibly."

I know not what this may prove with regard to Mozart's style, but it assuredly proves something with regard to the excellent Gerber's ideas and logic. If we are to believe him, Idomeneo was insupportable, since it was written before the period at which Mozart had changed his place of residence. Such is not exactly the opinion of the author of this work, nor, I make bold to assert, that of the musicians of the present day. We are next informed that Mozart would have fallen into the manner of Bach, had he not fortunately become entangled, at the right time, in the rose-garlands of the Viennese Muses. To prove that this would really have been the case, Gerber quotes the Requiem, as probably the work of Mozart in which the composer's first disposition to become an imitator of Bach, and a sombre half-demented contrapuntist, is most evident. From this it is, indeed, very plain that the sportive Viennese Muses alone prevented his fall, since it was towards the end of his residence there, and, indeed, of his sojourn upon earth, that he composed his Requiem. What a magnificent climax to the argument, and how worthy of the commencement!

Mozart made immense strides in composition from the time he settled in Vienna, at the age of four-and-twenty. No one will dispute this, but it would be showing too much honour to the Viennese Muses, were we to ascribe Mozart's progress wholly to them. On the contrary, it may be confidently stated that Mozart's style and that of the Viennese were invariably opposed. As a proof of this, we have only

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

† He generally selected these characters.

‡ The author of the libretto of the Zauberflöte.

* Sebastian Bach's eldest son.—A. Schaishuon.

Digitized by Google

to remember that Mozart's most excellent dramatic works, such as Figaro, Don Juan, and Così fan tutte, found little favour in Vienna, and were criticised more than praised; that his violin quartets were declared to abound with faults; that his finest symphonies were almost entirely neglected; and that, lastly, the extraordinary success of Die Zauberflöte was attributable to certain concessions to the Viennese public, to which Mozart would never have condescended for the sake of forwarding his own interests, but to which it is well known he consented out of kindness to a theatrical manager who had been ruined.

When a musician has no official appointment, he must of necessity privatisiren (give private lessons), and this Mozart did in Vienna. The expression is tantamount to saying that, in order to live, he did everything that it is in the power of a musician to undertake. We use the word "musician" in its most extended signification, as an epithet equally applied to the true artist and great composer as to the vilest fiddler existing, from day to day, on whatever chance happens to throw in his way. Thus Mozart gave Academies (public concerts), and lessons on the piano for a thaler; he composed operas, published sonatas by subscription; worked for the music-sellers at so much a page; and accepted every commission that was offered him, composing, without the slightest distinction, Italian airs and German songs on given words, symphonies and tunes for musical clocks, Requiems and quadrilles. Frequent invitations to the aristocracy's musical soirées, at a subsequent period, were the means of adding to his income, by presents made to him in money and valuables. We do not know to how much his income amounted, but it is quite certain that, whatever it was, it never sufficed for the indefatigable artist, who was, we may safely assert, as lavish in his expenses as persevering in his exertions.

About the end of the year, the Grand Prince Paul of Russia, under the name of Graf von Norden, arrived, in company with his wife, the Grand Duchess Maria, at Vienna. At every place which was visited by the illustrious guests, the greatest exertions were made to amuse them, in the best way, and in a manner peculiar to the country. In Vienna, therefore, where there is nothing more national than music, the Emperor Joseph could not do otherwise than entertain them with a contest of artists—a contest of life and death, in the widest acceptation of the word—a contest, which, from the conditions of the strife, could only terminate in the death of one or other of the combatants. The champions selected, were Mozart and Clementi,* who was his senior by ten years. A letter to Leopold Mozart, contains the particulars of this remarkable duel between the two greatest musicians of the age.

"The Emperor," Mozart writes, "expressed his desire, at the concert (after we had complimented each other sufficiently), that he," (Clementi) "should play first. 'La santa chiesa Catolica,' said the Emperor, 'because Clementi is a Roman.' Clementi preluded, and played a sonata. The Emperor then said to me, 'Allons! now it is your turn.' I also preluded, and played some variations. The Grand-Duchess then handed us some sonatas of Paisiello (wretchedly written in his own handwriting). I was told to play an allegro, and Clementi an andante and rondo. After this, we selected a theme from one of the sonatas, and extemporised upon it, on two pianos. It is to be remarked that I borrowed the piano of Countess Thun,† but only used it when I played alone—as such was the Emperor's wish. The other piano was out of tune, and wanted three notes. 'Never mind that,' said the Emperor. I explain the matter thus—as, indeed, it can only be explained: the Emperor, who is aware of my musical knowledge and skill, was anxious that the strangers should appreciate me fully. Besides, I have heard, from a very good source, that he was greatly pleased; for he was very gracious, and talked a great deal to me in private—even speaking of my marriage."

Mozart's judgment of Clementi seems more severe than impartial. He says of him:

"He is a good cymbalist, and that is all. He is very clever with his right hand. His best passages are in thirds, but he has not a farthing's worth of either taste or feeling, and is a mere mechanical player."

Either Clementi had not then attained that great mastery over the piano which afterwards procured him the just admiration of connoisseurs in England and France, or Mozart, true to his usual custom of measuring everyone by himself, felt that he was superior to his rival in the qualities he considered most important in a musician, namely—taste, method, expression, and equality of force in both hands. That the intelligent admirer of Gluck and Haydn should have been jealous, however, of Clementi, I cannot believe. Let us hear what our hero's contemporaries said about his playing, and what a few judges who knew him still say, perhaps:

"Incredible power of execution, especially in the left hand, uncommon tenderness, most splendid and entrancing expression, and a feeling that found its way to every heart, were the qualities peculiar to the playing of Mozart, and which, in conjunction with the richness of his ideas and the elevated character of his compositions, could not fail to carry away his hearers, and make him the first pianoforte-player of the century in which he lived."

If, to these various gifts, we add that of extemporising, which, according to the same contemporaries, no other musician possessed in so high a degree as our hero, we shall find that he had more than one string to his bow; and that Mozart, the composer and improvisatore, would always have carried off the victory, even if it had been denied to Mozart the artist. How, for instance, was it possible for Clementi to equal him, when both had to play the same theme from memory, and compose variations on it in turn? In spite of the superiority of weapons, however, poor Roman gladiator! thou couldst not help being worsted in the fight. The case of thy piano served thee as a grave, and the earth lay lightly on thy remains.

[To be continued.]

* Clementi had only returned a short time previous from Italy, and the friends of the Italians and their music in Vienna were of opinion that he would eclipse Mozart.—A. Schmaishuon.

† Mozart's pupil.

Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss.—This young, talented, and highly esteemed pianist, has arrived in London for the season.

Sig. Lorenzo, the well-known barytone, who sang during the seasons of 1850-1 at Her Majesty's Theatre, and who as Pizarro (Fidelio), Nabucco, Figaro, and other parts, displayed so much dramatic talent, has arrived in London. We hear that he is to appear at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane. Sig. Lorenzo will be a valuable acquisition to Mr. Jarrett's already numerous troupe.

Church at St. Margaret's, near Richmond.—Representations having been made to the Executive Committee of the Conservative Land Society of the want of church accommodation in the localities in the vicinity of St. Margaret's, it has been unanimously resolved to set apart a portion of ground in the St. Margaret's Park, for the erection of a new church. The piece of land thus apportioned by the committee is close to the Richmond, Twickenham, and Isleworth high road, and the church stands on the plan of the allotment of the Estate at the junction of the magnificent row of trees called "The Avenue," the Ailsa and Casillis roads. This is the third grant of land within a year for the building of churches, by the Conservative Land Society.

Digitized by Google

LUMLEY v. GYE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER APRIL 21.—(Sittings in Banco.)—Before Lord CAMPBELL, and Justices WIGHTMAN, ERLE and CROMPTON.

In this case the plaintiff, Mr. Benjamin Lumley, the lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre, had brought an action against Mr. Frederick Gye, the director of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, to recover damages for enticing and procuring Miss Johanna Wagner to break a contract into which she had entered with Mr. Lumley to perform as prima donna at Her Majesty's Theatre in the season of 1852. The declaration contained several counts, to which the defendant pleaded only the general issue. At the trial, which took place before Lord Campbell, at Guildhall, at the sittings after last term, the jury, in substance, found a verdict for the defendant. On that occasion Lord Campbell left three questions to the jury for their consideration—1, whether Miss Wagner's agreement with Mr. Lumley remained in force when it was alleged Mr. Gye induced her to break it; 2, whether Mr. Gye induced Miss Wagner to break her agreement, and whether she broke it in consequence of his inducement; and, 3, whether Mr. Gye at that time knew that the agreement between Miss Wagner and Mr. Lumley was then in existence. The jury found the first two questions in the affirmative, but they found the third in the negative—namely, that Mr. Gye did not know that Miss Wagner's agreement with Mr. Lumley was at that time in existence. Lord Campbell had previously directed the jury that if Mr. Gye bonâ fide believed that Miss Wagner's agreement with Mr. Lumley had ceased to be binding, the scientia was not proved, and Mr. Gye would be entitled to a verdict. Upon the finding of the jury, the verdict was entered for the defendant accordingly.

Sir F. THESIGER (with whom were Sir F. Kelly and Mr. Hoggins, Q.C.) now moved, on the part of the plaintiff, to set aside the verdict and to have a new trial upon the several grounds. The first and principal ground was, that the finding of the jury upon the third question submitted to them was contrary to the evidence. The learned counsel went fully into the evidence given at the trial, with a view to show that when Mr. Gye, on the 5th of April, 1852, induced Miss Wagner to enter into an agreement to sing at Covent Garden Theatre, he must have known that the agreement which she had made with Mr. Lumley on the 9th of November, 1851, was still subsisting and binding upon her. Knowing that circumstance, Mr. Gye, both by his letters and by a personal visit which he paid to Miss Wagner at Hamburg, induced her to violate the engagement into which she had entered. In his letters he from time to time, in the month of March, 1852, threw out insinuations that Mr. Lumley would not be able to open his theatre and fulfil his part of the agreement; and subsequently, on the 5th of April, 1852, on his visit to Miss Wagner at Hamburg, he offered her the sum of 2000*l.* if she would sing at his theatre, although he knew that she had engaged to sing for a longer period at Mr. Lumley's theatre for the sum of 1200*l.* only. He thus bribed Miss Wagner to break her contract with Mr. Lumley by the offer of nearly double the amount which she was to receive from him. It was then proposed by Miss Wagner that Mr. Gye should give her an indemnity, and this also was readily given by Mr. Gye to facilitate the transaction. The learned counsel here read Mr. Wagner's letter, which appeared in the Morning Post, but which was proved at the trial to have been in the handwriting of Mr. Gye, to show that, in the early part of March, he (Mr. Gye) represented to Miss Wagner that her contract with Mr. Lumley was not likely to be carried out; and also an extract from an affidavit made by Mr. Gye, in which, in reference to this subject, he (Mr. Gye) stated that, in the month of March, 1852, Mr. Lumley was arrested for the sum of 2,275*l.* 18s., and remained in custody about three days. He then read Mr. Gye's letter to Miss Wagner of the 9th of March, 1852, in which Mr. Gye said, "There is only one thing wanting to render the programme perfect—it is the name of Mademoiselle Wagner. Is there any possibility of that? If you think so, write me two lines, because there is still time." It was evident from that letter that Mr. Gye was aware that at that time the agreement with Mr. Lumley was a subsisting agreement. On the 30th of March Mr. Gye again wrote to Miss Wagner as follows.

"London, March 30, 1852.

"Dear Mademoiselle Wagner,—Will you have the goodness to write me one word in reply to my last letter? Forgive me for troubling you, but it is said here that your arrangements are not quite fixed with Mr. Lumley. Is this true? My theatre opened last Saturday. The opening of Mr. Lumley's theatre was announced for last Saturday, but it did not take place; it was again announced for to-night, but was again put off. Another bill has now come out, in which the opening is announced for Thursday, but there is much doubt. You will see by the enclosed programme that M. Negrini, the tenor singer of whom I spoke to you, is engaged at Covent Garden; the troupe is fine, is it not? Excuse me for writing in such a hurry. Give me two lines in answer.

"Believe me, &c., F. GYE."

That letter showed that Covent Garden had at that time been opened, but, though it was so important for the manager to be present, Mr. Gye, on the 1st or 2nd of April, without waiting for an answer to his letters, went first to Berlin and then to Hamburg, in search of Miss Wagner. He there saw Miss Wagner, on the 5th of April, and induced her to enter into an engagement with him (Mr. Gye) to sing at Covent Garden Theatre. Mr. Gye's account of what took place at that interview was, that as soon as he entered the room Miss Wagner said, "Je suis libre," that she was now at liberty to enter into an agreement with him (Mr. Gye), inasmuch as Mr. Lumley had not kept one of the terms of his agreement with Miss Wagner—viz., to pay her the sum of £300 upon account on the 15th of March. He admitted that Miss Wagner wanted him to wait a day or two longer, but he refused, and at once concluded an agreement by which he covenanted to pay Miss Wagner nearly double the amount promised by Mr. Lumley, and also to give her an indemnity.

Lord CAMPBELL observed that Mr. Gye knew at the time that he was outbidding Mr. Lumley.

Sir F. THESIGER said the account given of this interview by Miss Wagner to Dr. Bacher, as proved by Dr. Bacher at the trial, was rather different. Dr. Bacher said, "The first thing she (Miss Wagner) said was, 'I have committed a very bad action against you.' I said, 'What have you done?' She said, 'I have signed another engagement.' I answered, 'That is impossible.' She said, 'As I signed the engagement, my hand trembled, but Mr. Gye has been here to say to us that Mr. Lumley would not open, and offered me 20,000f. more, and gave me a guarantee for all the damages. I was so much embarrassed I had not time to think.'" The learned counsel contended that all the circumstances were strong to show that Mr. Gye knew the agreement with Mr. Lumley was a subsisting agreement, and that he had induced Miss Wagner, by a bribe and indemnity, to violate it. The learned counsel then proceeded to contend that a correspondence which had passed between Mr. Gye and Miss Wagner, and particularly two letters of the 7th of December, 1851, and the 9th of January, 1852, had been improperly received in evidence. Those letters were well calculated to excite prejudice, but he submitted they were not evidence on the issue.

Lord CAMPBELL said, a part of the plaintiff's case was, that Mr. Gye mald fide entered into negotiations with Miss Wagner after she had entered into her agreement with Mr. Lumley, and those letters were admitted to show that the negotiation had been commenced previously.

Sir F. THESIGER then moved for a new trial upon the third ground, but Lord CAMPBELL said that, as it had been agreed at the trial that the three questions which had been submitted to the jury should decide the case, this third point could not now be raised. Upon the two grounds, that the verdict was against the evidence, and that evidence had been improperly received, the Court would grant a rule to show cause why there should not be a new trial.

Rule nisi granted.

---

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—A concert took place at this hall on Saturday last for the benefit of distressed Italians. It was very successful, a full room shewing the sympathy of the wealthy Italians for their less fortunate compatriots. The concert was of a miscellaneous character, though the morceaux were chosen from the works of Italian composers, with the exception of a fantasia for the concertina, composed and performed by Mr. R. Blagrove, and a ballad by Mr. Wrighton, "Sweet Home," sung by Miss Stabbach. There were several encores during the evening, viz., Sig. Belletti, in "Sulla Poppa;" Mdme. Amedei and Sig. Belletti, in the duet from Semiramide, "Bell 'Imago;" the duet from I Puritani, "Suoni la Tromba," by Herr Formes and Signor Belletti; and a Bolero by Bergson, entitled "Quand' ollezzante brezza," sung by Signor Belletti. The other vocalists were Miss Ursula Barclay, Mdlle. Adelaida Cesarini, a young, charming, and improving artist, who was greatly applauded in "Ah, non credea" (Sonnambula), Miss Milis, Miss Blanche Tudor, Signor Marras, and Signor Nappi. The instrumentalists were Mdlle. Coulon, who performed Benedict's arrangement of Rossini's Sultan's March, and La Sicilienne, by Ravina, with great spirit; and Signor Briccialdi, who played a brilliant flute solo. Sig. Fossi accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte in a highly efficient manner, and received the thanks of the committee for his exertions, and his endeavours to promote the success of the concert.

Digitized by Google

MENDELSSOHN.

(Continued from page 262.)

As Whitsuntide was now approaching, Mendelssohn repaired to Düsseldorf, the scene of his early triumphs, and was there met by his friend Julius Rietz, who was to share the duties of conductorship in the forthcoming festival. The services of more than five hundred performers, vocal and instrumental, had been secured. Arrangements were made on the most liberal scale, and artists, engaged from various parts of Germany, united forces to contribute to the general effect. Cäcilie Kreuzer, Pirscher, Sophie Schloss, Schunke, Oehrlein and Lämmer, were the solo singers. The festival commenced on Whitsunday with the C minor symphony of Beethoven, followed by Handel's Israel in Egypt. As the organ accompaniment would have been too overpowering in the confined space of the concert-room, Felix arranged it for wind instruments, and added an accompaniment to the recitatives for two violoncellos and a double bass. On Monday, Weber's Fest-cantata, Haydn's Motett, "Insanæ et vanæ curæ," the march from Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, and the Lobgesang were given. On Tuesday, Ernst, the great violinist, who was to have appeared, was taken ill, and detained at Weimar, and Mendelssohn, without previous rehearsal, substituted Beethoven's concerto in E flat.

"His appearance," says a Leipzig correspondent, "after so many famous artists, reminded us of the magicians of Egypt, with whom Moses once had to contend. All that art and manipulation of the instrument could effect was effected by him, though the wonderful mechanism was never made derogatory to the spirit of the composer, whose work he was interpreting. After the concerto, he delighted his listeners with some of the Lieder ohne Worte, and concluded with an extemporary fantasia on themes of the greatest pieces on the previous days of the festival." "If a complete organisation of masses," continues the writer, "into one harmonised whole, be taken as the criterion of a musician's power, Mendelssohn stands alone as a conductor inciting the apathetic to zeal, the impatient to perseverance."

The public at Düsseldorf, acknowledged unanimously the greatness of his services, and a fresh instance of royal favour was conferred on him by the King of Prussia, who gave him the cross of Ritter der Friedensclasse of the Orden pour le Mérite, instituted by Frederic the Great. At the end of May, he travelled to London with his wife, and here his old friends and new triumphs awaited him. On the 13th of June he conducted his symphony in A minor, at the Philharmonic Concert, and, on the 24th, at Moscheles' house, a concert for the benefit of the sufferers in the Hamburgh fire; he played with Moscheles the Hommage à Handel, besides accompanying Adelaide Kemble and Miss Hawes, the former in the "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges," and "Es brechen im schallenden Reigen," and the latter in the alto solo from St. Paul. On the 26th of June he performed his music to the Antigone before a select few in Moscheles' house, and, shortly afterwards, his overture to the Ruy Blas of Victor Hugo, with some variations on an original theme in E flat, from the manuscript.

We next hear of Mendelssohn at Lausanne, in Switzerland, whither he had been invited to conduct his Lobgesang. From some unforeseen accident he arrived a day too late, and missed hearing the Stabat Mater of Rossini, which followed immediately after the Lobgesang—an arrangement he was not likely to approve of; though the violent contrast of the different styles did nothing to endanger or lessen the fame of either composer—the learned disciple of Handel and Bach, or the graceful and brilliant Rossini, "the swan of Pesaro." This year aided, if possible, its predecessor in giving strength and universality to Mendelssohn's fame, the Lobgesang and St. Paul becoming stock pieces in Holland, Bohemia, and various parts of Germany. Up to the month of November, Mendelssohn was engaged at various periods in Berlin and Frankfort, assisting at the latter place his friend Ferdinand Hiller, but he remained at Leipzig almost without intermission from November of this year to the winter of 1842. The great topic of conversation now was the proposed scheme of a Musical Conservatory at Leipzig, a pet plan of Mendelssohn, who wrote to Moscheles: "Jetzt oder nie ist der Zeitpunct wo die Idee Eines Conservatoriums in Leipzig ins Leben treten muss." It happened at this time that a valuable legacy had been bequeathed to the crown of Saxony by the will of a private gentleman of the name of Blümner, and the king generously handed this sum over to the committee for the fund, on condition that six natives of Leipzig should receive their education gratuitously at the Conservatory. On the 16th of January, the prospectus of the new school of music at Leipzig was issued for the benefit of the public, and those who intended to offer themselves as candidates for studentships. It was to be comprised of well qualified professors, to instruct in every branch of musical science, practical and theoretical. The illustrious names of Mendelssohn, Schumann, David, Hauptmann, Pohlenz, and Becker, were proposed as teachers and overseers of the Conservatory, and all who wished to become pupils were requested to send in their names before the 23rd of March. By that time, forty-six had made applications, and the number in July was increased to sixty-eight candidates, out of whom forty-two were ultimately selected —of these the majority naturally consisted of Germans; but, not excluding other nations in their choice, the committee accepted two Dutchmen, one Englishman, and an American. On the third of April, the Conservatory was opened with public rejoicings; and, in the middle of the month, the scheme of lectures issued, with the following particulars. Mendelssohn was to have the direction of the solo singing, pianoforte playing, and composition; Hauptmann, of harmony and counter-point; Schumann of private tuition in the theory of music; David of the violin, and Becker of the organ. Pohlenz, an excellent singing master, died suddenly, on the 10th of March, and Mad. Grabau-Bünau, and Herr Böhme were to succeed him in training the chorus, assisted by Klengel, Plaidy, and Wenzel. Ghezzi gave lessons in the Italian language; and, since 1845, Brendel, the present editor of the Leipzig Zeitschrift für Musik, gave a series of lectures on the history and development of the science. The institution had from its infancy several warm friends and supporters, who testified their good wishes by substantial help, either in the shape of money, or presents of books, instruments, etc. Mendelssohn not only founded the institution, but proved its most zealous and active member. If the greatest man is not often the best teacher, he was an exception to the general rule, for none could ever question the judicious management of pupils entrusted to him. He was in constant attendance at the public and private examinations of the different classes in the Conservatory, and laboured to give each of his pupils a facility in the art of modulating and transposing. This was an essential branch of his teaching; but, more than all, he strove to encourage a high moral tone among the students, and severely censured those whose conduct or character excited a just suspicion. It is recorded of him that he sat up half the night on one occasion, writing some observations of his own addressed to each member of the Conservatory. His mission as a public man prevented him continuing this unwearied zeal towards the institution, after it had been once fairly started, though in its early days it may be said to have had the monopoly of his undivided interest. On being requested to pass as the chief of the whole staff of professors,, he modestly declined any distinction, with the words "I am only one of six teachers." He knew nothing of professional jealousy; and his anxiety to share in the labours of others induced him to gain the assistance of Moscheles, whose admission to a membership in the Conservatory was mainly owing to the interposition of Mendelssohn. I need scarcely add that Moscheles has fully satisfied the electors of the wisdom of their choice.

Digitized by Google

Let us now return from Felix, the tutor and teacher, to Felix, the writer and artist. His music to the First Walpurgis Night was given at Leipzig on the 2nd February, 1843, with Schloss, Schmidt, Pögner, Kindermann, as solo singers, and a body of connoisseurs assisting as chorus. He had selected and arranged the words of the poem for his music when he was at Rome, probably at Goethe's express desire, who may have conferred previously with him on the subject. The poet wrote to him on the 9th of September, 1831, when the greatest part of the composition had been finished:

"This poem" (said Goethe), "is intended to be in a peculiar sense highly symbolic. Denn es muss sich in der Weltgeschichte immerfort wiederholen, dass ein Altes, Gegründetes, Geprüftes, Beruhigendes durch auftauchende Neuerungen gedrängt, geschoben, verrückt, und wo nicht vertilgt, doch in den engsten Raum eingespfercht werde. The period when the passion of hatred is allowed to bring a reaction is here fully portrayed, and a reckless indestructible enthusiasm shines forth in light and lustre."

Now, allowing, as all unprejudiced students will, the beauties of this poem, we cannot affirm the poet to have succeeded in carrying out these ideas of symbolism. He has collected massive materials for a structure whereon Christendom, in the garb and caricature of superstition, plays a mournful part, and symbolism itself is converted into an objective drama, the historical import of which the writer scarcely felt and realised. It is only the conclusion of the subject, with its earnest longings for truth, its pious confessions and strivings for light, that atone for the writer's argument and introduction. But the fancy, vivid colouring, and dramatic force of the work were not lost on the musician. The overture expresses the passing away of winter into the early spring, the caprice of April with her showers, sunshine, storm, and hail; and this is followed by a short tenor solo and chorus of trebles in praise of the clear skies and pure breath of May, "the mad and merry time" of which Felix loved to sing. In a mighty chorus, "Disperse, disperse, ye gallant Men," and the somewhat grotesque "Kommt mit Zacken und mit Gabeln," the composer has given way to the extreme of fancy and poetical feeling, and in a chaos of sound has yet contrived to keep a form, order, and harmony distinct, in the midst of confusion and wild enthusiasm. After the first performance Mendelssohn altered many of the vocal parts, and greatly improved the last-mentioned of these choruses. Clear above all the din of concerted sound is heard the earnest voice of the Druid:—

"Die Flamme reinigt sich vom Rauch,
So reinig' unsern Glauben,
Und raubt man uns den alten Brauch,
Dein Licht, wer will es rauben!"

But even in this song we find the foreboding of a brighter future (if the meaning and spirit be conformable to the words), rather than the expression of inward content and freedom from religious disquietude. I must add, that Mendelssohn fully satisfied the expectations which the treatment of such a subject called for, and if we do not feel the emotions Goethe intended to convey, I attribute the result fearlessly to the libretto, rather than the music. The next novelty that calls for any remark was a scena by Mendelssohn, sung by Mdlle. Schloss, in the concert on the 9th of February. I do not think it has yet appeared in print, but in character and style it was something between the "Ah, perfido," of Beethoven, and the great song from Weber's Athalia. The chief event of this year was the inauguration of the Bach statue on the 23rd of April. We give the selection of music as chosen by Mendelssohn:—

Overture—Arioso—Gavotte; Trio and finale (Bourée und Gigue), and the double motett, "Ich lasse dich nicht;" a pianoforte concert, with orchestra, executed by Mendelssohn, the air with oboe obbligato from the Passions-Musik, "Ich will bei meinem Jesu wachen;" and an extempore on themes from Sebastian Bach.

Immediately after the concert, the ceremony of uncovering the statue began in presence of a large assemblage. Among the crowd, we observed the veteran capellmeister of Berlin, Christopher, grandson of Sebastian Bach, who had travelled to Leipzig to be present. The statue, designed by Hübner and Bendemann, and executed in stone by Knaur, is not a happy specimen of sculpture; but it will have answered its purpose if it reminds posterity that a great artist lived and laboured there, and that another great man strove in gratitude and piety to perpetuate his memory. Leipzig, not forgetful of the disinterested services paid her by Mendelssohn, presented him in the April of this year with the freedom of the city.

After attending a public performance of St. Paul, at Dresden, Mendelssohn seems to have allowed himself some temporary cessation from labour, and to have rested awhile on the laurels already won, for neither in England nor Germany did he assist, for a time, at any musical festival. It is probable that he finished, during this summer, the remainder of the music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, at the express desire of the King of Prussia; for the entire play, with orchestral and vocal accompaniments, was heard in October, at Potsdam, under the superintendence of Ludwig Tieck and the composer. It was soon brought out at Berlin, with great applause, and Mendelssohn, being engaged for a considerable time in that city, resigned his post at the Gewandhaus this winter to Ferdinand Hiller. At the farewell concert given him previously to his leaving Leipzig, I must call to mind the performance of Bach's triple concerto by Hiller, Clara Schumann, and Mendelssohn, Mendelssohn's new sonata, Op. 58 (in D), for piano and violoncello, and last, not least, the ottetto played by David, Klengel, Hauptmann, Bach, Mendelssohn, Gade, Grenser, and Wittman. This great musical phalanx was greeted, after each movement of the ottetto, with a storm of applause. Hiller maintained his difficult position this season most honourably, and brought out the romantic oratorio of Schumann, The Paradise and Peri, a fact which I cannot suppress in remembrance of a fellow citizen so distinguished and honourable as an artist. On the 30th of December, we heard, in the walls of our own theatre, the Midsummer Night's Dream, with Mendelssohn's music. The mise-en-scène, considering the resources of the theatre, was worthy of all praise, and though it was remarked that the parts were not well distributed, yet this deficiency was not without its service, if it turned the attention of the audience exclusively to the labours of Mendelssohn. How thoroughly the musician entered into the lovely fancy which inspired the poet, all who have heard these accompaniments will confess. The music, during the continued action of the play, may be called an extension and enlargement of the ideas developed in the overture, a beautiful outline in itself, and now a perfect and finished picture. The dainty gambols of the fairies, from leaf to leaf, in the moonshine, the longings and complaints of disappointed love, the brilliant pomp and circumstance of the royal wedding, with other familiar scenes, were now doubly powerful to the imagination, attended by their suitable accompaniment of music, and all are agreed that Mendelssohn handled the subject with a profound knowledge of poetry and that extreme delicacy which forbade the marring of such a poem. As exquisite morceaux, we may cite especially the fairy lullaby from Titania, the Nachtlied ohne Worte,* which is played as she is resting in the grotto; and, last not least, the brilliant Wedding March.† So strongly convinced are we of the value of the music, that we dare affirm Shakespere's poem has won much by the accompaniment, as far as stage representations are concerned, for with matter of fact minds, which glean even from poetry something material and actual, Mendelssohn has been of use in helping to realise the summer night with its fairy train of elves and urchins.

Digitized by Google

* The notturno in E.—ED.

† What about the scherzo in G minor—the composer's masterpiece in that style?—ED.

[To be continued.]

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The third concert this season of this important Society takes place on Monday, May 1st, at St. Martin's Hall, when Dr. Wylde's music to Milton's Paradise Lost, which was performed last year with such success, will form an interesting feature in the programme.

SALAMAN'S AMATEUR CHORAL SOCIETY.—The ninth and last meeting took place on Tuesday, when a miscellaneous selection was given. The programme was well varied, and the pieces in general excellently given; but the performance created less interest than any of the eight which had preceded it. This was not to be wondered at, when we remember that the Amateur Choral Society had already performed Beethoven's Mass in C, Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, First Walpurgis Night, and Elijah, Rossini's William Tell, Weber's Oberon, Handel's Acis and Galatea, Barnett's Mountain Sylph, etc., etc. Nevertheless, as a miscellaneous concert, the entertainment of Tuesday was entitled to much praise; and we take leave of the young and thriving Society for this year with no small hopes as to its future success, under the able and zealous direction of Mr. Charles Salaman.

PHILHARMONIC ROOMS.—On the occasion of the inauguration of the newly-built concert room, called "The Philharmonic," in Newman-street, the proprietor, Mr. Charles Cotton, gave a concert, in which he was assisted by several popular artistes, among others, Mesdames Clara Novello and Amedei, the Misses M'Alpine, Messrs. Augustus Braham, F. Bodda, etc., etc. Mad. Amedei was encored in Meyerbeer's "Ah, mon fils." Mr. Chas. Cotton gave several solos with much effect. The room is elegantly and tastefully fitted up, and excellently adapted for sound. After the concert, the friends of Mr. Cotton sat down for a house-warming to a capital supper, and, after a good deal of mirth and speech-making, dancing commenced in the concert room, and was kept up until morning.

PRESENTATION TO MR. FREDERICK CHATTERTON.—(From a Correspondent).—On Monday evening, the 17th instant, the box-keepers of Drury Lane Theatre met at Mr. Frost's, the Grapes Tavern, Bow-street, for the purpose of presenting Mr. Frederick Chatterton, the box-bookkeeper, with a silver snuff-box and morocco case as a mark of esteem. Mr. Chatterton acknowledged the testimonial in an appropriate speech, after which he introduced a few private friends to spend a social hour. Messrs. Lomax and Ive added to the conviviality of the evening by their singing.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The attraction during the week at the Grand Opéra has been the Huguenots, which has been given three times, with Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli as Valentine. M. Gounod's Nonne Sanglante is always in active rehearsal. At the Opéra-Comique, Mdlle. Amélie Rey has made a successful début in Boïeldieu's Dame Blanche. A new comic opera, Une Rencontre dans le Danube, the libretto by MM. Germain Delavigne and J. de Wailly, and the music by M. Paul Henrion, has been favourably received at the Théâtre-Lyrique. The composer has hitherto been known as the author of some popular ballads and chansonnettes. The principal parts were entrusted to MM. Meillet and Grignon, and Mdlle. Petit-Brière. M. Plouvier's new piece, Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Hiver, with Mdlle. Augustine Brohan as the heroine, is in rehearsal at the Théâtre-Français, and will shortly be produced. A five-act drama, entitled La Servante du Roi, is the last novelty at the Odéon. A trifle, by M. Achille Dartois, has been successful at the Vaudeville. It is called Reculer pour mieux sauter. L'Esprit familier is the name of a musical vaudeville by MM. Hip. Lucas and Jautard, played for the first time on Friday. The Russian piece announced some time since at the Porte-St.-Martin failed, and is withdrawn. The troop of Chinese, lately in London, will supply its place. Frédéric Lemaître has made another great hit in a five-act drama called Une Bonne Aventure, by MM. Dinaux, Dennery, and Paul Foucher, at the Gaîté. Un Lovelace malgré lui is the last offering to the habitués of the Délassements-Comiques. The Minister of the Interior has forwarded a circular to the managers of theatres ordering that, in future, all the scenery and dresses must be used at the last rehearsals of pieces, which are under the superintendence of the government inspector. A notice has appeared in the Moniteur, specifying the conditions laid down by the Académie des Beaux-Arts to be observed by persons desirous of competing for the prize awarded for the best words for the cantata at the Concours de Composition Musicale for 1854. The words must be forwarded in a sealed envelope to the perpetual secretary of the Academy, at the Institute, by the 17th May. As the candidates are to enter their rooms for the concours d'essai at 10 A.M. on Saturday, May 6, and to leave them at 10 A.M. on Friday, the 12th, the judges will pronounce their decision on Saturday, the 13th, at ten, A.M. For the concours définitif, the candidates enter their rooms on the 20th of May, at noon, and leave them at the same hour on the 14th of June. The preparatory decision will be delivered on the 7th, and the definitive one on the 8th of July. I forgot to mention, in my last, that four pieces from Rossini's Stabat Mater were performed at the concert of the Conservatoire on Good Friday. Two masses, with full orchestra, were performed on Easter Sunday: one by M. Leprevost, organist of the church, at St. Roch, the other by M. Alfred Lair, of Beauvais, at St. Eustache.

Mad. Stolz has returned to Paris, where she is at present reposing after the fatigues of her long season at Turin.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—This week you must be content to take the will for the deed. There has been so little doing in musical matters that, with all the desire in the world, I shall not be able to send you a long letter. The principal event at the Imperial Opera has been the début of Mdlle. Bendazzi, the successor of Mdlle. Marai (now, as you know, in London, at the Royal Italian Opera), who made her first appearance in Rigoletto. She was very favourably received, and recalled after the third and fourth acts. Her mezza voce is very pleasing, and she sings staccato passages well, but is deficient in expression and tenderness.—The Männergesang Verein have left the Redoutensaal for the Theater an der Wien, where they gave their third concert for the season. They have gained nothing by the change, as their new locale is not half so favourable as the old one for the performance of that peculiar kind of music in which they excel. Their most successful pieces, in the first part of the concert, were Schubert's setting of the 23rd Psalm, and a chorus, entitled "Morgenwanderung," the words by Geibel and the music by Herr Esser. Herr Kücken's vocal quartet, "Gut' Nacht, fahr wohl," was a failure, owing to its imperfect execution. In the second part, we had Schubert's chorus, "Mondenschein," Herr Hoven's "Schifferlied," and Kücken's "Jäger," all excellently rendered. The concert concluded with a "Sängergruss," in honour of the future Empress, the words by Herr J. N. Vogl, and the music by Herr H. Esser. This was, of course, highly successful. —Herren Hellmesberger, Durst, Heissler, and Schlesinger have given their sixth and last quartet soirée of the second series, in the great Redoutensaal. The concert opened with a quartet of Haydn, in C major, the andante, minuet, and finale of which pleased greatly. The first was encored. Mendelssohn's masterly trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello followed, Herr Pirkhert taking the pianoforte part. The performance concluded with Beethoven's ever-fresh and playful quartet in B flat, No. 6, Op. 18.—The first concert of M. Géraldy, the well-known French professor, took place in the room of the Musikverein on the 20th, and was well attended.

Digitized by Google

LEIPSIC.—Herr R. Wagner's Tannhäuser was lately given for the 23rd time. The concert season concluded with a performance in the Gewandhaus, for the benefit of the poor. Herr R. Schumann's Paradies und Peri was performed on the occasion. Herr C. F. Becker, who, for 28 years, filled the office of organist to the Nicholaikirche, has sent in his resignation and retired into private life. Herr Hermann Schellenberg, formerly organist to the Johanniskirche, has been appointed by the Town Council to the vacant office.

DRESDEN.—A young lady named Catharina von Coniar, born in Russia, was lately introduced to the public by Concertmeister Carl Lipinski, at a concert in Thieme's Hotel. She sang two airs with recitative, by Bach; and made a favourable impression. M. Hector Berlioz is daily expected to make arrangements for one or two concerts in the Hoftheater, on which occasions the programme will consist entirely of compositions by M. Berlioz himself.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—At the Niederrheinisches Musikfest next Whitsuntide (under the direction of Herr Lindpaintner), the first day's performance will consist of Gluck's overture to Iphigenia in Aulis, and Handel's Israel in Egypt. On the second day, the programme will include the overture to the Genueserin by Herr Lindpaintner, and the finale to the Vampyr, by the same composer; Beethoven's symphony No. 7, in A major; Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, and Mozart's oratorio cantata of Davidde penitente.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—According to the time-honoured custom of the Berlinese, Graun's Der Tod Jesu was produced in Passion Week. We had one performance of it by the Hausmann-Schneider'scher Verein, in the Garnison-Kirche, and another in the room of the Singakademie. In the first, which was the fiftieth anniversary of the oratorio, the solos were taken by Herren Basse and Mantius, Mdlles. Burkhardt and Trietsch. It is worth mentioning, as a curious coincidence, that this was the fiftieth time that Herr Mantius had sung in the Tod Jesu. The pieces deserving especial notice were the airs, "Singt dem göttlichen Propheten," by Mdlle. Burkhardt, and "Ein Gebet um neue Stärke." The choruses were very steady, and the orchestra went well under Concertmeister L. Ganz. The performance in the Singakademie, which their Majesties the King and Queen, their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Prussia, Princes Albrecht and George, and the Hereditary Princess of Meiningen honoured with their presence, was very satisfactory. Hennig's Gesangverein gave a concert in Kroll's room, when the programme was composed of several pieces out of the Tod Jesu, and Beethoven's Christus am Oelberge (Mount of Olives). Mdlles. von Meddlhammer and Hartmann, Herren Prelinger and Grunow, members of Kroll's opera company, were intrusted with the solo parts, and acquitted themselves well. The room was crowded to suffocation. The brothers Wieniawski (pianist and violinist) gave a concert, on the 18th, at Potsdam, at the request of several influential families, where they met with their accustomed success.

ODESSA.—Notwithstanding the war, the impending or actual bombardment of this emporium of grain and breadstuffs, and the expected desertion of the inhabitants, M. Adolphe Henselt, the celebrated pianist and composer for the piano, is at present residing here, and giving concerts with great success.

WEIMAR.—Weber's Euryanthe has been produced here with immense success. The execution was worthy of all praise, and the public were delighted beyond measure.

COLOGNE.—Mdlle. Agnes Bury* has been playing in the Sonnambula, Il Barbiere, Martha, and Lucia di Lammermoor. The local papers speak highly of her. Mdlle. Ney, too, has commenced her "starring" engagement, as Valentine in the Huguenots. Her next characters will be Donna Anna and Norma. Herr Ander is expected in a few days. Marschner's Hans Heiling is in rehearsal at the Stadttheater.

STETTIN.—Her Tichatscheck has appeared before a densely packed house in the Tannhäuser of Herr Wagner.

PRAGUE.—Herr Ander has been well received as Edgar in Lucia di Lammermoor.

HANOVER.—The Brothers Müller have given two quartet soirées, which have afforded great satisfaction.

DANZIG.—Herr Kellermann, a Danish violoncellist, has given four concerts here with success.

MADRID.—Mdlle. Gazzaniga has been engaged. The most popular operas here, after Meyerbeer's Roberto il Diavolo, are Verdi's Trovatore and Luise Miller.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Verdi's Macbeth has been very successful. The principal parts were sustained by Madame Foroni-Conti and Signor Mattioli.

SAN FRANCISCO.—A fair amateur, the Countess Fernandin, from Havannah, has been singing at concerts here. She travels with her husband, and exercises her talent solely to gratify her love of music. The proceeds of all her concerts are devoted to the poor.

MAGDEBURG.—Herr Flotow's Stradella has been given for the benefit of the members of the orchestra.

ERFURT.—The Musikverein gave a Passions-Oratorium in the church, on Maunday Thursday. Agreeably to general desire the work selected was Der Todestag des Herrn of Ketschau, which had been performed last year with great success. The next work will be Mendelssohn's St. Paul.

BONN.—The second half of the series of Abonnements-Concerts was inaugurated by a very good performance of Handel's Messiah.

GERA.—On the 30th March, Haydn's Creation was performed by the members of the Musikalischer Verein, under the direction of Herr Tschirch.

SCHWERIN.—Weber's Euryanthe has been revived, and favourably received.

HAMBURG.—Mdlle. Emilie Krall, from the Imperial Opera, Vienna, has appeared with success as Agatha in Der Freischütz, and Amina in the Sonnambula.

STUTTGART.—Mad. Marlow is definitely engaged here for a considerable period.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Mdlles. Wildhauer and Ney will shortly commence a starring engagement here.

COBLENTZ.—The opera company from Cologne have visited this town, and given representations of Tannhäuser, Zampa, and the Prophet. The theatre has been well attended.

---

M. PANOFKA has been appointed honorary member of the Society Santa Cecilia at Rome, in the section of composers. He was already an honorary member in the section of executants.

EMILE PRUDENT.—This well-known pianiste, virtuoso and composer, will arrive in London in the course of next week.

HERR ROSENHAIN, who will be remembered as a composer and pianist of distinguished talent, will be here in a few days.

MR. JOHN THOMAS, the young and talented performer on the harp, has just returned to London, after a sojourn of six months in Paris, where he has given concerts and performed at private réunions with great success. Mr. Hector Berlioz, before whom Mr. Thomas played in private, has spoken of him in flattering terms in the Journal des Débats.

MARKET HARBOROUGH.—(From a Correspondent.)—Thanks to our organist, we have a concert here occasionally. On Wednesday, the 19th, Mr. Dixon gave a very successful one, assisted by the Messrs. Nicholson (flute and violin). Mr. Streather (harp), Mrs. Streather and Mr. Paget (Vocal). Mr. Nicholson's flute solo was encored, as was Mr. Dixon's pianoforte fantasia, in which he displayed more than ordinary talent.

STRETFORD.—On Thursday evening a vocal concert was given in the Temperance Hall. The singers were Miss Shaw, Mrs. Brooke, Master Bradshaw, Mr. Delavanti, Messrs. Baxter, Walton, Ingham, and Brooke. The concert, which consisted of songs, duets, and glees, concluded with the National Anthem.

---

* Now at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane.—ED.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. H. T. (Nottingham.)—Our Correspondent informs us that Mr. H. C. Cooper only played the first movement of Beethoven's violin concerto at Nottingham. What he may have done at Shrewsbury, however, E. H. T. does not hint.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 29TH, 1854.

We are aware that it is not the general opinion in this country that musicians have souls, or that they can speculate on other matters besides crotchets and quavers. Our government legislates for painters, for sculptors, for architects—for surgeons, dentists, and physicians—for men of letters generally—for lawyers (a pest on them!) universally—for merchants and tradesmen—for actors—for railway shareholders and even betting men—but not for musicians. The body musical in England is overlooked. Shakspere and other famous poets talk a great deal about the matter, and the Queen and her ministers have boxes at the Opera; but all this has no influence with our statesmen, who, in the midst of their debates, have never a word to say in favour of the poor musician—leaving him to fight his way in the world, sans aid and sans protection. How is this? Is not music a great and glorious art? Is not harmony a science as noble and true as the mathematics? Yes—a thousand times, yes! But observe how differently painters and musicians are treated by our aristocrats and our fashionables. You shall go to a soirée at my Lord the Duke of Devonshire's, and you shall see Daniel Maclise, the painter, an invited guest—received and treated in all respects as an equal. And so it should be; for Daniel Maclise is a great artist, and man can aspire to nothing higher. But are there no great artists among our musicians? No one will gainsay it; yet who would dream of meeting one of them in the mansion of my Lord the Duke? Would Immanuel entitle Mr. Henry Leslie, flushed with his recent triumph, to be the invited guest of an English nobleman? No. Immanuel is but an oratorio; and the works of musicians are not reckoned by our aristocracy among the things of art. A great picture wins for its author a station in society: he is acknowledged and treated as a gentleman. But neither a Fidelio nor a Don Giovanni would be of any benefit to an English-born musician, in respect to his social position. The musician, it is true, is received at the réunions of our aristocracy—but as a hireling, not as an invited guest. His art is neither understood nor valued; how, then, should its representatives command respect?

There are more reasons for the comparatively low estimate in which musicians are held than could be discussed in fifty such essays as our limits will allow. Much may be traced to the detrimental influence exercised by the foreign music most popular with our fashionable world—a despotic leader of public taste in all that regards the arts. The ranging of music and dancing in the same category—a result naturally springing from the style of composition in vogue, which merits no higher place than ballet or dance music—also leads to the general depreciation of art and its followers. But, though the taste of our great personages be ever so vile, it exercises but an indirect influence on the social position of our artists. Philosophers and men of letters, who are unacquainted with the mysteries of the science, cannot be expected to entertain a very high notion of its votaries, if they draw their inference from the position held in society, and the general information displayed by musicians, on other subjects than those immediately connected with their calling. The more intelligent of the aristocracy, who view music as they view dancing and pencil drawing, simply in the light of a recreation for the leisure hours of their wives and daughters, are not likely to be undeceived by any abstract quality of the artists with whom they may come in contact. It is, indeed, too lamentably a truth, that, in average cases, a musical education excludes all other knowledge. While the great majority of painters, sculptors, and architects, are necessarily men of reading and acquirement, men of learning and refined ideas, qualified to move in any society, the great majority of musicians are exactly the contrary. And yet the intellect required to make a finished musician is of the highest order, and would render the acquisition of any subsidiary accomplishment a matter of the utmost facility. It is also a fact, that, though a more unlettered class of men than the great body of musicians is hardly to be found, one more intelligent does not exist. The shrewdest men, who are unaware of the qualifications necessary to constitute a perfect musician, commit a great error in their general notion of his merits. Not only are a sensible ear, and a fine development of the organs of time and tune required, but a ready memory, a quick study, a logical brain, and a correct judgment, aided and made available by enduring perseverance and unremitting labour, are indispensable to one who would obtain anything like proficiency in this most difficult and profound, as well as most beautiful, of arts. A world of passion, expression, refinement, and sentiment—of form, symmetrical and compact—of development, elaborate and complete—of ornament, various and fanciful—of idea, infinite and divine—is lost to him for whom music is but a freak of sound, without beginning, middle, or end! A picture is more appreciable by the mass than a musical composition, because it makes a direct appeal, without the necessity of previous education, to a greater number of qualities of the mind. Both are addressed to a particular sense, one to the eye, the other to the ear; but painting, being in some degree a mimetic art, can be estimated roughly, even by the most ignorant—while music, except to the musician, has only the ear for its interpreter, and its influence, however various and strong upon those who are delicately organised, is neither understood nor thought worthy of analysis. A man utterly uninformed may tell you that he likes a sky of Turner's better than a sky of Salvator Rosa's, because he remembers to have seen something resembling the first, and nothing resembling the last; but only one initiated in the mysteries of the art can tell you why he prefers (if he happens to prefer) an overture of Beethoven to an overture of Rossini. Thus, in a country where music is so little understood by the higher and more influential classes as in England, a barrier is placed between the musician and his social fellows, who have no sympathy with him where sympathy is most required—in the power and beauty of his art, which to him is a universe, while to them it is perhaps a blank.

There is then only one chance for the British musician. Either he must strive to educate the laity so as to understand him, or he must educate himself so as to understand the laity. With the sort of music that prevails among our higher circles, it would be a most difficult matter to create any profound respect for the art. The intelligent among them could learn only to condemn; they could be made to understand, that outline, development, and form, are as essential to music as to poetry and painting, only to find the invariable absence of those qualities in the music they are accustomed to hear. The musician's energies should, therefore, be directed to the cultivation of the taste of his patron, not only by educating him, but by placing before him the noblest and best models. His whole endeavours should be concentrated in waging a holy war against the infidel trash with which the country is inundated. For, however well informed the middle classes may be, it is the aristocracy and wealth of a country that support the arts—and, while the fashionable compositions of the day are presented to the aristocracy and wealth of the country as the models of art, indifference to art must of necessity exist. But for the musician to reach the ear of such high personages—for the musician to acquire an influence in such high places—it is indispensable that he should be educated in a manner at once to enforce respect, and entitle him to a position in society to which at present he cannot aspire.

Digitized by Google

This is, perhaps, a dull subject for an essay in a periodical which aims to amuse as much as to teach; but to the inquirer who would analyse the ingredients of which society is composed, and try to know why this or that class is over or under estimated—why this has a place, and that, no place at all—it will not be without interest. The English musician can never be properly estimated, or his merits generally acknowledged, until he is better educated. A consideration of this argument will neutralise the absurdities about country and climate, on which certain philosophers are so voluble, when music and musicians form the topic of discussion.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Matilda di Shabran was repeated on Saturday, and a second hearing impressed us more deeply with its merits. The first act is a chef-d'œuvre, quite worthy of Rossini's reputation. Many of the ideas may be traced to other operas of the composer; but there are enough original, masterly, and beautiful ones, to constitute Matilda di Shabran a really great work. The unaccompanied septet in the first act, although in effect it bears a resemblance to the famous quintet in the Turco in Italia, is novel in thought and treatment, and certainly one of Rossini's happiest morceaux d'ensemble. It is not likely, however, with all its recommendations in a musical point of view, that Matilda di Shabran can ever become a great favourite with the public, at least, until good music is admired for its own sake, independently of the story to which it may be allied. Whether such a time will ever arrive remains to be proved. Such a time was, when, in Italy and in France, the same libretto used to serve for many composers in succession; but MM. Scribe and his followers have changed that fashion, and good books are now of more consequence even than good music: and while La Juive, La Reine de Chypre, and other works of that calibre, find so much favour with the operatic public, Matilda di Shabran has little chance of obtaining anything more than a succès d'estime. There may be a "good time coming" for music as well as other matters, but we fear the period is remote indeed, and have no hope that we shall live to see it. It is with singing as with music. Everything goes by custom and prestige, and the greatest artist of modern time, whoever he may be, would receive far short of the applause due to his talents, unless well puffed in advance; or until time had won him a name that admitted of no questioning. As a case in point, we may cite the performance of Mad. Bosio, in Matilda di Shabran. We remember few instances of more finished and splendid singing, yet the sensation she created on the two nights of her appearance in Rossini's opera, was as nothing when compared with her real deserts. Had Mad. Jenny Lind but sung half as well, she would have set the audience beside themselves with rapture. And yet the poet said—"A rose by any other name, &c." Had he known the rose called Jenny Lind, he would have said:

"No rose by any other name can smell as sweet!"

The performance of Matilda di Shabran on Saturday was as complete and efficient as that of Tuesday; but still there was no enthusiasm. The finest music, combined with the finest singing, failed to produce effect; and the majority of the audience seemed as listless and unmoved as if they were hearing a work of little merit by a composer of less fame, and interpreted by singers of least pretensions. Is musical taste in England making rapid advances, as we are led to believe? In opera, we fear the taste is retrograding—not to borrow from the prospectus of the Royal Opera, Drury Lane.

On Tuesday, Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore was produced for the first time this season. The cast was the same as last year; and, if not so perfect as that of 1850, when Sig. Mario appeared as Nemorino and Sig. Tamburini as Sergeant Belcore, there was little to cavil at, under the actual circumstances. Sig. Luchesi is not so happy in Nemorino as in Corradino—the florid music of the latter suiting his style better; he, nevertheless, acted always, and sang for the most part with a great deal of natural ease. The charming air, "Una furtiva lagrima," however, was by no means improved by the ornaments. Sig. Mario, who possesses one of the most flexible voices ever heard, and who sang it divinely, did not introduce a single cadence or roulade. Mdme. Bosio sang exquisitely. The music of Adina suits her to perfection; but a little more archness and animation in her acting would not have been amiss. As far as grace and quiet coquetry were concerned there was nothing to desire. Sig. Ronconi's Dulcamara is a masterpiece of quaint comedy. He was humourous, arch, and irresistibly funny on Tuesday, and kept the audience in roars of laughter throughout, never allowing them an interval of rest while he was on the stage. If sometimes his action approached the verge of caricature it was no more than it should be, seeing that the part of Dulcamara is an amusing exaggeration from beginning to end—a piece of exquisite carnavalesque buffoneric. Sig. Tagliafico was a bustling, spirited, rollicking, and impudent Serjeant Belcore, and sang with great volubility and "laisser aller." Allons! A word of praise is due to Mdlle. Cotti for the careful and efficient manner in which she sustained the little part of Giannetta. The band and chorus, under Mr. Costa, were perfect, and the opera passed off with much éclat. This was not to be wondered at, since the music is charming and spontaneous, and the singing, on the whole, was highly satisfactory. There was not a good house. How would it have been, had the opera been cast with the whole strength of the Royal Italian Opera Company? When will managers see their own interests clearly?

Thursday night was remarkable for the first appearance of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli at the Royal Italian Opera. The event was a fête for the theatre; there was a brilliant audience from the élite of society, and the cream of connoisseurs; and, for the first time during the present season, Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Albert were present.

What is our opinion of Otello, and its magnificent last act, we need not repeat. For three or four seasons past we have spoken of it in detail, and must therefore refer such of our readers as care to know something of the history and character of Rossini's opera, which was composed with such prodigous rapidity, and yet contains so many beauties, to our Operatic notices of 1850-51-52 and 53. We have only space at present to speak of the performance on Thursday night, and to record the deserved success of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli. A more graceful, sympathetic, gentle, and yet passionate Desdemona we have never seen. Its abiding charm was its womanly tenderness, which, even in the scene of despair and agony, was always apparent, as the back-ground to the picture. While Otello's suspicions made him hated by the audience, his jealousy of such a Desdemona was quite pardonable. Mdlle. Cruvelli did not sing the aria d'entrata, "Quando guerrier;" and no reason was assigned for its omission; but, in the little duet with

Digitized by Google

Emilia (Mdlle. Cotti), it was at once heard that her voice had lost none of its beauty of tone and rich quality. The trio with Elmiro (Sig. Tagliafico), and Rodrigo (Sig. Stigelli), in which her father joins Rodrigo in pleading the suit of Otello's rival, was full of nice points of feeling, and the mezza voce singing in the ensemble, "Del Fato il rigore," was quite lovely. There are few dramatic vocalists now on the stage who can rival Mdlle. Cruvelli in her command of mezza voce, while in the sotto voce, and in the art of sustaining a note, augmenting and diminishing its volume to the finest point—now that Jenny Lind no longer comes to charm and astonish our amateurs, she is without a competitor. Again, the perfect mellowness of the middle tones of her voice was displayed with charming effect in the passage "Incerta l'anima" (the finest point in the finale to Act 1).

"Till nothing's heard 'twixt it and silence"—

The second act displayed the histrionic as well as vocal powers of Mdlle. Cruvelli to more brilliant advantage. In the first, she seemed to avoid all violent bursts of passion; but throughout the whole of the second she allowed her energies full play, and in the finale, where conflicting sentiments agitate the breast of Desdemona in the presence of Rodrigo, whose addresses she repulses with scorn, and of Otello, to whom she is heart and soul devoted, and whose obstinate incredulity stings her to madness, her acting was impressive, varied, and admirably dramatic. We have rarely heard the phrase, "Tra tante smanie," sung with more feeling, or the fine piece of vocal declamation, "Che smania! ahime! che affanno!" with a broken and agitated utterance more thoroughly suited to it. At the end of this act she was unanimously called before the curtain, and came forward with Sig. Tamberlik.

In the third act, Mdlle. Cruvelli was, from beginning to end, perfection. Any thing more ideal, poetical, and profoundly touching, we have never witnessed on the stage.

When Otello was revived in 1850, the character of the Moor was considered the most successful impersonation of Signor Tamberlik, both in a vocal and histrionic point of view. It was his first season in London; and, though he had gradually wrought upon the sympathies and won the esteem of the public, it was not until his appearance as Otello that the now popular tenor was unhesitatingly pronounced a first-rate singer and actor. His performance then, however, admitted of no denial, and his reputation was established. Whatever part Signor Tamberlik has since essayed—and every one has displayed more or less excellence—numbering even Arnoldo, in Guglielmo Tell, the best of all, Otello still remains his masterpiece. He looks, acts, and sings the part as, probably, no one, certainly no one in our time, has done before him. Had Rossini consulted the peculiarities of his voice, before putting pen to paper, he could not have fitted Signor Tamberlik more entirely. The music suits him from first to last, as much in the morceaux d'ensemble as in the duets and solos. Ronconi's Iago is a shrewd and subtle conception. Where the author has done nothing, Ronconi contrives to suggest a great deal. His demeanour throughout, especially in his scenes with Otello, seems to indicate a desire to revive, where it is practicable, the spirit of Shakspere, which has vanished from the pages of the librettist. At all events, Ronconi invests the phantom Iago of the Italian with a certain air of mystery, removing him from the class of common villains, and creating a belief that there is more in him than is immediately apprehended. Thus attention, if not sympathy, is excited, and the character saved from being a nonentity. Sig. Stigelli made his first appearance as Rodrigo, the music of which he took infinite pains to make effective; but we cannot think it well suited to his talent or his voice. Sig. Tagliafico's Elmiro was as careful and efficient as it is invariably; and the last scene (the most important) of Elvira was very nicely played by Mdlle. Cotti.

As usual, the duet, "Non m' inganno," in which Iago exasperates Otello by showing him the letter and handkerchief of Desdemona, was one of the grand points of the performance. It was splendidly sung by Signors Tamberlik and Ronconi; and the C sharp, taken with more tremendous force than ever by the former, raised the enthusiasm of the audience to the highest pitch. The last movement was encored amidst the loudest applause, and repeated with increased effect—the C sharp (the highest note ever known to have been sung, from the chest, by a tenor) being given out with even greater resonance and volume by Sig. Tamberlik. At the end of the duet, both singers were summoned to appear. The last scene of the opera was the most impressive of all. Mdlle. Cruvelli sang the exquisite romance, "Assisa à piè d'un salice," and the prayer, "Del! calma, O Ciel!" with a pathos that found its way to every heart, and produced an indescribable impression. Nothing could surpass the purity of tone, or the delicious quality of her voice in these two plaintive morceaux. Once more, the perfect mezza voce of Mdlle. Cruvelli was used with the most telling effect in the romance, which she sang throughout in a suppressed tone. The refined taste she displayed in the variations cannot be too highly praised. The soliloquy of Otello, previous to the murder of his wife, was a noble display of vocal declamation on the part of Sig. Tamberlik. In the concluding duet, which terminates with the murder of Desdemona, the suicide of Otello, the acting and singing of both artists reached the highest degree of expression without even bordering on exaggeration. It was a terrible scene, represented with terrible reality; the incident of the double murder was managed with eminent skill, and the curtain fell upon a legitimate artistic triumph. Mdlle. Cruvelli and Sig. Tamberlik were recalled, and applauded with the greatest enthusiasm.

Her Majesty remained to the end of the Opera.

Otello is to be repeated to-night; Sig. Mario appears for the first time on Tuesday in Rigoletto; and on Thursday, perhaps, Fidelio will be given.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The new speculation at Drury Lane already begins to assume a favourable aspect. The four performances of Norma attracted crowded audiences, and, on each occasion, Mad. Caradori created enthusiasm. This lady has attained the highest degree of popularity with the visitors to Drury Lane; and in every respect merits the position she has reached. Mad. Caradori is a great dramatic singer, and her histrionic powers are surpassed by few on the present operatic stage. To the Royal Opera the services of Mad. Caradori are invaluable; and, indeed, the speculation could hardly thrive without her. It behoves, therefore, the new directors not to tax her strength so much as they have done lately—Mad. Caradori having performed in Norma and Lucrezia Borgia no less than six times in eight days. The engagement of a new prima donna, Mdlle. Agnes Bury, was a judicious step. No singer could go through the season, singing four nights a-week, in modern Italian opera.

On Monday night, Lucrezia Borgia was given, with a cast differing in every respect from that of last autumn, except in that of the heroine, who, of course, was again represented by Mad. Caradori. Signor Pavesi appeared as Gennaro; Mr. Hamilton

Digitized by Google

Braham—his first appearance on the stage in England—as Duke Alfonso; and Mdlle. Vestvali—a new Italian contralto—made her début as Maffeo Orsini.

Signor Pavesi is no improvement on Herr Reichart. His voice is hard, and not agreeable in quality; but he sings with tolerable skill, and takes commendable pains. He sang the music of Gennaro better than that of Pollio, and occasionally gave indications of dramatic feeling in his acting. Mr. Hamilton Braham laboured under the disadvantage of nervousness. The promise held out to his friends, by his singing in concerts and private soirées, for some few seasons past in England, warranted them in expecting good things from the son of the glorious veteran of English song; and, though Mr. Hamilton Braham did not exactly come up to expectation, he did not altogether disappoint it. He has a well-toned barytone voice, of even quality; and sang the music very correctly throughout. Mr. Hamilton Braham was received in the most flattering manner, and was repeatedly applauded. Duke Alfonso is not a favourable part for the initiative essay of a young dramatic singer. On the contrary, it is one of the most difficult in the whole range of modern opera. The music, too, is not always either grateful or effective; and the one song of Alfonso—"Vieni, la mia vendetta!"—is the worst thing in the opera. However, there is much that is dramatically fine in the duet and trio in the second act; and in both of these Mr. Hamilton Braham so identified himself with the situation, and sang with so much pains, as to win his share of the encores and applause bestowed on Madame Caradori in both of them.

Mdlle. Vestvali came to London with strong recommendations and no small reputation. She is, we believe, a Pole by birth, and, among other masters, has studied under Mercadante. It is worthy of remark, that Mdlle. Vestvali is almost the only contralto who has visited this country within our recollection, who has not had lessons from Rossini. Had she received lessons from Rossini, it would doubtless have improved her, and her singing is capable of improvement. Mdlle. Vestvali has, nevertheless, much in her favour. Her appearance is good. She is tall, fine-looking, and has a certain commanding air that well befits her for male attire. Altogether, Mdlle. Vestvali is a very attractive person; and, if she sang as well as she looks, would not fail to become a formidable rival to any contralto. There was not much to criticise in her acting, unless that it was rather wild here and there. A little less boldness and fearless abandon would have been advisable. More self-possession was never witnessed in any artist on a first appearance. Mdlle. Vestvali should not take all the applause to herself. Her return to the foot-lights, after the chorus, "Bando, bando a sì triste," was quite uncalled-for—since she was uncalled-for, and it was the chorus that was applauded, and no one in particular. Of Mdlle. Vestvali's voice we are inclined to think well; but of her singing the less said the better, at present. She began on Monday night much better than she ended. Her first romanza, "Nella fatal di Rimini," was very satisfactory, far more so, indeed, than the famous "Brindisi," which was sung thrice. This gives us room to believe that we have not heard her to the best advantage, and that she may yet produce a more entirely favourable impression than on the night of her first appearance—upon the judicious, we should add, seeing that Mdlle. Vestvali created an immense sensation, was vociferously applauded in everything, and absolutely pelted with bouquets, of all shades and colours, flowers, herbs, and shrubs. One part of the audience was quite enraptured; another quite as indifferent. "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" Nous verrons. Another performance will better enable us to judge of Mdlle. Vestvali's capabilities.

The general performance of Lucrezia Borgia was excellent. The band and chorus, conducted by Herr Anschuez, in the absence of Herr Lindpaintner, were highly efficient, and all the subordinates up to the mark. At the termination of the second act, Mad. Caradori, Signor Pavesi, and Mr. Hamilton Braham were recalled; and, at the fall of the curtain, the same artists, with Mdlle. Vestvali. The real honours of the evening, however, were solely and wholly for Mad. Caradori.

A new ballet divertissement, called Les Favorites du Sultan, was produced after the opera with success.

The Royal Opera commenced its German season on Thursday night with Der Freitschütz, and Herr Formes as Caspar. It was the great basso's first appearance this year, and his reception was enthusiastic. The cast had the further advantage of Herr Reichart as Max, whose performance last season at Drury Lane will be remembered. Mad. Caradori was Agatha, Madlle. Sedlatzek, Annschen; Herr Hoelzel, Kilian and Ottokar (both); and Herr Dohring, Zamiel. So effective a representation of Weber's masterpiece has not been given for many years at Drury Lane.

Mad. Caradori's dramatic powers were set off to less advantage in Agatha than in other characters. Agatha is neither grand nor tragic, but tender and sentimental. Much depth of feeling, however, is required; and only a singer of the highest pretensions can do full justice to the music. The grand scena and aria ("Before my Eyes beheld Him," and "Softly sighs the Breath of Evening") tax the capabilities of the vocalist to the utmost; and here Mdme. Caradori's large style and superb energy were favourably called into play. The audience applauded her tumultuously, and Mdme. Caradori, being compelled to repeat the slow movement, was recalled at the end with enthusiasm. Mdlle. Sedlatzek advanced a step in public favour by the manner in which she sang the charming music of Annschen, and by the pretty and lively earnestness of her acting. She is young and inexperienced; but there is purpose in all she does, and a praiseworthy carefulness in her singing. Herr Hoelzel has been heretofore recognised in this country only as a concert singer, although a member of the Royal Opera at Vienna. He has a good bass voice, and possesses a dry quaint humour. He was as lively in Kilian as he was dignified in Prince Ottokar. Herr Hoelzel is celebrated in Germany for his performance of the character of Basilio. Herr Dohring was the original Zamiel, when Der Freischütz was first produced, with Herr Formes, in England. His conception of the character is peculiar, but it is artistic and striking.

The Caspar of Herr Formes is a grand piece of high melo-dramatic acting, unsurpassed by anything of modern times. His singing is as vigorous and powerful, as his acting is picturesque and magnificent. The fine bacchanalian air in the first act is "enlevé" with a force and audacity which cannot fail to excite the audience; while the revenge air, at the end of the first act, though less in the ad captandum style, is overpowering in its effect. That the bacchanalian song should be encored, was no more than was to be expected. Herr Formes was in glorious voice, and sang it with genuine spirit. In the duet scene, Herr Formes exhibited all that reckless energy and wild despair, which have made it one of the most graphic displays of historical art. When the curtain fell, one universal cry arose for Herr Formes, who came forward twice, with Mad. Caradori.

The performance of Der Freischütz was the most complete yet given by the company of the Royal Opera. The conductor, this time, was Herr Lindpaintner, under whose firm and able direction the overture was finely played, and encored tumultuously. The same compliment was paid to the famous "Huntsman's Chorus," which was capitally sung—with six horns on the stage, by the way. The incantation scene was famously managed, with all sorts of new spectres, blue, red, and yellow lights, etc. Herr Formes was never more demoniacal, and Herr Reichart never presented a more genuine picture of mingled courage, terror, and despair. The opera was immensely successful.

Last night, La Sonnambula was given in Italian—Amina Mdlle. Agnes Bury, Elvino, Sig. Bettini—both new to the London stage. Mdlle. Agnes Bury made a highly favourable début last season at Miss Arabella Goddard's concerts, and Sig. Bettini is a continental singer of reputation. We shall notice the performance in our next.

---

SURREY.—Miss Cushman commenced a short engagement on Monday in the character of Lady Macbeth. The performance was received with the utmost enthusiasm by an audience which filled the theatre in every part.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The tenth season of this valuable institution began, as usual, at Willis's Rooms. There was a very crowded audience—an audience for the most part made up from the haut ton of society and the élite of our amateurs and professors. The Musical Union has effected a vast deal of good in its especial department. It has done for the aristocracy and wealthier classes what M. Jullien has done for the crowd; it has taught them to understand and enjoy the finest compositions of the great masters, and led them to the conviction that there is something in music beyond what belongs to a mere frivolous means of relaxation and amusement—that it is, in short, an intellectual art, worthy of serious study and reflection. The success of such an institution must, therefore, be a theme for congratulation to those who believe that the progress of music stands for something in the general advance of civilisation, and that the cultivation of a pure and healthy taste among all classes is, for that reason, a matter of consequence. For the manner in which the Musical Union has been conducted since its first establishment much credit is due to Mr. Ella, its founder and director. The few mistakes of judgment he may have committed from time to time are readily excusable, and weigh but little in the scale against the almost uniform good management and steady adherence to the best principles, which have distinguished his policy from the beginning. The Musical Union originated—like some other praiseworthy institutions—in an ardent love of the art, at first elucidated by amateur performances, or combinations of amateurs and professors, to which audiences were admitted gratis, till at length it gave rise to the present society, which yearly grows in importance, and is already one of the most prosperous and influential this metropolis can boast.

The programme of the first concert was excellent, and the performers first-rate. The selection may be cited:—

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Quartet, in D (No. 70) | ... | ... | ... | Haydn. |
| Trio, in D minor ... | ... | ... | ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Quartett, E minor (Op. 59) | | ... | ... | Beethoven. |

The executants were Herr Ernst (violin), Herr Goffrie (second violin), Mr. Hill (viola), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Mr. Sterndale Bennett (pianoforte). It would not have been easy to assemble a more competent set of "interpreters"—to make use of a term which is now less frequently applied to executive musicians than formerly. Mr. Ella is quite wrong, however, in supposing that Haydn's very fine quartet had "escaped the attention of our violinists" until he discovered it. It may have been previously unknown to him; but to all acquainted with Haydn's chamber-music it has been long, and as a matter of course, familiar. It was admirably played; and, not for the first time, Herr Ernst proved himself as much at home in the primitive writings of the "Father of the Symphony" as in the more passionate music of Mozart, the loftier inspirations of Beethoven, and the impetuous and elaborate works of Mendelssohn, the last great composer of quartets and trios. The exquisite tenderness that marked his reading of the adagio was only equalled by the humour and unstudied simplicity with which he played the staid minuetto, and the quaint and animated finale. In the wonderful quartet of Beethoven (one of the set dedicated to Prince Rasoumoffsky) the genius of Herr Ernst was still more forcibly displayed; and his consummate expression in the adagio realized to the full the direction which Beethoven prefixed to the movement—"Si tratta questo pezzo molto di sentimento." There was all the sentiment demanded, and, which is invariably the case with Herr Ernst, a sentiment wholly divested of exaggeration and false reading. The last movement—the fiery, eccentric, and ungovernable presto—was a masterpiece of conception and execution. The other parts in the quartets were sustained with great efficiency. There is not a steadier or more zealous "second violin" than Herr Goffrie, a more admirable "tenor" than Mr. Hill, or (it is almost superfluous to add) a more faultless "violoncello" than Signor Piatti. Mendelssohn's glorious pianoforte trio (No. 1)—which at once placed its author, as a composer of concerted music for the chamber, in the same rank as Mozart and Beethoven—was played to perfection by Mr. Sterndale Bennett, Herr Ernst, and Signor Piatti, and served as an agreeable and effective contrast to the stringed quartets. At the end of the regular programme Mr. Bennett played some of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte; and three children, the Masters Boothe (from Carlsruhe) aged 8, 11, and 13 respectively—performed concertante variations, for violins, upon the theme of "God save the Queen," displaying considerable talent for their years.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The fourth concert, on Monday night, was a good one. There was a new symphony, and a concerto of Herr Molique, performed by himself—both of which facts conferred a special interest on the programme, which was as follows:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia (MS.) - - - - - - | Rosenhain. |
| Recit. and Aria (Figaro), Sig. Belletti - | Mozart. |
| Concerto, A minor, Violin, Herr Molique | Molique. |
| Recit. and Aria (Alceste), Mad. Novello - | Gluck. |
| Overture, "Isles of Fingal" - - - | Mendelssohn. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia in B flat, No. 4 - - - - | Beethoven. |
| Duet, "Crudel, perchè," Mad. Novello and Sig. Belletti - - - - - | Mozart. |
| Overture, "Le Colporteur" - - - | Onslow. |

The symphony of Herr Rosenhain, a pianist and composer of deserved eminence, is clever, thoughtful and elaborate. Further than this we cannot say until we hear it again. The andantino reminded us of Beethoven (slow movement in the C minor), and the scherzo of Mendelssohn—both very welcome reminders. The opening of the first movement, allegro risoluto, is fine; and there is merit in every one of the four pieces. Nevertheless, the symphony was not well played, and the audience received it with indifference. The conceit of the Philharmonic abonnés is only equalled by that of the Paris Conservatoire. It would be well if the performances of new works by the off-hand gentlemen who compose the band, were really such as to authorise the subscribers in emulating the affected nonchalance and stolid bigotry of the French "perruques."

Mendelssohn's splendid overture was executed with a boisterous roughness, which left all the delicate points of the score to the appreciation of those who could hear them—which we could not. Beethoven's symphony was played vigorously and well; and Onslow's dry and musician-like overture went off, to speak in metaphor, like a shot. Sig. Belletti was encored in the song from Figaro—"Vedro mentr' io sospiro," one of the best in that glorious opera. As for Mad. Clara Novello, we have never heard her sing more nobly than in Gluck's dramatic and declamatory recitative and air. The exquisite love duet of Susanna and Almaviva was sung charmingly by the lady, but hardly (so) by the gentleman.

The feature of the concert was the violin concerto of Herr Molique, one of the greatest players and composers in the world. Herr Molique, by right of merit, should appear every year at the Philharmonic Concerts, and for that reason, we suppose, he does not. His reception by the audience, and by the members of the orchestra (who ought to be made to pay for their admission, whenever they take upon themselves what is the sole prerogative of the audience), was hearty and unanimous, his performance first-rate in every respect, and his success triumphant. The concerto, moreover, is not only one of the best of Herr Molique, but one of the most original, ingenious, and masterly ever composed. The great artist retired from the orchestra amidst a storm of applause.

St. Martin's Hall.—Want of space compelled us last week to postpone our notice of the concert given on Wednesday, the 19th inst., under the direction of Mr. Hullah. After the great success of his sacred performances, Mr. Hullah was perfectly justified in trying the effect of a concert of secular music. The peices were the same as usual, and the Hall was crowded in every part. The programme consisted of Handel's Acis and Galatea, Beethoven's choral fantasia, with Herr Pauer at the piano, and some selections from Oberon. The principal singers in the serenata and in Oberon were Mesdames Weiss, Dethridge, Poole, Messrs. Augustus Braham, Montem Smith, and Weiss

Digitized by Google

The chorus was composed of Mr. Hullah's Upper Singing Class. The serenata was admirably performed; the members of Mr. Hullah's class sang better than usual, and won an encore in the magnificently picturesque chorus, "Wretched Lovers." The same compliment was bestowed upon Mr. Weiss, and very deservedly, for his broad and energetic singing in "O ruddier than the Cherry." Mr. Montem Smith, too, was obliged to repeat, "Would you gain the tender Creature," which he gave in an unaffected manner. Beethoven's exquisite fantasia was remarkably well played, and Herr Pauer was loudly applauded at the termination. The overture to Oberon was also well played by the band, and the various morceaux from that enchanted and enchanting opera proved highly effective. On the whole, the entertainment was one of the most satisfactory ever given at the New Hall under Mr. Hullah's able direction.

Mr. Walter Macfarren's First Chamber Concert took place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne-street, on Friday evening. The rooms were nearly full. The concert opened with a MS. sonata for pianoforte and violin—the composition of Mr. W. Macfarren—executed by the composer and Mr. Blagrove. The sonata betrays the hand of the musician both in construction and development, while the thoughts are fresh and spontaneous. The adagio, if anything, is too beautiful; the scherzo quasi fantasia is worked up with great animation; and the first and last movement—both allegro—are spirited and striking. The performance requires very adroit mechanism; but Mr. W. Macfarren was equal to the task. He was ably assisted by Mr. Blagrove at the violin. Mozart's superb Fantasia in C minor exhibited Mr. W. Macfarren as a solo performer in the classic school. He played it admirably. Although claiming no extraordinary amount of finger dexterity, this Fantasia demands a certain vigour of execution, combined with feeling and refined taste. Mr. W. Macfarren was loudly applauded in this very excellent performance. He also played Mendelssohn's immensely difficult Fantasia in F sharp minor, which stands far more than Mozart's work in need of superior powers of execution. Mr. W. Macfarren played like a thorough artist. The other important piece was Beethoven's sonata in F (Op. 24), for pianoforte and violin. Here again the pianist had the assistance of Mr. Blagrove. The performances on both hands was unexceptionable, and the applause at the end of each movement most liberal. In another MS. contribution from his own pen—duo for pianoforte—Mr. Walter Macfarren had the advantage of Mr. Lindsay Sloper's assistance. The duet, a work of decided merit, was executed in a very perfect manner. Its great length, however—especially in the first movement, allegro grazioso—detracts from its effect. The Scherzo come Bolero—the most characteristic movement—was executed well, and with so much spirit as to obtain an unequivocal encore. Mr. W. Macfarren, to conclude, played some charming bagatelles of his own composition—"Prima vera" (Rondoletto), "Bianca" (Roman), and "May Morn" (Rondo). The vocal music was assigned to Signor and Mad. Ferrari. The gentleman gave Mr. Lovell Phillips' canzonet "La Partenza" with genuine feeling, and joined the lady in the duet from Faust, "Dearest, let thy footsteps follow." Mad. Ferrari gave the two lieders by Mendelssohn, "Song of Spring" and "Journey Song," with the right expression. The concert gave entire satisfaction.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK

Monday.—Signor Nappi's Soirée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's.——Mr. Travers's National Entertainment, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.——New Philharmonic Society's Third Concert, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock.

Tuesday.—City Musical Union, "Elijah," Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate-street. Eight o'clock.

Wednesday.—Harmonic Union, Exeter Hall. Haydn's "Creation." Half-past Seven.—— Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street, Soirée Musicale.—— Mr. Ransford's Benefit Concert, Theatre Royal Haymarket. Seven o'clock.

Thursday.—Cecilian Society, Mozart's "Requiem," &c., Albion Hall, London-wall, City. Eight o'clock.——Quartet Association, First Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Quarter-past six.—— Mr. Neate's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past Two.

Friday.—Mrs. Plummer's Soirée Musicale, New Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Anne-street. Eight o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NELSON—THE LIFE OF A SAILOR. Illustrated by Dibdin's Songs. Mr. TRAVERS'S NATIONAL ENTERTAINMENT every Monday Evening, at the Music Hall, Store-street, at Eight o'clock. Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. Private Boxes at Leader and Cock's, 63, New Bond-street. Sunderland, May 3rd, 4th, and 5th. Liverpool, 13th. Margate, 17th to 20th. Harrowgate, June 12th and 13th.

ROYAL OPERA,

DRURY LANE.

ON MONDAY NEXT, May 1st, Donizetti,s Opera LUCREZIA BORGIA. Lucrezia Borgia, Madame Caradori; Gennaro, Signor Pavesi; and The Duke, Mr. Hamilton Braham.—On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, May 2nd, 4th, and 6th, (in German) Webers's grand Opera, DER FREISCHUTZ. Agnes, Mad. Caradori; Max, Herr Reichardt; and Caspar, Herr Formes. On Wednesday, May 3rd, Bellini's Opera LA SONNAMBULA—Amina, Madlle. Bury; Elvino, Signor Bettini; Rodolpho, Signor Arnoldi. On Friday, May 5th (first time), Bellini's Opera IL PURITANI. Conductors—Herr Lindpaintner and Herr Anschuez. Prices—Gallery, 1s.; Pit, 2s.; Boxes, 3s.; Dress Circle, 4s.; Stalls, 7s.; Private Boxes, 21s., 42s., 63s., and 84s., to be had of Messrs. Leader & Cock, 63, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street, and at the Box-Office, daily, from 10 till 6.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—THE THIRD CONCERT will take place on Monday, May 1st, when will be performed Dr. Wylde's music to MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. The invocation will be sung by Miss Louisa Pyne; Satan, Herr Formes; Beelzebub, Signor Belletti; Moloch, Mr. Weiss; Belial, Signor Ciabatta. Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor—Pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss; Beethoven's Symphony in B flat; Mozart's Overture the Schauspiel Director; and Wagner's Overture to Tannhaüser. Conductors, Herr Lindpaintner and Dr. Wylde. The Subscription is £2 2s. Persons now subscribing will be entitled to two extra tickets for this Concert. Single Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d., to be had at Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street, and at St. Martin's Hall.

Willert Beale, Honorary Secretary.

HARMONIC UNION, EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr. Benedict; Organist, Mr. W. Rea. Next Wednesday, May 3rd, will be performed Hadyn's CREATION, preceded by Dr. Wylde's Cantata, PRAYER AND PRAISE. Vocalists, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Stabbach, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. The Band and Chorus will consist of 500 performers. Tickets, Area or Gallery, 3s.; Reserved, 5s.; Central numbered Stalls, 10s. 6d. each. Society's Office, 5, Exeter Hall.

QUARTETT ASSOCIATION, WILLIS'S ROOMS, ST. JAMES'S.—Third Season.—Under the immediate patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, His Royal Highness the Prince Albert, and Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. First Performance this Season, Thursday Morning, May 4th, 1854, commencing at Quarter-past Three o'clock precisely. Executants—Pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé; Violin, M. Sainton and Mr. H. C. Cooper; Viola, Mr. Hill; Violoncello, Signor Piatti. Programme: Quartett No. 1, Op. 41—Schumann; 1st Grand Trio, Op. 119 (Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello)—Spohr; Quartett, Op. 12—Mendelssohn; Pianoforte Solo, Mr. Charles Hallé. The Analytical Programme by Mr. G. A. Macfarren. Tickets for the Series, £1 11s. 6d.; Single Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; may be obtained of Addison & Co., 210, Cramer & Co., 201, and Schott & Co., 159, Regent-street; Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond Street; Turner & Co., 19, Poultry, City; M. Sainton, 8, Hinde-street, Manchester-square; Signor Piatti, 51, Stanhope-street, Regent's-park; and of Mr. Cooper, 44, Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

MISS GUSELDA ARCHER (Pupil of Mr. Aspull), has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, the 10th of May, 1854. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Katharine Smith, Miss Marion Adam, and Miss Binckes; Mr. Frank Bodda, and Herr P. de Becker; the Misses Brougham. Harp—Mr. Chatterton. Pianoforte—Miss Guselda Archer. Conductor, Mr. Aspull. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; Single tickets, 7s., and family tickets to admit four, one guinea. To be had at the Music Warehouses, and of Miss Archer, 451, Oxford-street.

Digitized by Google

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday morning, May 11th, commencing at Half-past Two. Vocalists—Mdme. Hermine Rudersdorff (from the Berlin Opera), Mdlle. Marie Sedlatzek (from Vienna), Miss Messent, Herr Reichart, and Herr Formes; Violin, Herr Ernst; Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar; Accompanyist, Mr. Brinley Richards. The London Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Frank Mori, will perform, among other pieces, Mr. Aguilar's Concert Overture, "Alpheus," his new Symphony, and the Overture to his MS. Opera. Tickets, 7s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. Aguilar, 68, Upper Norton-street, Portland Road.

SIGNOR VERONI, primo baritone, from La Scala, and other principal theatres in Italy, begs to announce to the nobility, gentry, and his friends, that his FIRST MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on Tuesday, May the 9th, at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on which occasion he will make his first appearance in England. Signor Veroni will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Vocalists—Mesdames Clara Novello and Caradori (of the Royal Opera, Drury Lane); Mr. Sims Reeves, Sig. Mariani (primo tenore, from the Imperial Opera, Verona), Sig. Belletti, and Herr Formes. Instrumentalists—Miss Arabella Goddard (Pianoforte), Herr Ernst (Violin), and Sig. Briccialdi (Flute). Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Sig. Pilotti. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; Reserved Seats (numbered), One Guinea. To be had of Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., and Jullien, Regent-street; T. Chappell, Campbell and Ransford, New Bond-street; Mitchell; Eber's, Old Bond-street; Leader and Cock, New Bond-street. The programme will be published forthwith.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S SECOND CHAMBER CONCERT will take place on Friday Evening, May 12th, at 27, Queen Anne-street, when he will perform Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 53, and other Solos, also a new Pianoforte Duo and a Violoncello Sonata, of his own composition, assisted by Mr. W. H. Holmes and Mr. Lucas. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, and Mr. Weiss. Single ticket, 10s. 6d.; double ticket, 15s.; to be had of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street; and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58, Albert-street, Regent's-park.

SIGNOR AND MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that their ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Friday evening, May 19th. Vocalists: Madame Mortier La Fontaine, Miss Augusta Thomson, and Madame Ferrari; Messrs. Herberte, H. C. Regaldi, Wallworth, and Signor Ferrari. Instrumentalists: Piano, Mrs. F. B. Jewson and Mr. George Russell; Concertino, Signor Giulio Regondi; Harp, Mr. John Thomas; Violoncello, M. Paque and Mr. Schroeder; Violin, M. Folkes. Accompanyists: Messrs. Lindsay Sloper and G. Russell. Tickets, 7s., to be had of the principal music-sellers. Reserved Seats 10s. 6d., to be had only of Signor and Madame Ferrari, 69, Upper Norton Street, Portland Place.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her Two Annual Matinées of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), under the patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, The Most Noble the Marchioness of Camden, The Right Honourable the Countess of Bradford, Lady Isabella Stewart, The Lady Molesworth, &c., will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, on Saturday, May 20, and Wednesday, June 14, when she will be assisted by Herr Ernst, M. Sainton, Signor Piatti, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mrs. Endersohn, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, with other distinguished Artists. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, Reserved Seat, 15s.; Ticket, for either Matinée, 7s.; Reserved Seat, 10s. 6d.; to be had at Ebers's Library, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

THE PATENT HARMONIUM.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices. 14 Stops, Rosewood (Sourdine Celeste), £42; 12 Stops, £40; 12 Stops, in back, for church, supplied to Government, £38. Pianofortes in every variety for hire, with liberal allowance to purchasers. Drawings and price list per post, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

TO BE DISPOSED OF.—An ORGAN SITUATION of £20 salary, in a town in Ireland, where there is an opening for a professor of the pianoforte, and a good tuner. Address L. W., Messrs. Boosey and Co., 28, Holles-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

HARMONIUMS AND SERAPHINES cheaper than at any other house in London, commencing at Six Guineas. Concertinas in great variety, with the latest improvements, from Two Guineas. Several Finger Organs and Pedal Harmoniums on sale. Vibrators supplied to order. Pianofortes, new and second-hand, on sale or hire, at prices to meet the views of all classes.—Manufactory and show rooms, 7, Finsbury Pavement—William Sprague, proprietor.

MADAME MARIE DORIA begs to announce that she has arrived in London for the season. All communications to be adressed to Robert W. Ollivier, Concert Agent, Music-seller, and Publisher, 19, Old Bond-street, Piccadilly.

MR. FRANK BODDA begs to inform his Friends and Pupils he has removed to No. 2, Nottingham-terrace, York Gate, Regent's-park.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

GOD DEFEND THE RIGHT!—Inscribed to Admiral Sir C. Napier, by GEORGE LINLEY. 2s. (post free for stamps.) John Shepherd, Newgate-street.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

Digitized by Google

RIGOLETTO.—The following numerous arrangements of this very popular Opera are now ready. The public is warned against purchasing a pirated edition of the Airs published by an unprincipled individual.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| VOCAL—THE ENTIRE OPERA, 12s. | | | |
| Caro Nome che il mio Core (sung by Mdlle. Bosio) | Sc. e Polac...S. | 2 | 6 |
| Cortigiani, vill Razza Dannata ... ... | Aria ..... B. | 3 | 0 |
| Figlia! mio Padre! a te dappresso ... | Duetto, S. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| La Donna è Mobile (sung by Sig. Mario) | Canzone ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Parmi veder le Lagrime ... ... ... | Aria ..... | 2 | 6 |
| Questa o quella per me pari sono (sung by Sig. Mario) | Ballata . T. | 2 | 0 |
| Signor, nè Principe io lo verre! ... ... | Duetto, T. & S. | 4 | 0 |
| Somiglia un Apollo quel Giovane ... | Sc. Terz. e Tempesta | 5 | 0 |
| Tutte le Festa al Tempio ... ... | Sc. e Duet ... | 4 | 0 |
| Un Dì, se ben rammentomi ... ... | Quartetto, S. C. T. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| V'ho ingannato—colpevole fui ... ... | Sc. e Du fin ... | 3 | 0 |
| Possente Amor mi chiami ... ... ... | Melodia ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Zitti, Zitti, moviamo ... ... ... | Terz....S. T. B. | 3 | 0 |
| ENGLISH VERSION. | | | |
| Fair shines the Moon to-night (La Donna) ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| Ditto ... ... ... ... ... | as a Duet ... | 2 | 6 |
| PIANOFORTE SOLO. | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | | 0 |
| Charles Voss ... | Grand Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | "La Donna," Barcarolle, Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Galop di Bravura, Rigoletto ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia (Quartett) ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Oesten ... ... | Homage à Verdi (Fant.), Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| H. Cramer ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Kuhe ... ... | Fantaisie, Brillante Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Mdme. ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| | The Minuet in Rigoletto ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Benedict ... ... | Grand Fantaisie ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| PIANOFORTE, FOUR HANDS. | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 6 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | La Donna e Mobile ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC. | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Laurento ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| FLUTE AND PIANO. | | | |
| Clinton ... ... | 2 Mosaiques from Rigoletto, each ... | 4 | 0 |
| ORCHESTRE. | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Tinney ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| MILITARY BAND. | | | |
| Boosé ... ... | Grand Selection Rigoletto (from 'Boosé's Journal') ... ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |

 Various arrangements for Concertina and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Cornet and Piano, are nearly ready.

Published only by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC, BY ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| JUST PUBLISHED. | | | |
| 1. Chanson à Boire ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| 2. Farewell (transcription) ... ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| 3. German Volkalied (transcribed) ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| 4. Minerva, Grand Valse, Solo ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ „ „ Duet ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| 5. Belisario, Grand Duet ... ... ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| 6. Six Études ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| PUBLISHED IN 1853. | | | |
| 1. Europa, Galop de Concert (Third Edition) ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| 2. Grand Marche Éroique, Solo ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ „ „ Orchestra ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| 3. Consuelo, Mazurka ... ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| 4. Valse Styrienne ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| 5. Ethiopien, Caprice ... ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| 6. Le Revoir, Romance ... ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 6 |

"Among the many gallant composers who devote their ideas to the services of the ladies, Herr Gollmick stands foremost. His pre-eminence may be attributed to the forcible character of his compositions, which, although within the reach of average pianists, have attractions for musicians 'of a larger growth.' Although light, the pieces before us may be really termed 'good,' as that word is understood in musical dialect. Fo instance, in no modern 'musique di bravura' have we met with anything to compare to the 'Europa' for happy melody, brilliancy, and finish. There is a perfect unity and decided individuality about it, bearing evidence of true genius in the author. The 'Valse Styrienne' is remarkably graceful, with a pleasant touch of melancholy, characteristic of Styrian music. Equal praise must be awarded to the 'Marche Éroique,' a bold and spontaneous theme, followed by a delicious trio, belonging to that class of music of which Lindpaintner's 'Standard Bearer,' and Giuiglo Krieger's 'Leest' are famous specimens. Easily acquired, but not easily forgotten, are Herr Gollmick's compositions. Their melodies strike the fancy, while many passages are so beautifully wrought as to win instant and unqualified admiration."—Ladies' Newspaper, May 14.

"Herr Adolph Gollmick, a composer of considerable celebrity, and still more considerable talent, is a resident in London, highly esteemed in musical circles for his graceful style of pianism. The above quoted specimens of his compositions, the first we have seen, give us at once a favourable idea of his powers, and entitle him to the consideration of our musical readers. The characteristics of Herr Gollmick's writings are—fascinating melodies, an easy, brilliant, and graceful style of writing, offering a variety of effects, and not presenting any great difficulties. In no modern music have we met with such a happy and spontaneous idea as the theme of the 'Europa Galop.' It is of that pleasantly-exciting kind that one listens to over and over again without tiring. The 'Marche Éroique' is bold and vigorous, with a charming 'motivo' for its principal subject. It is rather less effective than the 'Europa,' and may be more adapted for the orchestra than the piano, notwithstanding which it will doubtless be played by all who admire really tuneful music. The 'Valse Styrienne' will in a very short time form part of every lady's 'repertoire' for the piano, or we are no judges of the taste of our fair countrywomen. The most bewitching valse is this 'Styrienne.' Indeed, if this 'morceau' were indorsed by Bellini's name, we should compliment the composer on his happy inspiration. The 'Ethiopian Caprice' is a fantasia in the modern style, on the well-known melody of 'Mary Blane.' Of this piece, which has no pretensions to originality, we can speak in terms of commendation, and can recommend it to players who have a tolerably good command of the piano, and can execute bravura passages without stumbling. Our readers will observe, from our remarks, that M. Gollmick's compositions are specially adapted for drawing-room performance, on account of the attractive melodies and finished passages which pervade them, unaccompanied by the awkward difficulties which tyros and uneducated musicians throw into their music."—Critic, April 15, 1853."

"It is not always the best way of enjoying a work to hear the author read it; but still it is an advantage to have the emphasis and expression conveyed by one so deeply versed in it. In music this is still more desirable, as the composer, if he be of an original kind, has much inspiration that mere notation cannot convey. We were glad, therefore, the other day, to have an opportunity of hearing a young German composer (Gollmick) play over several of his compositions; for he interpreted his own creations with a spirit and grace that gave full effect to them. Our musical readers will be acquainted with the galop de concert, entitled 'Europa,' which has had a wide reputation.

"We attended M. Gollmick's performance, because we were glad of an opportunity of extending a reputation already considerable, and because we believe he is gifted with a genuine invention and power. In all his productions there is much true melody, and he has the rare gift of invention. The manufacture of music, like the manufacture of Sheffield plate, can be carried on by artisans; but the artist alone invests with new life and interest the old sounds or forms. This young German seems to us gifted with a genuine capacity for composition, and in all his pieces there is freedom and fanciful expression.

"In a piece entitled 'Gage d'Amitié,' brilliancy and joyousness run through it, mingled with a tenderness that makes it worthy of its name. 'La Grande Marche Éroïque,' has a great deal of professional grandeur in it. This is an orchestral composition, and therefore is not heard to full advantage in its mere arrangement for the pianoforte. Still there is fully perceptible the long resounding tread, and the lofty and elevating ideas that should predominate in such a piece. 'La Revoir,' is a more tender piece, but without a taint of the mere sentimental, it being a characteristic of M. Gollmick that he is healthy and sound, and seems not to have any morbidity or affectation in him. In the 'Valz Styrien' there is a great deal of character, and the movement sounds fresh and unhacknied.

"We have been solicitous to draw attention to M. Gollmick and his composition, because, whatever has the qualities of originality and pureness deserves it; and we believe that the musical composer is as much entitled to distinct notice, and is as much rewarded by discreet admiration, as the author who appears in letter-press."—Morning Advertiser, May 14, 1853.

Digitized by Google

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

Just Published, Nos. 1 to 12 of

CHAPPELL'S HARMONIUM JOURNAL,

BEING A SELECTION OF

CELEBRATED OPERATIC AND SACRED SUBJECTS,

Arranged expressly for the Harmonium, by Dr. RIMBAULT.

Price of Each Number, 2*s.*

ALSO A SELECTION OF

FAVOURITE PSALM AND HYMN TUNES,

Arranged for the Harmonium, price 2s. 6d.; and as Duets for the Harmonium and Pianoforte, by Panseron,

BEETHOVEN'S ADELAIDA, Price 4s., and BEETHOVEN'S CELEBRATED ANDANTE, Price 4s.

OSBORNE'S SUMMER'S EVE.

Just Published, by this popular Composer, price 3s., a Companion to his "EVENING DEW" and "SUNBEAM."

CHAPPELL, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

MEYERBEER'S NEW OPERA.—Unauthorised Editions of portions of my Works having appeared, I hereby give Notice, that I have sold the Copyright for the British Dominions of my New Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, to Messrs. CRAMER, BEALE and Co., of Regent-street, and they and Mr. Chappell, of New Bond-street, alone in England, have my authority to publish any of the Music of L'Etoile du Nord, including also those Pieces from the Camp of Silesia that I have introduced into the Opera of L'Etoile du Nord. I have also accorded to them the Right of Publishing my Marche aux Flambeaux, and the Ninety-first Psalm that I have composed.—Paris, March 30, 1854.

GIACOMO MEYERBEER.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Marche Turque ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet No 1, Op. 23 ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in C major, No. 3, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in A minor, No. 4, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| March composed for the Sultan ... ... | Rossini. |
| Marche aux Flambeaux, 5s. ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Fantasie de Salon from "Le Prophète" ... | Oesten. |
| Marche des Slovaques ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| La Source, Caprice ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Marche Militaire ... ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Estelle ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. Richards. |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

ROBERT COCKS' AND CO.'S NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

HAMILTON and the PIANOFORTE.—Just published, the 52nd edition of this extraordinarily popular Author's MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, newly revised and greatly enlarged by Carl Czerny, pupil of Beethoven; large music folio, 62 pages, price only 4s. Also, by the same, Hamilton's Modern Instructions for Singing; large music folio, 5s. May be ordered of all musicsellers and booksellers.

THE FAVOURITE BALLADS of the SEASON are John Parry's Sweet Vesper Bells of Ancona, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Have still some kind Word for me, 2s. Franz Abt's May Song, 2s.; Morning, 2s. 6d.; Evening, 2s.; and The Earth it loves Rain, 2s. Kücken's The Star, 2s.; Sweet May, 2s.; and his celebrated Song, The Tear, 2s. Pressel's A Youth from the Summit, 2s.; and When two fond Hearts, 2s. Cherry's The Dreams of Youth, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Like the Song of Birds, illustrated, 2s. 6d. Eliza Cook's Song of the Sailor Boy, music by Rodwell, 2s. Harper's Truth in Absence, 2s. Miss Fricker's Fading away, 2s. Barker's The Lime Blossoms, illustrated, 2s. 6d.; and Glover's (S.) Annie o' the Banks o' Dee, illustrated, 2s. 6d., &c.

TO PROFESSORS of SINGING.—Signor Lanza is about to publish his COMPLETE MUSICAL MENTOR, being a new Preceptor on a true method of commencing and progressively cultivating the art of Italian and English vocalization, being the result of fifty-two years' observation and experience in teaching singing—and as he is desirous of inserting the names of all the professors of singing in the kingdom—he will feel obliged by their sending their names and residence, addressed to him, pre-paid, at No. 31, George-street, Hampstead-road, London.—N.B. As the work is nearly ready, an early communication will be esteemed a favour.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, No. 123, for May 1, price 1½d., stamped 2½d., contains an Article by Leigh Hunt (Eating Songs) Fétis on Choir and Chorus Singing, Brief Chronicle of Musical Matters during the last fortnight, Original Correspondence, and Four Pages of Music, being the Prayer from Mosè in Egitto, by Rossini, with English and Italian words. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

BEETHOVEN'S GRAND MASS IN D, as performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society. The Vocal Score, with the accompaniment, simplified by Vincent Novello, price 14s. Separate Chorus. Orchestral Parts, Strings, 17s. 3d.; Wind, 42s. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

Now ready, price 4s. 6d. sewed.

A TREATISE ON CHOIR AND CHORUS SINGING. By F. J. Fétis, Chapel-Master to H. M. the King of the Belgians; Director of the Conservatory of Music, Brussels; Knight of the Legion of Honour, &c. &c. Translated (with the kind permission of the Author) into English by the Rev. Thomas Helmore, M.A., Priest in Ordinary, and Master of the Children of H. M. Chapels Royal; Precentor of St. Mark's College, Chelsea; Hon. Secretary, in Musical Matters, to the Ecclesiological, late Cambridge Camden Society, &c. &c.

J. A. Novello, London and New York.

MOZART'S GRAND REQUIEM MASS arranged for Piano Solo, by Josiah Pittman. Price 4s. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L'Elisir d'Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

BOOSE'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosé's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and Operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ.—The applause which has greeted the performance of this Waltz every evening during the last week at the Argyll Rooms, has been quite unprecedented. Is now published, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. The band parts are now ready, price 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

"RULE BRITANNIA," with Variations for the Pianoforte.—Composed by Brinley Richards. Dedicated to, and played by Miss Arabella Goddard, with distinguished success. Price 4s. This popular morceau will be played by Mr. Brinley Richards, at Mr. Ransford's Benefit at the Theatre Royal, Haymarket, on Wednesday evening, May 3rd, and is published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

CITY MUSICAL UNION, CROSBY HALL.—Conductor, Mr. Gadsby. On Tuesday evening, 2nd May, will be performed Mendelssohn's Oratorio ELIJAH. Principal Vocal Performers:—Madame Weiss, Miss L. Rhemmeiogh, Miss A. Hincks, Miss Nason, Mrs. W. Dixon, Mr. Donald King, and Mr. Weiss; Organist—Mr. R. Limpus. The Band and Chorus will be efficient and complete. Tickets, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. To commence at eight o'clock. Annual Subscriptions to Monthly Concerts, 10s. 6d.; £1 1s.; and £2 2s.—G. D. TAYLOR, Hon. Sec.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 18. SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

MENDELSSOHN'S "ŒDIPUS IN COLONOS."

(Continued from page 227.)

In answer to the summons of the Chorus, Theseus comes, demanding what new occasion requires his presence. Œdipus announces to him that the fated hour is here, as declared by the voice of heaven, when Athens is to receive through his death—the old blind outcast, that promised benefit that will eternally repay the generous hospitality of the king. It is imperative that Theseus alone witness the catastrophe of his guest's career, and that he maintain an inviolable secresy as to the place of his death, as to his tomb, and as to the revelation he is about to make, disclosing it only at his own death hour to the successor to the throne, who must in like wise transmit it as an inheritance of silence to the next ruler; and by this influence will Athens remain impregnable by the arms of Thebes. Œdipus, long dependent, from his self-inflicted infirmity, upon the guidance of others, feels now a miraculous power within him, the manifestation of the directing deity, which prompts his steps and enables him to lead to the spot destined to be the scene of his awful dissolution. This is one of the most powerful, at least it is one of the most dramatic situations in the tragedy; there is more grandeur in the appearance of the eyeless wanderer, newly empowered by a preternatural sense to assume the direction of others, and with more than the majesty of his long-lost station, with the dignity of one inspired, commanding Theseus to follow him, than in all his scenes of violence, than even his imprecations upon Creon, his curse of his son. The present purpose is to speak of Mendelssohn, not Sophocles, from which I have already made too long a digression; it is now, therefore, to proceed with the examination of the Ode, which the impressive departure of Œdipus introduces.

VIII.

This is an invocation to the awful deities who preside over the world of shadows, calling upon them to appease the death pangs of the destined Œdipus, and to requite his life of painful suffering with repose in Hades.

It is most interesting to observe the very delicate sense of propriety, a natural quality of a refined mind and a characteristic essential of pure genius, that distinguishes our composer, as evidenced in his treatment of the present piece. This has all the solemnity demanded by the impressive situation in which it occurs, all the profound earnestness of prayer, of prayer addressed with the deepest reverence to the most dreaded powers that determine the destiny of mortals; but it is so completely unlike in style to the sacred music of Mendelssohn, I mean that written to express the sentiment of the Christian church, as most powerfully to dissociate it from any train of religious ideas that the genius of the master may have elsewhere suggested. True it is that Mendelssohn, like all musicians in all ages since our art has had a history, wrote upon the same principles, whether his music were applied to a sacred or a secular subject; but here is a proof, and a very striking one, that unlike many of his greatest predecessors, though he employed what one may call the same idiom, the idiom that was natural and proper to him, that was original in him, and that was individual from him, though, in fact, he wrote the music of Mendelssohn, he had the rare power of so modifying its expression, as always to identify its character with that of the subject he illustrated. No, no; there can never come a ghoul in the character of a doctor of music to adapt scriptural words to pastoral airs and opera love songs, and palm them upon the world, with any plausible pretensions of propriety, as specimens of sacred compositions; one might as lief presume to praise the Lord to the tune of the drinking song in the Freischütz as to sing a Christian hymn to the composition under notice, and yet, with all its obvious secularity of character, it is an appropriate prayer for the most solemn occasion that could possibly exercise the rites of heathen worship.

It would be most difficult, perhaps impossible, to define what especially distinguishes the chorus under notice as an illustration of paganism; and, however difficult to render, equally dull to read, would be a conjectural catalogue of technicalities that might more or less describe such points of peculiarity as strike my attention, but could convey no idea of the spirit, by which, truly, the music is characterised, to one who knew not the composition. You must become acquainted with the chorus; you must remember the artistic refinement that characterised the classic age; you must consider the poetical glow that, investing all the relations and associations of existence, was reflected by the imagination of the Athenian people; you must recollect how every object that affected their senses, every impulse that excited their feelings, was regarded as typical of some superior power, each of which had to be severally besought, according to their supposed concern in the various occasions of life; you must think of the temples and the statues, and, still more, of the soft sunny climate, and its luxuriant productions by which that people were surrounded, and, if then you cannot perceive the exquisitely appropriate connexion between the music of Mendelssohn and the subject it illustrates, if you find not that he embodies the true feelings of the situation, you are a pleasure the poorer, and I can only hope, as a requital for your patience in wending through my remarks, that your next musical investigation may be of a work more congenial to your taste and more appreciable by your judgment.

With all their refinement, with all their cultivation, the Greeks were, with respect to music, in a state of barbarism; so we may determine from the vestiges of their musical system, the only vestiges, that have come down to us in the form of the Gregorian chant, or in what are described as the Ecclesiastical Modes in musical terminology. It is not here to discuss the seeming anomaly of the Greeks' exquisite sense of the beautiful in all else, but yet insensitiveness to the most beautiful embodied in our art, and withal so profound a reverence for this art as to name it music, or a concentration of the attributes of all the Muses—harmony or a signification of the fitness of things. In this is the evidence of a yearning for something excelling all their other excellence, which it remained for the present age not only to develope, but, in a practical sense, truly, to discover; and by opening this new region for the exercise of the imagination, to afford to this faculty a wider scope for the display of its powers, a more delicate medium and a more subtle, through which to penetrate into the hearts of those whom it addresses. Plato reasoned upon music; we feel it: he yearned for its beauty; we find that this beauty embodies every yearning of the human heart.

Now it is not to be supposed that in musically presenting what we may well regard as a musical solemnity of the Greeks, Mendelssohn has pretended to realize what may have been the musical effect of a Greek hymn; I need but to refer your common sense, let me not say your artistic feeling, to the experience of the results of the mistaken zeal of some well-intentioned enthusiasts, in endeavouring to restore into practical use the dull crudities of this unnatural, unphilosophical, unscientific, purely artificial, and utterly barbarous system, to prove that such a pretension would have been most remote from the poetical purpose with which this entire work is conceived—from the artistic excellence with which this purpose is fulfilled. Not to realize, but to idealize, is the province of the poet; and in the exercise of this province has our composer presented, instead of what the Greeks might possibly have sung in their religious invocations, what they must certainly have felt in singing them. Thus, then, I come round to the consideration, that it is in the spirit which characterizes the music that its illustrative beauty is to be recognised; and, if a reference to its mysterious solemnity fail to indicate the subtle quality that distinguishes the music, this proves the inefficiency of words, or at least of my application of them, as an exponency of musical effects, but it disproves nothing of the effects of the music.

Digitized by Google

The opening bars of the ode are an index to its general character:

glowing, almost impassioned in their expression, but, as I have already said, solemn and mysterious in their effect, these phrases of earnest melody, with its enforcement of very emphatic harmony, in speaking from the heart, speak to the heart in a language of sympathy that cannot be misunderstood. A particular point is made upon the word "Aidoneus" (one of the names of Pluto), which is pronounced by all the voices in unison, in slow repetitions of a low note, without accompaniment, but with the harmony of the orchestra introduced at the unaccented part of the measure while the last, the diphthong syllable, is sustained; the effect of this, associated, as it must be, with an idea of the awful reverence with which at all times, and most especially at the hour of death, the name of the king of the shadow-world could only be uttered—the effect of this is truly thrilling, and proves the high poetical feeling of the composer, by its most timely and most touching simplicity, more a thousandfold than could the grandest display of artistic elaboration. However we may admire such a musician for his inventive fluency, or such another for the practical command of the resources of his art, there is yet another quality, unavailing, indeed, if uncombined with these, but paramount to, if coincident with them, which is this same poetical feeling that draws a meaning from every subject it illustrates, and thus, so idealizes it as not only to elevate the subject in the minds of them who contemplate it through this medium, but to exalt their minds, and to refine and purify, by quickening their sense of beauty, or at least stimulating their power to perceive it. How different is this from the practice of word-painting that deforms the works of some of the greatest masters of our art, and how equally remote from that laborious style of expression which so exaggerates the sense of every word as to annul the meaning of an entire passage! Here is the word of most importance in the whole hymn, the word that epitomizes the whole, rendered with the most exquisite judgment and by the most appropriate means, the most prominent and the most impressive; and thus is Mendelssohn shown to be one of the most imaginative, one of the most truly poetical writers that have ennobled music and established its superior greatness above the other fine arts.

As an example of musical excellence, equally striking with the poetical reading of the passage I have just been describing, let me refer to the novel modulation into the key of C flat that follows immediately upon it, from which we have this very original and very beautiful course of progression to lead us back to the original key, preparatory to the very exquisite cadence, the first perfect cadence in the key of A flat that has occurred, which closes the strophe, where a most charming effect is made by the gradual cessation of the accompaniment, which has been augmented by the introduction of all the instruments upon the harmony that establishes the return to the key, whereby the concluding notes are left to the voices alone.

Thus much is assigned to a quartet of solo voices. The Antistrophe, which is, with slight modification, a repetition of the same musical ideas, is admirably varied in its effect by the introduction of the full choir, and, still further, by the engagement of the solo quartet in some responsive phrases that are now engrafted upon the original. By that subtle art of appropriation which is most eminently displayed throughout this entire work, the passage that so beautifully illustrates, as I have attempted to describe, the shuddering awe with which the dread name of the monarch of Hades passes through the thought, is applied with scarcely less pertinent effect in a description of the monster hound that guards the entrance to the world of shadows to the rendering of the words "Watch keeps there," which are thus given with such peculiar mystery as well befits the idea of that existence which may be supposed to symbolise our last struggle in passing from our living to our spiritual existence. There is a very important change of the original accentuation, to give force to the pronunciation of the "name of Death," when this fearful offspring of Gaed and Tartarus is invoked to receive with gentleness the long-suffering Œdipus.

A short coda, formed upon a phrase of two bars that constituted the introductory symphony, and was again employed to separate the Strophe from the Antistrophe, concludes the piece with solemn stillness, and leaves an impression of the most earnest character upon our feelings.

There is yet to remark upon the singular peculiarity of the instrumentation, which shares not a little in the striking individuality of effect that especially distinguishes the present ode. This is restricted to the tenor and bass instruments only, the violoncellos in separate parts, the viola, the bassoons, a horn, a bass-trombone, and the double basses, which are disposed in such a very original distribution, as to produce a most novel and eminently characteristic quality of tone that is solemn in its stillness, sepulchral in its strange unlikeness to all familiar associations, rich, resonant and beautiful as regards its mere sound, and most felicitously appropriate to the situation. Thus our composer shows himself as great a master of the important art of musical coloring as he is ever successful in the conception and development of his ideas, of which the skilful application of this art most valuably enhances the effect. G. A. Macfarren.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

WILLIS's Rooms was crowded on Thursday morning by one of the most elegant assemblies we have seen at the agreeable réunions of the Quartet Association, which is fast rising into reputation. The Association has only reached its third season, and already it has laid hold on the sympathies of the upper classes, to whom chiefly it must look for support. The quartet performers are the same as last season—namely, Messrs. Sainton, H. C. Cooper, Hill, and Piatti. The first concert of the season on Thursday had the further attraction of the services of M. Charles Hallé, one of the most accomplished pianists of the day. It was M. Hallé's first appearance at these quartet meetings, and he was welcomed with unusual warmth.

The programme of Thursday included one special novelty—a quartet by Herr Robert Schumann, the first time of performance in this country—in A minor, Op. 41, No. 1, dedicated to Mendelssohn. It was played magnificently, but failed to excite the least interest. The Quartet is well written, and shows infinite care and elaboration, Herr Schumann seemingly being determined that his work should be worthy of the great composer to whom it is dedicated. Without asserting so much of it, we are bound to acknowledge that the directors of the Quartet Association were justified in presenting to their subscribers an unknown work from a composer who has made so much stir in the musical world. Moreover, the overture to Tannhauser had been performed on the previous Monday at the concert of the New Philharmonic Society; and a quartet by Herr Robert Schumann is surely as much entitled to notice as an instrumental prelude by Herr Richard Wagner.

The second piece was Spohr's Trio Concertante for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, No. 1, in E minor, Op. 119, dedicated to Madame de Malsbourg. The trio was a great relief after the quartet, and its numerous beauties were never more thoroughly appreciated. The scherzo—one of the quaintest, most fanciful, and, so to speak, tantalising movements ever written, was superbly executed by M. Charles Hallé and Signor Piatti, and loudly encored. M. Sainton, however, would not interrupt the progress of the trio, and at once struck into the brilliant and vivacious finale. M. Charles Hallé had but little to do of the showy or brilliant kind, in the first two movements, although the difficulties are intolerable throughout. In the scherzo and finale, nevertheless, his great powers had full scope, and his playing was heard to the greatest advantage.

The trio was followed by Mendelssohn's quartet, No. 2. in E flat, Op. 12, written in the earliest period of the musician's career, but bearing as manifestly the stamp of his genius as any of the three great quartets in op. 44. Each movement was received with delight, and the canzonetta allegretto with acclamations. The whole quartet was played to perfection. Mr. Hill and Signor Piatti, as alto and violoncello, were faultless.

M. Charles Hallé gave, as a wind-up, Mendelssohn's presto scherzando, which he executed with brilliancy and consummate ease. M. Sainton led the Mendelssohn, and Mr. H. C. Cooper the Schumann quartet. We may congratulate these gentlemen on this auspicious commencement of their second season.

---

MANCHESTER.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The following was the programme of the last Classical Chamber Concert, given on Thursday, the 27th ult.:—

PART I.—Grand Trio (in D, Op. 70, No. 1), Beethoven; Grand Sonata, pianoforte and violin (in A minor, Op. 47), dedicated to Kreutzer, Beethoven.

PART II.—Grand Trio, (in D minor, Op. 49), Mendelssohn; Fantasia, violoncello, "La Favorite," Piatti; Solo, pianoforte, Nocturne, (in D flat, Op. 27), Chopin; Presto scherzando, (in F sharp minor), Mendelssohn; Solo, violin, Allegretto (in G), Notturno (in E), Ernst.

In order to gratify his friends and supporters, M. Hallé took advantage of the arrival of Herr Ernst, and engaged him to appear with Signor Piatti at a special concert, in the Town Hall Room, where most of M. Hallé's usual subscribers were present. Of the concert itself, and the performance of the three great artists—it is impossible to speak too highly. The selection was admirable, and included, among other things, Beethoven's Trio, Op. 70, No. 1, in D, and the Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin, of the same composer, dedicated to Kreutzer. Both had been given during the past season, but every one seemed glad to have the opportunity of hearing Ernst in them, and never was he heard to greater advantage or more warmly applauded. One of the variations in the andante of the Sonata was encored; and the performance of the whole of it, as of the trio, was first-rate on all hands. Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor (No. 1), was another happy choice, and was admirably executed by MM. Hallé, Ernst, and Piatti. The andante was one of the most exquisite performances we have ever listened to, and would have been encored but for the length of the concert. The solo performances, which wound up the concert, were equally good in their way. None can surpass Signor Piatti on the violoncello; and few, but Mendelssohn himself, could play the Presto Scherzando in F sharp minor in the masterly style of M. Charles Hallé, who was not less successful in Chopin's elegant Nocturne in D flat (Op. 27). Signor Piatti's solo was a fantasia of his own on airs from the Favorite of Donizetti. Herr Ernst brought the concert to a close with two charming bagatelles of his own—Allegretto (in G), and Notturno (in E), which he played to perfection. M. Hallé accompanied him on the pianoforte.

---

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(*From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)

(Continued from page 278.)

CHAPTER XIV.

(1781-1782.)

JOSEPH II., as great in his ideas as other sovereigns in their actions, had included even the lyrical drama in his projects of reform. His lofty spirit of patriotism inspired him with the notion of establishing a German Opera, on a level with that of the Italians, to whom Germany had hitherto been tributary. Having discovered the fitting man to liberate his fatherland from a foreign yoke, he summonsed, therefore, the best native singers to his capital, and, placing them under the direction of Mozart, submitted to our hero an amusing piece by Bretzner, as the libretto for an opera. The name of this piece was, Die Entführung aus dem Serail, oder, Belmonte und Constanze.

The Emperor's intentions were crowned with the most brilliant success. The first German opera worthy of the name was enthusiastically received, and soon afterwards brought out at the principal theatres in Germany. This was the most happy reform effected by Joseph II., since, at least, it was the most lasting.

In its original form, Bretzner's play was an operetta, or rather a comedy with music. In order to make it into a regular opera, Mozart was obliged, in the first instance, to apply to a Herr Stephani, who interpolated the new matter under the direction of the composer. Every musician, artist, and connoisseur, will peruse with the utmost interest the letter which Mozart wrote to his father, after he had commenced working at the Entführung. It is one of the most valuable fragments of his correspondence, and, perhaps, the only instance of his giving himself the trouble to explain and analyse his own labours. I will give it entire, but I must warn the reader that, in order to understand it thoroughly, he must have the whole opera in his memory, or, at all events, before his eyes.

"Vienna, the 26th September, 1781.

"The opera, at first, began with a monologue, out of which I requested Herr Stephani to make an arietta, and to substitute a duet for the small talk of the two personages, after Osmin's

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

little song. As we intend the part of Osmin for Herr Fischer, who possesses an excellent bass voice—although the Archbishop told me that he sang too low for a basso, on which I assured him that Herr Fischer would sing higher in future—we must take advantage of his powers, especially as he is a great favourite with the public here. This Osmin, however, in the original, has one little song, and no more, except a part in the trio and finale. I have, therefore, written a new air for him in the first act, and he will have another in the second. I have given Herr Stephani the whole air, the principal thing—the music—having been quite ready before he knew a word of the matter. You have only the commencement and the end, which last will produce a good effect. Osmin's rage will be rendered comic, because the Turkish music is here introduced. In the working out of the air, I have given Herr Fischer an opportunity of displaying his fine lower notes. The 'D'rum bei'm Barte des Propheten,' etc., is in the same tempo, but with short notes—and, as his rage continues to increase, and everyone imagines the aria to be at an end, the allegro assai, in a different measure and a different key, must produce the best effect; a man, in such a violent access of passion, oversteps every limit, mark, and boundary, and no longer knows what he is about;—and, just in the same manner, the music must no longer know what it is about. As, however, the passions, whether violent or the contrary, must never excite disgust by their expression: music, under the most harrowing circumstances, should never offend the ear, but still afford it pleasure, or, in other words, still continue to be music. I have introduced no key opposed to F (the key of the aria), and though I have not chosen the nearest, D minor, I have selected as good a one, A minor, which is further off. Now, do you know how I have rendered Belmonte's air in A major, 'O wie ängstlich, O wie feurig,' etc.—in which the beating heart is already manifested? I have put the violins in octaves. This is the favourite air among all those you have heard, and it is so with me as well; it is written expressly for Herr Adamberger's voice. You see the trembling and hesitation, the heaving of the breast, in a crescendo; you hear the whispering and sighing, in the first violins united, with the flute in unison. The chorus of Janissaries is all that can be required from a composition of the kind—short, jolly, and written precisely to suit the taste of the Viennese. I have somewhat sacrificed Constanze's air to the flexible throat of Mademoiselle Cavalieri. I have endeavoured to express as much as possible with a strange bravura air, to the words—'Trennung war mein ganzes Loos, und nun schwimmt mein Aug' in Thränen.' I have changed the 'Hui' into 'schnell,' thus:—'doch wie schnell schwand meine Freude,' etc. I know not what our German poets are thinking of. There is no reason why, because they do not understand the stage, where opera is concerned, that they should make the different personages speak as to a number of pigs.

"And now, with regard to the trio—I mean the conclusion of the first act. Pedrillo has given his master out for an architect, in order that the latter may enjoy an opportunity of meeting his Constanze in the garden. The Bashaw has taken him into his service; but Osmin, who knows nothing of the matter, is an ill-mannered cur, an enemy to all strangers, and, in his character of overseer, impertinent, and will not allow them to enter the garden. The first part of the scene, as I have sketched it out, is very short, and, as the text gave me an opportunity, I have set it with tolerable success for three voices. The music, however, then begins pianissimo, in the major key, and should be taken in very quick time. The end will be noisy indeed, which is all that is required for the termination of an act—the more noise the better—the shorter the better—so that the audience may not grow cold in their applause. The overture is extremely short. It alternates throughout between forte and piano, the Turkish music being always introduced with the fortes—and progresses, in this way, through the different keys. I think the audience will not be able to fall asleep, when they hear it, even should they not have closed their eyes for a single moment the night before.

"But now comes the rub. For more than three weeks, the first act has been finished, as well as an air in the second, and the drinking duet, which is nothing but a Turkish tattoo; but I can do no more at present, as the whole thing has been turned topsy-turvy, and that, too, at my request, In the commencement of the third act, there is a charming quintet, or rather finale, which I should prefer at the termination of the second.* In order, however, to accomplish this, there must be great changes, and, in fact, quite a new plot, so that Stephani is up to his ears in work.

"Now with regard to the words of the opera. As far as Stephani is concerned, you are quite right; nevertheless the poetry is quite suited to the character of the stupid, ill-mannered and malicious Osmin. I am quite aware that this is not the best part of the libretto, but it agrees so well with my musical ideas, which were running in my head for a long time previous, that it pleases me, as a natural consequence, and I will make a wager that nothing is missed at the representation. With regard to the poetry already in the piece, I have really no reason to condemn it. Belmonte's air—'O wie ängstlich,' etc., could scarcely be written better for musical effect. The aria, too, especially the first part, is not bad, with the exception of the 'Hui,' and 'Kummer ruht in meinem Schoss'† (For grief cannot repose);—and I know that in some operas it is absolutely necessary for the music to play the part of an obedient child. Why do the Italian comic operas please everywhere, in spite of all the wretched stuff contained in the libretto—even in Paris, as I myself have seen? Why—because the music holds undivided sway, and makes everything else forgotten. How much more successful, then, must an opera be, when the plot is well worked out, while the words are written with a view to the music alone, and, not for the sake of some wretched rhyme (these rhymes, by Heaven, do nothing but injure a theatrical representation, whatever it may be), for which words, and even stanzas, are stuck in, and wholly ruin the composer's ideas. Verse is indispensable to music—but rhyme, mere rhyme, most damaging. Those gentlemen who write so pedantically must inevitably fail, and the music with them. When a good composer, who understands the stage, and is able himself to give some hints, happens to associate with that rara avis, a modest poet, there is no cause to be apprehensive about the applause of the ignorant. I almost look upon poets in the light of trumpeters, with their professional tom-foolery; if we composers were always so closely to follow rules (which, when we knew nothing better, were very good for us), we should write as much bad music as the poets make worthless books. I think I have now talked quite enough nonsense to you."

Had I the inclination, I might write a whole volume in the way of comment on this letter. I shall, however, content myself with a few deductions, to which I may subsequently have occasion to refer.

In the first place, it will be remarked how well Mozart was able to guide his authors, or rather to teach them their trade, performing himself the most important part of their work. If the reader is thoroughly acquainted with the music of the Entführung, it cannot possibly have escaped his notice that the most original character in the piece, and one of the most genuine creations of the comic muse, in a word, Osmin, was entirely the composer's own. Without the duet and the two wonderful airs which Mozart has given him, and the chief poetical features of which he dictated to the author of the libretto, Osmin, musically speaking, would never have existed. Yet Mozart had nothing but his ear to enable him to judge of the verses, and nothing but his straightforward good sense to help him to decide on the action of the drama. His ear, however, never deceived him where harmony was concerned; and his good sense assumed the form of high literary and critical intelligence, wherever it was necessary in the opera to dictate the relations of his own art with that of the dramatist, in the most favourable, and, indeed, the only good, and only true way for a musician. An analysis of the airs of Osmin and Belmont show with what mature deliberation the composer set to work, and what importance he attached to the expression of the music in connection with the words. But, while he made everything subordinate to dramatic truth, which he adopted as the rational basis of his operas, he shows us, at the same time, the modifications necessary in carrying it out, so that it may not be applied wholly without control, or, at least, in an exaggerated manner. The music, he says, even in the most terrible situations, should always be agreeable to the ear—always continue to be music. This, too, is a reason why Mozart's operas cannot be systematically classed with the French operas of the old school, including those of Gluck, or with those of the Italians, either ancient or modern. The principles of harmony which he invariably observed in his classical works, completely separate them from those of the first-mentioned school, which, in straining after dramatic effect, frequently missed its aim and went beyond it, as must inevitably be the case where music ceases to be music, and degenerates into mere screaming for the voices, and unmeaning noise for the orchestra. The truest possible rendering of the sense of the words, and the adaptation of the music to the various characters and situations distinguish Mozart's operas no less remarkably from those of the Italian masters, who too often use the text as a mere connecting thread, the costumes as adjuncts of a masquerade, and the situations as nothing else than the means of displaying the talents of the individual singers, according to the fashion or taste of the period.

* The second act concludes with a quartet, and not with a quintet.

† "Grief reposes in my lap."

Digitized by Google

Various obstacles caused the representation of the new opera to be postponed until the 12th of July, 1782; but Mozart lost nothing by the delay. Belmonte und Constanze was received with the greatest applause, and most of the pieces were encored. There was a pretty strong cabal, but those who composed it were afraid to let their disapprobation be heard through such unanimous applause and bravos. The number of the well-inclined was too considerable for any opposition to be made with impunity. The members of the cabal, however, consoled themselves with the hope of being more successful another time; and their hope was realized, when Figaro's Hochzeit was afterwards produced. It is probable that attempts had been made to ruin the Entführung in the Emperor's opinion, which was all the easier for the flatterers among the musicians about him, since Joseph himself pretended to the character of a connoisseur. After the performance, the Emperor ordered Mozart to be summonsed to his presence. "There are" said he, "a great many notes in your opera, my good Mozart." "Just as many, your majesty," replied our hero, "as there ought to be." "How remarkable!" observes Herr Von Nissen. "When Napoleon heard the admirable composition on the death of General Hoche, he addressed these very words of the Emperor Joseph, to its composer, who, in turn, replied in the same terms as Mozart."

Prague was the only city in the world where Mozart's works were appreciated, in his lifetime, as they were by posterity, twenty years after his death. Professor Niemetschek, the author of an anecdotal biography of our hero, describes the great sensation created by the Entführung in the capital of Bohemia, and among all true judges.

"Every one was carried away, every one lost in astonishment at the new harmonies, the original and, until then, undreamt of passages for the wind instruments. It seemed as if all that had hitherto been heard and known was now unworthy to be called music."

Such success necessarily gave uneasiness to those whose self-love was hurt by Mozart's national triumph, and whose credit, or means of existence, was threatened by it. That Mozart had a great number of enemies, is a fact needing no confirmation, since, besides exciting jealousy by his reputation, which was increasing every day, he was reproached for his somewhat blunt and uncompromising candour and for that love of criticising others so evident in his letters, and which he never restrained, even in company. Mozart spoke boldly and without reserve of every one and everything, as if his own extraordinary talent were not of itself a sufficiently mortal offence for those on whose works and playing he pronounced unfavourable opinions. Among the Italian composers at Vienna, there were some who saw far enough into the future to feel convinced that Mozart would ultimately be their ruin; that his German opera was the first blow dealt at the universal supremacy of Italian music, and that these German barbarians would end by wresting the musical sceptre from their hands, as their forefathers had already swayed the sceptre of the world. The wounds thus inflicted upon the national pride of the Italians, driven from their last entrenchments, and touched in their most vulnerable part, were, naturally, deep and incurable. A great many German musicians, whose silly vanity rendered them jealous of Mozart, made common cause with the Italians. Of all the instances of hate and enmity towards the great man, however, only one has become historical; that of Salieri, a pupil of Gluck, and a more learned musician than any other operatic composer among his own countrymen. Salieri was naturally Mozart's most implacable foe. The flattering error of judgment which caused the Parisians to mistake Salieri's opera, Die Danaiden, for the composition of Gluck, his position as first capellmeister at the Imperial court, his great reputation, and his many dramatic triumphs, all combined to increase his hatred of a young man, who, though without official title or appointment, and a poor music-master, Salieri could not fail to perceive, surpassed himself as he did everyone else. Soon afterwards, much more redoubtable enemies, possessing the means of vengeance in their hands, or, rather, throats, swelled the hostile phalanx, already sufficiently formidable. I allude to the Italian singers, who fought pro aris et focis, in the cause of their maestri. They had it in their power to do Mozart great harm, and did not neglect the opportunity. Were the others less fortunate? Have we no black deed to record of those colleagues of Mozart, against whom he had such just cause of complaint? If we are to believe a tradition which, even at the present day, finds an echo in some breasts, one of these—Salieri—rendered himself infamous by a dreadful act. According to the report, he poisoned Mozart. Luckily for the honour of Italian musicians, this tradition is as destitute of foundation as of probability; as stupid as it is horrible. No; hate alone, now-a-days, very seldom begets such crimes among the educated classes. It does not declare itself in murders, poisonings, or any other melo-dramatic effects and catastrophes. O! happy age, that hast diffused thine intellectual light even over those who hate most heartily! Enemies should speak, shake hands, whisper in each other's ears, become intimate acquaintances, professional colleagues or brothers in Apollo, and meet and visit, as Mozart used to meet and visit Salieri, who always received him cordially. The devil, however, loses nothing by this alteration in their line of policy. Instead of physically, men are now morally assassinated, and, in the art of moral poisoning, Mozart's enemies were proficients. They employed, however, so much strategic skill in their machinations, that our hero appears to have experienced the consequences without ever discovering their secret reasons. In exactly the same manner, and in spite of his favourable prospects, his plans of enduring success in Mannheim and Munich had been thwarted by persons who always remained invisible. Thus, again, neither he nor his biographers have ever thoroughly explained why Joseph II., although he admired Mozart's talent, and entertained feelings of kindness for him personally, accorded him nothing but mere empty favour. It was not, however, sufficient for Mozart's enemies in Vienna to deprive him of the Imperial patronage, and the hopes of an official appointment; the public, in this case, might have compensated him for the obliviousness of the Court; they determined to ruin him equally in the estimation of the public. But how was this to be most readily accomplished? It would have been a difficult matter to depreciate his playing; his enemies would have even had a better chance by attacking his compositions, although to attempt that was still rather hazardous, where there were so many ears that hate had not struck deaf. But could not the man be made to suffer for the artist? As a man, however, Mozart was one of the best, the most noble and most reasonable of God's creatures. No matter; when envy, unable to find other means, resolves to attack the morals and character of its victim, it never meets with one who is quite invulnerable. After his professional labours, Mozart fled to amusement; his heart was not invulnerable to the temptations of love: he was fond, too, of the sparkling draught, which excites the nerves of the musician and of the poet. His purse, always open to his friends, whom he might have selected with more judgment, was, not to conceal the truth, often empty, and almost always light. He borrowed money in all directions, and frequently at usurious rates of interest. Much less than this would have sufficed to paint him in the blackest colours—to represent him as a drunkard, a profligate, and a reckless spendthrift. Envy, therefore, lent its microscope to the public, and the latter, impelled by curiosity, looked through it at Mozart. Many pious, clever people shook their heads, apparently deeply grieved, but, in reality, highly delighted, at a discovery always agreeable to men of mediocre abilities, even if they are not envious. There is nothing more consoling to some people than the power of saying to themselves: "We certainly don't possess the talent and genius of this man, but, for all that, we do not consider ourselves less fortunate in not resembling him." The reports in circulation against Mozart were, therefore, believed by some who were credulous, by others, who wished to believe them, and by the majority who did not think it worth while to sift the matter to the bottom. The enemies of Mozart, like true calumniators, reckoned on this indifference to attain their ends. Their victory was complete, so much so, indeed, that traces of it are still observable, being, I fear, indelible. It is in vain for the biographer to let Mozart's deeds speak for themselves; it is in vain for him to assert that one who died so young, and whose works are alone sufficient to form a whole library of music, could have devoted very little time to his pleasures; that a husband, passionately fond of his wife and fondly cherished in return—who, moreover, in the course of nine years was the father of six children—could hardly have been a thorough profligate; that an artist whose company was universally sought, and daily admitted into the highest circles, could not have been an habitual drunkard. On the contrary, if anything ought to excite astonishment, it is that the father of a family, with an income scarcely equal to that of a tradesman in middling circumstances, who was in no instance mean, who lent his friends money, without any prospect of its ever being returned, and who could yet find sufficient to send, from time to time, thirty or forty ducats to his old father—if, I repeat, anything ought to excite astonishment, it is that such a man, at his death, did not leave more debts behind him than amounted to the miserable sum of 3,000 florins! No matter; in the eyes of the many, who will not be taught better, Mozart must always pass for a worthless reprobate.

Digitized by Google

The feeling of hatred towards our hero did not even sink with him into the grave. In addition to the immortal legacy he bequeathed the world in his works, he left behind him a widow and two young children. Like love, hate has its articles of belief. Hate and love believe, respectively, that the persecution or the kind treatment of those in whom, as it were, a departed existence is continued, touches certain chords which, perhaps, may vibrate even in death. In all probability, we are justified in concluding that the position of Mozart's widow would have interested a prince like Leopold II., although we know that the state of affairs, at the period of his accession to the throne, compelled him, above all things, to adopt a course of strict economy. But what was really the case? A cipher was added to the amount of Mozart's debts, which, thus villanously falsified, terrified the Emperor, as it was expected it would. A lady of high rank, formerly a pupil of Mozart, discovered this atrocity, and informed his widow of it. The latter directly solicited an audience of the Emperor. Her request being granted, she explained the real state of matters, and immediately obtained a yearly pension of two hundred and fifty florins. Her friends, also, were enabled to pay our hero's debts out of the proceeds of a concert, the amount of which the Emperor generously guaranteed.

I have anticipated the natural order of events, because I had to speak of men who exercised so great an influence on Mozart's fate, not by actions, which would have been accurately traced, one after the other, but by secretly combined plots, and unvarying readiness to injure him. I was desirous of recording as quickly as possible, and then dismissing for ever, all that was connected with this unhappy subject.

[To be continued.]

---

MR. NEATE'S FIRST MORNING CONCERT.—The Hanover Square Rooms were crowded on Thursday morning, the attraction being a very excellent programme provided by Mr. Neate, one of our oldest and most respected professors of the pianoforte. The first part opened with Mozart's quartet in G minor, for piano, violin, viola, and violoncello, played by Messrs. Neate, Blagrove, R. Blagrove, and Lucas; Beethoven's pianoforte sonata, in G (No. 1 of Op. 29), executed by Neate; an aria by Haydn, and a song by Weber. The quartet was well played, and Mr. Neate, in Beethoven's sonata, showed himself quite familiar with the pianoforte music of the classical school. In the second part, Mendelssohn's early pianoforte quartet in C minor (No. 1 of Op. 1), for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, was a great treat to the lovers of good music, since it is very rarely heard. Mr. Neate played a fantasia of his own composition on "Rule Britannia," which was honoured with the warmest approval. Miss Messent sung a highly pleasing canzonet (M.S.), by Mr. Neate, called "The little Trout," and Miss Dolby introduced a charming song by Mr. Henry Leslie, entitled "Oh, let Me sing to Thee." In the first part, Mr. Herberte sang the air from Euryanthe, "Soft Airs around Me." The concert was a very agreeable one.

Digitized by Google

FOREIGN.

PARIS—(From our own Correspondent).—Rossini's Guillaume Tell has been revived at the Grand Opéra. Mdlle. Marie Dussy made her first appearance as Mathilde, and acquitted herself to the satisfaction of the audience. She has been re-engaged for two years, and will sing the parts formerly sustained by Mdlle. Nau, who is going to America. The general performance of the opera was not very good. M. Gueymard was fatigued, and M. Morelli out of his element in the part of the Swiss patriot. Moreover, the manner in which the singers took upon themselves to alter Rossini's music, was in extreme bad taste, to say the least of it. Beatrice di Tenda, which has not been produced for some years, the last time it was performed having been under M. Vatel's management, was revived at the Italiens last week. Mad. Frezzolini distinguished herself both as an actress and a singer in the part of the heroine; and Sig. Gardoni was excellent as Orombello, the Duchess's rejected lover. The Opéra-Comique has revived Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté, of M. Ambroise Thomas, Mdlle. Lefebre being the Elizabeth. In 1850, when this opera was in active rehearsal, Mdme. Ugalde declared that she had lost her voice, on which Mdlle. Lefebre undertook to supply her place, and in ten days was perfect in the part of the Queen. M. Faure undertook the part of Falstaff, the other evening, instead of M. Battaille, the original representative. Last Wednesday, the Emperor and Empress honoured the performance by their presence. At the Théâtre Lyrique, La Reine d'un Jour has been revived, with Mad. Meillet as Francine Camusat, a rôle which was "created" by Mad. Jenny Colon. The revival was successful, as was that of Paër's Maître de Chapelle, with Mdlle. Garnier as Gertrude. M. Levassor's Lunch has come off at last. It was a great success, and lasted so long that it might almost have been called a dinner, commencing at two o'clock and finishing at six. M. Schulhoff gave his second concert at the Salle Herz to a brilliant and numerous audience. M. Henri Herz has given a concert with M. Servais, the violoncellist, who executed M. Gounod's fiddle Méditation sur le prélude de Bach, on the graver instrument, which did not improve it. M. Gounod is said to be meditating another méditation on another of Bach's preludes! Concerts have also been given by Mad. Sabatier: Mdlle. Joséphine Martin; MM. Stamaty and Krüger; M. Goldbeck and Mad. Philibert; M. Léon Le Cieux; MM. Jacquard and Seligmann; the brothers Lionnet; and M. Lamazou. At the grand fête given by the Princess Mathilde, and honoured by the presence of the Emperor and Empress, all the high dignitaries of State, and the members of the corps diplomatique, the programme was entirely composed of the works of the post-musician, M. Nadaud. An elegant theatre had been constructed in the large drawing room for the performance of the little comic opera Le Docteur Vieuxtemps, after which M. Nadaud, at the request of their Majesties, sat down at the piano, and played several of his minor compositions. On the conclusion of the fête, the artistes engaged in Docteur Vieuxtemps received presents from the Princess Mathilde.

M. Adolphe Sax has been appointed Facteur d'instruments de musique de la maison militaire de l'Empereur. The gross receipts of the first twenty-five representations of the Etoile du Nord produced a sum total of 155,000 francs, being 6,200 francs for each representation. Of this sum, the authors have received 21,700 francs, and the hospitals 14,090 francs. Talking of receipts, I may add that the gross amount of money taken at all the theatres during the month of March was 1,267,696 francs. The brothers Ferdinand and Amédée van der Huevel have been specially engaged as accompanyists, by Duprez, for his Théâtre-école.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent).—Mad. Maywood has made her début at the Imperial Opera in M. Perrot's ballet of Faust, and was favourably received. La Cenerentola and Rigoletto have been revived.—At the Hofburgtheater, Weber's Jubel-Ouverture was performed in honour of the Emperor's nuptials. Herr Lindpaintner's music to Schiller's Lied von der Glocke was also given under the direction of Herr Titl, the composer. The entertainments concluded with Die Huldigung Oesterreichs, and the national melody.—M. Géraldy's concert came off the other day in the room of the Musikverein, when he attempted some of Schubert's Lieder, and was anything but successful. Mozart's "Non più andrai," and Le vieux Caporal, were better suited to him.—Fräulein Emma Staudach (who was in London last season), played two or three Salonstücke on the piano—Herr Schulhoff's Carneval von Venedig among the number.

Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt's popularity seems to be increasing every day. I will not attempt to describe the enthusiasm she excites, but content myself with informing you the room of the Musikverein is not spacious enough to contain those who desire to obtain admission when she sings. At her fourth concert, she gave Susanna's air from the second act of The Marriage of Figaro, the air of Alice from Robert le Diable, Herr Mangold's Zwiegesang, and a Swedish Hirtenlied by Berg, and was applauded "to the echo." I thought the "bravos" would never cease. She was not so fortunate in a song composed by Herr Otto Goldschmidt, but the fault did not lie with her. Herr Otto Goldschmidt, with Herren Joseph Hellmesberger and Schlesinger, played the first movement of a pianoforte trio by Schubert, the variations sérieuses in D minor of Mendelssohn, a nocturne of Chopin, and La Tarentelle of M. Thalberg. At her fifth concert, five days later, Mad. Goldschmidt repeated the air, "Und ob die Wolke sie verhülle," which was so enthusiastically received on a former occasion. She also sang, "Come per me sereno," from the Sonnambula, Mendelssohn's "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges," and the Lied by Herr Taubert, which she had already introduced at her first concert: "Ich muss nun einmal singen." Herr Otto Goldschmidt performed a sonata of Beethoven, and two Etudes of his own composition, on the pianoforte. Herr Otto von Königslöw, a violinist of talent, played an Andante cantabile by Ernst, which obtained great applause. Mad. Goldschmidt does not go to Prague, but to Pesth, whither she has been especially invited. She intends passing the summer at some watering place, and will now positively not go to London.

On the 27th of April there was a solemn service sung by the Domchorverein in the church of St. Anne, to celebrate the marriage of his Majesty the Emperor. The Sixth Grand Mass and a chorus of Haydn, and an "Ave Maria," by Franz Schubert, were the pieces selected for the occasion. By letters patent of his Imperial Majesty, the Verein zur Beförderung der Tonkünst in Galizien has been reorganized and already commenced operations. The statutes of the Verein are contained in seventeen paragraphs, printed and published in the German and Polish languages. The object of the association is, by the foundation of a school, called the Conservatorium, to encourage a taste for music, and to educate organists, singers, male and female, orchestral instrumentalists, and, in cases of extraordinary talent, solo players. It also purposes giving public concerts, at which the pupils will appear, both as soloists and otherwise. The Verein will consist of a protector and his substitute, six curators, and the members, the latter being divided into contributing, working, and honorary members. All members have the right of being present, and voting at the general meetings of the association, and of proposing new measures. They also enjoy the privilege of attending the concerts of the association, and all public performances of the pupils. Any member engaging to belong to the Verein for ten years, and paying down a sum of at least a hundred florins towards the school fund, can claim, during the above-mentioned period, the right of having a pupil educated in the school for the space of six years. Any one can become a contributing member by engaging to pay an annual sum of not less than six florins for ten years. The business of the association will be conducted by a committee chosen from among the members, and consisting of the president, six committeemen, a director of the concerts, and a director of the Conservatorium. The president and three committeemen will be elected from the class of contributing members, and the other three from that of the working members, for three years, at the expiration of which they are eligible for re-election. A general meeting of all the members will be summonsed annually to take into consideration the state of the association, its pecuniary position, the progress of the school, and other matters of importance. At the general meeting, held on the 4th December, 1853, Herr von Höpflingen-Bergendorf was elected president. The school opened for singing, and those for instruction on the violin and violoncello, on the 1st May, Mad. La Roche being appointed singing-mistress for the young ladies, and Herr Smaciarzynski for the boys and men. Herren Braun and Wollmann are entrusted with instruction on the violin and violoncello.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The greatest, and, in fact, almost the only novelty at the Opera House, since I last wrote, has been the début of Fräulein Krall from the Hoftheater in Vienna. She has a soft and expressive voice, but it is not quite strong enough for our Opera House. On Sunday, Herr Theodore Formes played Masaniello in Auber's Die Stumme von Portici, and Fräulein Taglioni, Fenella.—In the way of concerts we have had, this week, Löwe's oratorio of the Siebenschläfer, performed by Wendel's Gesangverein, for some charitable purpose.—The new Berlin Liedertafel gave a matinée in the Mäderscher Saal, where Herr W. Pfeiffer also gave a concert, and played scarcely anything save his own compositions. I did not stay till the end.—The King of Prussia has presented the large gold medal of the Arts and Sciences to the young violinist Herr Henry Wieniawski, in return for the dedication of a violin concerto, so favourably received by the Berlin public. Herr H. Dam's oratorio, Die Sündfluth, is announced in the concert-room of the Royal Opera House, on the 10th. It was given for the first time in Berlin in the year 1849, and, since that period, has not been performed. We are also promised Bach's Passion-Musik of St. Matthew by the members of the Singakademie.—Jähn's Gesangverein held its two hundredth meeting on the 23rd of April. Since the 4th of November, 1845, the members of this association have sung every other Sunday, and in that period performed above one hundred and thirty different choruses, with and without solos, and also a great number of solo Gesangstücke.—During Easter week, the small Kapelle of the Royal Domchor, under the direction of Herr Neithardt, performed, in the Royal Chapel of Charlottenburg, a psalm by Dupuis, as it is played in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Princess of Prussia had obtained a score from Prince Albert, in his Royal Highness's own hand.

DORTRECHT.—Madlle. Rosalie Spohr, the harpist, has just finished her tour in Holland, where, in all the principal towns, she has obtained great success, by her spirited and elegant execution of some of the best works of Parish Alvars and Charles Oberthür. Madlle. Spohr is a niece of Dr. Louis Spohr, and leaves this country to return to her native town, Brunswick, and from thence to go to Brussels and London.

FERRARA.—Letters from Ferrara state that Signor Marchesi has been performing at the Opera, after having been some time in Florence. He has been singing in Ernani, Donizetti's Betly, and other pieces. Miss Cellini, an English young lady, a pupil of Madame Marchesi-Graumann, recently made her début, as a concert singer, at Ferrara.

STETTIN.—Herr Tichatscheck has appeared in Die Jüdin, Robert der Teufel, Tannhäuser, and Maurer und Schlosser. The opera of Die Grossfürstin has been favourably received.

MAYENCE.—Das Thal von Andorra (Le Val d'Andorre) has been given here for the first time.

DANZIG.—Dr. Spohr's Faust has been revived for the benefit of Herr Kaufhold.

STUTTGART.—In the last Abonnements-Concert, Herr J. Albert's symphony in C minor was very well performed. A short time since the Stuttgarter Liederkranz gave Mendelssohn's Antigone and Œdipus in Colonos. Mad. Marlow has appeared as the Queen in the Huguenots. Mad. von Marra has also been successful.

MUNICH.—At the last quartet soirée of Herren Monter and Lauterbach, Herr Speidel, the pianist, played Mendelssohn's quartet in B minor. This was the first time it had been heard in Munich since Mendelssohn himself played it in 1832.—A grand musical festival will take place at Ulm, under the direction of Herr Speidel, to inaugurate the new monster organ with 100 registers in the Cathedral. Among other works, Handel's oratorio of Sampson will be performed.

BREMEN.—Mdlle. Milanollo, the violinist, has appeared here with her accustomed success.

CASSEL.—Dr. Spohr's Faust has been revived, with the recitatives composed for the Royal Italian Opera in London.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Herr Wagner's Lohengrin has been produced, under the direction of Herr Hoffmann.

HANOVER.—On Easter Monday, Herr Lachner's Catharina Cornaro was produced at the theatre, in honour of his Majesty's birthday. It is to be followed by Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor. Mesdemoiselles Ney and Johanna Wagner will shortly appear for a limited number of nights.

KÖTHEN.—At the fifth subscription concert there was a performance in honour of Friedrich Schneider. The proceeds were handed over to his family.

HAMBURGH.—M. L. Lacombe has given three pianoforte concerts. Mdlle. Milanollo has taken with her a talented boy, H. Schradick, eight years old, to place at her own expense in the Brussel's Conservatory.

PESTH.—Herr Steger, the tenor, from Vienna, has been very successful as Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor.

ERRATUM.—In the notice of Mr. WALTER MACFARREN'S first chamber concert, for "the adagio, if anything, is too beautiful," read "too tuneful."

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 6TH, 1854.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—I composed the following letter with the intention of forwarding it to one of the great morning papers, but, on reflection, I came to the conclusion that there would be no chance of its being inserted. If it be not too lengthy for your columns, and you find it worth your notice, I shall feel flattered by your publishing it in your next number; if not, pray leave it for me at the office, and I shall try its fate elsewhere.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, M.

P.S.—I enclose my card.

To the Editor of———

SIR,—Though but a humble member of the musical profession, I trust that you will pardon a minute's intrusion on your time, the —— being for all the world, not for particular classes, and musicians forming a very considerable item in the population of this country. The French have several papers exclusively musical in Paris alone, and all the great papers have a feuilleton weekly on musical matters, and yet the French are not a more musical people than the English, who have only one musical journal for all the empire, and whose great organs of public opinion have, till recently, bestowed but small attention on subjects of musical interest. The British musician has no advocate in the British press, and yet he forms a part of the community, pays his taxes, direct and indirect, and helps the general civilization of society by the popularization of a beautiful and humanizing art. Why should music be destitute of that which is so necessary to the other arts and sciences—a literature? Why should the drama find a hundred tongues to speak, a hundred pens to write its praises, while music has not one? Is the study of music one which requires, in a smaller ratio, the application of intellect and thought? On the contrary, to be a great musician, demands the most prodigal gifts that Heaven can bestow. While there is no art more lovely, there is no science more divine and true. Where music is cultivated with most success is in the country of philosophy and poetry—in Germany. Can this be denied? In Germany there is a musical paper in every little town, and the musician, no less than the politician and the man of letters, can find amusement and instruction over his breakfast table on the subject nearest to his heart—dearest to his sympathies—on the subject which lends his ideas of the beautiful a form and an expression. But here, in this mighty country, where one newspaper makes as much as twelve of the German prints, the poor musician may look long in vain over a table piled with journals for one about that art which is the mistress of his soul. It is true there are writers whose province it is to notice musical performances, and who notice them as they occur—but how? Alas! for the most part, they seldom utter a word, they seldom convey an idea that finds a response in the mind of the musician, who throws down his paper in sorrow, sick at heart to find his art neglected or misunderstood by that mighty press, which sways the destinies of the mightiest empire that the history of the world can mention, and which, were the rights of classes properly considered, should represent and advocate the interests of musicians with as much fervour and perseverance as that of any other part of the great commonwealth.

Digitized by Google

Sir, are we not human? Is it because we play a fiddle, or compose an opera, honestly to earn our daily bread, and contribute our mite to the common weal—is it for this that we are to be sifted out of the great body of society, as chaff from a load of wheat? We are, nevertheless, a strong and populous class—perhaps a twelfth of the whole community. Suppose we were to come to the determination to live apart from the rest of society, could society do without us? I much query if it could—nay, I will go further, I am certain it could not. What argument is there, then, for throwing us aside like so much useless lumber?

Another reason is this. The great popular source of recreation is Music. Can you then, Sir, be blind to the enormous importance that attaches to its influence being rightly exercised? Is not mental food as well worth considering as bodily? All the world drinks water; it is necessary, then, that water shall be good; and it is beneath no statesman to busy himself about its quality, lest the public be poisoned by deleterious liquid. All the world hears music, but the mere sensation of hearing is not the sum of its influence. The memory retains it—the taste is formed by what the memory cherishes; is it not, then, imperative that the taste shall be guided by wise instructors, that it be not vulgar and debasing? The object of music is not to gratify sensually, but to delight intellectually, and thereby to elevate the morality and purify the mind of the hearer. I could write volumes, but as I have some hope you will publish my letter, I will not intrude unwarrantably on your space. It is merely my wish to impress upon you the fact that a very large class of the British community is almost overlooked by the government, whose object should be to legislate for the interests of all classes.

Ere concluding, I must beg you to believe that I have watched with delight the recent evidences of altered feeling towards us. The great journals seem at last to be impressed with a notion that we are somebody and our art of some consequence. Men of enthusiasm, if not of acquirement and taste, are now employed in most of them, and a new musical work of importance is no longer dismissed in a short paragraph as an accident, or an anecdote of a toad in a stone. Still there is much to be effected; and you, Sir, whose musical criticisms are not only written with ability and candour, but are scholarlike and sensible, treating the matter with a full comprehension of its meaning, might set the example, and win the gratitude of thousands of your readers.

Offering many apologies for this intrusion, I beg leave, Sir, to subscribe myself with respect, your servant and admirer.

An English Musician.

MDLLE. SOPHIE CRUVELLI.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Sir,—You criticise Mdlle. Cruvelli for omitting the air, "Quando guerrier," from the first act of the opera of Otello. Mdlle. Cruvelli was quite justified; there is no such air, and, indeed, no aria d'entrata in Rossini's score.—I am, &c.,

A Subscriber to the Opera.

London, May 4, 1854.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Otello was repeated for the second time on Saturday, and was altogether a more complete and finished performance than that of Thursday. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli, who was somewhat careful and reserved on the first night, gave way to her every impulse on Saturday, and a more exquisite representation of Desdemona was never witnessed. Even the last act, in which she was so touching and beautiful on Thursday, showed improvement; and, indeed, a greater treat to the lovers of passionate singing and legitimate acting has rarely been afforded to the habitués of the Royal Italian Opera. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli did not introduce the aria d'intrata, sung by Mad. Grisi and others, for the best of all possible reasons as it now appears, viz., because it does not belong to the opera. True, but little opportunity is afforded the singer in the first act for display, and the omission of an attractive opening song may be detrimental to first impressions, which, with most audiences, go a great way. Mdlle. Cruvelli, nevertheless, was justified in omitting, or, rather, in not interpolating the air; and, after all, the gradual interest which is won for Desdemona, according to Rossini's treatment of the character, is more beautiful and poetic, and, we may add, Shaksperian. To make a grand heroine of the "gentle Desdemona" is opposed to all received notions of that sweetest of female creations.

Signor Tamberlik was as great as ever in Otello, and Signor Ronconi equally fine in Iago. The grand duet in Act II. again produced a furore, was again encored, and the two singers again recalled at the end. To conclude, the performance created a real enthusiasm, and Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli was recalled at the end of the first two acts, and a third time with Sig. Tamberlik, at the termination of the opera, and was received with unanimous and genuine applause. The theatre was full.

On Tuesday the Elisir d'Amore was repeated; with selections from the favourite ballet, Le Diable à Quatre, for the first time this season. Mad. Bosio sang to perfection. Mdlle. Queniaux made a very pretty and interesting Mazurka, and danced with wonderful neatness and dexterity. She was well supported by Mdlles. Battalini, Brussi, Santi, and Emma, and M. Desplaces; and the revival of even a part of one of Carlotta Grisi's most admired ballets gave general satisfaction.

On Thursday night, Fidelio was revived for the third appearance of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli. The house was crowded to the ceiling. The Queen and Prince Albert were present; and the performance was, in every respect, the most gratifying and successful of the season.

If, a few years ago, any one had proposed Beethoven's Fidelio for representation at the Italian Opera, he would have been set down as an enthusiast or a madman; the attempt having been made, however, and the result brilliantly successful, is a guarantee of the vast strides that music has been making in the right direction. Much of this may be traced to Mendelssohn and the Sacred Harmonic Society, to Mr. Costa and the Philharmonic—to Meyerbeer, Auber, and the Royal Italian Opera—to M. Jullien, who has forced the masses to listen attentively to symphonies as well as polkas—to the Musical Union, the Quartet Association, and other societies—and much to the increasing spread of music as a popular medium of recreation, and to the progressing influence of the highest models, which may be referred to a variety of causes, independent of the above, but unnecessary to specify here. The triumph of a work like Fidelio

Digitized by Google

at an Italian Opera is a matter for congratulation, a sign of the times which may be accepted as a prognostication of further and continuous advance. Henceforth the idea of reducing dramatic music to the insignificant proportions of a cavatina with roulades, a buffo air without roulades, and a quantity of remplissage, which may be listened to or unheard with the same indifference, is put out of the pale of likelihood. Italian composers must learn to write music, and good music, or throw aside their pens.

To achieve even tolerable success in a part like Leonora demands gifts, physical and mental, of no common kind. It taxes the utmost resources of the singer and actress, without an instant's intermission. Beethoven, as we have known, had no sympathy with singers, and paid little attention to the capacities of voices; hence the enormous difficulties presented in his vocal writing—difficulties moreover, which, when overcome, are not seldom caviare to the multitude, and leave the industrious and deserving artist without a just reward in the immediate acknowledgment and applause of the audience. But Beethoven must be regarded as an exception, not a rule. His genius, essentially dramatic, towered above conventionalities; and the ambitious singer, who aspires to the approbation of judges, would rather be raised up to Beethoven, by entering into the spirit of his works, than win the ad captandum admiration of the crowd, by pulling him down to an ordinary level. It is one thing to sing an Italian aria, another to execute one of the pieces in Fidelio; one thing to give the music of Beethoven in its integrity, another to alter it in such a manner as to bring it within the province of mediocrity. Mademoiselle Cruvelli well understands this, which in some measure accounts for her success in the most arduous part of the lyric drama. The few alterations she makes rather tend to increase than diminish the difficulties of the original. She has entered upon her task with faith and enthusiasm. Had she merely shown a common talent, nothing could have saved her. People would have derided her arrogance, rather than have sympathised with her fall; but, conscious of her own powers, she dared the ordeal, and has come out of it triumphantly. She has had the courage to appear before that public which, six years ago, was slow to perceive her merits, in a part depending solely upon truth for effect, offering scarcely a single opportunity for the display of mere vocal brilliancy, scarcely a point where facile execution, irrespective of dramatic propriety, would be likely to ensure the plaudits so flattering to the ears of an artist. To understand and enjoy Fidelio thoroughly, the attention must never wander; nothing must be unheeded, nothing indifferently heard, or much that is interesting and important loses its weight and significancy. To enter fully into the excellence of Mademoiselle Cruvelli's Leonora, it must be closely watched throughout. Leonora is almost always on the stage, and, when not on the stage, always in the confidence of the audience, who listen with her to the wicked machinations of Pizarro, sympathise with her in the wretched condition of Florestan. Not a scene, a dialogue, an air, scarcely a speech or recitative, which does not in some degree advance the progress of the action and approach a step towards the dramatic climax. The labour of sustaining such a part with anything like efficiency may easily be comprehended. How much greater to realise completely, as Mademoiselle Cruvelli has done, the whole meaning and intentions of the author and composer! Her first scene, before she has obtained the confidence of Rocco, before she has overheard the revelations of Pizarro, would alone show her to be an actress. The eagerness with which she listens to the gaoler, in the hopes of obtaining every interesting particular in reference to the prisoner whom she suspects to be her husband, is intense and beautiful. Her exhibition of horror, and subsequent burst of resolution when the treachery of Pizarro has been disclosed, is exceedingly fine, and her acting during the whole of the grave scene consummate. We have remarked few touches of natural instinct more exquisitely embodied than when, hearing the unconscious Florestan speak of "Leonora," she checks her almost irresistible desire to rush into the arms of her husband and reveal herself. We need scarcely call attention to the great points of the declaration to Pizarro and the drawing forth the pistol; these are self-evident; nor is it necessary to point to the ardour, the overwhelming affection with which she regards Florestan throughout the subsequent duet (one of the most absorbing pieces in the opera.) But when her task is accomplished and her husband saved, a more delicate exhibition of histrionic truth, one which might possibly escape all but the most attentive observer, is the seeming prostration, mental and bodily, which has seized upon Leonora, rendering her, amid the fulness of her happiness, almost an apathetic spectator of what passes around her. A point like this could only have suggested itself to rare intelligence; and this, with others which we cannot stop to mention, shows Mademoiselle Cruvelli to be an actress of the highest sensibility and refinement. About her singing we have little to add to what we have said in other notices. It is always appropriate, correct, and effective. Mademoiselle Cruvelli has the power of expressing joy and despair, hope and anxiety, hatred and love, fear and resolution, with equal felicity. She has voice and execution sufficient to master with ease all the trying difficulties of the most trying and difficult parts. The very few changes she makes—which we cannot applaud, since we have yet to be convinced that to alter Beethoven is to improve him—may easily be rejected with advantage. Mademoiselle Cruvelli's abilities are such that they are wholly unnecessary. She evinces throughout the opera too complete a forgetfulness of herself in her author to make it possible for us too believe she would wittingly interfere with his ideas for the sake of shining at his expense. Not the least beauty in Mademoiselle Cruvelli's Leonora is, that in the scenes where resolution soars the highest, as in those where fear and uncertainty perplex, the modesty of womanhood is never overstepped, while a sentiment of youth in the tones of the voice, in every look, movement, and gesture, imparts a peculiar and abiding charm to the whole impersonation. It is long, indeed, since we have felt more entirely satisfied with a dramatic and vocal performance from first to last. What is the capacity of Mademoiselle Cruvelli in operas of a different class from Fidelio we need not reiterate here; but if she has succeeded in pleasing the exclusive adherents of the Italian school as fully as she has the more strictly musical worshippers of Beethoven, the high position to which she rests entitled as a dramatic singer is placed beyond a doubt.

Mademoiselle Cruvelli's performance, on Thursday night, set all doubts at rest about the position she is entitled to occupy. It was an unquestionable exhibition of genius, from first to last. In the recitative and air, "A qual furor ti condurra," her singing was inimitable. The adagio (the address to Hope) was delivered with a fervour, to which the energetic action and the wonderfully expressive countenance of Mademoiselle Cruvelli gave double intensity. It was the religious exultation of a saint. Rachel's utterance of the sublime "Je crois," in Polyeucte, was not more striking and expressive. The allegro, overwhelming in its force and animation, stirred up the whole audience to enthusiasm, and this fine display of vocal and dramatic power was rewarded by a storm of plaudits, which showed how entirely it was felt and appreciated. Without going into further particulars, we may add, that in the rest of the opera, Mademoiselle Cruvelli reached the same high standard.

No praise can be too high for Sig. Tamberlik in the part of Florestan, who is talked about, but not seen, in the first act. Perhaps this may regarded as a defect in the libretto, which is otherwise faultless; but we cannot share the opinion. Sig. Tamberlik, in 1851, had first essayed the part of Florestan at the Royal Italian Opera, and succeeded immensely, although, from reasons sufficiently well known, Fidelio was given but twice. The withdrawal of the opera prevented him from continuing a performance, which the entire press acknowledged one of his greatest and most finished. An artist like Sig. Tamberlik was likely to have his powers newly stimulated by such an antagonist (or protagonist) as Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli. He sang, indeed, with more than usual force and splendour, and fairly divided the applause with Mdlle. Cruvelli. The enthusiastic duet between Florestan and Leonora was a prodigious display of vocalisation on the part of both, and brought down the curtain with the greatest effect. Sig. Tamberlik's acting was on a par with his singing—intense, powerful, and highly pathetic. He never achieved a more genuine success.

Sig. Susini fairly astonished us by the perfect manner in which he gave the difficult music of Rocco. He was not only satisfactory throughout, but highly effective. With Sig. Tagliafico, on the contrary, we were not astonished, although, perhaps, the part of Pizarro was never before more admirably represented. Mdlle. Marai made an excellent Marcellina, and sang the music to perfection. Altogether, Beethoven's Fidelio was never before represented in so complete a manner in this country. The prisoners' chorus excepted, which wanted force and precision, and was out of tune, the whole performance was magnificent from first to last. Mr. Costa, whose very clever and judicious recitatives were used, as in 1851, is entitled to more than usual credit for his exertions. Two of the overtures were played—the one in E, and the "grand" Leonora, which was introduced between the acts and encored unanimously. The same compliment was passed to the quartet in canon (Act I.) where Leonora first appears. The opera went off with great spirit. The recalls for Mdlle. Cruvelli were frequent, and the applause tumultous. She was summoned after the grand air, and with Sig. Tamberlik, after the two last acts—the curtain falling, as usual, between the duet, in the prison scene, and the finale.

Fidelio is to be repeated to-night.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The Sonnambula, brought out on Friday to introduce Mdlle. Agnes Bury in the part of Amina, has been repeated twice since with decided success. Signor Bettini is not, as some have supposed, the tenore robusto who appeared both at the Royal Italian Opera and Her Majesty's Theatre; nor, we believe, a relation. He is a tenor of a different stamp, rather leggiero than robusto—a singer of the sentimental class, employing the voce di testa very frequently. Signor Bettini has a voice of no power, but of rather agreeable quality, and sings tolerably well in the Italian style. His acting has no characteristic whatever. Upon Mdlle. Agnes Bury fell the entire weight of the opera, and to her exertions, vocal and dramatic, must be attributed all the success Bellini's most familiar opera achieved. Her singing, at times unequal and not always highly finished, was admirable in the famous "Ah! non giunge," the difficulties of which she seems to have mastered by assiduous practice. She executed it with great ease and brilliancy, and displayed a command of voice and resonance of tone which were not remarked in the commencement of her performance. The audience applauded vehemently, the rondo was unanimously encored, and Mdlle. Agnes Bury was twice recalled. No success could have been more frank and undisputed. Mdlle. Agnes Bury was even better received on Tuesday and last night, when La Sonnambula was repeated for the second and third time. She is a valuable acquisition to the company.

On Saturday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Der Freischütz was given, when the theatre, as at the previous performances, was crowded in every part. Lucrezia Borgia was represented for the last time on Monday. Fidelio is in rehearsal, and will, we learn, be produced on Monday or Tuesday next, with Mad. Caradori as Leonora, Mdlle. Sedlatzek as Marcellina, Herr Formes as Rocco, and Herr Reichart as Ferdinand.

The subscribers and the public have every reason to be satisfied with the enterprise and spirit of the new operatic management.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert, which was to have taken place on Wednesday the 26th ult., was postponed in consequence of that day having been set apart by government for one of "fast and humiliation." It came off on Monday night, however, when St. Martin's Hall was crowded in every part. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Overture, "Der Schauspiel-Director" | ... | Mozart. |
| Concerto, No. 1, Pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss | ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Music to Milton's "Paradise Lost" | ... | Wylde. |

PART II.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Symphony, No. 4 | ... | Beethoven. |
| Aria, "Gli angui d' Inferno," Miss L. Pyne | ... | Mozart. |
| Overture, "Tannhaüser" | ... | R. Wagner. |

The overture of Mozart is better known by its Italian name of Il Direttôre della Commédia. The annotator to the New Philharmonic prospectus is wrong in stating that, except at Herr Jansa's concert last year, it was never performed in England, since for many years it was as constant an interlude at the theatres as any of the minuets in the symphonies of Pleyel, Romberg, or Haydn. Der Schauspiel-Director, composed in the year 1786, is described by Mozart in his own catalogue as "a comedy with music, consisting of an overture, two arias, a terzett, and vaudeville." It was commanded by the Emperor of Austria for a fête at his palace of Schönbrunn, and was written expressly for the three singers then most celebrated at Vienna, namely, Madame Lange, Mdlle. Cavaglieri, and Herr Adamberger. The two soprani are represented under the names of Herz and Silberklang, and the piece is founded entirely on a supposed contest between them. They were the two first female vocalists in Europe at that time, each excelling in a particular style, to the nature of which the names given them by the composer may, probably, afford some clue. The merits of both, however, are made so prominent in the music, that the question as to which really was the most talented was left as far from solution as before. Each had her andante and allegro; each beautiful melodies, in a different character; all the refinements and difficulties of vocalisation were measured out to both; yet only in one place, where the two singers were striving to show the compass and flexibility of their voices in scales and roulades, did "Herz" give out an F in alt to the D of her rival, carrying off, in this respect at least, the victory.

Although the simplest of all the overtures of Mozart, the Schauspiel-Director is so spirited, and instrumented with such clearness, that it must always please; and it did please on Monday night, when it was capitally played under the direction of Herr Lindpaintner.

Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss has returned from her travels in the Vaterland, playing with more feeling and spirit than ever, and, let us add, with increased strength and brilliancy of execution. Nothing could have been more thoroughly satisfactory than her performance of Mendelssohn's impetuous and enthusiastic concerto in G minor, which, as usual, she played without book. Her success was as decided as it was richly merited, and after retiring from the orchestra at the end of her performance, she was called back unanimously to be newly applauded.

A second hearing of Dr. Wylde's music to Paradise Lost is decidedly in its favour. A work so elaborate, and written on so large a scale, could hardly be appreciated after a single performance; and, indeed, we are inclined to think, like all compositions of pretension, it will take some time before it is thoroughly understood. The poem itself requires many readings before its powers and beauties are made evident. How then could its illustration in music—if written in anything like a spirit akin to the poetry—be, like a simple tune or plain movement, brought within the compass of the understanding at a hearing? Whatever may be thought of Dr. Wylde's powers of adapting the grandeur and majesty of Paradise Lost to music, no one who heard his work on Monday can deny that he has thoroughly felt the subject and conscientiously treated it to the very best of his ability. The various speeches and descriptions are expressed in grave and solemn recitatives, and the characters represented with no ordinary individuality and force. The overture, by its impetuous and fiery character, is constituted to define, far as musical sounds can define, the angelic warfare. The first chorus, "Sing, heavenly Muse," is simple and impressive, and opens the cantata with dignity. The duet between Satan (Herr Formes) and Beelzebub (Sig. Belletti) is vigorous and striking, though perhaps too long. It was declaimed with great power and dramatic emphasis by Herr Formes and Sig. Belletti. The chorus in B flat minor, "Farewell, happy Fields," is exceedingly pathetic and touching, and is full of capital musical points. It was applauded unanimously, and narrowly escaped an encore. Still better is the chorus in D minor, "They heard, and were abashed," in which Dr. Wylde appears to have put forth all his musical strength and knowledge. The soprano solo, "For Spirits when they please," is, however, the morceau most likely to commend the work to popular appreciation. The melody is lovely and exceedingly attractive and catching, without ever degenerating into common-place. The instrumentation is new and striking, and the effect of the violins obbligato extremely delicate and graceful. Miss Louisa Pyne sang the air most charmingly, and the audience encored it amidst the loudest applause. The least characteristic piece in the whole work is, in our opinion, the solo of Satan (Herr Formes), "Oh, Myriads of immortal Spirits," which is neither grave nor dignified in the melody, while the accompaniments are too much in the style of Rossini. The consultation in Pandemonium is graphic and well considered. The quintet, "There is a Place," is arranged with great cleverness for the voices, and is, indeed, one of the most musicianlike things in the cantata. As much may be said of the final chorus, "Oh, Shame to Men," which brings the composition to a close, in a manner at once satisfactory and imposing.

Digitized by Google

The vocalists, Sig. Belletti, Sig. Ciabatta, Herr Formes, Mr. Weiss (basses), Mr. Herberte (tenor), and Miss Louisa Pyne (soprano), all sang admirably, and did full justice to Dr. Wylde's music. The band and chorus also were excellent, and were evidently pleased with their task. Dr. Wylde, who conducted, was loudly cheered at the conclusion, and recalled to the orchestra.

The B flat symphony of Beethoven, perhaps, of all the nine, the most spontaneous, the Thalia among the symphonies, was played as such things are usually played by the band of the New Philharmonic Society. The adagio in E flat, a movement of divine and unmeasured loveliness, was encored; we should have preferred it, nevertheless, slower, and the scherzo quicker. The last movement, the uncurbed, incessant, and irresistible finale was admirably executed. There was all the necessary spirit, and at the same time a strict attention to the ma non troppo, with which Beethoven has qualified his allegro. Dr. Wylde conducted the symphony. The great song of Astriffiamente, the Queen of Night, one of the finest pieces in the Flauto Magico, does not lie within the means of Miss L. Pyne. No singer should attempt this air in public, unless, like Mad. Anna Zerr, she can be certain of taking the F's in alt, wherever they occur, with ease and certainty. This our talented and most brilliant English vocalist cannot do, as was shown on Monday night. She would, therefore, do wisely in future to leave the Queen of Night to others; her own répertoire is quite extensive and interesting enough to enable her to dispense with a piece which is rather antagonistic than accommodating to her resources. She was applauded of course; such talent as Miss L. Pyne's demands respect, even when it is not exactly well applied. After all the talk that has been, at home and abroad, about Herr Richard Wagner's overture to Tannhaüser, we certainly were led to expect something better than we heard. It is enormously difficult to play, and taxed the powers of the magnificent band, under Herr Lindpaintner's direction, to the utmost. With regard to the music, it is such queer stuff, that criticism would be thrown away upon it. We never listened to an overture at once so loud and empty. And Richard Wagner, according to Franz Liszt, is entrusted with no less important a mission than the regeneration of the musical art.

---

THEIR Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Princess Mary of Cambridge, have signified their gracious intention of being present at Signor Marras' Concert on the 10th inst.

HERR ERNST.—Herr Ernst has returned to town from his engagements in Dublin and Manchester. He will play at the next meeting of the Musical Union, Mr. Ella, the Director, having wisely secured his services for two more concerts.

M. EMILE PRUDENT, the brilliant French pianist, has once more arrived in London, where he intends to spend the season. He has been giving concerts with great success, during the whole of the winter, in the chief towns and cities in the provinces of France.

THE CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY.—At the meeting of the Executive Committee, on the 2nd instant, at the office, 33, Norfolk Street, on the motion of Viscount Ranelagh, the chairman, seconded by Colonel Brownlow Knox, M.P., vice-chairman, Viscount Ingestre was unanimously elected a member of the Board of Directors.

---

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

MONDAY.—Philharmonic Society, Grand Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Cologne Choral Union, Grand Concert. Half-past three.——Mr. Travers's National Entertainment, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, Matiné Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Quarter-past three.——Signor Veroni's Grand Concert, Hanover Square.

WEDNESDAY.—New Philharmonic Society, Concert, St. Martin's Hall. ——Cologne Choral Union's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past three.——Miss G. Archer's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Signor Puzzi, Concert, 27, Queen Ann-street. Half-past eight.

THURSDAY.—Mr. Aguilar's Grand Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past two.

FRIDAY.—Sacred Harmonic Society, Beethoven's Mass in D, Exeter Hall. Half-past seven.——Mr. W. Macfarren's Second Chamber Concert, 27, Queen Anne-street.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past three.

SATURDAY.—Orchestral Union, Grand Concert, Hanover Square.

---

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA,

DRURY LANE.

LAST NIGHTS of "NORMA," "DER FREISCHUTZ," and "LA SONNAMBULA," and first nights of "FIDELIO." On Monday (last time), "NORMA;" Norma, Madame Caradori. On Tuesday (last time), Weber's DER FREISCHUTZ; Caspar, Herr Formes; Agatha, Madame Caradori. On Wednesday and Friday (last times), "LA SONNAMBULA;" Amina, Madlle. Agnes Bury. On Thursday and Saturday (first times), Beethoven's FIDELIO; Leonora, Mad. Caradori; and Rocco, Herr Formes. To conclude, every evening, with A BALLET DIVERTISSEMENT. Conductors—Herr Lindpaintner and Herr Anschuez. Prices—Gallery, 1s.; Pit, 2s.; Upper Boxes, 3s.; First Circle, 4s.; Dress Circle, 5s.; Stalls, 7s.; Private Boxes, 21s., 42s., 63s., and 84s. Each may be had at the Box-Office, and Private Boxes and Stalls of Messrs. Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street, corner of Brook-street.

Digitized by Google

NELSON—THE LIFE OF A SAILOR. Illustrated by Dibdin's Songs. Mr. TRAVERS'S NATIONAL ENTERTAINMENT, Monday, May 8th, Eight o'clock, Music Hall, Store-street. Last night but one, previous to his departure for the Provinces. Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. Private Boxes, Leader and Cock's, 63, New Bond-street. Due notice will be given of Mr. Travers's return to town, when the above Entertainment will be resumed.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Fifth Concert, under the immediate patronage of Her Majesty, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on Monday, May 8th, 1854, at Eight o'clock precisely. Part I.—Sinfonia, Letter T, Haydn; Scena, "Soft airs around me play" (Euryanthe), Mr. Sims Reeves, Weber; Concerto in G minor, Pianoforte, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Moscheles; Scena, "Non paventare" (Il Flauto Magico), Miss Louisa Pyne, Mozart; Overture, "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn. Part II.—Sinfonia in A, No. 7. Beethoven; Duetto, "Bella Ninfa" (Jessonda), Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Sims Reeves, Spohr; Overture, "Der Vampyr," Marschner. Conductor, Mr. Lucas. The Sixth Concert will be on the 22nd of May.

COLOGNE CHORAL UNION.—Monday next. DER KOLNER MANNER GESANG VEREIN.—Hanover-square Rooms.—Mr. Mitchell respectfully announces that the above distinguished Society will give a SECOND SERIES of SIX MORNING CONCERTS, at the Hanover-square Rooms, which are fixed to take place on the following days:—Monday Morning next, May 8; Wednesday, May 10; Friday, May 12; Monday, May 15; Wednesday, May 17; and Friday, May 19. Director, Herr Franz Weber. The Répertoire of the Society now comprises more than One Hundred and Twenty Morceaux; many of them entirely new. The Concerts will be arranged as last year—commencing at half-past three, and terminating about five o'clock. The only EVENING CONCERTS which can be given during the short engagement of this distinguished Society, will take place on Saturday Evening, May 13, and Saturday Evening, May 20; commencing at half-past eight o'clock. Tickets of admission—reserved seats, for the six concerts, two guineas; ditto, single tickets, 10s. 6d.; admission to the body of the room, 5s.; which may be had at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—Mdlle. CLAUSS, ERNST, VAN GELDER, GOFFRIE, and HILL, on Tuesday, May 9, will perform Quartets, No. 4, C minor, Beethoven, and No. 5, E flat, Op. 44, Mendelssohn. Sonata, pianoforte, D minor, Op. 29, (Moscheles Ed.) Beethoven. Solos by Chopin and Mdlle. Clauss. Single Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Cramer and Co., Regent Street; Ollivier and Chappell, Bond Street. Members can pay at Willis's Rooms for Visitors. Doors open at Three o'clock. J. Ella, Director.

SIGNOR VERONI, primo baritone, from La Scala, and other principal theatres in Italy, begs to announce to the nobility, gentry, and his friends, that his FIRST MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on Tuesday, May the 9th, at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on which occasion he will make his first appearance in England. Signor Veroni will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Vocalists—Mesdames Clara Novello and Caradori (of the Royal Opera, Drury Lane); Mr. Sims Reeves, Sig. Mariani (primo tenore, from the Imperial Opera, Verona), Sig. Belletti, and Herr Formes. Instrumentalists—Miss Arabella Goddard (Pianoforte), Herr Ernst (Violin), and Sig. Briccialdi (Flute). Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Sig. Pilotti. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; Reserved Seats (numbered), One Guinea. To be had of Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., and Jullien, Regent-street; T. Chappell, Campbell and Ransford, New Bond-street; Mitchell; Ebers, Old Bond-street; Leader and Cock, New Bond-street. The programme will be published forthwith.

MISS GUSELDA ARCHER (Pupil of Mr. Aspull), has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, the 10th of May, 1854. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Katharine Smith, Miss Marion Adam, and Miss Binckes; Mr. Frank Bodda, and Herr R. de Becker; the Misses Brougham. Harp—Mr. Chatterton. Pianoforte—Miss Guselda Archer. Conductor, Mr. Aspull. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; Single tickets, 7s., and family tickets to admit four, one guinea. To be had at the Music Warehouses, and of Miss Archer, 451, Oxford-street.

DUDLEY GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY. By the kind permission of the Right Honble. Lord Ward. Signor MARRAS has the honour to announce that his GRANDE MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on Wednesday, May 10th, at Three o'clock. The programme will be confided to Artistes of eminence, and will contain a selection from the most successful New Operas and Pezzi da Camera, also some choice pieces from "Pergolesi," "Stabat Mater," Rossini's last composition, the celebrated Terzetto, "Tantum ergo," and Palestrina's Hymn, "Alla Trinità Beata," Verdi's Quartetto from "Rigoletto," Bellini's Quintetts of "Beatrice di Tenda," &c., &c. Signor Marras will also sing his "Canti d'Amore," and "Canti Nazionali d'Italia." Ticket, One Guinea. To be had of Signor Marras, 2, Kensington Gore, Hyde Park, and at Messrs. Leader and Cock's, 63, New Bond Street.

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday morning, May 11th. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Mdlle. Marie Sedlatzek (from Vienna), Miss Messent, Herr Reichart, and Herr Formes; Violin, Herr Ernst; Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar; Accompanyist, Mr. Brinley Richards. The London Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Frank Mori, will perform, among other pieces, Mr. Aguilar's Concert Overture, "Alpheus," also his new Symphony, and the Overture to his MS. Opera. Tickets, 7s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; to be had at all the principal Music Publishers, and of Mr. Aguilar, 68, Upper Norton-street, Portland Road.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S SECOND CHAMBER CONCERT will take place on Friday Evening next, May 12, at 27, Queen Anne-street, commencing at Half-past Eight o'Clock, when he will perform Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 53, Mendelssohn's Prelude in E minor, Sterndale Bennett's Impromptu in E, and Allegro Grazioso and Solos of his own; also, with Mr. W. H. Holmes, a new Duo for the Pianoforte, and, with Mr. Lucas, a Violoncello Sonata, of his own composition. Vocalists—Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, &c. Single ticket, 10s. 6d.; double ticket, 15s.; to be had of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street; and Mr. Walter Macfarren, 58, Albert-street, Regent's-park.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall. Conductor, Mr. COSTA. On Friday next, May 12, will be repeated BEETHOVEN'S GRAND SERVICE in D. Principal vocalists: Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes; with orchestra of nearly seven hundred performers. Tickets 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each; or subscriptions, one, two, or three guineas per annum, at the Society's office, No. 6, in Exeter Hall. The performance will be preceded by Beethoven's Grand Overture in C., Op. 124.—Mr. Macfarren's Analysis (40 pages quarto), with Musical Illustrations, on sale, price 6d., or sent by post on receipt of twelve postage stamps.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL, May 15th.—ROSSINI'S "STABAT MATER" (for sketch of which see MUSICAL WORLD of April 22nd) and GEORGE LAKE'S successful Oratorio DANIEL. Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Champion, Weiss, Formes. Apply early for Tickets, 2s., 3s., and 5s., at the Hall, at Addison's, 210, Regent-street, or to Mr. G. Lake, Addington Place, Camberwell.

THE MISSES COLE and Mr. ALFRED GILBERT beg to announce their SECOND PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL CHAMBER MUSIC, at the Willis's Rooms, on Monday, May 15, at Half-past Eight o'clock. Triple Ticket, One Guinea; Non-subscriber's Ticket, 10s. 6d.; may be obtained of Mr. Alfred Gilbert, 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

SIGNOR AND MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that their ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Friday evening, May 19th. Vocalists: Madame Mortier La Fontaine, Miss Augusta Thomson, and Madame Ferrari; Messrs. Herberte, H. C. Regaldi, Wallworth, and Signor Ferrari. Instrumentalists: Piano, Mrs. F. B. Jewson and Mr. George Russell; Concertino, Signor Giulio Regondi; Harp, Mr. John Thomas; Violoncello, M. Paque and Mr. Schroeder; Violin, M. Folkes. Accompanyists: Messrs. Lindsay Sloper and G. Russell. Tickets, 7s., to be had of the principal music-sellers. Reserved Seats 10s. 6d., to be had only of Signor and Madame Ferrari, 69, Upper Norton Street, Portland Place.

Digitized by Google

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—On Wednesday, May 17, will be performed LESLIE'S NEW ORATORIO—IMMANUEL, under the direction of Mr. John Hullah. Principal vocalists—Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Amy Dolby, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Weiss. Tickets, 1s.; galleries, 2s. 6d.; stalls, 5s. Doors open at a quarter before Eight; performance will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her First Matinée of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, on Saturday, May 20, to commence at Three, when will be performed Beethoven's Trio in C minor, Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello; Mozart's Sonata in A, Pianoforte and Violin; a Violoncello Solo of Piatti, a Violin Solo of Sainton, and Pianoforte Solos of Mendelssohn, Weber, Thalberg, &c. Mrs. John Macfarren will be assisted by M. Sainton, Signor Piatti, Mrs. Endersohn, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Frank Mori. The Second Matinée will take place on Wednesday, June 14, when Herr Ernst, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, and other eminent Artists will appear. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, Reserved Seat, 15s.; Ticket, for either Matinée, 7s.; Reserved Seat, 10s. 6d.; to be had at Ebers's Library, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

MISS BINCKES has the honour to announce that her Annual Series of THREE SOIREES MUSICALES will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman Street, Oxford Street, on Friday, May 26; Friday, June 16; and Wednesday, July 5. To commence at Eight. Tickets to be had of Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street.

MR. KIALLMARK begs to announce that his GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday morning, May 29th, to commence at half-past two o'clock. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; Reserved Seats, 15s., to be had of the principal Music Sellers, and Mr. Kiallmark, 32A, Fitzroy-square.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge.

Mr. BENEDICT'S ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Friday, June 23, 1854, when the most eminent available Vocal and Instrumental talent will be engaged to deserve the distinguished patronage it has enjoyed for so many years. Full particulars will be duly announced. Reserved Seats, One Guinea each, may be had at the principal Music Sellers and Librarians; and of Mr. Benedict, 2, Manchester Square.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

DUBLIN PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY—Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.—The piece played by this distinguished pianiste and so much admired at the Philharmonic concert, Dublin, on Wednesday last, was Stephen Heller's Improvisata, "On Songs bright Pinions." It is published, price 4s., only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street, London.

SIGNOR PERGETTI begs to announce that he has removed to No. 8, Upper Berkeley-street (West), Connaught-square.

LA HARMONIUM.—MDME. DREYFUS has arrived in town, and will attend concerts or private parties to perform on the Harmonium. Also to give lessons on this now popular instrument. Terms and particulars at Chappell's, 50, New Bond-street.

MR. FRANK BODDA begs to inform his Friends and Pupils he has removed to No. 2, Nottingham-terrace, York Gate, Regent's-park.

WANTED.—An experienced Shopman, of good address and references, in a Music Warehouse. Salary £90. Letters, pre-paid, addressed to F. M., to be sent to Wertheim and Mackintosh, Paternoster-row.

FOR SALE.—A NEW PICCOLO PIANOFORTE, by a first-rate London maker, 6¾ octaves, in rosewood, to be sold on very advantageous terms. It may be seen at Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire, including all their recent improvements. Pianofortes possessing novelty of construction, by which is obtained greater and more equalized power of tone, superiority of touch, and increased durability, in every variety for sale or hire, with liberal allowance to purchasers. Drawings and price list per post, George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

HOPKINSON'S PIANOFORTES.—These Pianofortes received the award of the Great Exhibition Prize Medal in 1851. They are also pronounced by the most eminent Pianists of the age, (S. Thalberg, J. Benedict, E. Szekely, Madame Dulcken, and others,) "to be unsurpassed in tone and touch by those of any other maker." May be had at the principal music-sellers in this country, and at the ware-rooms, 18, Soho-square, London. Prices, from 25 to 180 guineas each. N.B.—The Manufactory, Diana-place, near Regent's-park; Branch-establishment, 6, Commercial-street, Leeds.

MARION'S RESILIENT BODICE and CORSALETTO DI MEDICI. They combine firmness with elasticity, fit closely, fasten easily in front, retain the original symmetry of their adjustment, and are judiciously adapted to every varying condition of the female form. Ladies in health, convalescents, and invalids wear them, with equal satisfaction; and, having experienced the comforts and advantages they ensure, will not return to the ordinary Stays and their attendant evils. PATENTED IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND AUSTRIA. Enlarged Prospectus, with Illustrations, details of Prices from 14s.; children's, 8s.), explicit Directions for Self-measurement, &c., on receipt of Two Stamps for Postage. All Country Orders sent (without extra charge) carriage paid or post free. Mesdames Marion and Maitland, Patentees and Sole Manufacturers, 54, Connaught-terrace, Hyde-park, London.

"We think few who have seen it will be disposed to disagree with us when we assert that it is infinitely superior to anything of the kind yet introduced for the same purpose, and, in point of style and workmanship, it is alike unexceptionable."—Editorial notice in Le Follet, the leading Journal of Fashion.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed. J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

Digitized by Google

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC, BY ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| JUST PUBLISHED. | | |
| 1. Chanson à Boire ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. Farewell (transcription) ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 3. German Volkslied (transcribed) ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 4. Minerva, Grand Valse, Solo ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " " " Duet ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 5. Belisario, Grand Duet ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 6. Six Études ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| PUBLISHED IN 1853. | | |
| 1. Europa, Galop de Concert (Third Edition) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. Grand Marche Éroique, Solo ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " " " Orchestra ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 3. Consuelo, Mazurka ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 4. Valse Styrienne ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 5. Ethiopien, Caprice ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 6. Le Revoir, Romance ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |

"Among the many gallant composers who devote their ideas to the services of the ladies, Herr Gollmick stands foremost. His pre-eminence may be attributed to the forcible character of his compositions, which, although within the reach of average pianists, have attractions for musicians 'of a larger growth.' Although light, the pieces before us may be really termed 'good,' as that word is understood in musical dialect. For instance, in no modern 'musique di bravura' have we met with anything to compare to the 'Europa' for happy melody, brilliancy, and finish. There is a perfect unity and decided individuality about it, bearing evidence of true genius in the author. The 'Valse Styrienne' is remarkably graceful, with a pleasant touch of melancholy, characteristic of Styrian music. Equal praise must be awarded to the 'Marche Éroique,' a bold and spontaneous theme, followed by a delicious trio, belonging to that class of music of which Lindpaintner's 'Standard Bearer,' and Giuiglo Krieger's 'Leest' are famous specimens. Easily acquired, but not easily forgotten, are Herr Gollmick's compositions. Their melodies strike the fancy, while many passages are so beautifully wrought as to win instant and unqualified admiration."—Ladies' Newspaper, May 14, 1853.

"Herr Adolph Gollmick, a composer of considerable celebrity, and still more considerable talent, is a resident in London, highly esteemed in musical circles for his graceful style of pianism. The above quoted specimens of his compositions, the first we have seen, give us at once a favourable idea of his powers, and entitle him to the consideration of our musical readers. The characteristics of Herr Gollmick's writings are—fascinating melodies, an easy, brilliant, and graceful style of writing, offering a variety of effects, and not presenting any great difficulties. In no modern music have we met with such a happy and spontaneous idea as the theme of the 'Europa Galop.' It is of that pleasantly-exciting kind that one listens to over and over again without tiring. The 'Marche Éroique' is bold and vigorous, with a charming 'motivo' for its principal subject. It is rather less effective than the 'Europa,' and may be more adapted for the orchestra than the piano, notwithstanding which it will doubtless be played by all who admire really tuneful music. The 'Valse Styrienne' will in a very short time form part of every lady's 'répertoire' for the piano, or we are no judges of the taste of our fair countrywomen. The most bewitching valse is this 'Styrienne.' Indeed, if this 'morceau' were indorsed by Bellini's name, we should compliment the composer on his happy inspiration. The 'Ethiopian Caprice' is a fantasia in the modern style, on the well-known melody of 'Mary Blane.' Of this piece, which has no pretensions to originality, we can speak in terms of commendation, and can recommend it to players who have a tolerably good command of the piano, and can execute bravura passages without stumbling. Our readers will observe, from our remarks, that M. Gollmick's compositions are specially adapted for drawing-room performance, on account of the attractive melodies and finished passages which pervade them, unaccompanied by the awkward difficulties which tyros and uneducated musicians throw into their music."—Critic, April 15, 1853."

"It is not always the best way of enjoying a work to hear the author read it; but still it is an advantage to have the emphasis and expression conveyed by one so deeply versed in it. In music this is still more desirable, as the composer, if he be of an original kind, has much inspiration that mere notation cannot convey. We were glad, therefore, the other day, to have an opportunity of hearing a young German composer (Gollmick) play over several of his compositions; for he interpreted his own creations with a spirit and grace that gave full effect to them. Our musical readers will be acquainted with the galop de concert, entitled 'Europa,' which has had a wide reputation.

"We attended M. Gollmick's performance, because we were glad of an opportunity of extending a reputation already considerable, and because we believe he is gifted with a genuine invention and power. In all his productions there is much true melody, and he has the rare gift of invention. The manufacture of music, like the manufacture of Sheffield plate, can be carried on by artisans; but the artist alone invests with new life and interest the old sounds or forms. This young German seems to us gifted with a genuine capacity for composition, and in all his pieces there is freedom and fanciful expression.

"In a piece entitled 'Gage d'Amitié,' brilliancy and joyousness run through it, mingled with a tenderness that makes it worthy of its name. 'La Grande Marche Éroique,' has a great deal of professional grandeur in it. This is an orchestral composition, and therefore is not heard to full advantage in its mere arrangement for the pianoforte. Still there is fully perceptible the long resounding tread, and the lofty and elevating ideas that should predominate in such a piece. 'Le Revoir,' is a more tender piece, but without a taint of the mere sentimental, it being a characteristic of M. Gollmick that he is healthy and sound, and seems not to have any morbidity or affectation in him. In the 'Valse Styrienne' there is a great deal of character, and the movement sounds fresh and unhackniced.

"We have been solicitous to draw attention to M. Gollmick and his composition, because, whatever has the qualities of originality and pureness deserves it; and we believe that the musical composer is as much entitled to distinct notice, and is as much rewarded by discreet admiration, as the author who appears in letter-press."—Morning Advertiser, May 14, 1853.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

HAYDN'S TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, for four voices, with a separate Accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte (the English version adapted under the Latin text), arranged from the full score, and respectfully inscribed to Sir William Lawson, Bart., Broughton Hall, Catterick, by M. Conran, Organist, Manchester, Mus. Prof. Stonyhurst College. Price 5s. To be had at Mr. Novello's, London, and Messrs. Hime and Addison, Manchester.

THE TWO OPERA HOUSES.—Boosey and Sons have now published in their series the following Operas complete for Voice and Piano (with English and Foreign words), in handsomely bound 4to volumes, adapted for the theatre or drawing-room. 1. Norma, 10s. 6d. 2. Sonnambula, 12s. 6d. 3. Don Juan, 18s. 4. Figaro, 16s. 5. Ernani, 15s. 6. Il Barbiere, 16s. 7. Lucrezia Borgia, 16s. (all with Italian and English words).—8. Faust, 12s. 6d, 9. Fidelio, 15s. 10. Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d. 11. Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. (with German and English words). And 12. Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s., (with French and English words). To be had of Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street; Addison, 210, Regent Street; Lacy, 17, Wellington Street, North Strand; and Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside.

BOOSÈ'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosè's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and Operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

RIGOLETTO.—The following numerous arrangements of this very popular Opera are now ready. The public is warned against purchasing a pirated edition of the Airs published by an unprincipled individual.

| | | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| VOCAL—THE ENTIRE OPERA, 12s. | | | | |
| Caro Nome che il mio Core (sung by Mdlle. Bosio) | Sc. e Polac... | S. | 2 | 6 |
| Cortigiani, vill Razza Dannata ... ... | Aria ..... | B. | 3 | 0 |
| Figlia! mio Padre! a te dappresso ... | Duetto, S. & B. | | 4 | 0 |
| La Donna è Mobile (sung by Sig. Mario) | Canzone ... | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Parmi veder le Lagrime ... ... ... | Aria ..... | | 2 | 6 |
| Questa o quella per me pari sono (sung by Sig. Mario) | Ballata . | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Signor, nè Principe io lo vorrei! ... ... | Duetto, T. & S. | | 4 | 0 |
| Somiglia un Apollo quel Giovane ... | Sc. Terz. e Tempesta | | 5 | 0 |
| Tutte le Feste, al Tempio ... ... | Sc. e Duet ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Un dì, se ben rammentomi ... ... | Quartetto, S. C. T. & B. | | 4 | 0 |
| V' ho ingannato—colpevole fui ... ... | Sc. e Du fin ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Possente amor mi chiami ... ... ... | Melodia ... | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Zitti, zitti, moviamo ... ... ... | Terz.... | S. T. B. | 3 | 0 |
| ENGLISH VERSION. | | | | |
| Fair shines the Moon to-night (La Donna) ... ... ... | | | 2 | 0 |
| Ditto ... ... ... ... ... | as a Duet ... | | 2 | 6 |
| PIANOFORTE SOLO. | | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Voss ... | Grand Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | "La Donna," Barcarolle, Rigoletto ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Galop di Bravura, Rigoletto ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia (Quartett) ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| Oesten ... ... | Homage à Verdi (Fant.), Rigoletto ... | | 3 | 0 |
| H. Cramer ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Kuhe ... ... | Fantaisie, Brillante Rigoletto ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Mdme. ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| | The Minuet in Rigoletto ... ... | | 1 | 6 |
| Benedict ... ... | Grand Fantaisie ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| PIANOFORTE, FOUR HANDS. | | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | | 6 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | La Donna e Mobile ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC. | | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| FLUTE AND PIANO. | | | | |
| Clinton ... ... | 2 Mosaiques from Rigoletto, each ... | | 4 | 0 |
| ORCHESTRE. | | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Tinney ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| MILITARY BAND. | | | | |
| Boosé ... ... | Grand Selection Rigoletto (from 'Boosé's Journal') ... ... ... ... | | 15 | 0 |

 Various arrangements for Concertina and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Cornet and Piano, are nearly ready.

Published only by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

ROBERT COCKS' AND CO.'S NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

HAMILTON and the PIANOFORTE.—Just published, the 52nd edition of this extraordinarily popular Author's MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, newly revised and greatly enlarged by Carl Czerny, pupil of Beethoven; large music folio, 62 pages, price only 4s. Also, by the same, Hamilton's Modern Instructions for Singing; large music folio, 5s. May be ordered of all musicsellers and booksellers.

THE FAVOURITE BALLADS of the SEASON are John Parry's Sweet Vesper Bells of Ancona, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Have still some kind Word for me, 2s. Franz Abt's May Song, 2s.; Morning, 2s. 6d.; Evening, 2s.; and The Earth it loves Rain, 2s. Kücken's The Star, 2s.; Sweet May, 2s.; and his celebrated Song, The Tear, 2s. Pressel's A Youth from the Summit, 2s.; and When two fond Hearts, 2s. Cherry's The Dreams of Youth, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Like the Song of Birds, illustrated, 2s. 6d. Eliza Cook's Song of the Sailor Boy, music by Rodwell, 2s. Harper's Truth in Absence, 2s. Miss Fricker's Fading away, 2s. Barker's The Lime Blossoms, illustrated, 2s. 6d.; and Glover's (S.) Annie o' the Banks o' Dee, illustrated, 2s. 6d., &c.

BAXTER'S HARMONIA SACRA.—A Collection of Introductory Sentences, Chants, Responses, Sanctuses, &c., with Jubilate, Gloria in excelsis, and Nunc dimittis. 208 PSALM and HYMN TUNES (adapted to a selection of Psalms and Hymns compiled by the Rev. E. Davies and the Rev. J. A Baxter. M.A.) The whole carefully revised by Vincent Novello. The Organ Score, imperial 8vo., bound in cloth, lettered, 15s. The Vocal Score, 18mo., 5s. The separate Treble Part, 18mo., 1s. 6d. The separate Alto Part, 18mo., 1s. 6d. The separate Tenor Part, 18mo., 1s. 6d. The separate Bass Part, 18mo., 1s. 6d. J. A. Novello, London and New York.

Second Edition, revised by the Author.

DAVID, an ORATORIO, by the CHEVALIER SIGISMOND NEUKOMM, in Vocal Score, with Piano or Organ Accompaniment, bound in cloth, price 24s.

 For this Edition the Author has arranged the Hymn, "O Lord, thy guardian care we own," for 8 instead of 16 voices. A New Edition, of the Chorus Parts, folio size, is now ready:—Soprano, 1s. 6d.; Alto, in the Treble cleff, 1s. 6d.; Tenor, in the Treble cleff, 1s. 4½d.; Bass, 1s. 4½d. Violino Primo, Violino Secondo, Viola, Violoncello e Basse, 9s. 9d., 9s., 7s. 9d., 13s. The Wind parts may be had in Manuscript of the Publisher.

MOUNT SINAI; or, THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. An ORATORIO, uniform with the above, by the same Author, 24s. J. Alfred Novello, London and New York.

MEYERBEER'S NEW OPERA.—Unauthorised Editions of portions of my Works having appeared, I hereby give Notice, that I have sold the Copyright for the British Dominions of my New Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, to Messrs. CRAMER, BEALE and Co., of Regent-street, and they and Mr. Chappell, of New Bond-street, alone in England, have my authority to publish any of the Music of L'Etoile du Nord, including also those Pieces from the Camp of Silesia that I have introduced into the Opera of L'Etoile du Nord. I have also accorded to them the Right of Publishing my Marche aux Flambeaux, and the Ninety-first Psalm that I have composed.—Paris, March 30, 1854.

GIACOMO MEYERBEER.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Marche Turque ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet No 1, Op. 23 ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in C major, No. 3, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in A minor, No. 4, Op. 23 ... ... | Silas. |
| March composed for the Sultan ... ... | Rossini. |
| Marche aux Flambeaux, 5s. ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Fantaisie de Salon from "Le Prophète" ... | Oesten. |
| Marche des Slovaques ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| La Source, Caprice ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Marche Militaire ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Estelle ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. Richards. |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.—"La Fontaine de Schubert" Caprice Brillant for the Pianoforte, Op. 55, by Stephen Heller, price 4s. 6d., played by this distinguished pianiste with immense success at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday last, for the benefit of the Distressed Needlewomen's Society, is published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street,

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ.—The applause which has greeted the performance of this Waltz every evening during the last week at the Argyll Rooms, has been quite unprecedented. It is now published, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. The band parts are now ready, price 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 19. SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

MENDELSSOHN.

(Continued from page 282.)

On the 12th of March, 1844, Mendelssohn conducted at Berlin the Israel in Egypt, in accordance with the express wish of the King of Prussia, in whose dominions our artist's works kindled the greatest enthusiasm. His music to A Midsummer Night's Dream was performed seven times consecutively at Danzig; and in March and April the Antigone was given entire. We hear of St. Paul being performed at Breslau, and of the Antigone at Athens in the original tongue, but with the modern music, a fact which Sophocles would have found difficult to realise or reconcile with the ancient strains at the Dionysia. Julius Stern, a young German composer, superintended rehearsals of the tragedy with a view to its production in Paris, where we hear of its being coldly received—"besonders die Aufführung des musikalischen Theils"—a thing not very creditable to French discernment, or the worshippers of Spontini and Auber. We believe it was heartily appreciated at the Covent Garden Theatre of London, in 1845. In the April of 1844, Mendelssohn was present at Leipzig, and assisted the Belgian violoncello player, Servais, in a public performance—with David and Servais he gave a splendid reading of Beethoven's Trio in B flat, the gem of the concert.

But London had now an immediate claim on the services of Felix: and on the very day of his arrival in England he practised with Moscheles the variations in B flat for four hands—hitherto (I believe) unpublished.* He lived, at this time, in the constant companionship of the most noted musicians of the day; and after appeared both as conductor and performer before the London public. He led his St. Paul at Exeter Hall; the music to A Midsummer Night's Dream and his Symphony in A minor at the Philharmonic, besides playing Bach's Triple Concerto with Moscheles and Thalberg, repeated on another occasion with Döhler as a substitute for Thalberg. I cannot omit in this cursory account of some of his appearances in public some mention of a monster concert in London, shewing the immense resources available during a London season, and the capacity for enjoying and enduring among English audiences. Germans will be astonished to hear that no fewer than thirty-eight pieces were set down in the programme, but the splendid phalanx of artists was a sure guarantee of success. Of the "stars," I must give the names of Mendelssohn, Grisi, Shaw, Mario, Salvi, Lablache, Staudigl, Mad. Dulcken, Thalberg, Sivori, Joachim (a pupil of David), the harpist Parish Alvars, and Benedict, whose performance with Mendelssohn and Mad. Dulcken, of a trio, nocturne et valse brillante elicited great admiration. At the eighth Philharmonic Concert, in July, the Walpurgis Night was performed under Mendelssohn, and the day afterwards he played before a select circle in Mr. Klingemann's house, the Variations Sérieuses (op. 54), a duet on themes from Weber's Preciosa with Benedict, and several accompaniments for Adelaide Kemble. But it was chiefly as a conductor that we heard his praise sounded, and nothing could be more flattering than the accounts sent to us at Leipzig, by an English correspondent, of the enthusiasm our artist created by the magic wand (Zauberstab), which instilled such life and energy in the sleepy spirits of the orchestra. On the 10th of July, he left London, and, after visiting Berlin and other places of less importance, determined to pass the winter at Frankfort, and devote himself exclusively to composition. His post at the Gewandhaus was filled by Gade, a young Danish artist. Of the new productions which had appeared during this year from the pen of Mendelssohn, the most important were his music to Racine's Athalie, and the fifth book of the Songs without Words, besides several vocal pieces.

At Frankfort during this period, Mendelssohn began his great oratorio, Elijah, by carefully arranging and connecting the words adapted to that noble musical drama. The subject had suggested itself to his mind years before he actually put pen to paper; but he wisely drew out a plan of each part before commencing the music. The music to the Œdipus Coloneus, the grand trio in C minor (Op. 66), the last volume of the Songs Without Words, the Violin Concerto, and some works of less importance, sprang into existence at this time. In Leipzig, David and Gade acted as joint directors of the musical meetings; and, if a complaint was made of the weakness in the vocal department, none could question the efficiency of the violin players, represented this season by David, Joachim, Ernst, and Bazzini. David at the last concert gave a splendid reading of the violin concerto by Mendelssohn, who had written to him on the way he wished it to be treated, and introduced some fresh cadences to make his friend's triumph the more complete. In the winter of 1845, Mendelssohn and Moscheles consented to assist jointly at the Conservatory. Miss Dolby from England had been engaged as a solo singer, and Jenny Lind was to appear at stated concerts, while David and Joachim were the chief instrumental performers. On the fourth of December, the Queen of Song, then in the zenith of her power and attractions, came before the Leipzig audience, She began with "Casta Diva," from Norma, and assisted Miss Dolby in the duet from Romeo, besides giving the air from Don Juan, "Ich grausam, o mein Geliebter," and the two songs of Mendelssohn, "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges," and "Leise zieht durch mein Gemüth." She sang, at a second concert, a scene and aria from Figaro; the "Ob die Wolke," from Der Freischütz; the Finale from Euryanthe, and a Swedish melody. Felix played his concerto in G minor, and No. 6 from the fifth volume of the Lieder. He listened to Jenny's warblings with great eagerness, sharing the enthusiasm of the public, and giving vent to his feelings at last in the exclamation, "Ja, es ist eine sehr brave Person." We remember his reading one of the countless panegyrics on the gifted vocalist, and remarking, "gar nicht zu viel gesagt." On the 12th of April, 1846, Mendelssohn appeared in public for the last time as a pianoforte player, assisting David in one of the G major sonatas for piano and violin of Beethoven, and giving the C minor symphony and a "Lied" of his own.

*It is now published at Ewer's.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

Mendelssohn's almost undivided labour was now given to the completion of Elijah, which he intended to bring before the public in the August of 1846. In the early part of June of that year, he sent the voice parts to England, and a gentleman of the name of Bartholomew, known as the skilful transposer and adaptor of the "libretto," arranged the English words, taken chiefly from the 15th, 17th, and 18th chapters of the first book of Kings. The oratorio begins with Elijah's prophecy of the famine, followed by the cries of the sufferers; then the departure of the prophet, the raising to life of the widow's son, the destruction of the priests of Baal, the opening of Heaven, the gathering of waters, and the wondrous hymn of gratitude and praise with which the first part concludes. The second part contains the persecution and flight of Elijah to the wilderness; his glorious translation to Heaven; and the prophecy of the Messiah. Of the importance and power of the music in this work I will speak a few words hereafter. It is surprising to read of the vigour and energy which seem to have carried Mendelssohn through so much exertion this year. He undertook the direction of no less than three musical festivals which followed closely after each other. The first, at Aix-la-Chapelle, was attended by Jenny Lind and Julius Riez; the second was at Liege, where Mendelssohn brought out his Lauda Zion; and the third, at Cologne. At the latter place, Schiller's "Der Menschheit Würde ist in eure Hand gegeben, bewahret sie," adapted by Felix, was given by more than 3,000 men's voices with thrilling effect. He conducted, besides this piece, his "Bacchus" chorus from Antigone, a "Te Deum," by Bernhard Klein, and the chorus with solo, from the Zauberflöte, "O Isis und Osiris." After the festival he returned to Leipzig; I saw him myself and talked with him about the late musical meeting. The chorus of Mozart's had given him the greatest pleasure, though he praised the execution generally, and appeared satisfied with the whole performance. About the middle of August, he travelled to England, under an engagement to conduct his new oratorio at the Birmingham Festival. The programme was made up of the great works of Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, and Cherubini; but all were on the qui vive and tip-toe of expectation, from the announcement of the new oratorio. Elijah was performed for the first time in any country on the 26th August, 1846, at the large Town Hall of Birmingham. The Directors had agreed that it should be given after Haydn's Creation, which was performed on the Tuesday—Handel's Messiah and Beethoven's "Mass in D" following on the Thursday and Friday after the Elijah.

"How can one adequately describe" (writes a journalist) "the performances in the Town Hall? It is almost impossible in such excitement to form a dispassionate judgment, or express one's feelings with deliberation. It was a great day for the Festival, a great day for the artists engaged, a great day for Mendelssohn, and a new era for art. There were several encores, and calls for repetition, and, at the conclusion, orchestra and audience applauded the writer to the echo. This was done in direct violation of the printed orders of the Committee; but, when the heart is full, the mouth must speak. The whole scene was, in truth, a very impressive one, though the unrestrained enthusiasm on any ordinary occasion would have been a too turbulent demonstration on the part of the public."

Such very briefly was the reception accorded by Englishmen to this great sacred work. It remains to be seen if Germany approves of such unequivocal marks of favour. I will not follow the practice of many journalists and critics of the present day, who pronounce an opinion without having sufficiently studied the oratorio to be enabled to form a fair judgment. On a slight perusal of the work, I am at once bound to disagree with those who fancy they discover a diminution of productive and original power in Elijah. They have not yet heard the oratorio in its integrity, and, this being so, they are incompetent critics. Let them suspend their judgment till we have heard the entire work at Leipzig—it is to be given on the anniversary of Mendelssohn's birthday. The choruses I have heard are more replete with energy and power than those of Mendelssohn's earlier days, while others bear stamp of that exquisite delicacy and refinement so peculiar to this writer. Witness, "Blessed are the Men that fear Him," "He watching over Israel," as specimens of the latter class, and, for vigour and majesty, the "Thanks be to God," "Be not afraid," etc.

I cannot omit here an anecdote in connection with this memorable Birmingham Festival, for it serves to illustrate the readiness and presence of mind which Felix possessed amid all the anxiety and difficulties of professional duty. On the last day of the Festival, Handel's Coronation Anthem was announced for performance. To the great annoyance of the Directors, it was found that the short recitative preceding the chorus was missing—the audience had the words before them, but the notes for the voice were not forthcoming in the orchestra. Mendelssohn heard of the dilemma. "Wait," he said, "I will help you;" and, suiting the action to the word, sat down immediately, and, in the short space of half an hour, completed a recitative with accompaniments. It was copied off while the notes were actually wet, the parts distributed, and the whole thing given a prima vista. There was no flaw in the performance or the composition—a moment of inspiration seems to have seized both composer and singers.

(To be continued.)

MONSIEUR DE VOS, a fashionable composer of light and easy pianoforte music, has arrived in London from Paris.

M. VIVIER, the renowned performer on the French horn, is shortly expected in London; a piece of good news which it is to be hoped may turn out as true as it is good. It is long since M. Vivier has enriched the London concerts by his talent, or enlivened the London circles in society by his wit and many accomplishments. His absence has been felt; but if he really comes again, tant mieux. Better late than never. M. Vivier is so often coming that he never arrives. Qu'il arrive maintenant.

ST. MARGARET'S, RICHMOND.—The Conservative Land Society have just issued their plan and scheme of allotment of the beautiful St. Margaret's estate, on the 7th of June next. The estate, which is about seventy-five acres in extent, is for the present portioned out into two hundred and seventy-two building lots for villas of a high class; the lots varying in price from £52 4s. 6d., up to £475 each. If we may judge from the plan, the estate as laid out will be one of the most noticeable spots on the banks of the Thames; great care having been taken to preserve the natural and artificial beauties of that fine site. We observe that a considerable portion of the park is to be preserved as a pleasure-ground, with an ornamental sheet of water, spanned by two iron bridges. A plot of ground, one hundred and sixty feet by one hundred and fifteen feet, has been reserved at the corner of the avenue for the erection of a church. From the plan it would seem to be contemplated to preserve the noble mansion erected by the Earl of Kilmorey.

Digitized by Google

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Although there was little novelty in the fifth concert, on Monday night, it was a good one, and there was a full attendance. The following was the programme:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia, Letter T | Haydn. |
| Scena, "Soft airs around me play" (Euryanthe), Mr. Sims Reeves | Weber. |
| Concerto in G Minor, Pianoforte, Mr. Lindsay Sloper | Moscheles. |
| Recit. "Non paventar" (Il Flauto Magico), Aria. "Infelice, sconsolata" Miss Louisa Pyne | Mozart. |
| Overture, "Midsummer Night's Dream" | Mendelssohn. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia in A, No. 7 | Beethoven. |
| Duetto, "Bella Ninfa" (Jessonda), Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Sims Reeves | Spohr. |
| Overture, "Der Vampyr" | Marschner. |

The symphony in E flat of Haydn, being rarely brought forward, was not uninteresting. Still, it is one of the dryest and most primitive works of the master; and, except a variation in the andante, and some clever writing in the finale, contains nothing worthy of his fame. It was played with great spirit, but did not make much impression. So many fine symphonies of the same composer are consigned to the shelf, that the choice of one so comparatively feeble was, to say the least, injudicious. We should, however, be sorry to see Haydn, the "Father of the orchestra," lose his place at concerts, where the chief attraction depends upon orchestral music; and for this reason alone, in the absence of a composition of greater pretensions, the "letter T," antiquated and perruque as it was, was welcome. The symphony in A of Beethoven, is one of the most wonderful inspirations of his wonderful genius. The execution of this, on the whole, was first-rate. The allegretto was loudly encored, and well deserved the compliment, since it could hardly have been better played. Delicacy, force, and the strictest attention to light and shade, were observable throughout. As much may be said, indeed, for every movement of the symphony, which was a rich treat to the connoisseur, and thoroughly appreciated by the audience. The overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream needs neither description nor praise. The execution, however, though delicate in the fairy passages, was not satisfactory. The time generally was too slow, and the many unwarranted changes, alternately to quicker and slower, gave a disjointed effect to the ensemble. The overture of Herr Marschner is one of the closest and worst imitations of Weber. It is a sort of parody of the overture to Euryanthe; the second theme is parodied; the fugato, after the episode, for the stringed instruments, muted, is parodied; and many of the mere passages are parodied—the result being a vapid commonplace.

Mr. Lindsay Sloper's second appearance at the Philharmonic Concerts was more brilliant than his first, inasmuch as he had a great deal more to do. The concerto of M. Moscheles, in G minor, is one of the most lengthy and elaborate of those compositions for pianoforte and orchestra written chiefly with a view to show off the principal instrument. Mr. Sloper was a pupil of M. Moscheles; and it is, consequently, not surprising that this concerto should be a favourite with him. He played it last year at his own concert; and again selected it on the present occasion. While, however, two concertos of Beethoven, and at least half-a-dozen of the best of Mozart, are never performed—to say nothing of those of Mr. Sterndale Bennett, one of the first pianists and composers for the pianoforte of the present age—we cannot but think that a revival of that of M. Moscheles—which has little to recommend it beyond a series of difficult tours de force, and as a connected work possesses no great value—was ill-advised. Nevertheless, Mr. Sloper's performance was pointed, clear, and masterly; the applause he obtained was genuine, and his success decided.

The vocal music was beyond reproach. Mr. Sims Reeves sang the grand tenor scena from Euryanthe to perfection; and the opening movement of the first aria of the Queen of Night, "Non paventar," was given with faultless intonation and true feeling by Miss L. Pyne. The lovely, flowing, and melodious duet, "Bella Ninfa, mi odierai," from Spohr's opera, Jessonda, was admirably sung by the lady and gentleman in conjunction. The attendance of Mr. Costa having been commanded at Buckingham Palace, Mr. Lucas, one of the directors, officiated in his place, and accomplished his duties with so much efficiency that the subscribers had no cause to regret the loss of the popular and energetic conductor in ordinary.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The fourth concert took place on Monday evening, the 1st inst., at the Hanover Square Rooms, and was under the direction of Mr. Jekyll. The room was not so full as usual, owing, we suppose, to the New Philharmonic Society having their concert on the same night, and holding out a programme so attractive as to cause the desertion of many members from the ranks of the Amateur Society.

The selection was as follows:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "Maritana" | W. V. Wallace. |
| Symphony in E Flat | Mozart. |
| Song, "A Pilgrim's Rest," | Mrs. R. Cartwright. |
| Romance, Cornet-à-Pistons solo, "Der traum von der rose" | Prince Oscar of Sweden. |
| Overture, "Zelia," | Lindpaintner. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Concerto for Violin, with New Cadenza, by Herr Molique | Beethoven. |
| Song, "Lurline" | S. W. Waley. |
| Overture, "Le Philtre" | Auber. |
| March, "Camp of Silesia" | Meyerbeer. |

The brilliant, though somewhat disjointed, overture of Vincent Wallace was exceedingly well played, the passages in the coda for the violins coming out with great force and decision.

The symphony did not go so well as could have been desired. The opening adagio was both unsteady and uncertain. The slow movement "hung fire" considerably, and would have been much improved by an acceleration of tempo. The finale, however, went off with great spirit, the orchestra making amends in this for all previous deficiencies. The overtures of Herr Lindpaintner and Auber, were both brilliant, sparkling, and well instrumented, and given with admirable decision and effect.

Beethoven was the giant of the evening, and his wonderful concerto for the violin the feature of the concert. Though we may be inclined to doubt the prudence of selecting for performance a work crowded with so many and such great difficulties, still it served to show what vast strides music is making in England when an amateur is able to enter upon so very arduous an undertaking. Mr. Brand deserves the greatest possible credit for his performance. The loud and long-continued applause with which he was greeted at its termination will, we trust, induce him to continued study and consequent improvement. With the exception of the slow movement, which was rather unsteady, the band accompanied the concert extremely well.

Miss Messent was the vocalist of the evening, and gave the two graceful songs allotted to her with charming taste. The Vielk March, played in a most energetic manner, brought the concert to a satisfactory conclusion.

---

Mr. Adolf Terschak, a flutist, of whom the German critics speak with enthusiasm, has arrived in London, after playing with great success in Vienna, Hamburgh, etc., and before the Royal Family in Berlin.

Mad. Sontag.—"We have happened, by the merest chance, to possess a playbill of the 8th of July, 1819, on which day Kätchen von Heilbronn was given for the benefit of Mad. Renner. At the very end of the cast comes the lines—Ein Köhler (a charcoal burner), Herr Haas, Sein Bube (his boy), Dlle. Henriette Sontag. Who ever thought, the night this bill was published, that 'Dlle. Sontag, the charcoal burner's boy,' would one day fill both hemispheres with her fame as the Countess Sontag Rossi?"—Neue Berliner Musik Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

By the side of the symphony in D minor (No. 9), the Mass in D must take place among the mightiest of Beethoven's works. It gives a musical expression to prayer and adoration, with the same sublimity as its twin-sister of giant birth gives a musical tongue to the spirit of uncontrollable and boundless joy. It is less passionate than the symphony, because it treats of matters less earthly, but it is more sublime, inasmuch as the subject is more heavenly. The Missa Solennis is divided by Beethoven into five parts—separate, but one—sectionally divisible, but spiritually indivisible, each part flowing into its fellow like waves in the immeasurable ocean. The "Kyrie Eleison," the first devotional exclamation, is in D major; and opens with a solemn and majestic strain for the orchestra, which is first taken up by the vocal quartet and subsequently by the entire choir. The "Christe Eleison" is expressed in a movement of pathetic sublimity, in the minor mode; the "Kyrie" is then resumed in the major with the original motivo, and the whole concludes with a tranquil climax. Nothing can be more devotional, and nothing more fitly lead the way to the "Gloria in Excelsis Deo," a movement of unparalleled sublimity, in which the praises of the Omnipotent are poured forth as from the throats of angels. The "Gloria" opens also in D major, with a burst of exultation from the entire orchestra, vocal and instrumental. The phrase employed here recalls the trio of the scherzo in the ninth symphony, although very differently used; a short fugue is introduced on the words "Laudamus te;" the "Gratias agimus" involves a graceful melody in B flat, introduced by the quartet; another smooth subject brings in the "Qui tollis;" and the expression of the words "Qui sedes ad dexteram patris" is wonderfully grand. The "Tu solus altissimus" introduces another fugato. The "Amen" is sublime. The voicing of the whole of this movement is exceedingly elaborate; the instrumentation is brilliant and exhilarating; and the climax is tremendous. Nothing can be more glorious than this "Gloria," which is developed with remarkable power. The codas are so many that there would seem to be no end; but this multiplying of climaxes is a striking characteristic of Beethoven. The excessive use of the ophicleide, an instrument rarely employed by the composer in his secular works, is remarkable in the "Gloria," and indeed throughout the Missa. The "Credo" is a marvellous attempt at giving musical expression to the sentiments inspired by contemplation of the inscrutable attributes of the Divinity, of his goodness and mercy, of his omniscient wisdom and almighty power; in a word, the whole declaration of a Christian's belief is uttered in music more than mortal. In design, in variety of treatment, and in completeness of development, the "Credo" is the most important part of the Missa Solennis. It opens with a phrase in B flat, full of exultation, as of a true believer glorying in the acknowledgment of his faith; a fugue occurs on the words "Consubstantialem Patri"—another on the words "Et in spiritum sanctum," worked out of the first theme of the "Credo"—another, very long and elaborate, on the words "Et unam sanctam catholicam," and a fourth on the words "Et expecto resurrectionem," which is afterwards worked with the theme of the preceding. The "Crucifixus" is sublimely rendered, and the expression of the "Sepultus est" is absolutely appalling. The "Amen" commences with a quartet for the solo vocalists, with an accompaniment on the violin written very high; and the whole choir and full orchestra soon unite in the completion of a superb climax. Not to speak it profanely, this "Credo" is a complete drama, the symmetry of its plan and the variety of its detail, are contrived to produce an effect of oneness without monotony. The "Sanctus" opens with a beautiful succession of harmonies, in which the organ plays an important part. A fugue occurs on the words "Hosanna in excelsis." A fine harmonic progression, in which the organ has a beautiful pedal on G, which comes in unexpectedly and decides the key, leads to the "Benedictus" in G major, a long movement of divine melody, beautifully coloured by an accompaniment for a solo violin obbligato. The theme of the "Benedictus is fugued at the end with masterly completeness. The "Agnus Dei" opens in B minor, in a strain of pathetic lamentation which is almost heart-rending—the soul weeps to hear it, and the mind is elevated by contemplation of that great genius which can express so eloquently every modification of feeling, from the sublime to the tender, from what is divine to what is purely human. The "Donna nobis," in D major, a masterly movement, diversified by every auxiliary of genius and learning, is a glorious finish to this mighty work. Our hasty analysis can give but a faint idea of this stupendous creation, which must be heard, and heard frequently, to be understood. In eschewing the languishing melodies which are so grateful in his secular works, and which are not absent from his first Missa in C major, Beethoven has shewn that in his mature years he rightly considered the nature and characteristics of the music of the tabernacle. No human affections, no human passions, yearnings, tastes, prejudices, should hold a part in the severity of prayer and purity of devotion; these are addressed to an unearthly tribunal, and must not be alloyed by the leaven of terrestrial thoughts. To the Incomprehensible we speak from the soul, which is our immortal part. The idols of our weak humanity should, at the moment of such high commune, be thrust away from our thoughts. Beethoven has in this great inspiration gloriously asserted man's imperishability; and his argument considered with becoming reverence, adopted with faith and zeal, will outweigh the dogmas of the moralist and the text of the preacher.

The two performances of this extraordinary work by the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society—the first of which took place on Friday evening, the 28th ult., and the second last night—have created an immense sensation in the musical world. Most of the musicians and connoisseurs of eminence in London, besides a vast number from the provinces, have attended one or both performances. No praise can be too great for Mr. Costa, whose exertions to obtain a correct execution of the Mass have been arduous and unremitting. The solo singers—Mad. Clara Novello, and Miss Dolby, Herr Formes and Mr. Sims Reeves—had a herculean task to accomplish; but they succeeded to admiration. The band was irreproachable; M. Sainton's playing of the almost impossible violin obbligato, in the "Benedictus," was beyond eulogy; and the chorus (judiciously thinned for the occasion) never did themselves more credit. On the whole, the production of the Second Mass is a new laurel, well earned by the members of our great Choral Society.

---

Madame Puzzi gave a matinée d'invitation at Willis's Rooms, on Monday last, to a large number of her patrons. The programme consisted of a quartet for two violins, tenor, and bass, by Jean Turina, well played by Sig. Bazzini, M. Nadaud, M. Vogel, and Herr Van Gelder; a new romance, by Blumenthal, sung by M. Jules Lefort; some graceful pianoforte pieces, by Blumenthal, performed by the composer, and a duet from Roberto Devereux, sung by Mme. Nissen Saloman and Signor Bettini. The lady will be remembered as having sung in Norma, and other operas, at the Princess's Theatre, some years ago. The second part contained "Una furtiva lagrima," sung by Sig. Bettini; a violin fantasia, composed and executed by Sig. Bazzini; Meyerbeer's aria, "La Mendiante," and Kücken's lied, "Mein Herz ich will dich fragen," known by its English title, "My Heart canst tell?" both of which were sung by Mad. Nissen Saloman; a romance, sung by M. Jules Lefort, with the harp accompaniment of Mr. J. Thomas, and Beethoven's quintet (Op. 16), for pianoforte, oboe, clarionet, horn, and bassoon, admirably executed by Mrs. F. Bowen Jewson, M. Barret, M. Lazarus, Sig. Puzzi, and M. Baumann. The attention paid to this work by the audience said something for the progress the higher classes are making in their musical education, and consequent capability of appreciating the music of the great masters. Mrs. F. Bowen Jewson (who, as Miss Kirkham, made so favourable a début at one of the Philharmonic concerts last season) played the pianoforte part of the quintet in a manner that entitles her to the highest praise. Her performance of the andante cantabile, in particular, was marked by correct phrasing and refined feeling. Signor Schira accompanied the vocal music.

The Directors of the Beaumont Institution deserve praise for their liberal management arrangements at their last concert for the season, on Tuesday. Mad. Amedei, Mrs. Sims Reeves, Messrs. Sims Reeves, and Bolletti were engaged, and were all encored in various songs, which they gave in their best manner. Signor Briccialdi made a favourable impression in a flute solo, and Mr. F. Praeger in a brilliant Fantasia for the piano, on a Bohemian national air, was honoured with genuine applause. Mr. Frank Mori conducted.

Digitized by Google

COLOGNE UNION OF MEN VOICES.

A VERY crowded audience filled the Hanover Square Rooms on Monday morning, at the first of a second series of six concerts, to be given by the Kölner-Männer-Gesang-Verein, one of the most renowned of the choral societies of Germany. The result was a musical treat of the highest order. No performance of the kind of equal merit had ever before been heard in London till last season, that of the Berlin choir not excepted.

The origin of these societies, which, under the various titles of Liedertafel (Song Table), Liederkranz (Crown of Songs), &c., now abundant in Germany, dates scarcely further back than the commencement of the present century. They were earliest cultivated at Zurich and Berlin. At the latter place, Selter, the master of Mendelssohn, did much to encourage and promote their influence. As may be guessed from the name of the most ancient of them—Liedertafel—the original aim of their projectors was chiefly a social one. Eating, drinking, and conversation were varied, at intervals, by part-songs (songs for several voices), the subjects of which were exclusively amatory or bacchanalian. A man of genius, however, Carl Maria Von Weber, gave an impetus to these convivial meetings, which helped to enlarge their sphere and raise their character. The composer of Der Freischütz set to music some of the songs of Körner (The Lyre and the Sword), which, during the wars with Napoleon, had an immense influence in fanning and keeping alive the patriotic sentiments of the German populations, and stimulating their hatred of the common enemy. During the peace, the choral unions of male voices continually increased, until at last there was scarcely a town or village in Germany which did not possess one or more of them. In stormy periods, such as 1830 and 1848, the Liedertafel has been made the instrument of political demonstrations. The periodical union of many of the societies from different towns, at meetings almost assuming the form and importance of festivals, afforded occasions for the introduction of political and revolutionary songs and choruses, which aroused the suspicion and distrust of governments. The result was their frequent suppression, and the ultimate abandonment of all songs of a political or "liberal" tendency. In one respect, the loss of this exciting element has been injurious to the artistic character of the Liedertafel. Composers, who devoted their talents to the production of music of this particular kind, were tempted, by the great perfection which many of the societies had attained in part-singing, to all sorts of trivial effects; and the legitimate aim of the art was neglected for the more ephemeral object of vulgar applause. It must be owned, that of late years the choral unions of male voices have greatly deteriorated; and that the feeling which used to characterise them—whether through the influence of composers or executants, equally ready to sacrifice at the shrine of immediate and short-lived popularity—has faded into something much less vigorous and healthy. The preponderance of trifling serenades and love-songs at their meetings is out of all proportion. The national songs, of which such fine examples exist, are strangely neglected; and even the best specimens of modern composers are laid aside for bagatelles, which the most perfect execution can alone make tolerable. The programme of Monday's performance by the Cologne Union, although it contained some admirable things, was by no means free from this reproach—many of the pieces introduced being very inferior in merit to some of our English glees, which, if sung by as many voices, and in the same faultless manner, would produce a better effect.

The Cologne Union of male vocalists was instituted in 1842, under the superintendence of Herr Franz Weber, who has been appointed director for life. Its members are all amateurs; and the sole object of the society is the promotion of a taste for German song, which, it is believed, must also exercise a beneficial influence on the moral elevation of the people. The proceeds of their public performances are devoted to "useful, patriotic, and charitable purposes;" and the motto they have adopted, "Durch das Schöne stets das Gute" ("Let the good be always attained by the beautiful"), suggests the policy upon which they act. In the great contests at the vocal festivals in Belgium the Cologne Union has carried off all the prizes. The German-Flemish Vocal Festival, the largest ever held on the continent, was instituted by its members, and its first celebration (in 1846) was rendered memorable by the presence of Mendelssohn, who, besides being the principal conductor, composed a new work expressly for the occasion. The society numbers in all 172 members, of whom 80 of the principals comprised the force which on Monday filled the orchestra of the Hanover Square Rooms. The performance of these gentlemen may, without the slightest hesitation, be characterised as perfect. For truth of intonation, decision of accent, harmony of ensemble, ready command of all the gradations of force—from the strongest forte to the most delicate piano, rather breathed than sung—we have heard nothing to equal them in any body of choristers. But these desirable mechanical requisites are made the more valuable from the excellent use to which they are put. The experience and ability of Herr Franz Weber, the conductor, are incontestible. He has an authority over his vocal orchestra that admits of no denial. The slightest motion of his bâton changes a fortissimo into a pianissimo, as if by magic; and his beat is so clear and prompt that not a note is ever sustained by any single voice a second longer than he intends. Execution so sure and satisfactory, so unerringly correct, and so scrupulous in the observance of details, has alone an indefinable charm; but when to this are added all the varieties of expression, applied with unfailing ease and propriety, as in the present instance, the charm is doubled.

An Abendlied of Kuhlau, with which the concert began, although it has not much merit as a composition, at once convinced the audience that the Cologne male voices had lost none of their quality; and still better was Mendelssohn's Wanderlied ("Vom Grund bis zu den Gipfeln"), which followed, and united the attractions of exquisite melody and harmony to those of faultless intonation and expression. A very long solo and chorus, by Kücken, "Im Walde," was by no means so effective. The solos, for a bass or barytone voice, were prolix and insipid; while the commonplace trick of making the chorus hum a pianissimo accompaniment through closed lips, was carried to such an excess, that it became absolutely tiresome. It is not often we have listened to anything more trivial and monotonous. The talents and the voices of the Cologne singers were utterly thrown away upon it. The Volkslieder (People's Songs) of Herr Silcher —"Gut' Nacht," and "Rosestock, holde Blüth,"—were quite a relief. These, though both extremely simple, are both very catching; and the last, founded on a Suabian dance-tune, was encored and repeated. Herr Silcher, who is sub-director of the Kölner Männer-Gesang-Verein, has decidedly the gift of melody. A well-known chorus of Conradin Kreutzer, "Frühlingsnahen" (The Approach of Spring), which is heard in the streets of all the German towns, and Kücken's equally popular "Am Neckar, am Rhein," a national apostrophe to the vine and its proceeds, were both admired. The alternate unison and harmony on the words, "Am Neckar, am Rhein," one of the happiest effects of the composer of "Trab, trab, trab," which Jetty Treffz made so familiar here, produced a striking effect at each recurrence. After a rather vapid chorus by Herr Abt, the ballad composer, and a very charming and characteristic one by Ferdinand Hiller, entitled Abendgruss, between which was unexpectedly interpolated the somewhat bucolic "Kirchlein" (Little Church) of J. Becker, where a church bell is imitated by the bass voices, in unison, reiterating a particular note, while the others have a tune—came the very characteristic and genial Lutzows wilde Jagd (Lutzow's Wild Hunt) of Carl Maria von Weber. In this, one of two great patriotic songs of Körner (the other being the Schwertlied, or "Song of the Sword") the peculiar genius of the author of Der Freischütz is strongly manifest. The expression of the words "Das ist Lutzow's wilde, verwegene Jagd," the burden and explanation of this pleasantly egotistical legend, is graphic and superb. It was majestically executed—with as much enthusiasm as point, decision, and correctness—and terminated the selection with fine effect. "Rule Britannia," was then sung with hearty spirit and good will by those loyal inhabitants of the King of Prussia's Rhenish provinces (who are probably as anti-Russian as any of us), and was followed by "God save the Queen," in doubtful English, which broad, simple, and genuine melodies, be it said, with a due respect for the past songs of Herren Kücken, Kreutzer, Abt, and Co., carried off the honours of the concert, not merely because they were national and àpropos to the times, nor because they were given with singular power and accuracy by the Cologne choristers, but also because, to speak the unvarnished truth, they were equal to any, and superior to most of the harmonised tunes which had been heard in the course of the selection.

Digitized by Google

The vocal programme was divided into three parts. Between the first and second, and second and third respectively, Madlle. Madeleine Gräver performed a fantasia by Thalberg, a Lied ohne Worte by Mendelssohn, and a study by Henselt, on the pianoforte, very cleverly. The fantasia (on Don Pasquale) was too long, but the others were just the thing.

At the second concert an exquisite abendsständchen, or serenade, from the posthumous works of Mendelssohn, "Schlafe, Liebchen," a delicious little chorus, "Der frohe Wandersmann," from the same source, and Weber's fine setting of the Schwertlied, or "Sword-song" of Körner were the principal features of the programme, which was agreeably relieved by some violin solos superbly executed by Herr Ernst, including two of his charming morceaux de salon ("Allegretto" and "Notturno"), and his fantasia on Hungarian airs. The crowd was as great, and the audience as aristocratic and fashionable as at the first concert; and the same may be said of the third, which took place yesterday afternoon. To-night there is to be an evening concert.

Mr. Mitchell is likely to make even a more profitable speculation of the Cologne Choir of Men's Voices than last season. We hope he may.

---

Signor Veroni's Matinée.—A very attractive concert was given on Tuesday morning, at the Hanover Square Rooms, by Signor Veroni, who styles himself in the bills, "Primo Baritono," from La Scala and Principal Theatres in Italy. Signor Veroni is, we understand, an Englishman, and has been singing lately in Italy with much success. The local journals speak favourably of his performance in Verdi's Trovatore, when that opera was brought out at Verona in the winter. It is almost impossible to pass a correct judgment on the qualifications of Signor Veroni from what we heard on Tuesday. He was so nervous that he could hardly sing a note at first; and it was only in his last song that he gave any evidence of his capabilities. All his nervousness, however, could not conceal one thing, viz., that he has a magnificent barytone voice—one of the most mellow and, at the same time, powerful we ever heard. He sang A flat clear from his chest, without the least effort. We did not greatly admire his singing in the duet "Crudel perchè finora," with Madame Clara Novello, although the audience encored it unanimously. With such a voice as he possesses, however, Signor Veroni may do anything, if he have only taste and judgment to direct it. He is engaged, we hear, for the next concert of the New Philharmonic Society, when, if he conquers his nervousness, we expect to hear a very different singer.

The rest of the concert was excellent. Mr. Sims Reeves sang Beethoven's "Adelaida" with such feeling, taste, expression, and voice combined, as we seldom hear now-a-days. Mad. Clara Novello sang the aria "Lidi Amati," by M. Schimon, with exquisite purity of voice, and a quietude entirely her own, and not the less charming for that. Mad. Novello and Mr. Reeves also joined in an Italian duet. Sig. Belletti gave the scena, "Sorgete," from Maometto Secondo—which Tamburini used to introduce into the Donna del Lago, when he played Roderick Dhu. He sang it with great energy and admirable execution. He also sang, with Mad. Caradori, the duet from Semiramide, "Se la vita." Mad. Caradori was as successful as ever in the scena from Der Freischütz. A Sig. Mariani, whose real name, we are told, is Mapleson, made his appearance as a tenor, without pretension, but not without promise.

The instrumental department was assigned to Herr Ernst and Miss Arabella Goddard. The great violinist played two of his elegant and graceful Pensées fugitives, and his famous Carnaval de Venise. He was in splendid force, and alternately delighted and astonished his hearers. Miss Goddard performed Leopold de Meyer's "Lucrezia Borgia Fantasia" and Thalberg's "Don Juan Fantasia," with astonishing ease, brilliancy, and finish, and was loudly applauded. M. Benedict and Signor Pilotti conducted.

Miss Guselda Archer's Concert.—In those circles where distinguished amateurs and professors resort, a young and talented lady has lately appeared, who is now scarcely sixteen, in whom is developed powers of pianoforte playing of no common order. This young lady has been taught by Mr. Aspull, and already plays the works of the great masters, which she made apparent on Wednesday, at the Hanover Square Rooms, when she gave her first soirée musicale. Among other pieces of the programme, Hummel's trio, in E major, was played with care and judgment of the various tempi, and the rondo, more especially, with great fire and brilliancy. Miss Guselda Archer was well supported in the trio by Herr Jansa and M. Paque. The trio was received with applause by one of the most numerous audiences of the season. Hummel's compositions for the piano require an extraordinary mode of execution. In Beethoven's music the same style will seldom be suitable, as, in them, great characteristic energy, deep feeling, often capricious humour, and a sometimes very legato, and at others a very marked and emphatic style of playing are requisite. The sonata in C affords an illustration. The touch and weight of tone of the instrument (one of Broadwood's best) was perhaps against the pianist, who, we understand, had been accustomed to one of greater lightness and facility. Miss Archer, however, nothing daunted, attacked the sonata most vigorously, and obtained a most unequivocal success. The gem of the evening was the Illustrations du Prophète, which were played with fire, precision, and brilliancy, as were also the Studies by Mayer and Chopin. Altogether, Miss Guselda Archer's numerous friends must have been satisfied and gratified by her performances. The vocal talent was most efficient. Miss Binckes sang Macfarren's song, "Gone, he's gone," and was loudly encored. Miss Dolby sang an aria, by Guglielmi, with the greatest purity. Miss Katharine Smith, whose début we announced some two years ago, sang "Robert toi que j'aime," with much feeling and expression. This young lady wants nothing but physical strength. Miss Marion Adam sang "Sommo ciel" with great ease, the variations being neatly given. The Misses Brougham sang their duets with their usual skill and facility. The youngest sang the "Tear" with great expression. Herr de Becker was heard to great advantage in "Adelaida," as well as in the "Farewell Song," by Kücken. Mr. Fred. Chatterton's performance on the harp was most effectively given. Mr. Frank Bodda was much applauded in his buffo singing. A song, by Mr. Aspull, "There is no Music on the Strings," was beautifully sung by Miss Katharine Smith. Mr. Aspull conducted.

Signor Marras was honoured with a very brilliant audience on Wednesday last at his Matinée, which was held at Lord Ward's Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall. We have not space to give the names of the distinguished artists who assisted at the concert. The most remarkable features of the programme were four pieces from Verdi's new opera, Il Trovatore, and a new trio ("Tantum Ergo") by Rossini, besides a number of other interesting vocal pieces hitherto unknown in this country. Signor Marras sang, with great feeling, some new and elegant canti d' amore of his own—which were received with the utmost favour.

Hanover Square Rooms.—A morning concert was given at these rooms, on Monday week, in aid of the funds of the Distressed Needlewomen's Home. The attendance of the fair sex was numerous, and we have no doubt the concert was remunerative. The programme contained a long list of artists, who gave their gratuitous assistance. These were Miss Grace Alleyne, Miss Ransford, Miss Eyles, Miss Birch, Mrs. A. Gilbert, Miss S. Cole, Madame F. Lablache, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss E. Birch, Miss Lascelles, Miss Clara Fraser, Mdlle. Norie, Mr. Ransford, Mr. Elliot Galer, Signor F. Lablache, Mr. Francis, Signor P. Onorati, Mr. Frank Bodda, and Mr. Alfred Pierre, as vocalists; and, as instrumentalists, Miss Arabella Goddard, who played Stephen Heller's elegant caprice, "La Fontaine de Schubert," with great brilliancy—Mdlle. Louise Christine, whose harp performances were much admired, Mr. George Case, and the Messrs. Distin. The conductors were Herr Carl Wolfsohn, Mr. Charles Blagrove, and Mr. A. Gilbert.

Digitized by Google

DRAMATIC.

FRENCH PLAYS—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—We had so long laboured under the impression that we should have no French Plays, this season, that we were agreeably surprised when we received M. Lafont's prospectus announcing a series of twelve representations. We are sorry to find that Mr. Mitchell has withdrawn from the lesseeship, although this regret is, in a measure, diminished by his having volunteered to give the new management all the benefit of his experience and influence; on the other hand, we shall be curious to see how the speculation will be made to answer now that it is entirely in the hands of the actors themselves. We have good grounds for knowing that one of the chief reasons for Mr. Mitchell's retirement is the very high terms demanded by the stars whom he has introduced to the London public, and which precluded the possibility of the speculation proving remunerative; now that the actors have taken the helm, they will soon find out their error, we fear; at all events, they will learn to appreciate, at his full worth, the late director of the French plays, and estimate their own importance from the amount of money transferred from the pockets of the public into the treasury. They have, however, our best wishes, and more especially M. Lafont, who has earned golden opinions in England, and is regarded as an especial favourite by all classes frequenting the St. James's Theatre. Although the doors were opened on Friday the 28th ult., the formal inauguration of the French dramatic season did not take place until the following day, when some appropriate verses, written by M. Méry, were read by M. Lafont—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent and the Duchess of Cambridge being present. At the end of the first piece, M. Lafont, who took no part in the performance, came forward, and, amid enthusiastic applause and considerable excitement, read the before-mentioned verses, which contained a well-merited compliment to Mr. Mitchell, and political allusions to the present friendly relations between France and England, which elicited the sympathies of the audience. M. Méry's composition is not worth much as a composition. There is considerable vagueness in several parts of it, and even the compliment to Mr. Mitchell, although obviously intended to be kind, might be taken for just the contrary.

The performances consisted of two pieces—M. Bouilly's comédie-historique, L'Abbé de l'Epée, and a pretty little comedietta entitled La Partie de Piquet, in both of which M. Ferville, from the Theatre of the Gymnase, took the leading parts. M. Bouilly's piece is one of the types of the now extinct order of dramatic writing much relished some fifty years ago. The same spirit of kindliness which pervades all M. Bouilly's compositions, and which our readers may have had occasion to appreciate in his Contes à ma Fille, runs through this play, occasionally so tedious and whimsically naïf, at others, so earnest and genial. The story is founded on the discovery of a deaf and dumb boy by the famous Abbé de l'Epée, whose knowledge of the habits and mute language of these afflicted persons enables him to discover who the boy actually is, and to restore him to rank and fortune, in spite of the opposition of a rascally uncle. The piece is interesting, although at times very slow from absolute want of material. M. Ferville showed himself a highly intelligent actor, in spite of the prosiness of the author. His enunciation is clear and remarkably distinct, but the effect produced here was not equal to his merits, which were more fully developed in the succeeding piece, La Partie de Piquet, one of the last novelties of the present year, having been produced at the Gymnase in February. It turns on the susceptibility of an old nobleman who has a son, and the blunt kindness of a retired draper who has a daughter. The former is poor, and has for some time lived on the draper's bounty; the latter rich, and desirous of making the young people happy. The match is finally arranged, although not without difficulty, when in an unlucky moment the two old gentlemen sit down to a game of piquet. A difference arises, which ends by a serious quarrel, the bitterest words being used by both parties. The old nobleman prepares to quit the house with his son, but the latter contrives to send his father asleep through the agency of chloreform, and, when he awakes, he is made to believe that the whole quarrel has been a dream; the draper consenting to help the deceit, in order to secure the happiness of the young people. The plot is absurd, but the characters are well sketched, and the intrigue well managed. M. Ferville's delineation of the old chevalier, proud, irritable, and susceptible to a fault, is an admirable specimen of histrionic art. His humour is of the most refined order of comic acting, and his pathos true to nature, without any tendency to exaggeration.

We must not omit to praise the remarkable intelligence which was displayed by Mdlle. Adrienne de Jarmy in the part of the deaf and dumb boy in the Abbé de l'Epée. This young lady is a decided acquisition. The other members of the company are, as last year—Mesdames Vigny, Blanche, Thibault, and Messrs. Langeval, Léon, Fauvre, Tourillon, Jennetier, and Caillat.

On Wednesday, the 3rd ult., Mdlle. Luther made her début in the vaudeville, Livre III., Chapitre I., and evinced a charming talent in her impersonation of the young married lady, who resolves to expel her husband's friend from the house. M. Ferville also appeared in his original part in Le Réveil du Lion, formerly represented by that excellent actor, the late M. Cartigny. The part is admirably played by M. Ferville, and confirms our high estimate of his talents.

Le Philtre Champenois, Le Mariage au Miroir, La Pensionnaire Mariée, and La Grand'mère, have also been played during the current week. Of the first three we have before spoken; they are amusing trifles, and were again received with favour. Of the last we may be allowed to say a few words, not on account of its novelty, it having been first produced more than ten years ago, when the principal part was played by Madame Volnys, but for its merits as a genuine comedy and an example of M. Scribe's best manner. Mad. de Chavannes is a lady of some fifty, but who still retains all the powers of fascination of her youth, combined with the experience of her maturer age. Having been crossed in love and married against her will, she transfers her affection to the son of her former lover, who has become the object of the tender interest of her young granddaughter Adine, and resolves that their marriage shall take place. To effect this is no easy matter. Adine is certainly in love with Amédée de Versigny; but the latter being of the "fast" school, is enamoured of a grisette. The plan adopted by Madame needs the most delicate management. She directs all her own fascinations to the young man, who at last surrenders at discretion. Thus the grisette is disposed of. But the difficulty is now to bring about the marriage of her granddaughter with Amédée, who has thus become over head and ears in love with herself. She affects to be capricious, tyrannical, and violent in temper, and with such success, that eventually the young gentleman begins to find his prospect of happiness rather gloomy, and that he has made a bad bargain. A feigned project of marriage between Adine and an old General revives the dormant passion of Amédée for the younger lady; and, to conclude, Madame completes her work by substituting her granddaughter's name for her own in the marriage contract. The difficulties overcome by M. Scribe are immense, as may well be imagined; and they are conquered in such a manner as to leave us almost satisfied with a plot which at first sight was so absurd and improbable. Adine was charmingly played by Mdlle. Luther, and the part of the old General delineated with taste and refinement by M. Ferville. The character of Mad. de Chavannes was most creditably performed by Mdlle. de St. Georges. On Wednesday last M. Brindeau of the Théâtre Français made his début in Sullivan, a piece which has already been noticed. We doubt the propriety of Mr. Brindeau's choice. English names sound so oddly in French pieces, that an involuntary smile is raised even in the most pathetic passages, and not unfrequently a laugh disturbs the equanimity of the actor, who finds he has produced an effect quite contrary from that which he intended. We advise Mr. Lafont to stick to French pieces, French locale, and French nomenclature. French authors make a sad mess of English manners, and French actors do little better with English names. M. Brindeau is a man of talent, and we hope to appreciate him better in a more congenial part. Her Majesty was present, and among the audience, in a private box, were two of the Zulu Caffres, with their Cornac, who did not seem at all amused.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE.

 In consequence of an unusual pressure of news of all kinds, we are compelled to postpone several interesting notices of concerts, reviews of music, together with foreign intelligence and original articles. To make room for these, a supplement of Eight Pages will be given with the next number of The Musical World, when the last of Mr. Macfarren's papers on Œdipus in Colonos and the Memoir of Mendelssohn will appear, and the Life of Mozart will be continued.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 13TH, 1854.

THE first of June is close at hand, and no evidence yet presents itself of any unusual stir in our world of music. Is yet another year to pass away, unsignalised by any appropriate demonstration of activity on the part of English musicians? Will the foreigner be allowed to come, and go, with the sneer upon his lip? We are aware of the small esteem in which we are held by our continental brethren, and are conscious that our mission is considered rather shop-keeping than music-making. Our painters have resented the obloquy, by an appeal to Europe. Europe has answered nobly; and the names of Turner, Landseer, and others are famous over the world. But the painters of England can boast of what the musicians of England wholly lack—a literature and an esprit de corps. The one may perhaps be parent to the other; but, yes or no, our musicians possess neither. We own it, to our shame; for, whatever our enemies and detractors may assert, we shall continue to believe that there is an amount of musical talent in this country equal to any contingency. To mention names would be invidious. Nor is it needed; those who are informed on the subject can sum up and draw their own conclusions. We have composers of oratorios, operas, symphonies, and all kinds of chamber and vocal music. We have pianists, violinists, and players upon every instrument. We have orchestras, acknowledged by all who have heard them to be first-rate. We have voices (as good as the Italians) and singers, who, in classical music cannot be excelled. Who denies this denies the truth, in ignorance or in malice. We are accused, however, of having no "school," which without being able to define the term, we are ready to admit. We have no school then—be it so. But how readily is this accounted for? Unprotected, unassisted, we have neither the patronage of the great nor the support of each other. We have allowed ourselves to be made tools of by those whose interest it is to disunite us, and who have applied the fable of the bundle of sticks to our disadvantage.

We have no institutions, no theatres, no clubs; and we have not the energy, if we had the will, to combine and create them. An English musician thinks and lives for himself alone, caring nothing for his brethren. We do not "row in the same boat," but each divides the waves of life with his own solitary oar, neglectful of the ship of state that should carry us all together; as though in his particular person were concentred the whole interests of the art, and the hopes, and profit, and glory of the profession. The error is a grievous one, and has led to no end of jealousies, antagonism, and selfishness. How, while this endures, can we expect to have a "school?" We have not even a common play-ground, where mutual good feeling might be engendered, and a bright future spring from the morning of union, as the sun from the eastern hemisphere, chasing away envy, scorn, and hatred, like shadows.

Where are our National Operas, grand and comic? The French have both; we have neither. And yet, in the poor semblances which, from time to time have sprung up, our composers have not failed to distinguish themselves. The Mountain Sylph and Farinelli, Nourjahad and the Night Dancers, Don Quixote and Charles II., the Bondman and the Maid of Honour, Maritana, and others (not to go back to Aladdin and the Doom Kiss), are not to be despised. On the other hand, that miserable burlesque of unity, the Society of British Musicians, with all its uncounted sins of omission and commission, did something worth remembering. It brought forward a number of instrumental composers and executants, at the head of whom was Sterndale Bennett, and at the rear, men of no contemptible pretensions. With these antecedents, it is sad to contemplate our actual condition—one so forlorn and anomalous, that the existence of a work like the oratorio of Immanuel, which should be a matter of general pride and felicitation, is treated as a fact of little or no importance by many among us, who should know better, or speak with more reserve.

These are gloomy reflections for the present time, and seem ill assorted to the year 1854, which should be a year of victory and universal exultation. But they are not out of place. On the contrary, now is the time to make them; now is the time, if ever, to repent, and mend our ways. We beseech our musical friends to use their wits, their courage, and their enthusiasm. We beseech them to do something—not stand idle, to be scoffed at. What must foreigners have thought, who went to Drury Lane Theatre in 1851 (the year of the Crystal Palace in Hyde Park), and saw the Enfant Prodigue, the masterpiece of a Frenchman, performed without the music? Did they not vote us barbarians? They did—and who can blame them? At Drury Lane, the operas of Mr. Balfe, which have been represented in France, in Belgium, and in Germany, first saw the light; at Drury Lane, then, it was natural the Frenchman, Belgian, and German who desired to hear English music in England, should repair. But what was there to hear? Nothing—except a French grand opera, without the music. Where else could the foreigner go? Nowhere. The English musical drama had no home; and Mr. Balfe himself, with all his popularity, might have handed about the score of a newly-finished opera, without finding a manager or a publisher!

Was this to last? Why, it was worse than when Mr. Bunn managed Drury Lane Theatre. Then, at least, we had a dozen operas by Mr. Balfe, three by Mr. Barnett, one by Mr. Macfarren, one by Mr. Wallace, one by Mr. Loder, one by Mr. Lavenu, and one by Mr. Forbes, without reckoning foreign adaptations. And yet our musicians did nothing but rail against Mr. Bunn. In 1851 we had nothing whatever. Our composers, with operas in their portfolios, sought in vain for the means of representing them. What foreign director would be inclined to afford them a chance, when they were not found sufficiently attractive even for speculators at home?

"It is very easy to talk," it was said at the time, "but where is the remedy?" The answer was not to be improvised. "Surely," we suggested, "some scheme might be invented. Suppose, for example, about twenty musicians were to club together, and take Drury Lane Theatre" (which was to let), "for the purpose of bringing out English operas, during the months of June, July, and August, when all the world will be in London. An opera by each of our best acknowledged composers might be produced with care and completeness. The prices reasonable—as no ballet would be necessary (the ballet being foreign to the purpose, and unapproachable elsewhere)—the undertaking would, we feel convinced, pay well. But there must be no negligence in the preparations. The band must be good, the chorus good, the singers good, the scenery good, and the rehearsals ample. There must be no remissness, no shuffling, no mean shirking of expenses and pains. We can see nothing impossible in the realisation of this scheme. If there are not to be found a number of musicians courageous enough to attempt it, it might be essayed by Mr. Beale and M. Jullien, presuming that we, who are most interested in the matter, rally around them zealously. It cannot be expected that M. Jullien and Mr. Beale will otherwise interfere in what does not naturally concern them. They are speculative and munificent; but their time and their energies are fully occupied. But let this, or any other plan, be carried into action. We are not particular as to form; we merely insist that something should be done—that the year 1851 should not be allowed to pass away, without the record of a single event in which the honour and advantage of the British musician are concerned. While every other trade and profession is full of activity and hope, why alone should the followers of 'the divine art' be silent and indifferent?"

Digitized by Google

What we then suggested seems now to have some likelihood of being realised—not by "twenty musicians," nor by M. Jullien, nor by Mr. Beale, but by Mr. Jarrett and his associates in the management of the Royal Opera in Drury Lane, where the performances of Italian and German operas have attracted so large a share of public attention during the last month. Mr. Jarrett, it is rumoured, has engaged Mr. Sims Reeves, and accepted an opera by Mr. Henry Smart. If this turns out to be well-founded, one more chance will be offered to English composers, by which, if they fail to profit, they deserve to sink.

IN RE ST. OLAVE'S, SOUTHWARK.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—In the Times of Saturday, appeared an advertisement for an Organist for the above Church. The duties, as therein set forth, are morning and evening attendance on Sundays, Good Friday, and Christmas Day, and customary festivals and fasts, and on Thursday evening; also to give instruction in Psalmody to the school children attending the Church. The salary is £52 10*s.* per annum.

I will merely remark, en passant, that, according to the above, and even assuming that the "customary festivals and fasts" would require only just so much of the successful candidate's attendance as he would be released from during the school children's holidays, he would have to be at St. Olave's just two hundred and twelve times in the year, making his remuneration, on the average, not quite 4*s.* 11½*d.* a time! But it is not now my purpose to speak so much of the inadequacy of the salary (which is not peculiar to St. Olave's), but of the startling announcement appended to the aforesaid advertisement, that the Committee will have eminent professional advice, and that the SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE WILL HAVE TO PAY THE EXPENSE OF THE UMPIRES!!!

Comment, Sir, would be superfluous, but I think it only right to call the attention of the whole profession to this affair, in the hope of averting the possibility that any "eminent professional advice" might be unwittingly entrapped into lending itself to such a disgraceful transaction.

I am, yours truly,

May 8th, 1854. JUSTITIA.

ROSSINI AND OTELLO.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—In a letter from "A Subscriber to the Opera," in your number for May 6th, it is affirmed that there is no such composition as the aria d'intrata, "Quando guerrier," in Rossini's opera, "Otello." Allow me, through the medium of your interesting journal, to inform the writer, that Grisi introduced it into that opera some years since, and it is from an opera by Mercadante, "I Briganti." Should you not be aware of this, I hope it will be sufficient apology for thus troubling you.

I am, sir, yours, &c.,

A SUBSCRIBER TO THE "M. W.," AND A ROSSINI-ONIAN.

EDWARD, NOT FREDERICK.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been directed to a recent number of the "Musical World" wherein it is stated that Mr. Frederick Chatterton (of Drury Lane Theatre), has been presented with a silver snuff-box. It was Mr. Edward Chatterton (of Drury Lane Theatre) who received that honour, and not myself. Your insertion of this will oblige,—

Yours truly,

FREDERICK CHATTERTON.

(Harpist to H.R.H. the Duchess of Gloucester.)

8, Duchess-street, May 12th, 1854.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"LE LAC." Caprice par Emile Prûdent. Boosey and Sons.

M. NIEDERMEYER, in his well-known romance, Le Lac, has furnished M. Emile Prudent with a graceful subject for a caprice, which the brilliant French pianist has treated with his usual piquancy and individuality of manner. Le Lac is a short fantasia, in the style of La Sonnambula, which it rivals in difficulty. It is a favourable specimen of M. Prudent's peculiar style, and, in its way, it is quite as good as Le Réveil des Fées, one of the most deservedly popular of its author's compositions. The Parisian virtuosi have taken Le Lac into especial favour, and, whenever it is played by the author, or his more advanced pupils, it is redemanded. We have little doubt that it will meet with as much favour here, since it is as elegant as it is showy and effective.

"THERE IS JOY, THERE IS JOY." Song. The Poetry and Music by Sophia Elizabeth Yaunge. Shepherd.

IF space permitted, we should be justified in reprinting the words of Mrs. Yaunge's very pleasing song, since, though not strikingly original, they are full of pure and unaffected sentiment, expressed in language both poetical and clear. Mrs. Yaunge's music is simple and pretty, to say the least of it. Were she to abandon musical and devote herself to poetical composition, she would gratify thousands of readers, and at the same time provide opportunities for our vocal composers of setting quite a different kind of verse to music than the commonplace ballad-poetry that is now so unhappily in vogue.

SIGNOR BRICCIALDI'S Soirés Musicale, on Monday last, gave great satisfaction to a fashionable audience. Signor Briccialdi executed several favourite solos, with effect, upon his newly invented flute. He was assisted by Mesdames. Amedei, Cesarini Hermann, and Stabbach; Messrs. Bettini, Ciabatti, and Piatti. Mdlle. Coulon played Heller's "Truite" on the pianoforte in a brilliant and graceful manner. Signor Piatti was great as ever in a violoncello solo. Mad. Amedei sang "Ah mon Fils" with pathos, and Mdlle. Hermann was successful in the Cavatina from Der Freischütz, and two pretty German songs by Mr. F. Praeger. The concert went off with spirit, Messrs. Bellini and F. Praeger conducting.

CHELTENHAM.—Madame Montignani's concert for the benefit of the soldiers' families came off on Friday evening, April 28th. Madame Montignani performed several solos on the pianoforte, which gave great satisfaction. Miss Henderson, Miss Watchman, Mr. Evans, and Mr. Mills, with other respectable artists, assisted by their various efforts in rendering the concert attractive. The profits, amounting to 30*l.*, have been handed over to the London Committee.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE second performance of Fidelio, on Saturday, attracted a still greater audience than the first. The general execution, moreover, betokened improvement, and several points which, on the first night, from some mismanagement in the mise-en-scène, fell flatly, were received with enthusiasm on Saturday. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli was "in splendid voice," as the phrase goes, and sang with overpowering energy and effect throughout the opera. She was recalled after the magnificent scena, in which occurs the heavenly apostrophe to Hope, again at the end of the first act, and again at the fall of the curtain. Sig. Tamberlik sang even better than on the first night; while Mdlle. Marai, Sig. Tagliafico, and Sig. Susini were as careful and efficient as before. Beethoven's masterpiece was never listened to with deeper attention, and never created a more profound impression.

The ever-welcome Barbiere was more welcome than ever on Tuesday. It brought back Sig. Mario in his most finished part of Conte Almaviva, and introduced Sig. Lablache, for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera, in his celebrated character of Dr. Bartolo. Sig. Ronconi was Figaro, of course, and Mad. Bosio appeared for the first time in England as Rosina—a part which she has recently sustained with distinguished success at the Académie Impériale in Paris. Sig. Tagliafico essayed Don Basilio for the first time, and made the music-master more characteristic and thoroughly comic than any artist we have seen in the part since Sig. Ronconi played it at Her Majesty's Theatre some years ago—winning his maiden reputation in this country as a comic artist of the first water. The performance may well be supposed to have afforded an unusual treat to the audience. The house was crowded in every part, and Her Majesty and Prince Albert were present. The reception accorded to Sig. Mario was enthusiastic, and Sig. Lablache was literally overwhelmed with applause when he appeared at the window, and on his entrance upon the stage. Allowing for a halt in the serenade, "Ecco ridente"—attributable to some alterations which had been made last season for Sig. Luchesi, and of which Sig. Mario had not been apprised—the great tenor sang exquisitely throughout, and acted with all his accustomed ease and gentlemanly deportment. No tenor—from Garcia to the present time—has ever sung the music of Almaviva with such incomparable grace and perfect finish as Sig. Mario. It is the model and despair of all tenors. Sig. Ronconi at last has found his match for whimsicality and humour; it was a trial of strength between him and Sig. Lablache as to who could make the audience laugh the loudest and the oftenest in the shortest space of time. The audience, indeed, laughed more than enough, and the music sometimes rather lost than gained by the transcendant bouffonnerie of Figaro and Bartolo. Mad. Bosio was a lark-like Rosina, but would have still more thoroughly satisfied us had she been occasionally more regardful of the text of the author. When she did confine herself to Rossini's score, nothing could be more delicious than her singing. The music of Rosina is a little too low for Mad. Bosio, and on this account she has transposed the cavatina, "Una voce," half a tone. Her ornaments and roulades in this and the duet, "Dunque io son," were marvellously executed.

P.S.—We notice, in a postscript, what we omitted to state in the body of our article, that Sig. Tagliafico's "La Calunnia" was one of the grand features of the performance. It was sung with infinite quaintness and humour, and with no ordinary power of voice and artistic skill, and, moreover, made an immense sensation. The whole house cheered Sig. Tagliafico at the end, and the cheers were repeated when he modestly declined the encore which was unanimous.

On Thursday, Don Giovanni was produced, and attracted the most crowded audience of the season. Every seat and standing place was occupied, and, although a non-subscription night, the boxes flashed with the light of beauty and of jewels. Who, then, can say Mozart's masterpiece is not attractive to our "rank and fashion?" Sig. Tagliafico retained his part of the Commendatore, Sig. Polonini that of Masetto, Sig. Tamberlik Ottavio, and Sig. Ronconi, a second time, at the absolute entreaty (we are informed) of the management, Don Giovanni. The ladies were all new. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli was Donna Anna; Mad. Bosio, Zerlina; Mdlle. Marai, Elvira; and Sig. Lablache, Leporello. The cast looked powerful in the bills, and had the part of Don Giovanni been suited to Sig. Ronconi, it would hardly have been possible to improve it—unless, by the way, Mdlle. Alboni had been substituted for Mad. Bosio, and Mad. Bosio had taken the place of Mdlle. Marai. Don Giovanni, however, does not at all suit Sig. Ronconi. The great and renowned artist, the most versatile and accomplished genius on the Italian stage, is quite out of his element in the character. He is aware of this, and can do nothing with it. Sig. Lablache acted Leporello with more reverence than we ever remember him to have demonstrated, and refrained from all inappropriate badinage in the last scene. If his singing was not always as powerful as in his best days, it was no fault of his. Time will make inroads, even upon the giant organ of Harlaam. In the duet, "Statua gentillissima," however, Sig. Lablache was inimitable, and in the grand sestet, "Sola, sola," he was magnificent.

Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli's Donna Anna is, perhaps, more thoroughly studied, more dramatic, grand and impressive, than even her Fidelio. No artist, excepting Pasta, has ever made so much of the first scene, where Donna Anna laments over the dead body of her father. This was intensely passionate and natural, besides being a new and striking embodiment of the situation. The grand scena and aria, "Or sai chi l' onore," where Donna Anna first discovers that Don Giovanni is her intended betrayer, was a magnificent display of vocalisation, and quite electrifying in its dramatic energy. Nothing, indeed, could be more superb, nothing more highly artistic, than the reiterated ejaculation, "Oh Dei!" and the recitatives, in which Donna Anna describes the dastardly conduct of the profligate nobleman, were delivered with an earnestness and agitation of manner worthy of Rachel herself. Mdlle. Cruvelli was applauded by the whole house. The trio of the masks, "Protegga il giusto cielo," was sung to perfection by Mdlles. Cruvelli and Marai, with Sig. Tamberlik, and unanimously encored. The air, "Non mi dir," usually omitted, was restored by Mdlle. Cruvelli, and admirably sung. She was recalled at the conclusion. Why did not Sig. Tamberlik follow so good an example, and reinstate the charming air of Ottavio, "Della sua pace," which Mr. Sims Reeves has been lately singing with such effect? Mad. Bosio's Zerlina would have been irreproachable had she infused a little more expression into the character, and attended more to the business of the scene. This clever lady must be informed that "Batti, batti," and "Vedrai carino," are both addressed to Masetto, and not to the pit. The encores obtained for these two songs were justly merited by Mad. Bosio's perfect singing. Mdlle. Marai continues to improve her position. The ungrateful and arduous part of Elvira has seldom been more carefully and effectively represented. The fine air, "Mi tradi," was admirably given, while, for her share of the trio, and the sestet, the young artist is entitled to unqualified praise. Sig. Tagliafico was as powerful and impressive as ever in the Commendatore—which part he has made entirely his own—and Sig. Polonini is as good and pleasant a Masetto as could possibly be desired.

Digitized by Google

Sig. Tamberlik, who makes a real acting part of Ottavio, sang magnificently. His "Il mio tesoro" created as great a furore as ever, and was encored tumultuously—after which he was unanimously recalled.

The band and chorus, under Mr. Costa, went even better than usual, and the military band in the ball scene was admirably in tune.

The Barbiere will be repeated to-night, and Fidelio on Tuesday.

---

Mad. Pyne Galton's Benefit Concert took place yesterday se'nnight, at the Hanover Square Rooms. There was a small, but efficient orchestra, and the instrumental pieces comprised the overtures to Prometheus and Figaro, and Mendelssohn's concerto in G minor, played by the beneficiaire. Among the vocalists were Miss Louisa Pyne and Miss Dolby. The former was encored in two songs, and Miss Dolby obtained great applause in a pleasing ballad of Leslie's. Mad. Pyne Galton also played a fantasia (Hommage to Thomas Moore). A solo on the violin by Sig. Bazzini, and on the concertino by Mr. R. Blagrove, were the other instrumental pieces. Miss Pyne was encored in a Scotch song. Miss Messent, Mrs. Inman (late Miss F. Stirling), Mr. A. Braham, and Mr. Rosenthal, also sang.

Sheffield.—The fifth and last concert for the season of the Sheffield Vocal Union took place in the Music Hall, on Thursday evening, the 27th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Seale, Mrs. Jessop, Mr. Inkersall, and Mr. Shirley, who, together with an efficient chorus, gave great satisfaction to a numerous audience. Miss Seale was encored in "Ellen and Patrick." Mr. G. J. Worsley played Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, and Thalberg's Mosè, the latter, and the least interesting piece, being encored. The performances were ably conducted by Mr. J. S. Walker.

Plymouth.—The third concert of the Devon and Cornwall Philharmonic Society took place on Wednesday, the 3rd inst., at St. George's Hall, Stonehouse. There was a large attendance of the fashionables of the neighbourhood. The most effective item in the concert was the performance of Mrs. H. Reed, on the pianoforte. She played Mendelssohn's concerto in D minor with full band, and was very much applauded. Lord Graves sang a grand aria from Rossini's Assedio di Corinto, and displayed considerable talent as an amateur singer.

Bath.—Messrs. Milsom and Sons gave two concerts at the Assembly Rooms the week before last, Friday evening, and on Saturday morning. The vocalists were Mesdames Weiss and Dolby, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Weiss; the instrumentalists, Miss Arabella Goddard and Mr. George Case. Both concerts were well attended, and gave the highest satisfaction. Mr. Sims Reeves was encored in nearly every thing he sang. His greatest hits, however, were Beethoven's "Adelaida," and the romanza, "Un impero," from the Prophète, which he sang exquisitely. Miss Arabella Goddard's performances were among the most interesting features in the programme. Her appearance at once enlisted the audience in her favour; and the most critical ear and most exacting taste could have found no fault with her rendering of one of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte, and Thalberg's fantasia on Don Giovanni, which exhibited her wonderful mechanism and consummate ease and grace to the highest advantage. At the morning concert, the next day, Miss Goddard played a sonata of Beethoven (in A flat, Op. 26), and Leopold de Meyer's spirituel and difficult fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia, with equal success. Mr. Sims Reeves sang Herr Molique's beautiful romance, "When the Morn is brightly shining," to perfection; and the audience were enchanted with Miss Dolby's singing. Mr. Case accompanied the vocal music with great care; but why did not Miss Goddard play "Adelaida" for Sims Reeves.

Herr Pischek, the celebrated German barytone, is engaged at the Royal Italian Opera, and will shortly make his appearance.

FOREIGN.

Naples.—The theatres closed for the feast of St. Gennaro, with Il Furioso (Donizetti) at the Fondo, and Il Trovatore (Verdi) at the Teatro Nuovo. At the first of these theatres, rumour speaks of a new opera in rehearsal, entitled Elvina, by Gioia; as also of an opera seria by Miceli.—It is expected that Pacini will go to Paris to superintend the rehearsals of his opera Gli Arabi nelle Gallie, to be produced next autumn at the Italian Opera.—Among the composers engaged to write for the Teatro Nuovo are Mercadante, Ricci, Fioravanti, Giannetti, Valenza, and some half dozen others, who are to write if the first-named give them a chance, or their works, which is likely enough, are damned by the public. The soprani are numerous, if not select; among them we may mention the names of Signors Cappelli, Scheggi, Tilli, and Chameroy; tenors, Villani and Colli; bassi buffi, Fioravanti and Pasquale Savoja (coll 'obligo della maschera, that is to say, he may be obliged to wear a mask in certain grotesque characters); bassi serii, Brignole, Squarcia, Castelli, and Brondi; director of music, Mollo. The orchestra is composed of thirty musicians, no great number for a theatre considerably larger than Covent Garden.

Milan.—The spring season commenced in Italy on the 17th of April. In this city there are three theatres open with operas—the Carcano, the Radegonda, and the Re. The first was inaugurated with Bellini's Puritani, and, as it had not been represented here for several years previously, it was expected to have been well received; but, unfortunately, some of the artists did not correspond to the general expectation of the public, and consequently the opera has been a failure. La Fausta of Donizetti was the second opera produced, and made a complete fiasco, on account of the incapacity of the artists. The third opera, La Sonnambula, with other artists, has been more fortunate. The prima donna, Signora Almonti, has a sympathetic voice, and executes some of the difficulties tolerably well. With perseverance and study, she may rise in her career. At the Theatre Re, affairs have gone better; the artists generally having been greater favourites. The first opera was Mercadante's Giuramento. The prima donna, Signora Vera Lorini, showed herself an artist of much dramatic intelligence. Her singing, if not of the best school, displayed depth of passion; but, unfortunately, she has a disposition to force her voice beyond its natural powers, which defect renders it anything but agreeable. The opera buffa, the Brewer of Preston, of Luigi Ricci, has been the second represented at this theatre. This opera was composed for the Theatre La Pergola at Florence, in the Carnaval of 1846—at which place it was judged rather severely. It contains many pieces full of brio and vivacity, and the instrumentation is good, in the Riccian style. The execution was, to a certain extent, praiseworthy: the veteran buffo, Cambiaggio, was much applauded; but, upon the whole, some of the characters have been ill chosen by the author—it, therefore, does not give the most favourable impression of what it is intended to represent. At the Radegonda, several representations have been given of the opera buffa, Un' Avventura di Scaramuccia, also of Luigi Ricci, with the buffo antico, Signor Vincenzo Galli, as Protagonist, composed expressly for him many years ago. He was warmly applauded in all his pieces. The other artists were incapable of doing anything like justice to the graceful and flowing melodies with which the opera abounds, consequently Un' Avventura di Scaramuccia has been a semi-fiasco. The second opera was the Gemma di Vergy, with new artists, but with less fortune than the first—the prima donna being utterly devoid of everything that constitutes an artist. The new opera entitled La Podestà di Gorgonzola, of the maestro-dilettante Cagnola, will be represented in a few days.—Balfe is here. One of the two new operas he is composing is to be produced, in a short time, at the Royal Theatre, Turin.

Genoa.—At the Theatre Carlo Felice, the new opera of the maestro Enrico Petrella, entitled Il Marco Visconti, has had a brilliant success, both the composer and the artists being called at least twenty times before the curtain.

Cremona.—The oratorio of Saul, by Buzzi, was applauded both for the music and execution.

Digitized by Google

VENICE.—The Teatro San Benedetto opened with Lucia di Lammermoor, which had, upon the whole, success. The principal parts were sustained by the following artists: Lucia, Signora Arrigotti; Edgardo, Signor Landi; Ashton, Signor Coletti. Amongst the pieces most applauded were, the cavatina of Signor Coletti, who was honoured with two calls before the curtain—the duet between Lucia and Edgardo—and the duet between the prima donna and the baritono in the second act. The second opera was I Due Foscari of Verdi, with the prima donna, Maria Spezia; tenore, Landi; and the baritono, Colletti.

ROME.—The new opera-buffa, by Lauro Rossi, at the Teatro Valle has been successful; it is entitled I Monetari falsi, and was played by Amalia Zecchini, Marietta Mollo, Enrico Testa and Ettore Mitterpoc. Norma has also been given several times.

FLORENCE.—The Theatre Leopoldo was opened with the Linda of Donizetti, and a grand ballet, La Vendetta di Medea, by the composer and Ballerino Mochi. The opera was tolerably, the ballet quite, successful.—Verdi's Rigoletto is in rehearsal at the same theatre; the English tenor, Mr. Croft, is to sing the principal part. A new opera buffa is also in preparation, the music by one Tilli, entitled Il Cantastorie; the book by Canovai. A new ballet, called Il Birrichino di Parigi, has been given.—On the 29th ult. a concert was held at the Pergola for the benefit of the poor. Rossini is again on the horizon: there were no less than four pieces of his in the programme, viz., the cavatina from Maometto, the rondo-finale of Cenerentola, the finale of Mose, and "Bell Raggio," sung by Mad. Barbiere-Nini.

ALLESSANDRIA.—A Mass by Gibelli was performed on Easter Sunday. It is spoken of as a work of promise, although not in the strict religious style.

TRIESTE.—Several pieces of Sacred Music were produced at the Cathedral of San Giusto Martire, a Te Deum, a Tantum ergo, a Miserere, and several Masses, composed by Luigi Ricci.

LETTERS FROM EMINENT MEN.

NO. III.

From

W. A. MOZART.

[TO HIS WIFE.]

Dresden, April 16, 1789.
Half-past 11 at night.

WHAT—again at Dresden? Yes, indeed, my dear—and now I will tell you all about it. On Monday, the 13th, after breakfasting at Naumann's, we all repaired together to the castle chapel to hear one of his masses. Naumann directed it in person—it was but a so-so affair. We were placed in the oratory, in front of the orchestra. Suddenly, Naumann jogged me by the elbow, and introduced me to M. de König, Director of Amusements—(the sad amusements of the Elector). He received me cordially, and asked whether I expected to play before his Serene Highness. I replied, that it would be a great favour for me, but, that not being master of my time, I was unable to make a long stay at Dresden; and there the matter rested. The Prince, my fellow traveller, invited the Naumanns and Duschek to dinner. While we were at table, I received information that the next day (Tuesday), at half-past five in the evening, I was expected to play at court. This was an unheard of piece of fortune here, where it is so difficult to obtain a hearing, and you know, I never reckoned upon Dresden. We had arranged a quartet among us, at the Hotel de Boulogne, with Antoine Teyber, the town organist (as you know) and Herr Kraft, violinist to the Prince Esterhazy. Herr Kraft is here with his son. I had seen both these gentlemen at the chapel. At this little party, I played the trio which I wrote for Herr Puchberg, and it was tolerably well executed. Duschek sang many things from Don Juan and Figaro. At court, I played the new concerto in D. The next day (the 15th), in the morning, the Elector sent me a very handsome snuff-box. We dined at the Russian Ambassador's, where I played a great deal; after dinner, we agreed to go and hear an organ; we arrived there, in a carriage, about one. Naumann was of the party.

You must know that there is one Haessler here, who is organist at Erfurt, and pupil of one of the pupils of Bach; his strength lies in the organ and clavichord. As I was from Vienna they thought I could not play in that style. I seated myself at the organ and executed some passages. The Prince Lichnowsky, who knows Haessler very well, persuaded him, not without difficulty, to play. Haessler knows by heart some of old Bach's modulations, and that's all; he has no idea of playing a fugue properly; his style wants solidity; he seems to be a kind of Albrechtsberger. We afterwards returned to the hotel of the Russian Ambassador, in order that Haessler might hear me on the piano; he played himself also. I think Averhammer quite as clever as he—by which, you may suppose, he has lost much in my estimation. From the Ambassador's we adjourned to the Opera, which is pitiable. Guess whom I found among the singers? Rosa Anservisi. You can imagine her delight at seeing me once more. The prima donna, Allegrandi, is much better than Jérarèse. After the play we returned home. Then came the happiest moment for me; I found a letter from thee, so passionately desired—my dearest—my best!—Duschek and Naumann were there as usual; I went immediately in triumph to my room—I covered thy letter with kisses ere I opened it—and then I rather devoured it than read it. I remained upstairs for a long time, for I could not tire of kissing it and reading it. When I rejoined the company, the Naumanns asked me if I had a letter, and on my replying in the affirmative they congratulated me cordially, for I had been complaining every day of not hearing from you. These Naumanns are excellent people.

And now let us talk about thy dear letter. Another time you shall hear the rest of my adventures at Dresden, up to the moment of my leaving.

My dear little wife, I have a host of prayers to make to thee:—

1st.—I pray thee, be not sad.

2nd.—I pray thee, take care of thy health—and be careful of the spring air.

3rd.—I pray thee, do not walk out alone, or rather, do not walk out at all.

4th.—Be certain of my love for thee. I have not written thee one letter without thy portrait before my eyes.

5th.—Respect, in thy conduct, not only thine own honour and mine, but likewise appearances; be not angry with this prayer—you ought to love me the more, seeing that I am particular on the point of honour.

6th and last.—I pray thee write to me more at length. I am anxious to know if my brother-in-law, Hofen, arrived the day after my departure; if he comes oftener, as he promised me he would; if the Langs come sometimes: if they are going on with your portrait; what kind of life you lead—all things, in fact, which interest me much, as you may well imagine.

Now adieu, my very dear, my very good. Think, that every night, before going to bed, I talk to your picture, at least for half an hour, and ditto, when I awake in the morning.

The day after to-morrow, April 18, we leave here; for the future you must write to Berlin—post office.

O Stri! Stri! I kiss thee 1095060437082 times (there is something to practice you in figures), and am ever thy faithful husband and friend. W. A. MOZART.

The rest of my adventures at Dresden immediately—Good night.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

MONDAY.—Mr. George Lake's "Daniel," &c., St. Martin's Hall.——Misses Cole and Mr. A. Gilbert's Soirée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Half-past eight.——Cologne Choral Union, Grand Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

WEDNESDAY.—Mr. Hullah, "Immanuel," &c., St. Martin's Hall.——Royal Society of Musicians, "Messiah," Exeter Hall.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past seven.

FRIDAY.—Signor Ferrari, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.——Herr Lichtenstein's Soirée Musicale, 76, Harley Street.——Cologne Choral Union, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.

SATURDAY.—Mr. F. Chatterton's Grand Concert, Willis's Rooms, St. James's. Three o'clock.

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers Full particulars will be shortly announced.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—On Monday next, May 15th, ROSSINI'S "STABAT MATER" (for sketch of which see MUSICAL WORLD of April 22nd) and GEORGE LAKE'S successful Oratorio DANIEL. Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Champion, Weiss, Formes. Apply early for Tickets, 2s., 3s., and 5s., at the Hall, at Addison's, 210, Regent-street, or to Mr. G. Lake, Addington Place, Camberwell.

MR. G. LICHTENSTEIN has the honour to announce that his EVENING CONCERT will take place in the Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street, on Friday, May 19. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely. Vocalists—Mdlle. Agnes Büry, Mad. Nissen Saloman, Mad. Dori, Mdlle. Hermann, Mons. Jules Lefort, Herr Gustav Hölzel (K. K. Hofopernsänger). Instrumentalists—Violin, Herr Jansa; Pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss, Mr. G. Lichtenstein. Conductor, Mr. Grattan. Tickets, Half-a-guinea each. To be had at all the principal Musicsellers, and of Mr. Lichtenstein, 5, Euston-place, Euston-square.

MISS BINCKES has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, Oxford-street, on Friday, May 26th, to commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Tickets to be had of Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street.

MISS STABBACH begs to announce that her FIRST ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday Evening, May 24th. Vocalists—Madame Nissen Saloman, the Misses Brougham, and Miss Stabbach, Signor Marras, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Hamilton Braham. Instrumentalists—Herr Panar and Signor Noronha; Flute—Signor Paggi. Conductors—Signor Li Calsi and Mr. W. G. Cusins. Tickets—Reserved Seats, 5s.; Numbered Stalls, 10s. 6d. each; at the principal Music-sellers, and of Miss Stabbach, 11, Edgware-road, Hyde-park.

SIGNOR AND MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that their ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Friday evening, May 19th. Vocalists: Madame Mortier La Fontaine, Miss Augusta Thomson, and Madame Ferrari; Messrs. Herberte, H. C. Regaldi, Wallworth, and Signor Ferrari. Instrumentalists: Piano, Mrs. F. B. Jewson and Mr. George Russell; Concertino, Signor Giulio Regondi; Harp, Mr. John Thomas; Violoncello, M. Paque and Mr. Schroeder; Violin, M. Folkes. Accompanyists: Messrs. Lindsay Sloper and G. Russell. Tickets, 7s., to be had of the principal music-sellers. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d., to be had only of Signor and Madame Ferrari, 69, Upper Norton Street, Portland Place.

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge.

Mr. BENEDICT'S ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Friday, June 23, 1854, when the most eminent available Vocal and Instrumental talent will be engaged to deserve the distinguished patronage it has enjoyed for so many years. Full particulars will be duly announced. Reserved Seats, One Guinea each, may be had at the principal Music Sellers and Librarians; and of Mr. Benedict, 2, Manchester Square.

COLOGNE CHORAL UNION.—DER KOLNER MANNER GESANG VEREIN.—Arrangements for the Week.—Mr. Mitchell respectfully announces that the CONCERTS of this distinguished Society will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, in the following order:—On Monday Morning, May 15; Wednesday Morning, May 17; Friday Morning, May 19; and the last Concert on Saturday Evening, May 20. The Morning Concerts commence at Half-past Three, and the Evening Concert at Half-past Eight. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; Unreserved seats, 5s.; which may be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

W. H. HOLMES'S SECOND PIANOFORTE CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Rooms on Saturday morning, May 27; to commence at Two o'clock. Tickets, all reserved, 10s. 6d. each; to be had of Mr. W. H. Holmes, 36, Beaumont-street, Marylebone.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—On Wednesday, May 17, will be performed LESLIE'S NEW ORATORIO—IMMANUEL, under the direction of Mr. John Hullah. Principal vocalists—Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Amy Dolby, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Weiss. Tickets, 1s.; galleries, 2s. 6d.; stalls, 5s. Doors open at a quarter before Eight; performance will commence at Half-past Eight o'clock.

MISS COLETTI begs to announce that her FIRST EVENING CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, King Street, Saint James's, on Friday, May 19th, when she will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Madame Taccani Tasca, Miss Ursula Barclay, Miss Nason, Signor Marras, Signor Furtardo, Mr. Lawler, and Mr. Henry Blagrove.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori.

THE MISSES McALPINE have the honour to announce that their CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening, June 6th, under the immediate patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Abercorn, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Drogheda, the Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of Darnley, the Right Hon. the Lady Elizabeth Dawson, the Right Hon. the Vicountess Ebrington, the Lady James Stuart, &c. Full particulars will be duly announced.

MR. FREDERICK CHATTERTON has the honour to announce his ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, under the immediate patronage of Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, will take place at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Saturday, May 20; to commence at Three o'clock. Tickets (7s.) to be had at all the principal music shops; Reserved Seats (10s. 6d.) to be had only of Mr. Frederick Chatterton, 8, Duchess-street, Portland-place, where programmes may be obtained.

MR. RICHARD BLAGROVE will give his ANNUAL CONCERT at the Hanover Rooms on Thursday Morning, May 25th, at Half-past Two. Vocalists—Madame Persiani, Miss Ransford, Miss Dolby, Signor Marras, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Frank Bodda. Instrumentalists—Miss Arabella Goddard, Miss Lavinia Taylor, Messrs. Henry Blagrove, Hill, Lucas, Howell, and Richard Blagrove. Accompanyist, Mr. C. Blagrove. Tickets, 5s.; Family Ticket (to admit five), 21s.; Stalls, 7s.; to be had only of Mr. Richard Blagrove, 71, Mortimer Street, Cavendish Square.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her First Matinée of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street Saturday next, May 20, to commence at Three, when will be performed Beethoven's Trio in C minor, Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello; Mozart's Sonata in A, Pianoforte and Violin; a Violoncello Solo of Piatti, a Violin Solo of Sainton, and Pianoforte Solos of Mendelssohn, Weber, Thalberg, &c., with Vocal Pieces of Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and G. A. Macfarren. The Second Matinée will take place on Wednesday, June 14. During the series will appear, Herr Ernst, M. Sainton, Signor Piatti, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mrs. Endersohn, Madame and Mr. Weiss, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Frank Mori, and other eminent Artists. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Subscription, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, Reserved Seat, 15s.; Ticket, for either Matinée, 7s.; Reserved Seat, 10s. 6d.; to be had at Ebers's Library, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—MISS MESSENT respectfully announces to her friends and patrons that her GRAND CONCERT will take place on Tuesday Evening, May 23, 1854. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Mdlle. Agnes Bury, Miss Poole, Miss Messent, Mdlle. Julie Mouat (her first appearance), and Miss Dolby; Herr Reichart, Mr. Herberte, M. Jules Lefort, Mr. Irwing, and Mr. Frank Bodda. Instrumentalists—Piano, Mr. Brinley Richards and Mr. Aguilar; Flute, Mr. Richardson; Violin, Signor Bazzini; Violoncello, Herr Romberg. Conductors—Messrs. F. Mori, Aguilar, Gantz, and Praeger. Tickets, 7s. 6d. Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had of Miss Messent, 6, Hinde-street, Manchester Square.

Digitized by Google

MR. C. E. HORSLEY has the honour to announce that his GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday, June 2. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, Mrs. C. Lockey, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. Solo Violin, Herr Ernst. On this occasion (besides a selection from the works of various composers) will be produced, for the first time, COMUS, a cantata, the words selected from Milton's Masque, the music composed by Mr. C. E. Horsley. The orchestra and chorus will be complete in every department. Tickets 7s., reserved seats half-a-guinea each, to be had at Chappell's, Cramer's, Addison's, Leader and Cocks', Ewer and Co.'s, Keith and Prowse's, Cheapside.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

LA HARMONIUM.—MDME. DREYFUS has arrived in town, and will attend concerts or private parties to perform on the Harmonium. Also to give lessons on this now popular instrument. Terms and particulars at Chappell's, 50, New Bond-street.

Mr. PAGET (Bass), Mrs. PAGET (late Miss CLARKE), Royal Academy of Music (Contralto).—All communications relative to engagements for Concerts and Oratorios to be addressed Atherstone, Warwickshire.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

FOR SALE.—A NEW PICCOLO PIANOFORTE, by a first-rate London maker, 6¾ octaves, in rosewood, to be sold on very advantageous terms. It may be seen at Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street.

BOOSE'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosé's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and Operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSE'S NEW MODEL CORNET-À-PISTONS. Price Seven Guineas. In calling attention to a new and very beautiful model Cornet-a-Piston which Messrs. Boosey and Sons have lately completed, they would beg to observe that, with the assistance of the most able professors in London, they have succeeded in uniting in this instrument a perfect intonation with a clear, rich, and brilliant tone never before attained to such perfection in the cornet-à-piston. It can, further, be played without effort, even by one inexperienced in the use of brass instruments. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to Her Majesty's Army, and the Honourable East India Company's Service, &c.

MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Militia Regiments or parties joining Bands, and in want of Instruments, Music, or a Band Master, are invited to apply to Messrs. BOOSEY AND SONS, 28, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers, and Music Publishers to her Majesty's Army and the Hon. E. I. C.'s Service. The high character of their Instruments and Journals for Reed and Brass Bands are acknowledged throughout the Army.—A Register kept of the most experienced Band Masters.

ST. MARTIN'S ORGAN.—Messrs. BEVINGTON and SONS, Organ Builders, London, being favoured with the order to build the grand organ for the parish church of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, Trafalgar-square, London, are desirous to DISPOSE OF the present INSTRUMENT which is about to be removed, containing great, swell, and choir organs. For further particulars apply at Messrs. Bevington's Organ Manufactory, 48, Greek-street, Soho-square.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

WANTED.—An Articled Pupil, or Apprentice, by a Professor of Music, of great experience, for five or seven years. He must have some little knowledge of music, and bid fair to be clever, when he will have every prospect of being a thoroughly educated musician, both theoretical and practical, and will study with the Advertiser's son, who is fourteen years of age, yet a very clever musician, and fine performer on several instruments. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Son, 28, Holles-street, Oxford-street.

FOR SALE.—The Inedited Works of the celebrated MAESTRO RAIMONDI, late Director of the Royal Academy of Music, Palermo, and Maestro of the Capella Giulia, St. Peter's, Rome: 1. Three "Oratorii," performed with great success at Rome; 2. The first Sixty Psalms of David, "alla Palestrina;" 3. Two Operas, "Adelasia." and "I Quattro Rustici." Apply, All' Eccmo. Signore D. Luigi Raimondi, Palazzo Torres, No. 3, Via della Cuccagna, Primo Piano, Rome.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE ONLY EXHIBITION PRIZE MEDAL FOR HARMONIUMS, price Ten Guineas, with all the late improvements, manufactured solely by Messrs. WHEATSTONE and Co. Has the full compass, with improved expression stop, a rich sustained tone, in power ad libitum, is an excellent substitute for the organ, does not require tuning, and is admirably suited to play with the pianoforte. Messrs. W. and Co. have an extensive assortment of the above ready for exportation; also a variety of French Harmoniums, with the various stops, at very reduced prices. Warren's Instructions for the above, 4s.

Wheatstone and Co., Patentees and Inventors of the Concertina, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed. J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

Digitized by Google

A Bonâ Fide oppportunity is offered by which a handsome fortune can be obtained, in return for a small investment. Apply for Prospectuses (which will be sent post free) to F. E. Fuld and Co., 32, Villiers-street, Strand, London.

IT WAS THE TIME OF ROSES—Ballad, by Thomas Hood, the music by John Wass—and sung by Mrs. Inman at Mrs. Galton's Concert—is published this day, price 2s., by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR'S BALL.—La Reine Hortense Quadrille, by Henri Laurent, to which Her Majesty the Queen danced on the above occasion, will be published on Tuesday next. It is composed on French Imperial airs, concluding with "Partant pour la Syrie." Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

ROBERT COCKS' AND CO.'S NEW MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

HAMILTON and the PIANOFORTE.—Just published, the 52nd edition of this extraordinarily popular Author's MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, newly revised and greatly enlarged by Carl Czerny, pupil of Beethoven; large music folio, 62 pages, price only 4s. Also, by the same, Hamilton's Modern Instructions for Singing; large music folio, 5s. May be ordered of all musicsellers and booksellers.

THE FAVOURITE BALLADS of the SEASON are John Parry's Sweet Vesper Bells of Ancona, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Have still some kind Word for me, 2s. Franz Abt's May Song, 2s.; Morning, 2s. 6d.; Evening, 2s.; and The Earth it loves Rain, 2s. Kücken's The Star, 2s.; Sweet May, 2s.; and his celebrated Song, The Tear, 2s. Pressel's A Youth from the Summit, 2s.; and When two fond Hearts, 2s. Cherry's The Dreams of Youth, illustrated, 2s. 6d., and Like the Song of Birds, illustrated, 2s. 6d. Eliza Cook's Song of the Sailor Boy, music by Rodwell, 2s. Harper's Truth in Absence, 2s. Miss Fricker's Fading away, 2s. Barker's The Lime Blossoms, illustrated, 2s. 6d.; and Glover's (S.) Annie o' the Banks o' Dee, illustrated, 2s. 6d., &c.

MEYERBEER'S NEW OPERA.—Unauthorised Editions of portions of my Works having appeared, I hereby give Notice, that I have sold the Copyright for the British Dominions of my New Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, to Messrs. CRAMER, BEALE and Co., of Regent-street, and they and Mr. Chappell, of New Bond-street, alone in England, have my authority to publish any of the Music of L'Etoile du Nord, including also those Pieces from the Camp of Silesia that I have introduced into the Opera of L'Etoile du Nord. I have also accorded to them the Right of Publishing my Marche aux Flambeaux, and the Ninety-first Psalm that I have composed.—Paris, March 30, 1854.

GIACOMO MEYERBEER.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Marche Turque ... ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet No 1, Op. 23 ... ... ... | Silas. |
| Duet in C major, No. 3, Op. 23 ... | Silas. |
| Duet in A minor, No. 4, Op. 23 ... | Silas. |
| March composed for the Sultan ... ... | Rossini. |
| Marche aux Flambeaux, 5s. ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Fantaisie de Salon from "Le Prophète" ... | Oesten. |
| Marche des Slovaques ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| La Source, Caprice ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Marche Militaire ... ... ... ... | Blumenthal. |
| Estelle ... ... ... ... ... ... | B. Richards. |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

THE TWO OPERA HOUSES.—Boosey and Sons have now published in their series the following Operas complete for Voice and Piano (with English and Foreign words), in handsomely bound 4to volumes, adapted for the theatre or drawing-room. 1. Norma, 10s. 6d. 2. Sonnambula, 12s. 6d. 3. Don Juan, 18s. 4. Figaro, 16s. 5. Ernani, 15s. 6. Il Barbiere, 16s. 7. Lucrezia Borgia, 16s. (all with Italian and English words).—8. Faust, 12s. 6d. 9. Fidelio, 15s. 10. Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d. 11. Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. (with German and English words). And 12. Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s., (with French and English words). To be had of Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street; Addison, 210, Regent Street; Lacy, 17, Wellington Street, North Strand; and Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside.

RIGOLETTO.—The following numerous arrangements of this very popular Opera are now ready. The public is warned against purchasing a pirated edition of the Airs published by an unprincipled individual.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| VOCAL—THE ENTIRE OPERA, 12s. | | | |
| Caro Nome che il mio Core (sung by Mdlle. Bosio) | Sc. e Polac...S. | 2 | 6 |
| Cortigiani, vill Razza Dannata ... ... | Aria ..... B. | 3 | 0 |
| Figlia! mio Padre! a te dappresso ... | Duetto, S. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| La Donna è Mobile, (sung by Sig. Mario) | Canzone ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Parmi veder le Lagrime ... ... ... | Aria ..... | 2 | 6 |
| Questa o quella per me pari sono (sung by Sig. Mario) | Ballata . T. | 2 | 0 |
| Signor, nè Principe io lo vorrei! ... ... | Duetto, T. & S. | 4 | 0 |
| Somiglia un Apollo quel Giovane ... | Sc. Terz. e Tempesta | 5 | 0 |
| Tutte le Feste, al Tempio ... ... | Sc. e Duet ... | 4 | 0 |
| Un dì, se ben rammentomi ... .... | Quartetto, S. C. T. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| V' ho ingannato—colpevole fui ... ... | Sc. e Du fin ... | 3 | 0 |
| Possente amor mi chiami ... ... ... | Melodia ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Zitti, zitti, moviamo ... ... ... | Terz....S. T. B. | 3 | 0 |
| ENGLISH VERSION. | | | |
| Fair shines the Moon to-night (La Donna) ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| Ditto ... ... ... ... ... | as a Duet ... | 2 | 6 |
| PIANOFORTE SOLO. | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Voss ... | Grand Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | "La Donna," Barcarolle, Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| " ... | Galop di Bravura, Rigoletto ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " ... | Bella Figlia (Quartett) ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Oesten ... ... | Homage à Verdi (Fant.), Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| H. Cramer ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Kuhe ... ... | Fantaisie, Brillante Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Mdme. ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| . | The Minuet in Rigoletto ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Benedict .... ... | Grand Fantaisie ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| PIANOFORTE, FOUR HANDS. | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 6 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | La Donna e Mobile ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| " ... | Bella Figlia ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC. | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| " ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| FLUTE AND PIANO. | | | |
| Clinton ... ... | 2 Mosaiques from Rigoletto, each ... | 4 | 0 |
| ORCHESTRE. | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Laurent ... ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Tinney ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| MILITARY BAND. | | | |
| Boosé ... ... | Grand Selection Rigoletto (from 'Boosé's Journal') ... ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |

 Various arrangements for Concertina and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Cornet and Piano, are nearly ready.

Published only by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ.—The applause which has greeted the performance of this Waltz every evening during the last week at the Argyll Rooms, has been quite unprecedented. It is now published, with a comic illustration by Brandard, price 3s. The band parts are now ready, price 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

GOLLMICK'S NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.—1. Chanson à Boire; 2. Farewell; 3. German Volkslied; 4. Minerva, Grand Valse, Solo and Duet; 5. Belisarie, Grand Duet; 6. Third Edition of Europa, Galop de Concert. "Easily acquired, but not easily forgotten, are Herr Gollmick's compositions."—Ladies Newspaper. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

A FOREIGN LADY, engaged in several families of distinction as Professor of German, French, and Italian, and also in some literary pursuits, wishes to reside in a private family, or with a Lady. Being of a cheerful disposition and very domesticated, and having a first class connection, she may be useful to an intellectual and professional family. One good private room and central situation indispensable, Address—CLIO, at the office of the Musical World, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

EWER & CO.'S
LATEST PUBLICATIONS
OF # PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| BERGER, Impressioni d' una Mazurka, Op. 11 ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| CHIPP, E. T., Three Romances, Op. 10, ded. to Mrs. Anderson ... | 2 | 0 |
| CHOPIN, Deux Valses Melancoliques, Oeuv. Posth. ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| CRAMER, H., Six Compositions, Op. 98:— | | |
| No. 1. La Mignonne ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 2. La Grace ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 3. Tarentelle ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 4. Scène du Bal ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 5. L'Espérance ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 6. Mazourka favorite... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| DEICHERT, La Graciosa, Op. 11 ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| DOPPLER, Je pense à toi, Op. 131 ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| EGGHARD, Chanson Erotique, Op. 19 ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| EVERS, CARL, Six Poésies, Op. 47. | | |
| No. 1. Nocturne ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 2. La Resolution ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 3. Insouciance ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 4. Andantino Grazioso ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 5. La Foire ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 6. Andante Religioso ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Complete ... ... ... ... ... ... | 8 | 0 |
| ——— La Coquette, pièce de Salon, Op. 49 ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| GIESE, Mi Alma, Valse Sentimentale ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| GOTTSCHALK, Whispers from the Forest—three slow movements | 3 | 0 |
| ——— Parting and Meeting, two sketches ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| GRETSCHER, F., Les Plaisirs des Suisses, Morceau characteristique, Op. 18 ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| ——— Variations on a German Air, Op. 19 ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ——— Elegy, Op. 20 ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| ——— Double Fantaisie, Op. 21 ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ——— Mazurka, Op. 22. ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| ——— Barcarole, Op. 23 ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| HELLER, STEPHEN, Twenty-four Preludes in all the Keys, Op. 81, in 2 Books—Book 1 ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Book 2 ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| HENSEL, FANNY, (Sister of F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy), Lied ohne Worte, played by Mr. Sterndale Bennett ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| KRUGER, La Harpe Éolienne, Rêverie, Op. 25 ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| LICHTENSTEIN, GEO., Hungarian Fantasia ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| LISZT, FRANZ, Deux Arabesques:— | | |
| No. 1. Le Rossignol ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 2. Chanson Bohémienne ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| MENDELSSOHN, Fifteen Melodies, arranged from Ops. 84, 86, 99 —3 Books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ——— Cantata, "Sons of Art," arranged as a Duet ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| MULDER, Fifty Melodious Exercises for Cultivating the Taste and Expression—3 Books, each ... ... ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| NEUPERT, H., Rondo Giocoso ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| OESTEN, T., La Rose de Valencia, morceau melodieux ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| POHL, C. F., Nocturne ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| SCARLATTI, Sonato, played by Mdlle. Clauss ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| SCHRAMM, Fantasia on "God Save the Queen," to be played with the left hand only ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| SPINDLER, FRITZ, Impromptu ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| SPONHOLTZ, Romance, for the left hand only, Op. 14 ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| STIEHL, H., Fantasia on a Theme of Himmel ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| WILLMERS, RUD., Allegro Scherzo, dedicated to Mdlle. Wilhelmine Clauss ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ——— Lyrics, dedicated to Mdlle. Rosa Kastner, | | |
| No. 1. Love Song ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| 2. Of Olden Time... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| 3. Undine... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Complete ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| BOSEN, F., "The Shamrock." Three Dances: | | |
| No. 1. Mazurka ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 2. Polka ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 3. Waltz ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| BERGMANN, ED., The Foresters' Waltz ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ——— The Miners' Galopade ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| DOPPLER, La Graciosa Schottisch ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| GIESE, Eugenia Polka Mazurka ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| ——— Wilhelminen Polka ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| ——— Macdonald Polka ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| ——— Bertha Galop ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| KALOZDY, Roccocco Polka, Cornet ad lib. ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ——— Marionette Quadrilles, Cornet ad lib. ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| ——— Fiddlers' Waltz, Cornet ad lib. ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| KOPFF, Mein Gruss an Helgoland, Polka ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| ——— Our Redowa ... ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| ——— Helgolander Galop ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 0 |
| LICHTENSTEIN, GEORGE, "My Dream," Waltz ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ——— "Tempi Futuri" Polka ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ——— "Tempi Passati" Galop ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| LUCKER, W. A., Ball Room Dances:— | | |
| No. 1. Ostrolenka Mazurka ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| 2. Die Unermüdliche Polka ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| 3. Gastein Waltz ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| 4. Leipzig Galopade ... ... ... ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| 5. The Montijo Quadrilles ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| SCHALLEHN, Death or Glory Galop, dedicated to the Officers of the 17th Lancers ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| ——— Julie Polkas, Cornet Accompaniment ad libitum ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| ——— Rosalien Waltzes, ditto ditto ... ... | 3 | 0 |

LONDON: J. J. EWER & Co., 390, OXFORD STREET.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 20. SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

MENDELSSOHN'S "ŒDIPUS IN COLONOS."

(Concluded from page 297.)

The Coloniate of the royal train returns to tell of the accomplishment of that preternatural destiny for which the entire progress of the drama has prepared our expectation. He tells how the blind Œdipus, heaven-directed, led them through intricate and precipitous passes to a sacred spot of dangerous access, where, selecting by his prescient power a particular stone for a seat, he bade his daughter serve him with water for the ceremonial ablutions, and invest him with the proper garments of the grave; he tells how the devoted father took leave of his daughters, the partners and the solace of his wanderings, binding Theseus, by renewed vows, to protect them; he tells how this scene of solemn pathos was interrupted; how, save only Œdipus, all present were startled and appalled by the voice of the unseen god calling by name upon the fated man; he tells how none but Theseus were suffered to remain and witness what would follow; how the distracted daughters were forced from their parent's last embrace; and he tells how when the retiring train turned to look upon the place they had left, Œdipus was not: the sufferer of more than any else had borne of human sorrows had passed out of existence; and the king, awe stricken by the scene, which he, singly of mortals, had witnessed, and by means of which the safety from external powers was secured to his state, was offering his prostrate homage to the gods.

Here is surely a scene which, had it occurred in any other work whatever than a Greek tragedy,—(that monster of the mind, which stood between the world and nature as its own anomalous Chorus stood between the audience and the personages of the poem, incapable of exciting or reflecting the true sympathies of the heart)—here is a scene which had it been presented through any other medium for the imagination than this cold, conventional, purely artificial abstraction, might have been, would have been made, one of the most powerfully dramatic and irresistibly exciting realisations, and withal idealisations of the grandeur of human passion, that it is in the province of art to embody: as it is, what would have afforded the greatest scope to the actors, and the most certain stimulation to the sympathy of the beholders, the grand situation which calls forth the strongest emotions of the chief characters of the drama, is conveyed through the lifeless narration of a messenger, a person, scarcely a character, in whom we have no interest, no concern. Fortunately for art, and most fortunately for us, who are intellectualised, refined, humanised by the influence of its productions, action, life has assumed in the modern drama, the place filled by inanimate narration in the "glorious Greek model," and the glowing sensient representations of Shakspere are the consequence.

The vitality which, according to the exigencies of his age, Sophocles omitted from his tragedy, Mendelssohn, to meet the different requirements of our time, has infused into it, and thus the artificial statues of antiquity appear to be warmed with the pulse of nature in their modern presentation.

IX.

This concluding piece is a dialogue between the orphan sisters and the Chorus, in which, finally, Theseus joins. The entrance of Antigone and Ismene is accompanied by a beautiful strain of plaintive melody,— which is assigned to the soft wind instruments, supported by the pizzicato of the basses. Antigone's exclamations of anguish are interrupted by the questions of the Chorus, which are most speakingly declaimed in the fortunate rendering of the fragmentary sentences that very successfully interweaves them with the spoken responses. The Chorus elicit from her a recapitulation of the description previously given by the messenger, which is greatly heightened in interest by the musical illustration. The opening symphony is repeated, through which some words of consolation to the sisters are sung.

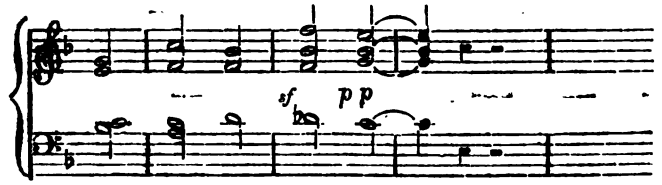
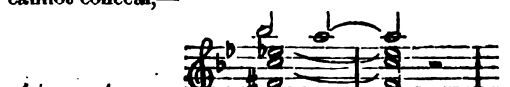
Nothing can so well convey to you an idea of how the purport of the spoken words is enforced by the orchestral accompaniment, as a quotation of one of the most effective passages:—Antigone is soothed by the thought that her father's wish has been accomplished: it is in a strangers' land that he has departed for ever to his well-shadowed resting-place below, and he has left the tears of grief behind him; thus her feeling is expressed—



"Since my weeping eyes lament for thee, my father," she exclaims; and this poignant dissonance embodies the pang she cannot conceal,—



"And I know not, I, unhappy, how I may restrain this anguish for thee," also, is the continued outpouring of her affection; again the music, beyond the power of words, reveals her agony,—

Digitized by Google

And how she cries in desperation, "Woe! thou shouldst not have wished for death in this strange land, and die to leave me thus forsaken here." Now, you must understand that these three orchestral illustrations follow in such quick succession as the exclamation of the words will permit, that the effect of each depends upon the other two, and the effect of all upon the declamation they accompany, that they form in fact but one musical idea; you will not, therefore, suppose that my admiration is of any one or any other fragment save as a portion of the entire passage, in which admiration you will, I am sure, join me. Whatever of beautiful expression there be in this series of quotations, it is enhanced to the utmost by the exquisite gradation of orchestral effect that colours them; the first fragment is given by the gentle softness of the bassoons and clarinets, the piercing tone of the oboe is then added to this, and, finally, the thrilling acuteness of the violin completes the brightness of the orchestral colouring which evinces the subtle and sensitive imagination of the composer no less than do his loveliest melodies or his grandest harmonic progressions prove its fertility and its strength.

Again the introductory symphony recurs, and again the Chorus sing through it, renewing their endeavour to comfort the forlorn sisters. The endeavour is vain: Antigone and Ismene are without hope, without wish in this world, and their only resource from their grief is to throw themselves into their father's grave.

Thus much is arranged, according to the plan observed in all the other pieces, in a succession of Strophes and corresponding divisions of the music, or Antistrophes; and the beautiful propriety that has again and again given occasion for remark, in adapting the musical ideas of the former to the expression of relative passages in the second division of the text, and enhancing the interest of the music and enforcing the expression of the poetry by such adaptation, is here no less to be noticed and no less to be admired. We have now an addition to this usual form in the portion of the piece that succeeds the entrance of Theseus, in which the music assumes an entirely different character from that which has hitherto prevailed—a character of majesty that well bespeaks the kingly presence which so absorbs all attention as to make even the feeling of grief secondary to that of reverence.

The sisters implore Theseus to lead them to their father's grave, that upon this sacred spot they may end their woes and their lives. The monarch has sworn never to reveal the secrets of Œdipus, the manner of his death, and the place of his interment; bound by his oath he resists their appeal; and the Chorus, impressed with the all-powerful authority of their king, urge the sisters to desist from their cries of lamentation, declaring, that the words the sovereign has spoken are truthful and sacred—that is, that they are not to be questioned, and not to be disobeyed. This final admonition is conveyed in a short, but very grand Adagio, of which the commencing phrase—well indicates the earnest and impressive character; and thus the work concludes in the major of the same tonic in which it opens with the instrumental introduction that accompanies the first entrance of Œdipus, guided by Antigone into the sacred grove of Colonos. The general character indicated at the opening of the work, the character of solemn pathos rendered through the medium of powerful, living passionate expression, has been maintained throughout with truthful appropriateness to the subject and admirable consistency with itself; it has been relieved, and thereby greatly heightened, with the episodical Odes, which are still, necessarily in keeping with the feeling of the whole; and, with the resumption, in the last piece, of the key in which the work commenced, and of the embodiment of a very similar expression, the circle as it were of the composer's meaning is completed, his conception rounded into perfectness; the conclusive Adagio may be regarded as an epilogue, and the effect of the change to the major key in this final movement, is, while it maintains the solemnity, to soften the acuteness of the impression of pathos the work would otherwise leave, and it enforces what appears to have been the poet's principal purpose, namely, the glorification of his native country.

---

I have done my best to describe this very highly-interesting work; and, in the course of my description, I have found many an occasion to express opinions which may, possibly, be more or less at variance with those of some or other of my readers. Take notice, however, that I am not a critic; I have the same right that any of you lovers of music enjoy to form, upon the justification of such principles of art as I believe to be true and feel to be satisfactory, opinions of any work that excites my interest; but my opinions are not law, and any of you that find reason for contrary views, and any, also, who find it not, nor seek it, have perfect leave to judge for yourselves and to set aside any objection, at least as incompatible with such views, whether reasonable or otherwise. Yes, I give you full license to deal with my objections, but, as to my admiration, I am much more scrupulous; you who sympathise with it, can well understand my sensitiveness; you who sympathise not, must at least respect my sincerity. After all has been said, you can form no idea of Mendelssohn's Œdipus in Colonos, but from Mendelssohn's Œdipus in Colonos, and I shall have done nothing for art, and shall have taken in vain much of the "valuable space" of this journal, if I have not induced some of you, who knew it not before, to make acquaintance with the truly beautiful work in question; I shall have done much, very much for myself, since I shall certainly have found a way, for the time, into congenial company, if I have induced any of you to go through the music and my remarks together, and oh! I should indeed have reason for self-gratulation if I could believe that I had awakened a sensitiveness to one otherwise unnoticed beauty.

This most interesting work was written shortly after the music for Antigone; but, by one of those seeming anomalies which, excepting on the grounds of caprice in the author, render the publication of some and the suppression of other of Mendelssohn's compositions of at least equal interest apparently unaccountable, it was not printed during the life of the composer. That Mendelssohn disregarded not his music of Œdipus, neither thought it unfit for its purpose nor unworthy of himself, is proved by his presentation of a copy of the score to the Queen of England; and, that he thus obviously esteemed it and yet withheld it from the world, shows that he must have had other motives than his satisfaction or dissatisfaction with his work, to induce the discrepancy between the order of their production and their publication, which his family and the committee of four Leipzig professors, appointed by them to superintend and control the publishing of his unprinted music, urge as a justification of their suppression of the Reformation Symphony, and other highly interesting compositions, and which some of his self-styled friends and admirers in England, with equal insufficiency, plead in support of this unwarrantable dereliction of the duties assumed by the quatrumvirate of Leipzig. How far this synod of suppressors has discharged its duty in the production of the present work, I need only refer to the omission in the full score, the entire omission, of the passage that accompanied Œdipus' curse of Creon, to prove—how far an authority that can deal thus carelessly with one of the few works vouchsafed to the world is worthy to be made responsible for the suppression of all the others, it is not for me to determine.

Digitized by Google

Unaccountable and strange as it may appear, that the music of Œdipus was not published during Mendelssohn's life, it may seem still more strange that having been one of the first of his posthumous works revealed to the world by his family and the four professors, and being, by reason of its analogy with the well-known and consequently admired music of Antigone, and of its pre-eminent merit, peculiarly interesting, it should have been but once publicly performed in England, and is up to this time but little known. This is, partly, to be explained by the natural repugnance of an audience to the contemplation throughout nearly the whole of a long work of a miserable, sorrow-broken, blind old man as the central, if not the only object of attention; partly by the ante-pathetic, not to say revolting, incidents of the history of Œdipus, which are so forcibly related as to be all (all that the circumscriptions of the Greek drama would permit,) but presented before us; and partly by the extreme difficulty of execution, especially in the scenes of dialogue between the speaking characters and the singing chorus. As to the first two of these explanations, which refer to Sophocles, I must leave it to some one of classical acquirements to establish or refute them; as to the third, which refers to Mendelssohn, my experience of the difficulty and the good effect of the analagous work of Antigone justifies me in declaring that the difficulty is to be overcome, and that the result would repay any amount of pains that might be spent upon the conquest. It is for those admirers of the master, who feel with me the injustice to him and to the world, of the suppression of his other works, to prove, if they have the means and the opportunity to do so, what value they set upon the music that is withheld, by shewing in a perfect performance what value they set upon this admirable work that is brought forward. Let the world hear Œdipus in Colonos, and the world must be unanimous as to its general merits.

If in these remarks I have fulfilled my object of drawing attention to a work of high art, and of enhancing with some an interest in its beauties, perhaps you may concede me the right of asking a boon in return, which is, that you will not consider me a critic—an arbiter of other men's tastes, and a dictator of other men's opinions. It is a good old honest amateurish saying, "I know what pleases me;" I have said it before, and I say it now, and this is all I do say, and in this sole piece of self-knowledge every one that aspires to be an artist may rest well-satisfied to be classed as an amateur.

Vale!

G. A. Macfarren.

---

The Origin of Oratorios.—Saint Philip di Neri, who founded the oratorio, in the year 1540, at Rome, saw, with regret, the faithful desert the church for the theatre. Knowing the taste of the Romans for music, he conceived the idea of finding a good poet to write some interludes taken from the Scriptures, and, having had them set to music, he ordered them to be played in his church. The success was prodigious, and this kind of drama was called an oratorio from the church of the Oratory, where it was first performed. In the beginning, oratorios were simply allegories—cantatas for several persons, executed either in a church or theatre, like other concerted music. Subsequently, they were more developed, and assumed all the proportions of a regular drama, save that they wanted the aid of costumes and theatrical pomp. As for the music, which partakes equally of the free and the severe style, it consists of simple and obbligato recitatives, solos, duets, trios, and concerted pieces. The most celebrated composers of oratorios are Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Mendelssohn. The most remarkable oratorios are generally held to be Handel's Messiah, and Israel in Egypt, Haydn's Creation, Beethoven's Mount of Olives, and Mendelssohn's St. Paul and Elijah.

Revel.—On account of the war, the theatre here is closed. The season concluded with a pot-pourri from various operas.

Rostock.—The Italian opera company, from Copenhagen, will give several representations during the present month.

MENDELSSOHN.

(Concluded from page 310.)

None, who have followed Mendelssohn in his various fields of exertion, can wonder that, on his return to Leipsig, he felt in need of repose and relaxation. Once more, however, he shared the direction of the Gewandhaus meetings with Gade, and succeeded in bringing the B flat and F symphonies of Beethoven almost to perfection. He conducted the former, for the last time, on the 11th of March, having previously introduced to the public a new symphony by Robert Schumann. The season was remarkable chiefly for Mendelssohn's having discarded novelty, and adhering generally to the works of the old masters. Mad. Dulcken and Clara Schumann played two of Mendelssohn's concertos, and once we heard his overture, the Meerestille und Glückliche Fahrt; but, even in the series of his Tonical Concerts, which professed to give specimens of the earliest and latest, Mendelssohn was not once represented, to the great disappointment of the subscribers. He was now forbidden by his physician to play in public; his nervousness increased, and he complained of violent headaches. It was with great difficulty that he could be induced to superintend the rehearsals, and conduct the oratorio, of St. Paul, which was performed, for the last time under his direction, in the Paulinerkirche, on Good Friday, 1847. He explained his comparative retirement from public life by the best of excuses. "He wished," he said, "to use the remainder of his time in composing. He should work till forty years old, and then rest." Always true to his engagements, he once more appeared in England, conformable with his promise to the Exeter Hall Society, which seemed determined, if possible, to rival the great performance at Birmingham we have alluded to in a former number. At the end of April, Elijah was conducted by the great composer, in London, three times, and once at Birmingham. On the 11th of May, at the Philharmonic Concerts, the music to A Midsummer Night's Dream was reproduced, and Mendelssohn played the G major concerto of Beethoven, with extempore cadenzas as usual. On this occasion, the Queen and her Royal Consort were present. I believe Mendelssohn was glad to return to Frankfort, and find himself restored to the bosom of his family, now in great affliction at the sudden death of Mad. Hensel, the Fanny Mendelssohn of former days. Felix had doted on this sister, and it is said that, when the news was brought him, he uttered a piercing cry of anguish. Her death was almost instantaneous. She was listening to a rehearsal of the choruses in the second part of the Faust—a subject which she had selected for her own musical compositions—when she was attacked on a sudden by some internal disorder, and sank lifeless on her seat. Her brother was fearfully prostrated by this loss. He had loved her in no ordinary manner. They had composed together as children, and in riper years also; nor is it ascertained, in the early written songs, which were written by the sister, and which by the brother—for so constantly had they mutually communicated their ideas on musical subjects, that each availed herself or himself of what they considered common property. It is certain that, after this sad event, Mendelssohn's physical powers rapidly declined, and fits of despondency were succeeded by violent pains in the head, caused, as his physician stated, by the bursting of a small blood-vessel. Pressure of blood on the brain was, doubtless, the cause of all that he complained of, and we cannot wonder that this hastened his early end—attributed by some (surely, too fancifully) to his grief for the death of Fanny Hensel. I doubt not of the sincerity and depth of that brother's affliction; but I am sure its "moderation was known unto all men," and that it was softened by the consciousness of possessing much that was near and dear to him, as well as by the remembrance of a vocation so noble and beneficial to others, that it would rouse him at once from any selfish indulgence of protracted sorrow. His ceaseless activity acted prematurely on a finely organised system; and, in his latter days, so susceptible was he of the power of music, that he could seldom listen without weeping. "Let me still work on," were his constant words to his wife, when she begged him to rest—"the time of my rest will soon come." Nor was he free from this presentiment of his approaching end, when addressing his friends thus—"I must use the present time which is allotted me: I cannot tell how long it will last."

Digitized by Google

Matters grew more distressing, and though, for a time, he looked for the remedy of his pain in redoubled exertion, the effort seems to have been a fruitless one, as we find him writing to a friend—"I can now only work mechanically." He passed some time at Baden-Baden, and then moved on to Switzerland, where Nature, in all her grandeur, seems to have called forth awhile the original vigour and energy of his genius. He at first intended to go to Vevay and Geneva, but, in consequence of political disturbances in those parts, he sought a more retired corner of Switzerland, and settled, with his family, finally at Interlaken, the lovely spot which lies between the peaceful lakes of Thun and Brienze. Here he worked uninterruptedly all the day long, though occasionally he passed whole days in wandering over the mountains. Two great works were engrossing his chief thoughts in composition—an oratorio, Christus, and an opera, Lorely, for which Emanuel Geibel had written the libretto. The scheme of the oratorio was on the grandest scale. It was to contain three parts, our Lord's life on Earth, His death and burial, and ascension to Heaven. Isolated pieces of this work have been lately published, and Lorely is represented by a solitary fragment in the shape of a finale and one act of the opera. After writing, besides these pieces, two stringed quartets in F minor and D minor,* motets, and songs, he returned to Leipzig, on the 15th of September, A friend of mine assured me that he was then in tolerable spirits, though he complained of the oppressive atmosphere of Leipzig—"Es drückte ihn die Leipziger Luft."

We find Mendelssohn next at Berlin, where he remained eight days with his brother and sister. The place and time were full of painful associations, but his spirits did not fail him entirely, for he often alluded with pleasure to the proposed performance of Elijah at Vienna and also at Leipzig, where he hoped to conduct the rehearsals. He consented, too, to hear one of the great vocalists of the age sing through the chief soprano part in the oratorio; and, on the 9th of October, he presented his friend with a new number of songs, among them the "Vergangen ist der lichte Tag" of Eichendorf, his last composition. In this piece, he is said to have constantly thought of his deceased sister; and, on his friend singing at his request the song we speak of, he turned pale, and was seized with a fainting fit, which deprived him of consciousness. He was taken home and put to bed directly. On the 28th of October, he had partially recovered from this attack, and was sufficiently well to walk with his wife. But the same fit seized him again shortly after this time, and with increased violence. He lay as before, motionless and bereft of consciousness, and, on coming to himself, complained to his physician of the violent pains in his head. Hope was not entirely given up, though the extreme danger was undeniable. In his few conscious moments and relief from wandering, he answered several questions, and appeared to recognise the faces of those standing by his bedside. None can ever forget the grief and consternation expressed in every face that met one in the public thoroughfares. Each enquired anxiously as for a dear friend, and I am sure that many and earnest were the prayers offered to God for his recovery; but man proposes and God disposes—and God in his wisdom had decreed otherwise.

On the 3rd of November, a fatal attack so utterly deprived Mendelssohn of consciousness, that he never again recovered it, and, at nine o'clock in the evening of the 4th of that month he breathed his last, peacefully, and without any appearance of pain or physical suffering. Shortly after death, his fine features recovered their usual serenity of expression, and, for the first few hours after the spirit had quitted its tenement, his nearest friends could scarce be pursuaded that the sleep was one from which he could not awake—so often love and hope are self deceivers. Bendemann and Hübner painted pictures of him, and Knaur, the sculptor, took a cast of the face. Grief for the loss of the great man seemed inconsolable. It fell on all like a public calamity, and hundreds of mourners pressed onwards to the house, to take a last look at that beloved countenance which had beamed and smiled on them so often. He lay peacefully in his narrow bed, decked around with palm branches and laurel crowns, the pious offerings of affection and emblems of his earthly glory.

On the 7th of November, at four o'clock in the afternoon, a Todtenfeier took place in the church of St. Paul. The hearse was drawn by four horses, and a profusion of flowers and laurels waved over the coffin. Schumann, David, Gade, Haussmann, Riez, and Moscheles, were pall-bearers. A procession walked before the coffin, consisting of the members of the orchestra, pupils of the Conservatory, Mendelssohn's nearest relations, the priests, representatives of the government, city, and university, several officers in uniform, and a long train of those who loved and honoured the great man's memory. With slow and solemn step the cortége reached the church. The coffin was placed in a black catafalque, lit with tapers, and the song in E from the fifth number of the Lieder ohne Worte, set by Moscheles for wind instruments, immediately began. The organist then preluded on that passage in the Antigone, where Creon brings in the dead body of his son Hæmon. After this, one of the members of the Conservatory placed a laurel crown at the foot of the coffin, the signal for a chorus in which all joined, "Erkenne mich, mein Hüter." Then followed the chorale from St. Paul, "To Thee, O Lord, I yield my Spirit." A short but impressive address, ended by a prayer, was delivered by the officiating priest, Mr. Howard, when the choir gave the chorus after the burial of St. Stephen, "See, we count them happy which have endured." The blessing was then given, and the final chorus from Bach's Passions Musik—"Wir setzen uns mit Thränen nieder, und rufen dir im Grabe zu: Ruhe sanfte, sanfte ruh," ended this imposing ceremony. When the crowds had left the church, a solitary figure, clad in deep mourning, was seen to enter, and kneel by the coffin in silent devotion. It was she, the loving partner of Mendelssohn's joys and sorrows, who came to pay the last tribute of earthly affection. The precious remains were removed by night to Berlin. When the train arrived, during midnight,

* This must be an error. At least the Leipsig "Four" have given no account of a quartet in D minor.

Digitized by Google

at Cöthen, a number of musicians received it with a chorale, and at Dessau, an hour afterwards, Frederick Schneider, the venerable Nestor of musicians, appeared uncovered on the platform of the station, and a body of singers ready with a dirge composed by the old man for the occasion. At last, the coffin was brought to Berlin, and met by the cathedral choir with the chorale, "Jesus, meine Zuversicht." The same sad strain was repeated as the funeral train moved on to the churchyard, where a solemn ovation was made by Berduscheck, preceding the hymn, "Wie sie so sanft ruhn," and a composition by Grell, "Christ is the Resurrection." The coffin was then lowered into the family vault, where Mendelssohn sleeps peacefully by his sister's side.

Seldom have expressions of public sorrow been so marked at the death of any artist in ancient or modern times, and I can only compare the general feeling with that on the death of Raphael, as related by Vasari. In England, as well as Germany, there were demonstrations in honour of Mendelssohn's memory. Taubert, the capellmeister at Berlin, arranged a programme with a view to remind the Berlinese of what Germany had lost.

After the funeral march from the Eroica, a symphony of Beethoven, and a "Kyrie," the symphony in A minor, the overtures to the Hebrides and A Midsummer Night's Dream, a psalm a capella, and the song, "Es ist bestimmt in Gottes' Rath," were given, the last five pieces being the works of Mendelssohn. On the 15th of November, Elijah was given for the first time in Vienna. All the solo singers and members of the chorus were dressed in deep mourning, and the desk where Mendelssohn was to have conducted his own oratorio was hung with black crape. On it were placed a copy of the score and a single chaplet of laurels, while Schmidt directed the performance from another desk in front of the orchestra. On the 17th of November, the same oratorio was given at Exeter Hall, in London, "in piam memoriam" of the musician, who, "though dead, yet speaketh." The Dead March in Saul preceded the performance of Elijah, and several present appeared in mourning. The Society, I hear, intends to erect a statue of Mendelssohn, and the Queen of England and Prince Albert have contributed liberally to the fund necessary for its completion.* Great respect for his memory was, of course, shown at Leipzig. The concert, which had been postponed, in consequence of Mendelssohn's death, took place on Thursday, 11th of November. The programme was headed with these words, "Zum Gedächtniss des entschlafenen Mendelssohn Bartholdy." The first part comprised the hymn of Luther, "Verleih uns Frieden gnädiglich," the overture to Melusina, Eichendorf's "Vergangen ist der lichte Tag," motet, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace," the overture to St. Paul, and Beethoven's Eroica. The song of Eichendorf was given by the artist before alluded to, as the fervent admirer and friend of the great musician. She sang with wonderful self-possession and the deepest feeling. In the quartet of the motet, Schleinitz, who had not for years appeared in public, took a part, assisted by Pögner and Graban Bünau. The room was filled to overflowing, and, as crowds of mourners listened and adored, no hand was uplifted to applaud, nor voice to interrupt the silence so eloquent in itself, after the last notes of music only vibrated in the ears of memory. Cologne, Bremen, Magdeburg, Frankfort, Mainz, Breslau, Altenburg, and many other places, were forward in testifying their respect, and kings and queens were not slow in offering their tribute of esteem for departed genius. The Queen of England, the Kings of Prussia and Saxony, sent letters of sympathy to Mendelssohn's afflicted widow; that of the King of Saxony was in his own handwriting. No royal authority interposed to forbid a demonstration in honour of the artist's memory, if we except that of the present, "Kurfürst von Hessen." Let the worthy Spohr of Cassel console himself with the reflection that the memory of his departed friend and brother artist will live as long as hearts are found susceptible of all that is beautiful, elevating, and good. For the bright star of Mendelssohn had been kindled at the altar of duty, and not by the false fire of selfish aggrandisement. The one is extinguished in the blackness of darkness, but the other is a vestal flame which can never die—

———ἐργμασιν καλων ἔκτις
ἄσβεστος 'αεὶ.

* Good, confiding biographer!—Ed.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(*From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)

(Continued from page 298.)

CHAPTER XV.

(1782-1784.)

At the period we have now reached, when, with the first representations of Die Entführung, a new era for dramatic music had begun to dawn in Germany, Mozart paid less attention than ever to the clamour raised by his detractors, who were busy to disturb his happiness. He was on the point of being united to his beloved Constanze; but he had many difficulties to overcome, ere he could bring this about. It was a long time before his father would consent, and, when at last he yielded, the young lady's mother still obstinately held out, for some reason with which we are unacquainted. In consequence of this, Mozart-Belmonte was compelled, as in the opera, to elope with his Constanze, and conducted her to the Baroness von Waldstetten's. There the two lovers, shedding tears of joy, were united in the bonds of wedlock. The Baroness gave a princely supper, at which there was Harmonie-Musik for sixteen voices, the whole of which was composed by Mozart. On the following day, the newly-married couple dined with Gluck. Two days previously, the Entführung had been given at the express request of the celebrated veteran, who, completely superior to every feeling of jealousy, congratulated his rival on its success.

Mozart's marriage was attended with fresh expenses, which our hero was only able to meet by redoubling his exertions. We glean from his correspondence how he spent his time. All the morning was devoted to his scholars, the lessons beginning at nine o'clock and ending at two. After dinner, Mozart used to lie down for an hour. In the evening, he was nearly always invited to some musical party, most frequently to those given by Prince Esterhazy and Prince Galitzin. His numerous circle of acquaintances in the fashionable world, and the high favour in which he stood with musical connoisseurs, often enabled him to give soirées and public concerts, or Academies as they were then called, in the theatre.

As the time drew near for Mozart to become a father, he vowed, in the joy of his heart, that, if everything passed off well, he would compose a mass. When the moment of his wife's confinement was at hand, he proceeded to her room,

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

with pens, ink and music-paper. "What," I shall be asked, "could he work at such a time and under such circumstances?" —Yes—he set himself to the task, and wrote, too, with all his accustomed facility. Hearing his wife's cries, he flung aside his pen, hurried to her bedside, embraced, comforted and encouraged her, and returned to his work as soon as she was calmer. Would any one believe this possible? Did his powers stretch beyond those limits, only within which other men can produce masterpieces? Does not even the greatest genius require rest, silence, and the power of meditating undisturbed? At what was Mozart employed, while his wife lay stretched on a bed of pain before him, and her heartrending cries rang in his ears? On one of the six violin quartets which he dedicated to Haydn. The minuet and trio of the second quartet were just completed, when the first-born of the artist, whom, as we see, nothing could move, saw the light of day. We are indebted for this anecdote to Mozart's widow herself. The reader will naturally ask how our hero could work under such conditions. When Mozart noted down his music, as a general rule, he was scarcely more than a mere copyist. He composed in his head, without troubling himself about the time or place, or consulting his piano. When he once took up his pen, he had already composed what he wished to write down, and had merely to transcribe it fairly. It is for this reason that we find so few corrections and erasures in Mozart's manuscripts, and even in his first sketches. After the confinement of his wife, Mozart went with her on a visit to Salzburg. His journey, however, was very nearly being abandoned, in consequence of an event which throws a strong light on our composer's anything but flourishing financial circumstances. One of his creditors, whose demands he was, for the moment, unable to satisfy, was anxious to frustrate Mozart's intended trip. It was with the greatest difficulty that Mozart succeeded in getting rid of him, and, to this day, we are unaware of what means he employed to soften his stony heart; whether by entreaty, by promise of higher interest, by a skilful use of flattery, or, which is more likely, by borrowing the requisite amount from some one else. The result was, however, that the young couple set out on their journey. The sum owing amounted to thirty florins, imperial standard.

His happiness at once again beholding his old father, after an absence of two years, did not allow Mozart to forget the vow he had to fulfil. The votive mass, which had already been begun in Vienna, was completed in Salzburg, and performed there in St. Peter's church.

Scarcely had our composer laid down his pen, after completing the important work to which he had been impelled by religious sentiment and conjugal tenderness, when the call of friendship induced him to take it up again. One of his former colleagues, Michael Haydn, a brother of Joseph Haydn, had been ordered by the Archbishop to compose some duets for the violin and viola. Michael, however, fell ill, and was unable to write. When the appointed time arrived, the Archbishop sent for the duets. The sick man excused himself by referring to his state of health; but the Archbishop, who was not fond of excuses, immediately ordered that Michael's pay should be stopped—the surest means of restoring to health one who possessed nothing but his salary to satisfy the demands of the surgeon and apothecary.* Mozart, who visited the patient every day, found him in despair, and, on pressing him, was informed of the Archbishop's expressed resolution. It not being his habit to comfort with mere words, when he could assist by deeds, without telling his poor friend anything, Mozart hastened home, and, after two days' work, returned with the duets fairly copied out, and only wanting the name of Michael Haydn on the title-page, to be ready for presentation to the Archbishop. The secret was faithfully kept by both parties, and the Archbishop congratulated himself on his cleverness in having roused the genius of the composer and restored the invalid to health. Two of Michael Haydn's pupils, Schin and Otter, relate this anecdote in a sketch of their learned master's life.

"We often amused ourselves," they say, "in aftertimes, with the recollection of this work, the fruit of friendship, the original of which our master preserved as a holy relic, in perpetual memory of Mozart."

Some years later, the duets in question were published at Offenbach with the name of the real author, who, however, had no hand in the proceeding.

In the following year, 1784, the attention of the Viennese public was directed, in a remarkable degree, to Signora Strinassachi, a performer on an instrument which is seldom handled successfully by a woman. She was a celebrated violinist in her day. After playing before the Court, she obtained permission to give a concert in the Italian Opera-house. The Signora wished for a new Concertstück, which she might play in conjunction with some other artist worthy, by his reputation and talent, of such an honour. No one could satisfy her artistic vanity so well as Mozart, since no name would look better than his by the side of her own in a programme, and the fact of having such a partner would save her the trouble of looking for a composer, to write a piece adapted to her means, wishes, and intentions. She applied, therefore, to Mozart, with a request that he would write a sonata, for the violin and piano, and play it with her. Mozart appears to have been unable at any time to refuse an application of this kind, whether the favour was asked of him by one who was worthy or the contrary. He worked gratuitously for those who could not or would not pay, although the constant repetition of such demands on his good nature was often inconvenient, and sometimes actually disagreeable. They took up his time, without increasing either his reputation or his income. Many of these pieces, composed with such obliging readiness, are mere bagatelles, and unnecessarily swelled the catalogue of his works, besides showing all the marks of carelessness and haste. Some of them bear strong evidence of having been composed with an eye to the special defects of the artist or amateur for whom they were intended. The sonata, however, for Signora Strinassachi required greater care. The lady was really an exceedingly fine performer, and, in addition to this, Mozart was to play it with her himself. But, whether he could not find time, or felt no inclination for the work, he kept putting it off from day to day, until, at last, the morning before that appointed for the concert arrived, and not a note was written. As soon as the Signora heard that, even now, the sonata only existed in the bills, she rushed in a state of desperation to Mozart, whom she was fortunate enough to

* The reader will justly ask how it came to pass that artists like the members of the Salzburg chapel put up with such treatment? I will answer the question by giving the reasons assigned by Herr von Nissen: "What attracted and retained them," says that gentleman, "was the provisions, scanty although it might be, made for their widows, the presence of the court, and the comfortable and cheap living." I suppose that Herr von Nissen can only use the term "comfortable," inasmuch as the duties were not very severe.—A. SCHRAISHUON.

Digitized by Google

find at home, and assured him that she would not leave the house until he had written the violin part, at least. She had but that night and the following morning to practise it, and, moreover, it was indispensable that she should study it alone. Mozart, who as usual, had a great deal to do, forgot all about the rehearsal, and only made his appearance at the concert. Reproaches would have been useless—the danger was great, but inevitable. The performance of the sonata began. The public, who knew nothing about the real state of affairs, were lost in admiration at the wonderful manner in which the two artists played together and executed the most difficult passages. The Emperor, who occupied the imperial box, remarked that one of the two performers—it is very easy to guess which—had nothing but a sheet of white paper before him. His Majesty was not mistaken. Mozart, having arranged the whole of the part for the piano in his head, had not been able to find a moment, all day, to put it on paper. Joseph II. requested to see the music, and saw nothing on the double pianoforte lines but the divisions of the bars. "What! have you again let it come to this?" inquired the Emperor. "Yes, your Majesty," replied Mozart, "but there has not been a single note omitted." We may easily believe him.

[To be continued.]

FOREIGN.

PARIS, May 11th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Mad. Tedesco has made her re-appearance at the Grand Opera, as Fides in the Prophète. M. Roger, who has recovered from his sprain, was Jean de Leyde. A ballet is in rehearsal for Mad. Cerito, and will be produced before the Nonne Sanglante. The new three-act opera of MM. Scribe and Victor Massé, La Fiancée du Diable, will be given about the 15th inst., at the Opéra Comique. It is to alternate with L'Etoile du Nord. The Nina Pazza of Sig. Coppola has been produced at the Théâtre Italien. Its success was entirely owing to the singing of Mdlle. Alboni. The next novelty at the Théâtre Lyrique is to be a one-act opera by M. Ferdinand Poize, author of the buffo-operetta, Bonsoir, Voisin.—Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Hiver will shortly be produced at the Théâtre Français, with Mdlle. Augustine Brohan in the principal part. Among other works in perspective, are La Niaise of M. Mazères, for Mdlle. Madeleine Brohan, and the Minerve of M. Ponroy. The Comité de Lecture have, also, accepted a comedy by M. Bourgeois and a drama by M. Léon Gozlan. A new piece, in one act, Bertrand-c'est Raton, has been successful at the Vaudeville. It will be followed by another novelty, La Foire de l'Orient, a political squib, in which M. Delannoy will appear. Three new pieces—La Femme à trois Maris, La Queue de la Pôele, and La Question de l'Orient, have been produced with success at the Variétés. The Chinese jugglers, who have made a hit at the Porte St.-Martin, have got some rivals at the Hippodrome. La bonne Aventure, in which M. Frédéric Lemaître lately created such a sensation, continues its successful career at the Gaîté. Les Contes de la Mère l'Oie is the attraction at the Ambigu-Comique. A new piece called Les Guides de Kinross has been produced at the Délassements, from the pens of MM. Brisebarre and Antony Béraud. A one-act trifle by MM. Raymond Deslandes and E. Martin, Mariés sans l'être, was also brought out, a short time since, at the same theatre, which promises us very soon a parody on La Chine à Paris, under the title of Paris en Chine.—M. Jacques Offenbach gave a concert in the Salle Herz, assisted by MM. Alard, Hermann, Ponchard, Levasseur, and Mdlle. Andréa Favel. The second part of the concert consisted of a parable of M. Méry, entitled Aimons notre Prochain, acted by M. Brindeau, Mesdlles. Judith and Brindeau; and a new comic operetta, entitled Luc et Lucette, the words by MM. De Forges and Roche, and the music by M. Offenbach. The principal parts were sustained by M. and Mad. Meillet. The room was full. Two patrons of the arts, the Duke Edgard de Feltre, and his brother, the Count Alphonse de Feltre, died a short time since, to the regret of all who knew them. The younger of the two, Count Alphonse de Feltre, was passionately fond of music, which he cultivated with great assiduity. He had lessons of Reicha, and of Boïeldieu, who frequently assisted him with his advice and encouraged him by his approval. The Count first composed some light pieces, which have been much praised by M. Fétis. He subsequently produced, with M. Scribe, a comic opera, Les Fils du Prince, which was successful; and afterwards composed the Incendio di Babylonia. He was just completing a three-act opera, when he died. The Duke, who did not long survive him, has bequeathed his celebrated gallery of pictures to the town of Nantes, and the municipal authorities propose inaugurating the public opening with a grand musical festival, in which some of the works of the Count de Feltre will be executed by the principal artists of the capital. M. Auber has written to the Count's executors, asking them to let him have a complete copy of all the Count's productions for the library of the Conservatory of Music. The concert, which was to have been given some time since, for the purpose of raising a monument to the memory of De Balzac and Frédéric Soulié, was stoped, in consequence of an injunction obtained by De Balzac's widow, who said she was rich enough to pay for a monument to her deceased husband from her own pocket. The case has been brought to trial, and decided against the haughty widow, and the concert will take place shortly. Among other things, M. Reyer's Selam will be performed.

IBID (May 18th).—At the Grand Opera, Le Reine de Chypre has been revived, under the direction of the composer, M. Halévy, who conducted. The principal parts were sustained by MM. Roger, Massol, Bonnehée, Coulon, and Mad. Tedesco. The Emperor and Empress were present, and testified their approbation heartily.—At the Opéra-Comique, M. Ponchard has temporarily undertaken the part of Danolowitz, in L'Etoile du Nord, in consequence of the indisposition of M. Mocker.—The management of the Italiens has produced an opera hitherto unknown to the Parisian public, although it has been played at several theatres in Italy. It was composed in 1838, by Signor Coppola, and is entitled Nina pazza per Amore (the same subject which Paeisiello treated of yore.) It is not destined to have a great "run," the music being anything but first-rate. The principal attraction is in the acting and singing of Mdlle. Alboni, always—Alboni, that is, charming, clever, and inimitable. M. Reyer's new opera, Maître Wolfram, which has so long been in rehearsal, will, in all probability, be produced at the Théâtre-Lyrique, before you receive this letter. It will be supported by MM. Laurent, Grignon, Talon, and Mad. Meillet. M. Jules Séveste has re-engaged for the next season M. Carté, the tenor, a great favourite with the habitués, especially in the Si j'étais Roi of M. Adolphe Adam, and L'Organiste of M. J. B. Wekerlin.—At the Théâtre-Français, a young aspirant for histrionic distinction, Mdlle. de Mantelli, has made her début as Sylvia in Le Jeu de l'Amour et du Hasard, and Armande in Les Femmes Savantes. She is graceful and handsome, but has much to learn to become an actress.—M. Léon Gozlan's new piece, which, as I told you, in my last, has been accepted by the committee, is entitled Le Gâteau des Reines.—Mdlle. Rachel is, at present, with her sister Mdlle. Rebecca, at Pau. The Mémorial des Pyrénées says that the great tragedian is in treaty for a splendid estate near Pau, where she intends, some future day, to reside.—La Foire de l'Orient has been successful at the Vaudeville. The Emperor and Empress honoured this theatre with their presence last week. They have, also, been to the Variétés, where they assisted at a representation of La Question de l'Orient. M. de la Palisse is the title of a new vaudeville, which affords M. Arnal full scope for his eccentric talent. This amusing piece has been very successful. The Port-St.-Martin has revived the melo-drama of Victorine, ou la Nuit Porte Conseil. You may recollect that an English adaptation of this piece, with Mrs. Yates as the heroine, and John Reeves, Fred. Yates, Buckstone, and the late Mr. Hemming, in principal parts, had a long run at the Adelphi many years ago. A new theatre, under the name of Les Folies Concertantes, has been opened on the Boulevart du Temple, by M. Hervé, formerly conductor at the Vaudeville. Among other attractions there, we have an amusing burlesque symphony, entitled Un Compositeur toqué, of which M. Hervé has written the verses, the dialogue, and the music, and in which he himself performs, assisted by M. Josep Kelm.—M. Schulhoff has given his last concert in the Salle Herz, on which occasion he played a new sonata of his own composition. It was favourably received by a numerous and fashionable audience. M. George Jacobi, a pupil of M. Massart, also gave a concert in the same rooms. Most, if not all, of the performers, were pupils of the Conservatoire, and their zeal was, perhaps, greater than their talent. Le Docteur Vieuxtemps, which, as you are aware, was lately played before the Princess Mathilde, was selected for the benefit, which took place at M. Erard's, of M. Guglielmi, the Italian barytone, who was in London last season. An excellent concert was given by M. and Mad. Boulanger-Kunzé, supported by MM. Levasseur, Hermann, Paul Malézieux, Lefébure-Wély, Goria, Mad. Lefébure-Wély, M. Anatole Lionett, also, recited his Voyage aérien. The musical fête in memory of the Duke and Count de Feltre is announced to take place at Nantes to-morrow, the 15th. Mesdames Cabel, Alard, the sisters Dulcken, and M. Roger are among the artists who will perform some of the works of the deceased nobleman. M. de Nieuwerkerke's soirées musicales have been brought to a close, but it appears they are destined to be perpetuated by the pencil as well as the pen. The following statement, which has appeared in most of the Paris papers, may prove interesting to your readers: "A report has been going about that M. Biard, whose name is so popular, was employed on a very curious picture, the subject of which was Une Soirée chez M. Le Comte Nieuwerkerke, in the apartment of the Louvre, where the Count's Friday receptions are held. The plan was an excellent one for bringing together on a canvass of rather large dimensions—about seven feet long, by three-and-a-half high—a number of existing celebrities. The arrangement of the personages, belonging to various classes of society, offers a faithful representation of a friendly party. M. de Nieuwerkerke himself, stationed near the door, is receiving his guests; near him, several groups are already formed. The venerable M. Isabey, sen., is chatting with M. Prosper Mérimée and President Baroche; M. Horace Vernet is presenting Lieutenant Gérard, the celebrated lion-killer, to Baron Desnoyers; M. de Morny is listening to M. Auber, while, further on, MM. Ingres, Flandrin, and Meyerbeer are engaged in a discussion, to which Marshal Magnan is lending an attentive ear. M. Fould is addressing himself, with his accustomed urbanity, to several artists standing round him, and M. Fortoul is holding a dissertation with certain well-known archæologists. Scattered about the apartment are remarkable portraits of MM. Eugéne Giraud, Henriquel Dupont, Halévy, Frédéric de Mercey, Camille Doucet, and one or two ambassadors, who are always delighted to attend the Friday receptions in the Louvre. Among them is Veli Pacha. There are, also, two souvenirs; those of Pradier and Visconti. The middle of the apartment is occupied by a magnificent table, beyond which is a piano, with the instruments for a quartet, about to be played. In this part of the picture are MM. Roger, Ponchard, and several other artists, whose talents augment the attractions of these weekly meetings. M. Biard has treated in the cleverest manner all the accessories which adorn the apartment—the rich hangings on the walls, the splendid chandelier, the carpet, fauteuils, etc. The general arrangement of the picture is very happy, and we have no doubt it will be one of the most curious and interesting works in the exhibition of 1855."

Digitized by Google

M. Hector Berlioz has returned from his tour in Germany. A very interesting ceremony is announced for the 26th, in the church of Saint Eustache, namely: the inauguration of the magnificent organ, built by M. Ducroquet, to replace that destroyed by fire in 1844. The Association des Artistes Musiciens will lend its valuable aid, assisted by some of the first organists of the capital, and by MM. Roger, Battaille, and Mdlle. Caroline Duprez, as vocalists.

VIENNA, May 9th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—In honour of the Emperor's marriage, Rossini's cantata, The Journey to Rheims, altered by Herr Merelli, to suit the occasion, was produced at the Imperial Opera House with great splendour. The first artists of the theatre sang in it. A Jubel-Ouverture, by Herr Carl Haslinger, has been performed in celebration of the same event. The composer has taken the Austrian and Bavarian national melodies as the basis of his work.—Signor Braga, first violoncellist from the Conservatory at Naples, has given a concert, in the room of the Musikverein, assisted by Mad. Borghi-Mamo, Herren Debassini, and Mamo. He made no sensation, while the two gentlemen were very bad. Mad. Borghi-Mamo was the only person who acquitted herself to the satisfaction of the audience.—At a concert given by Herr Seuffert, Beethoven's trio in G major, for piano, violin, and violoncello, his sonata in F, for piano and violin, Mendelssohn's pianoforte Allegro Brillant for four hands, and, lastly, the Hommage à Handel, by Moscheles, were performed. Herr Seuffert was assisted by Herren J. Dachs, L. Strauss, C. Schlesinger, and Fräulein Anna Capponi; Herren Lechner, Baur, Legat, and Panzer, Liedertafel singers.—The well-known Dr. Saphir gave an entertainment in the Theater an der Wien, which, though not actually a concert, nearly resembled one. It was entitled an Academie (which, by the way, was the name given to Mozart's concerts in former days.) Mad. Medori sang the "Gnadenarie," from Robert the Devil, Herr Géraldy, "Le Vieux Caporal," and Herr Steger, a Hungarian Lied by Herr Erkel, while Herren Heller and Rappoldi played a duet for two violins. Dr. Saphir read two or three of his own peculiar and humorous creations. The theatre was so full that the orchestra was converted into stalls. After the marriage of his Imperial Highness, the Grand Duke Carl Ferdinand, a concert was given by the Grand Duchess Sophia, at which Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt, Mad. d'Eichthal, and Herr Schlesinger were engaged. Herr Stockhausen has gone to Cassel to give concerts.—A Te Deum, by Herr Fr. Hölzl, Capellmeister of the cathedral of Fünfkirchen, was performed in honour of the marriage of the Emperor, in the parish church of Mariahilf.

IBID (May 15th.)—The favourite work at the Opera House this season is Verdi's Rigoletto, which is played regularly twice a week. Rossini's Barbiere has been revived, with Mad. Borghi-Mamo as Rosina, in which character she has made a "hit." Anna Bolena has also been revived, but, owing to the incapacity of the performers generally, did not meet with success.

Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt's concerts are as attractive as ever. At the sixth, the room was so crowded, that the heat was suffocating. Besides the well-known bravura air from Beatrice di Tenda, and a Berglied, the "nightingale" sang the gypsy's rondo from M. Meyerbeer's Vielka (Camp of Silesia), a Volkslied of Carl Maria von Weber, and a Wiegenlied of Herr W. Taubert. Herr Goldschmidt was not particularly happy in his execution of Chopin's scherzo in B flat minor, on the piano, but was more successful in two Lieder ohne Worte of Mendelssohn, which are easier to play. Mad. Rettich filled up some of the pauses by declaiming three poems, in one of which, Her von Halm's Mütterlein, she was warmly applauded.—A grand concert has been given by the members of the Akademie der Tonkunst, to the founders and supporters of that institution, in commemoration of the Emperor's marriage. The concert began with a prologue written for the occasion by Dr. J. R. Vogel, and recited by Fräulein Purkinje. The principal feature of the evening was the performance of four choruses, under the direction of Herr Lorenz Hauptman, the master of singing, which were admirably given and well selected. The first was from Handel's oratorio of Hercules, the second from Rossini's Semiramide, the third from Herr Schumann's Pilgerfahrt der Rose, and the fourth, with recitative and bass-solo, from John Sebastian Bach's church cantata, "Am Feste der Beschneidung Christi." Among the solos were Susanne's aria from Figaro, some lieder of Mendelssohn, Herr Schmidtler's Sängerkönig, and Fesca's Wanderer, etc. The instrumental part of the programme consisted of one of Beethoven's sonatas for pianoforte and violoncello, and a Fantaisie Brillante, by Professor Benesch.—Herr Géraldy gave his farewell concert in the room of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde on the 7th inst.

HANOVER.—Fräulein Johanna Wagner has made her appearance as Romeo.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN, May 9th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—There has been nothing new at the Opera House this week, and the concert season is over. Mad. Köster has appeared as Armide, in Gluck's opera of the same name, and Mad. Herrenburger as Theophila in the Crown Diamonds. Fräulein Krall, too, has sung in the Sonnambula and Don Juan. She was more successful in Bellini's music than in Mozart's, for which her voice is less suited. Herr Theodore Formes sustained the part of Elvino for the first time, with great success. Herren von Kolb and von den Osten have given their last soirée for the season. The programme included Beethoven's violoncello sonata, Op. 17, in F, played by Herren von Kolb and Wohlers, a romance for three violoncellos, by Herr Wohlers, played by himself, Herren Vienner and Daubert, and a Lied ohne Worte by Mendelssohn, played by Herr von Kolb. Herr von den Osten and Fräulein Schultz sang some popular songs. There has been, for some time past, an association among the students for the execution of sacred vocal music in the University church. This has worked so well, that measures have been taken to establish an institution of a similar description for the performance of sacred instrumental music, and a large number of members have already been enrolled. Some of the singers of Stern's Gesangverein gave a performance of Radziwill's Faust for a charitable purpose. The choruses were magnificent, and the solos well given by Herr Otto. The room was crowded. Handel's Israel in Egypt is announced by the same society for the 10th instant. M. Meyerbeer, the celebrated composer, is shortly expected from Paris, after a very long absence from this capital.

IBID (May 16th).—Herr Taubert's opera of Joggeli has been played for the fifth time at the opera-house. The house was far from full, but this is attributed by Herr Taubert's admirers to the fineness of the weather, which attracts people to the public gardens and other places of resort in the open air. They say, also, that the music is too scientific and profound for the masses, and can only be appreciated by connoisseurs.—Mad. Braunecker-Schäffer has concluded a successful starring engagement of thirty-five representations at Kroll's Theatre, where she is re-engaged for a lengthened period. M. Auber's Opera, Haydée, has been produced for the first time. It is exceedingly well put upon the stage, both as regards dresses and scenery. The singers, too, exerted themselves to the utmost. The success was not a matter of doubt for a single instant.—The members of Herr Jähn's Musikverein lately gave a very good concert. The programme was interesting, and the execution of the various pieces highly satisfactory. The solos were sung by young ladies, pupils of Herr Jähn. A concert of sacred music has been given in the Jacobikirche, under the direction of the organist Herr Hauer, for the benefit of those whose property was destroyed by fire, some time since, in Alt-Landsberg. Mad. Herrenburger-Tuczek, and Herr Theodore Formes gave their services on the occasion. Among other things, Durante's Magnificat was performed. The Tonkünstler-Verein have held a general meeting, Herr Jul. Weiss in the chair, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Krankencasse, or Sick Fund, lately sanctioned by the Government. The object of the fund is to afford pecuniary assistance, in cases of illness, to such members of the association as reside in Berlin, and have paid a specified monthly subscription. I extract, from the last report, the following particulars respecting the musical works in the Royal Library at Berlin, in the years 1851, 1852, 1853 :—

"The musical works received, during this period, amount to 722. The greater and more valuable portion, namely, the collection of the Count von Voss, who died in 1821, was presented to the Institution by His Excellency the Count von Voss-Buch. The library is especially rich in sacred works, and contains a large number of Italian compositions, sacred and profane, dating from the 16th down to the latter part of the 18th century."

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—The rehearsals for the Rhenish Musical Festival, which will take place, in this town, during three days of Whitsuntide, are zealously going on, notwithstanding the warcry sounding in the ears of our eastern and western neighbours. It seems, on the contrary, as if the actual political troubles were a stimulant more for the undertakers of this feast to celebrate it with more than usual solemnity. So at least it would appear, from the richness of the programme and the zeal manifested by the numerous competitors (there are at least 500 members of the chorus and orchestra) in the serious study of the masterpieces to be performed. Among these, we may mention Handel's Israel in Egypt, Mozart's Davidde Penitente, and Beethoven's Symphony in A major, with several first-rate works of Gluck, Mendelssohn, Lindpaintner, etc. The last-mentioned composer, whose eminent talent as conductor has but lately been so fully appreciated by the London public, will take the direction of the festival. Mad. Anna Caradori, Mad. Sophie Foerster from Berlin, Herr Pischek, M. Vieuxtemps, and other distinguished artists, have promised their co-operation. A great and prosperous festival is anticipated.

MILAN.—La Sonnambula has been highly successful at the Carcano, principally owing to the singing of a new tenor, Signor Danieli. He is very young, but, although wanting in energy, his execution is good, and his style irreproachable. Report also speaks well of the Amina of Signora Simonti. Donizetti's opera of Fausta was irrevocably damned on the first night at the same theatre. Another new tenor has appeared at Santa-Radegonda, Signor Miserocchi, who was much applauded. His voice, that of a tenor serio, is powerful and dramatic, more especially in the higher and lower notes. He made his début in Donizetti's Gemma di Vergy, which was received with more favour on the second representation than on the first, Madame Casali-Campagna having undertaken the principal part.—Beethoven's Sinfonia Eroica has been played at the Società degli Artisti, with extraordinary effect. The execution was good in every respect.

FLORENCE.—On the 4th of May, Verdi's Il Trovatore was given at the Teatro Nuovo, with great success. The company is considered good. Madame Fioretti acquitted herself much to the satisfaction of the public. The basso, Benedetti, was encored in the first aria; and the tenor, Giuglini, in the serenade behind the scenes. Mad. Goggi, who formerly played Azucena at the Pergola, is engaged at this house, and was well received. The miserere in the fourth act was encored twice, which may be attributed to the good singing of Signors Fioretti and Giuglini.—A concert was given at the Teatro del Cocomero (Anglicè Cucumber, a pleasant name for a summer theatre), by the pianist Andreoli, who was much applauded in Thalberg's fantasia on the Elisir, and in that on the Prophète, arranged by Fumagalli.

VENICE.—Verdi's I due Foscari continues to be well received. The tenor, Landi, is an especial favourite, and is considered as both the best singer and actor we have had in Venice for years. His Jacopo is described as highly dramatic. The prima donna, Spezzia, is also highly spoken of. The accounts of Coletti's Doge, which used to be so much admired in London, are not unmixed with censure.—A new opera, La Traviata, by Verdi, has been successful at the Teatro Gallo. Principal parts by Spezzia, Coletti, and Landi.

CASSEL.—Dr. Spohr has just celebrated his 70th birth-day, in the enjoyment of the best health. The evening before, the members of the orchestra, and the different singers at the theatre, gave him a serenade, including his fine notturno (one of his most important works for wind instruments), and several pieces from his operas. The public had heard of the intended compliment, and completely filled the garden of his house. After the serenade three hearty cheers were given. Dr. Spohr has received the Order of Bavaria.

WEIMAR.—A new symphony, entitled Maseppa, from the pen of Dr. Liszt, has been favourably received. The last operas performed at the theatre have been Euryanthe, Lucia, Montecchi e Capuletti, Lohengrin, and Tannhäuser. M. Vieuxtemps has given a concert in the theatre, for the benefit of the pension fund for members of the orchestra. He also played Beethoven's grand sonata for piano and violin, dedicated to Kreutzer, with Dr. Liszt, before the Court. Dr. Liszt has been named, by the Duke of Coburg-Gotha, Commander of the Order of Merit of the House of Ernest.

MAGDEBURG.—Indra has been given nine times.

Digitized by Google

GOTHA.—Capellmeister Drouet, the celebrated flute player, has obtained leave of absence for six months, and proceeds with his son, a pianist, and pupil of Mendelssohn—(What a number of "pupils" Dr. Mendelssohn must have had!)—to the United States, where he intends to make a professional tour. Herr Lampert will undertake provisionally his duties at the opera, as concertmeister.

HAMBURGH.—Seldom has this city rejoiced in so many tenors, of various degree of talent and renown, as at present. The list includes Herren Tichatschek, Young, Bielczizki, Mehrmann, (Prague); Remy (Pesth); Böttcher (Revel); and Schunk (Neustrelitz); besides Herren Eppich and Kapps of the Stadttheater. As a mark of respect to the composer of the music of the second part of Faust (Mr. Pierson, an Englishman, author of the oratorio of Jerusalem), the seventh representation was devoted to his benefit. Fräulein Louise Liebhardt, who has been starring here, very narrowly escaped suffocation from the fumes of charcoal, the other night. Luckily her mother heard her cries, and, although herself suffering from the effect of the smoke, had strength and presence of mind enough to throw open the windows.

MADRID.—A grand concert was given in the Conservatory of Queen Maria Christina, in the presence of the Royal Family, the ministers, and the first nobility, and did not end before two o'clock in the morning. M. Almagro conducted. Among the things performed were a psalm by Marcello, sung by 110 pupils of the institution, the introduction and first chorus of Haydn's Creation, a cavatina from Mercadante's Bravo, the andante and minuet from Beethoven's Septuor, the chorus and march from Handel's Judas Maccabæus, Beethoven's Christus am Oelberge, Dr. Spohr's overture to Jessonda, a chorus from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, etc., etc., etc.—Sig. Camillo Sivori, the celebrated violinist, has given a concert, which was most fully attended. Madrid is looking up in the musical line.

BRUNSWICK.—Fraulein Ney (from Dresden) has been very successful at the theatre here. She is not likely to go to England.

REGENSBURG.—The theatre opened on the 30th April, under a new management.

POTSDAM.—The Opera-Verein, which now numbers about 120 members, gave a private concert, a short time since, at which the scene of the Furies from Gluck's Orpheus, and Mendelssohn's music to Racine's Athalie were performed. Between these two great works, Rosina's cavatina from the Barbiere, the duet between Rocco and Pizarro, from Fidelio, and a song by Herr Franz Schubert, "Der Hirt auf dem Felsen," were sung.

ERFURT.—The members of Soller's Musikverein have produced in the Predigerkirche a new oratorio entitled Das Gedächtniss der Entschlafenden; the words by Dr. Bresler, and the music by Herr Markull of Danzic. The execution was highly satisfactory.

MUNSTER.—Herr Eduard Franck, teacher of the piano in the Rheinische Musikschule at Cologne, has been playing in concerts with success.

COLOGNE.—Ferdinand Hiller has resigned his post as professor of singing in the Musikverein, in consequence of a wish expressed by the committee that he would show greater zeal in the fulfilment of his duties. Herr Reinthaler, teacher in the Musikschule, has temporarily undertaken the office.

KÖNIGSBERG.—Herr Gungl has been here with some of the members of his orchestra. Having received the assurance that, in spite of the outbreak of the war, the public had by no means lost their taste for music, he gave three concerts in Riga, and then proceeded to St. Petersburgh.

DANZIG.—Dr. Spohr's Faust has been revived. The number of operas produced here during the winter season amounted to thirty-two, sixteen of which were by German composers.

MUNICH.—Fräulein Schwarzbach, from Vienna, has been starring as Maria, in the Daughter of the Regiment. Verdi's Rigoletto has been very successful. It is beautifully put on the stage, and the scenery and dresses reflect the highest credit on the management.

COLOGNE.—Herr Ander has been starring here with success. He appeared as Lionel, in Herr Flotow's Martha, and as Stradella, in the opera of the same name.

PESTH.—At the last Philharmonic Concert, the orchestra, under Capellmeister Erkl, played Beethoven's symphony in B flat.—Herr Steger, the tenor, from Vienna, has appeared in the Nationaltheater, as Ernani.—Herr Kern's opera Benvenuto Cellini has pleased the public so much that it bids fair to become a stock piece. M. Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord is already in rehearsal.

THE HAGUE.—The season before Easter was brought to a close by M. Meyerbeer's Huguenots, in presence of the Queen and the whole Court. Mdlle. Geismar sang the principal part. Mad. Nissen-Salomon gave a grand concert, some little time ago, and afterwards sang in the Society Felix meritis at Amsterdam. She left immediately for London. (Where she has been for some time.—ED.)

STOCKHOLM.—M. D'Aubert's concert came off on Palm Sunday. The programme was excellent, including, among other things, several pieces from Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream, and Beethoven's overture to Leonora. The artists of the Theatre Royal have also given a grand concert.—Concertmeister A. Bärwald has composed a military concerto for violin and orchestra, and dedicated it to the Empress of the French.

ERFURT.—Herr Adolphe Golde, the pianist and composer from Berlin, has played here in public, and been well received.

DÜSSELDORF.—Herr Ander has been singing at the theatre, and Mdlle. Theresa Milanollo playing solos on the violin.

KÖNIGSBERG.—The Capellmeister at the theatre, Herr L. F. Witt, gave a vocal and instrumental concert lately. In addition to his regular orchestra, he procured the bands of the third and fourth regiments of Infantry and of the Artillery. Among the principal attractions in the programme were a Capriccio brillante by Mendelssohn, and M. Meyerbeer's Fackeltanz.

BONN.—Owing to the exertions of the Gesangverein "Concordia," a grand singing festival will take place in the month of August. The invitations have already been issued, and the municipal authorities will do all in their power to make the affair go off brilliantly.

MAYENCE.—Graun's Tod Jesu has been given by the Liedertafel and the Damengesangverein united.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-ODER.—Robert and Bertrand, a ballet, has been produced here for the first time.

AUGSBURG.—Herr Wagner's Tannhäuser has been represented six times, with Mad. Moritz as Elisabeth.

LEIPSIC.—Herr Marschner's Der Vampyr has been given. The general reception of it was rather cool, although several pieces were applauded.

DARMSTADT.—Herr Wagner's Lohengrin has been produced with the greatest care, under the direction of Herr Schindelmeisser. The mise-en-scène was excellent.

NAUMBURG.—Graun's Tod Jesu has been given by the Gesangverein, under the direction of Herr Wettig.

WIESBADEN.—A young aspirant for public favour, Fräulein Schmidtchen has made her début as Pamina, in Die Zauberflöte.

HAMBURGH.—Grétry's Raoul de Blaubart was given for the benefit of Herr Lachner. The Huguenots has been played with two artists, new to the public here: Fräulein Liphardt as the Queen, and Herr Young as Raoul.

STUTTGART.—The Huguenots has been performed here with Mad. Marlow as Alice. Mad. Palin, after playing for the last seven months, proceeds to Paris, not having been able to arrange a permanent engagement.

HANOVER.—M. Vieuxtemps has been giving concerts, and Fräulein Janda, from Vienna, has made her début in Lucrezia Borgia.

WEIMAR.—Mad. Schröder-Devrient has been starring as Alice.

MUNICH.—The opera season has commenced with Mozart's Don Juan. Rigoletto has been produced for the first time.

ROTTERDAM.—The Niederländischer Verein zur Beförderung der Tonkunst will give a festival next July, in commemoration of the 25th year of its existence. The preparations are on a grand scale. A hall is to be erected capable of containing 4,000 persons. The orchestra is to accommodate 800 members, and the choruses are to be executed by 600 singers, of both sexes. Herr Verhulst will be the conductor, and the most celebrated artists have already promised their assistance to sing the solo parts. Hopes are entertained that his Majesty the King of Holland, who is a member of the Verein, will honour the festival with his presence, accompanied by the Queen.

PRAGUE.—A new opera, entitled Die Bilderstürmer, by Herr Kittl, the director of the Conservatorium, has been brought out with great success. The good people of Prague are in ecstacies about their townsman's music.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY CONCERT.

THE second morning concert for the exhibition of the students (on Saturday, the 29th ult., in the Hanover Square Rooms), was a model concert. The programme really exhibited the pupils—as singers, players, and composers—and, in many instances, to advantage. This is the way to make the value of the Royal Academy of Music understood. Show what the pupils can do, and their number will increase if that can is only respectable. The can was more than respectable on this occasion. The following was the programme :—

PART I.—Overture (M.S.), (The Tempest)—Ann Baird Spratt.* Recit., "Ah! tardai troppo;" Aria, "O luce di quest' anima;" Miss Bignell (Linda di Chamouni)—Donizetti. Madrigal (M.S.), "Fair Amaryllis"—C. Steggall, Mus. D., Associate. Concerto (M.S.), Pianoforte, Mr. Baumer, King's Scholar—Baumer, K.S.* Duet, "Come, be gay," Miss Attfield and Miss Ellen Williams (Der Freischütz)—Weber. Song, "Though Clouds by Tempests," Miss Whyte (Der Freischütz)—Weber. Concertino Clarionet, Mr. Godfrey—Weber. Duetto, "Ah! Tu non sai," Miss Freeman and Mr. Bolton (Margherita d'Anjou)—Meyerbeer. Selection (from M.S. opera, "The Spanish Student"): Interlude; Romance, "Good Night," Mr. Bolton; Chorus, "On the Top of a Mountain;" Ballad with Chorus, "Loud sang the Spanish Cavalier," Miss Ellen Williams; Finale Chorus, "We come to sing"—O'Leary.*

PART II.—Concerto in G minor (First Movement), Harp, Mr. Cheshire—Parish Alvars. Finale to First Act of Oberon; Principal parts by Miss Ellen Williams and Miss Trickett—Weber. Recit., "E Susanna non vien!" Aria, "Dove sono;" Miss Hughes (Figaro)—Mozart. Concerto in E Minor (First Movement), Pianoforte, Miss Southgate—Chopin. Madrigal, "In the Merry Spring"—Ravenscroft, 1613. Aria, "Una vergine," Mr. Castellani (La Favorite)—Donizetti. Overture (M.S.), "The Sprite"—J. S. Stone.*

Conductor, Mr. Lucas. Principal violin, M. Sainton.

* Students.

Miss Anne Baird Spratt is in the class of Mr. Lucas for composition, and does credit to her master. The overture to the Tempest has merit, though it is somewhat dry, and scarcely suggests any images that have connection with the enchanted play of Shakspere. It was not well played. Mr. Baumer (K.S.) learns composition under Mr. Cipriani Potter, and the pianoforte under Mr. Dorrell, and reflects honour on both those excellent professors. The concerto and the performance were equally full of promise. Dr. Steggall's madrigal is quaint; but it was so ill sung by the ladies and gentlemen of the chorus, that we could not make head or tail of it. The selection of the MS. opera of Mr. O'Leary might have been more effective, had the execution, vocal and instrumental, been such as to give it a fair chance. At present, we would rather not venture an opinion about it. Mr. O'Leary has the best of masters in Mr. Potter; let him strive hard to profit by his instructions. Mr. J. S. Stone's overture, The Sprite, though it indicates thought and talent, is not sprightly. He, too, is a pupil of Mr. Potter; let him, &c.

Mr. Godfrey (pupil of Mr. Lazarus) played Weber's clarionet concertino very well; and Mr. Cheshire (pupil of Mr. J. B. Chatterton), with stricter time and better accent, would have played the movement from the late Parish Alvars' extremely clever concerto, more than very well. Mr. Cheshire must learn to be more at his ease, less fidgetty, before the public. Miss Southgate, a very improving pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes, did herself vast credit by her spirited and really able execution of the very difficult movement of Chopin. She too, however, has got nervousness to vanquish; it stands in her way to excellence.

The vocal display was, on the whole, much as usual. Miss Bignell (pupil of Sig. Negri), is not yet anything like equal to "Oh luce di quest' anima." Her voice is a nice little soprano for all that. Miss Attfield and Miss Ellen Williams (both pupils of Sig. Crivelli) sang the delicious duet from Der Freischütz very prettily. Miss Williams has a remarkably agreeable mezzo soprano voice, and is improving rapidly. The lovely song from the same opera was scarcely suited to Miss Whyte (pupil of Sig. Garcia), who is, nevertheless, not without promise. Miss Freeman (pupil of Sig. Crivelli) was far more efficient than Mr. Bolton (pupil of Mr. Cox), in the duet from Meyerbeer's Italian opera (which like its successor, Il Crociato in Egitto, ought to have been essayed long ago at one of our Italian theatres). The finale to Oberon, in which Miss Ellen Williams and Miss Trickett (pupil of Sig. Crivelli) took part, was well enough, as far as the ladies were concerned, although the airs were too much for one of them; but alas! for the ensemble! Miss Hughes (pupil of Sig. Crivelli) is decidedly clever, and sang "Dove sono" with a great deal of feeling. Her articulation, however, wants distinctness. Ravenscroft's pretty madrigal was much applauded; but it was sung in such a manner that we could not help ejaculating the last line but one—"Fye, away, fye, fye!" Sig. Castellani (pupil of Sig. Crivelli) gave "Una vergine" without finish, but by no means without expression. His voice is a tenor of beautiful quality, and of great capability, if put to good use. He was by no means so nervous as at the first concert. Tant mieux. We shall expect much of him.

On the whole, with all its drawbacks, this concert, we repeat, was a model concert.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.

THE second concert attracted a very numerous audience to the Hanover Square Rooms on Saturday afternoon. This society, though only a year and a-half old, has already acquired celebrity. Connoisseurs and professors of music flock to the concerts, and all we hope is, that they pay for their places. The selection was as follows :—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (Coriolanus) | Beethoven. |
| Concerto, Pianoforte, Op. 113, Herr Pauer | Hummel. |
| Symphony, Letter Q | Haydn. |
| Concert-Stück, Flute, Mr. R. S. Pratten | Pratten. |
| Overture, M.S. | C. Potter. |

Conductor—Mr. Alfred Mellon.

This kind of programme, as we have stated before, is a model worth imitating. The concert was announced to begin at half-past three, but really commenced a little after three; so that we lost the Coriolanus and the first movement of the pianoforte concerto—the well-known one in A flat. Those upon whom we can rely, however, assured us that the performance of Beethoven's most admirable overture was quite worthy of the reputation of Mr. Alfred Mellon's band. Herr Pauer played the last two movements of Hummel's concerto (all we heard of it) with great power and brilliancy; but his execution was scarcely so finished as usual. He may have been out of practice—which will happen at times to the greatest of performers. At the end of the concerto—which is little better than a string of sparkling and elegant passages, thoroughly calculated to display the qualities of a good pianoforte (and Herr Pauer performed on one of those matchless instruments which are now issuing from the manufactory of the Messrs. Broadwood, with such unprecedented celerity)—there was very great applause, and the skilful pianist was unanimously recalled. The symphony of Haydn (in G) is one of his most complete and fascinating. The finale is a masterpiece of playful grace and contrapuntal ingenuity. The allegro is large and spirited, the adagio flowing and expressive, and the minuet and trio as quaint as could be desired. One objection made, and the execution of this symphony may be pronounced to have been perfect. Our objection is—that the finale, marked presto, was not taken presto, nor anything like presto. To all the rest we have not a word to oppose. The applause at the end was uproarious, and the finale was repeated by universal desire. We have already praised, on a former occasion, the clever Concert-Stück for the flute of Mr. R. S. Pratten, who is playing better than ever, this season. His performance on the present occasion was highly successful. Mr. Cipriani Potter's MS. overture was capitally given. It is a thoughtful, spirited, and original work, and instrumented with a brilliancy which never fails to distinguish the orchestral compositions of that accomplished musician. It was received with great favour. Mr. Alfred Mellon, who conducted with his accustomed readiness and decision, is to be commended for having adopted the plan of introducing, at every concert, some work by an English composer.

GENOA.—Bellini's Sonnambula has been received with enthusiasm. The tenor, Carrion, was much applauded.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. AND J. H. (Wolverhampton).—The paper did not come to hand. We assure our correspondents that the neglect of which they complain has been entirely unintentional.

AN ADMIRER OF MADAME ROSINA STOLTZ is informed that that eminent dramatic singer is at the present moment in London.

W. B., GRAY'S INN.—We admire the verses of our correspondent, and entirely agree with the sentiment they embody; but, for particular reasons, we are unable to publish them. The loss is ours, and that of the admirable and accomplished lady to whom they are addressed.

ERRATUM.—In our account of the Sheffield Vocal Union Concert, for Mr. G. J. Worsley, read Mr. G. J. Crossley.

MR. H. C. COOPER.—We are requested to state that, at the second performance of Beethoven's Mass in D, Mr. H. C. Cooper, not M. Sainton, played the violin obbligato in the "Benedictus."

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 20TH, 1854.

WE have entered the field of discussion, and must maintain our ground. There is plenty of room, without trespassing on our neighbour's estate, or even sitting cross-legged upon his wall. Let us use the space allotted to us, and chalk out a plan for future proceedings.

Since the last fortnight, we have been deluged with letters on the subject of English musicians in general, and English Opera in particular. (By English, let it be understood, we mean British; but we dislike the term, which has been applied to all sorts of common places.) From the crowd of suggestions they contain, however, we are unable to select one to the purpose—one that holds out the slightest possibility of accomplishment. We have received a communication, among several others, from the pen of an esteemed contributor; but we must own that we do not entertain any great notion of the scheme he has proposed. Suppose that Mad. Jenny Lind, with her usual generosity, consented to appear for a few nights on the English stage, and in English opera, the result would, no doubt, be the accumulation of a considerable sum of money for the treasury of the projected establishment. But quid postea?—what next? Where could an attraction be found, of sufficient importance and interest to replace Mad. Lind after her departure? We are decidedly adverse to the hot-bed ("star") system, and protest that, unless a national theatre can thrive upon its own claims to public attention, there had better be none at all. We do not by any means object to foreign singers; on the contrary, we should like them to join us—but as permanent members of the establishment, not otherwise. The more talent we can bring together for the executive department the better. The object in founding a national Opera would be, of course, to have the works of native composers brought before the public in a proper style of completeness and general excellence. But the mere weight of Mad. Jenny Lind's name, to say nothing of her talent, for a few representations, would produce a reaction that might prove fatal. Even Her Majesty's Theatre, where there were so many great singers, hardly ever recovered from the Lind-triumphs of '47, '48, and '49. To recover from triumphs seems an odd expression, but, in the present case, it is pertinent enough. These triumphs were a fever, and the fever, once subsided, left the pulse of the public so faint and low, that it is only now beginning, in 1854, to regain its moderate and healthy action.

If, however, our correspondent merely intends that Mad. Lind should give a series of concerts for the benefit of our musicians, whereby to form the basis of a fund by aid of which a National Opera might be founded, our objection of course will not hold. But we have another, and a stronger, to make. The funds once raised by the charity of a foreigner, the question would arise as to how they should be appropriated, to whom entrusted, and under whose direction expended. Mad. Jenny Lind devotes a thousand or two thousand pounds for the purpose of instituting an English Opera. Granted; but who represents the cause of the whole body of musicians? What number of gentlemen could reasonably step forward and say, "We are English Opera—give the money to us?" Or, on the other hand, presuming that half-a-dozen or a dozen professors associate, under the banner and title of "National English Opera," with what pretext can they ask Mad. Lind for £1,000—which represents her services for two concerts? She would answer them, and with reason, that no such institution existed—that is, no institution acknowledged by the community at large. It is very easy for a handful of professors to call themselves English Opera, and, forgetting they are but individuals, confound themselves with the body-musical. Their application to Mad. Jenny Goldschmidt would be little better than asking her to make them a present, which they have no more right to do than any other handful of professors. Indeed, emboldened by the success of the first handful, a second handful might readily come to Mad. Jenny Goldschmidt, and ask her for a second £1,000, under the same pretext; since the one handful would have quite as much right to dub themselves English Opera as the other. It is unhappily but too well known that our musicians are split into factions—factions so violently opposed to each other that we utterly despair of any scheme of association ever meeting with the approval of the large majority. In any case, however, the notion of twenty or thirty gentlemen going to Mad. Jenny Lind, to entreat her for £1,000, is preposterous and untenable; and, as we have hinted, the subsequent appropriation of the money would lead to squabbles that could only end in a general schism, or at best in a state of inaction similar to that at present indulged in by the committee of another and a very different kind of association, for whose specified object Mad. Jenny Goldschmidt did absolutely provide something more than that sum, although six years have elapsed and the Mendelssohn Testimonial is as much in embryo as if Mad. Jenny Lind had provided nothing at all. These and other considerations, which, if requisite, we shall advance on a future occasion, induce us to give our unqualified vote against the suggestion of our correspondent, even supposing, which we do not, that it could possibly be carried into effect.

A letter from another correspondent ("Lover of Music") for which we cannot find space, contains four objections to the scheme of a commonwealth, all of which are, we think, unanswerable. First, no set of professionals would risk the money; second, none could be found sufficiently disinterested to overlook considerations of individual advancement, and act for the general good alone; third, a great commonwealth has been attempted, and failed; fourth, a small one has been attempted, and failed most "lamentably." Let us hasten, however, to say that we had no more idea of a commouwealth than our correspondent. Our proposition, for some twenty musicians to club together and take Drury Lane Theatre, was simply directed to the special year, 1851, which, being the epoch of the Great Exhibition for all Nations, we considered to be an opportunity too good to let pass without something being tried. Out of this a plan more definite and likely might have sprung; but we never intended it to apply to a permanent establishment. The idea of petitioning Parliament (which "Lover of Music" advances) appears to us quite as "Utopian" as the Commonwealth which he derides. It is one thing to petition Parliament, another thing to have the petition "laid on the table," and a third to have the petition forgotten as soon as it is read; if, indeed, it be read. Besides, need we remind our correspondent, that the National Drama has no such support from Government, and that, consequently, the National Opera has no evident plea to claim it, and certainly no chance whatever to obtain it. Moreover, the feeling of this great nation is, and has ever been, that all speculations should subsist on their own unassisted merits. True, the French have their great theatres "subventionnés" by the government, and we are not disposed at present to enter into a discussion as to which is the better system, theirs or ours. It is worth observing, however, that, in spite of its subvention, the greatest theatre in Paris, the Théâtre de la Nation (Grand Opera) is in a declining state, and, but for the operas of a single composer (Meyerbeer—a foreigner), would, in all probability, have ceased to exist ere this.

Digitized by Google

A third letter, signed "Fiddlestick," we have inserted. But this being not immediately to the actual purpose, we shall examine hereafter.

Our object in the foregoing observations is to call attention to a question of immediate import to our musicians. Now is the time, we think, or never. A reaction is unquestionably going on in the public mind, and if the change cannot benefit, it surely cannot hurt us. In a worse condition, the English musicians can hardly be; it is possible they may improve it; but this depends wholly upon their own exertions. They must seize occasion by the "forelock," and though "better late than never" is a maxim not to be despised, it is quite possible to arrive "in time to be too late." Some new phenomenon may come, to occupy the public attention, and then adieu, once more, for years, to English Opera!

We have got to the end of our limits, and must "chalk out a plan for further proceedings" another time. Meanwhile our columns are open to those who may be inclined to communicate their notions on the subject—bearing always in mind that "brevity is the soul of wit," and that in the height of the Opera season our pages are more than usually crowded. Meanwhile Mr. Jarrett and the Royal Opera may possibly come to the rescue.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—As one of the suffering million who read the Musical World weekly, I must really protest against the complaints which you have lately been urging on behalf of the members of the musical profession, on the score of neglect and injustice experienced at the hands of the public. All such complaints by particular classes or crafts are not only unreasonable, and savouring to a certain extent of disloyalty; they are also foolish and vain. In these days of free trade, when the principles of supply and demand are so generally appreciated and acknowledged by producers and consumers of all kinds, it is, to speak mildly, a "mistake" for the purveyors of sweet sounds to avow so loudly and so lugubriously that their trade is at a discount. To take the most complimentary and consolatory view of the case, I would remind the now silent British Nightingale that it is not the first time in the world's history that genius has gone without reward, and supperless to bed, to dream of posthumous fame, from the simple fact of its being before—or behind—its age.

To talk about legislation coming to the rescue, is mere childishness. "Our Government," you say, "legislates for painters, for sculptors, for architects, for surgeons, for dentists and physicians, for men of letters, for merchants and tradesmen, for actors, for railway shareholders, and even betting men, but not for musicians. The body musical in England is overlooked." Now here is great ignorance of fact, followed by most false inference. There exists no special legislation at all in respect of some of the classes named—painters and sculptors for instance—and whatever there be in respect to the others is chiefly of a restrictive nature, enacted in the general interests of society, and more especially for its protection from empiricism, or fraud, or annoyance. And, in this sense, allow me to observe that "the body musical in England" has not been so entirely "overlooked" as you assert. Witness—to go no further back—the Act of George the Second for regulating and licensing "performances of music and dancing," imposing fine and tread-wheel upon all unauthorized executants; witness, also, a very commendable clause in the Metropolitan Police Act, for the suppression of the street-organ nuisance; both of them, special acts of recognition on the part of the legislature, to which painters, sculptors, and men of letters enjoy no parallel in their respective cases; whilst, on the other hand, the musician shares with the latter all the advantages of the copyright act, securing him the value of the fruit of his brain, whatever it may be.

When you talk of the "detrimental influence exercised by the foreign music most popular with our fashionable world," do you, for a moment, imagine it to be possible, by any exercise of ingenuity, to frame a statute which should counteract that "detrimental influence,"—alter the taste of the day—or, in spite of it, force the fashionable world to abandon Mozart, Rossini, and Verdi, for Balfe, Wallace, and Glover; with Smith, Brown, Jones, and Robinson, instead of Cruvelli, Mario, and Lablache, as "interpreters?" For the rest, this detrimental-foreign-influence complaint calls for a few words of plain English in defence of "our fashionable world," whom it charges with great wrong-doing, or great stupidity.

It is quite true that the introduction of the foreign opera has, and more particularly within the last half century, worked a complete, and, as I submit, a very salutary change in the public taste for dramatic music, and music generally. The province and attributes of the lyric drama have, by degrees, become understood amongst us as they were not heretofore; and in a sense, as I conceive, somewhat analogous to that which animated the tragedy of ancient Greece. I will not expatiate learnedly upon this matter; nor indulge in the numberless interesting reflections which it suggests. Without, however, going into the various points of distinction between this so-called "new" school of lyric drama and the "old English" opera of the "good old times," I would, with great deference to your superior erudition and judgment, remark that whereas, in the opera of the foreign model, the action of the drama itself, and every variety of passion and sentiment the progress of the story is capable of eliciting, are illustrated, enforced, and, as I may say, presented to the sense through the medium of music, occasions of repose in the action being seized for the introduction of arias, or "songs" properly so called—in the "good old English" opera, the drama was conducted in dull dialogue—meagre, pointless, passionless in itself, and invariably delivered in a tone of supreme contempt, and a manner of unsurpassable inefficiency, by the "eminent vocalists" engaged in the cast; who made a point of reserving all their energies for the songs with which their parts were interspersed; such songs being, as a rule, "introduced" precisely at points where the action of the story was naturally suspended, or forcibly interrupted for the purpose. In a word, in the one opera the music formed an essential part of a poetic structure, being indeed the very element of its life, the medium of its vocal revelation; in the other, it was used to embellish episodes, which were too often excrescences upon a structure devoid alike of poetic beauty, and passionate interest; in the one case, we had living flowers bursting into bloom upon a living tree, in the other, fictitous flowers upon a clumsy frame-work of sticks.

Digitized by Google

The outcry against Italian opera, at its first appearance amongst us, was loud and senseless;—the wits of the day, including the elegant and much over-rated Addison, lending aid to hunt it down with ill-considered but harmless ridicule;—for still, in spite of the alleged absurdity of lovelorn heroines singing themselves to death, indignant parents soliloquizing in an andante con brio, and sage senators discussing the affairs of state to an orchestral accompaniment, the music of the Italian scene, striking mysteriously but forcibly in unison with the passions depicted, came home to men's hearts and feelings, and produced a result which was altogether wanting in the more common-sensical and commonplace entertainments of the walky-talky ballad opera.

And what did our musicians, upon the occurrence of this strange but potent revolution in their art? Did they understand and sympathise with this great poetic movement? Did they seek to grapple with the grander requirements, to fill the larger province offered to them by it; and to direct, and charm, and control the public taste, in the new direction thus unexpectedly given to it? They did no such thing. They continued still to scoff idly and stupidly, at what they did not understand; and to compose ballad-operas for a public which had long begun to look upon this jejune fare with indifference, and eventually rejected it with scorn. Failing to secure the sympathies of an audience,—such sympathies of such audiences as genius should aspire to,—the "body musical" incontinently abdicated its higher and nobler province, and in search of pelf addressed itself to the music-shop, to the drawing-room, and to the boarding-school miss; and so, from a public bore, became a domestic nuisance. The system of clacquing and puffing, which attended this "new movement," and by which "the last new popular song" was brought into vogue, was almost as great an infliction as the song itself; and no wonder if, amongst it all, English opera and English music were at length voted a noisy impertinence, and an insufferable infliction; and that, in course of time, the lyric stage refused to perform the office of "advertising agent" to the music-publisher.

Under such circumstances as these, it is all very well for you to talk about the revival of the English opera, and to demand that "something" should be done in a sort of combined movement by the "body musical." I will only state my conviction that, unless the "something" done, whenever it is done, be of a very different character from anything that our "body musical" has been in the habit of doing, the result will only be, in its own particular case, to prolong disappointment, and heap loss upon loss—and, in the case of the poor paying public, to add insult to injury.

At present, the exertions of our "body musical" are, in the main, confined to those complicated abominations, Public Dimers, where, amidst the fumes of hot wine, they drive desperate men to unaccustomed acts of charity, and to Subscription Concerts, where speculative professors make unhappy fathers of families "bleed" afresh, for wrongs inflicted upon society, by teaching daughters the mysteries and miseries of vocalization, wherewith to add to the inherent horrors of the "evening party."

——Here I must pause; the subject becomes too real, too painful!—I have just passed a dreadful night!—so must reserve a few words about the social status of musicians, painters, etc., and on the claims, prospects, and patronage of art generally, for a future occasion.

Yours, obediently,
FIDDLESTICK.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—A correspondent in your last number, writing about organists, thinks that fifty guineas is a small salary. Permit me simply to reply, that it is a very large salary, and for this reason:—The number of working hours in the year, for which an organist receives fifty guineas, is at the most 400—that is, not quite sixteen days. Thus, an organist in the receipt of fifty guineas per annum, is in fact, paid at the rate of £1200 in the year, as will easily be seen by a simple calculation. Let me ask what other trade or profession is half as well paid?

I, myself, am personally acquainted with some of the first organists of the day, whose Church salaries vary from forty to eighty guineas per annum; but I can affirm, that not one is discontented with his pay. On the contrary, they all say, that not only do they receive a good salary in proportion to the time they give, but they have access to a splendid instrument on which they can teach their pupils. This is the case, I know, at many City churches, including St. Andrew Undershaft, and St. Sepulchre's, at the latter of which, the most talented living organist is not only not ashamed to perform for the sum of sixty guineas per year, but would not change his situation for twice the amount, so great the affection he entertains for his unequalled instrument. Your correspondent forgets that an organist (properly so-called) does not derive one-tenth part of his income from his church; if he did, then, indeed, would he be an underpaid man.

I think I have said enough to prove that organists as a body are not underpaid, and should you, sir, think the subject, and my letter thereon, worthy of publication in your estimable journal (which I do not), you will oblige

Your obedient servant,
WILLIAM CHARLES DALE.

Monday, 31, Gordon Square.

MRS. v. MADAME.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Allow me to call your attention to a practice that is gaining ground among our native artists, a practice in my opinion, and in that of many other of your readers, "more honoured in the breach than the observance," I mean the affectation of assuming foreign styles or titles; thus we have Madame Novello—is she more charming as Madame than she was as simple Miss Clara? though, having become the wife of a foreigner, she may have some reason for her assumption of a foreign style; but why not assume her legal foreign surname, as well as her legal foreign title? Then we have Madame Newton Frodsham—is her singing a whit more pleasing than it was as plain Mrs. Alexander Newton? but why Newton at all? She is certainly not legally entitled to that name, as she has become Mrs. Frodsham. Again, we have now

Digitized by Google

Madame Pyne Galton—this lady was well known, and I remember with pleasure her exquisite performances, as simple Miss Pyne. She was afterwards no less known and admired as a performer and teacher as Mrs. Galton; but now, following in the wake of the before-mentioned and others that could be named, she first calls herself Mrs. Pyne Galton—and then, Madame Pyne Galton! I would ask this lady, is she likely to be less known, less appreciated, or to have less sympathy as Mrs. Galton, the widow, than she does under the title and name she has, with small taste, and less legality, assumed? I could easily multiply instances, but enough has been shown to prove the practice. Pray, sir, raise your voice against this aping of foreign titles by performers who are really creditable to us as a musical nation.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,

May 15, 1854. CROCHET.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Saturday, the Barbiere was repeated for the second time, and attracted one of the most brilliant and crowded audiences of the season. Sig. Mario sang even better than on the Tuesday, and the "Ecco ridente," having being readjusted, went as smoothly and gracefully as ever. The whole performance was indeed delightful. Mad. Bosio was in her best voice, and sang exquisitely. Sigs. Lablache and Ronconi, more than ever rivals in fun and drollery, kept the house alive with laughter. Nor must we omit to notice a second time the highly characteristic performance of Sig. Tagliafico in Don Basilio, which has surprised all the habitués of the Royal Italian Opera, and raised the artist himself a step higher in the estimation of the public. But the performance of Il Barbiere di Seviglia by the Royal Italian Opera is consummate, and the cast one of the most powerful ever known. No doubt this masterpiece of comic opera will be frequently repeated during the season.

The third performance of Fidelio took place on Tuesday. The house was very full. The chorus is still at fault in the Prisoners' Chorus, which surely should be remedied at such an establishment, and with such a musical director. When Fidelio was first produced in England, at Her Majesty's Theatre, in 1832, the Chorus of Prisoners was invariably one of the grand features of the performance, and never failed to obtain an encore. Now, whether it be done at the Royal Italian Opera, or at Drury Lane, without instituting comparisons, the effect of the Prisoners' Chorus is next to nothing, and it passes off almost without a hand of applause. Is there no other cause for this more than inefficient execution? If there be, we begin to fear that the musical taste and feeling of the British public is degenerating.

The first night of I Puritani was looked forward to with no small degree of interest by the subscribers and the general operatic public. The reasons were many. Arturo has latterly been considered one of Sig. Mario's finest performances; Mad. Bosio's Elvira has been accounted among her most successful efforts; Sig. Lablache's Georgio, as everybody knows, is unparalleled; and last, Herr Pischek was to make his first appearance at the Royal Italian Opera in Riccardo. These reasons, combined, threw the operatic public, more or less, into a ferment, and attracted an enormous assembly to the theatre on Thursday. On Tuesday, however, it was known that Herr Pischek had a cold and would not perform, and Sig. Ronconi was announced for Riccardo in his room. This had not the least effect in lessening the attraction; on the contrary, it rather increased it. Signor Ronconi, although his Riccardo is not one of his best parts, à priori was preferable to Herr Pischek, who, though celebrated on the German stage, had never appeared in Italian Opera, at least in London. It remains to be seen how Herr Pischek will overcome the difficulties of a foreign language and a new style of art. Possibly the directors of the Royal Italian Opera have engaged him to appear in Don Giovanni, in order to afford the public another opportunity of hearing Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli in Donna Anna, and Mad. Bosio in Zerlina, to say nothing of Signor Tamberlik in Ottavio, and Signor Lablache in Leporello.

The performance of I Puritani on Thursday night was, on the whole, highly satisfactory. Sig. Mario was in better voice than we have heard him this season, and his singing was in most instances as finished and exquisite as possible. We have seldom heard the popular quatuor "A te, o cara," which obtained the only encore in the opera, go more smoothly. Sig. Mario made some splendid points in the scene where Arturo, about to lead off the Queen, is arrested by Riccardo. His defiance of the Puritan leader had all the high bearing and impetuosity of the true cavalier. His singing was pure, vigorous, and energetic. In this respect, Sig. Mario far surpasses his great predecessor, Rubini, whose Arturo was nevertheless one of his most consummate performances. In the last act, Sig. Mario fairly excelled himself and all his previous efforts in the opera. The duet with Elvira, "Vieni fra mia braccia," was exquisite, and the famous "Ella tremante" given with such intense expression, and such luxury of voice, as to create a real furore. To many among the audience Sig. Mario's singing in this scene must have recalled the best days of Rubini.

Mad. Bosio, to a certain extent, makes the best Elvira we have seen after Grisi, who has never before been even approached in the part. Her singing was distinguished on Thursday night by extraordinary fluency and ease in the most difficult and trying passages. The charming quality of Mad. Bosio's voice is displayed to advantage in Bellini's music; and the applause so liberally bestowed on her was well merited. It may be remembered that Mad. Bosio made her first great hit at the Royal Italian Opera in Elvira, two seasons since. From that time, her reputation has been on the increase. Elvira, nevertheless, can hardly be called one of Mad. Bosio's best parts, although it is one in which her singing throughout is so greatly to be admired. For instance, how gracefully she warbles the sparkling polacca, "Son vergine vezzosa"—which required nothing but warmth and impulse to make it irreproachable; and how brilliantly she executes the cavatina in the mad scene, "Qui la voce"—which wants only spontaneity and genuine feeling to place it beyond criticism. To achieve so decided a success as Mad. Bosio did on Thursday night, however, and in one of Grisi's most renowned parts, is within the power of few living artists.

The Giorgio of Sig. Lablache has, for twenty years, been accounted one of the great basso's most admirable performances;—why, we are at a loss to discover. The music of Giorgio is commonplace, and the character demands no unusual amount of histrionic power. His imposing appearance and magnificent voice had doubtless much to do with the immense reputation acquired by Sig. Lablache in Giorgio; and association of ideas has long confirmed and stereotyped the impression. No other artist who has appeared in this part, it is true, has done half so much with it; but it is not quite worthy of his colossal powers. Nevertheless, in the old puritan, Sig. Lablache is a tradition which must not be interfered with, but allowed to pass current till the youngest of us is grey and bent with years, as an inimitable picture and a mighty vocal effort. The renowned basso was hailed with enthusiasm on his appearance in the second scene, and his very boots, belt, and plain tunic, were recognised as old and familiar friends. The singing of Sig.

Digitized by Google

Lablache was as powerful as ever, and his acting the same as ever. There was not a single indication of a falling off.

The part of Riccardo has neither mettle nor character enough for Sig. Ronconi, who never was formed to represent a cold lover with a quiet cavatina and a boisterous duet. How Sig. Tamburini contrived to elevate such a nonentity into an interesting personage is and must for ever remain a myth. Tradition says he did, and tradition must not be contradicted.

That I Puritani should have produced no enthusiasm on Thursday night can readily be accounted for. The opera is the weakest of Bellini, and, except some lovely and graceful melodies, possesses little musical merits. Take away the song of Riccardo, "Fior d'amore," the polacca, "Son Vergine," the quartet, "A te, o cara," the mad scena, "Qui la voce," the big duet for the two basses, and Arturo's last scena, and the rest of the opera is a tissue of unmeaning trivialities. These beautiful and genuine tunes, when sung to perfection in former times by the four great artists for whom they were composed, made the reputation of the opera, and the public were satisfied without further inquiry. Now, when we have no longer Grisi, Rubini, or Tamburini, and that Lablache stands alone in the glory of his twenty summers and winters, the public, not being satisfied, begin to inquire and speculate. Thus I Puritani, by a natural consequence, stands a chance of being removed from that niche in the temple of Fame which it should never have in justice occupied.

But to leave such arguments, let us record what success the opera did actually obtain on Thursday night.

The only encore, as we have said, was awarded to "A te, o cara." The famous "Suoni la Tromba" excited but little enthusiasm, although it was vociferated strenuously, and a general summons recalled Signors Ronconi and Lablache before the footlights. Sig. Mario's singing in the last scene really brought the house down with vehement applause, and all the artists had to appear in obedience to a unanimous summons.

After the Puritani, two acts of Masaniello were given for Sig. Tamberlik, which was neither just to Auber's masterpiece, nor to Sig. Tamberlik's reputation. Such an opera deserves a far better fate than to be cut down into an afterpiece to serve as a pendant to Bellini's poorest work; and such a singer should be reserved for some better purpose than endeavouring to restimulate the musical appetite of the audience, already satiated usque ad nauseam. Of this, then, and of Sig. Tagliafico's Pietro, we must postpone our criticism, satisfied to record that the splendid duet was vigorously sung and enthusiastically encored.

The theatre was crowded to excess. All the subscribers retained their boxes, and the Queen and Prince Albert were among the audience.

Rigoletto is announced for to-night.

---

Madame Puzzi has announced her Annual Concert for the 26th instant. We understand that the usual assemblage of talent will be provided, to entertain Madame Puzzi's numerous patrons.

Réunion des Arts.—A very agreeable Concert was given here, on Wednesday, the programme of which was highly entertaining. A quartet for two violins, tenor, and violoncello, executed by Messrs. Ernst, Goffrie, Witt, and Piatti, created a great sensation, while a solo for violoncello, by Signor Piatti, was much applauded.

Madame Palm, Prima Donna of the Theatre Royal, Stuttgart, has been engaged by the New Philharmonic for their concert, on Wednesday next.

Leghorn.—At the Teatro Rossini, Verdi's opera I Masnadieri, has been given, several pieces being encored. The tenor, Biundi, created a furore in the romanza, and in the duet with the barytone.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The production of Fidelio on Saturday night was the real event of the operatic season at Drury Lane. The Rocco of Herr Formes had already been proved to be a masterly performance at the Royal Italian, in 1851, when Fidelio was first brought out at that theatre, and only ran two nights, in consequence of the inefficiency of the Leonora. The best judges, too, have pronounced Beethoven's opera as being seriously injured by the recitatives, and by its translation into Italian; so that an eager desire to behold Fidelio in its native costume generally prevailed. The public were also anxious to know how Mad. Caradori would act and sing the part, as she had already done so much in Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, and Agatha. More than all, the recent remarkable success of Fidelio at the Royal Italian Opera excited the public curiosity, and those who could not afford to pay a high price were ready to pay a moderate one to see Beethoven's masterpiece performed at Drury Lane, in German, by the German Company. The consequence was, that the theatre was filled in every part on Saturday night, and that long before the curtain rose there was not standing room in the pit.

The performance satisfied many, and disappointed some. The Rocco was all that could be desired—nay, was acknowledged to be one of the finest and most complete dramatic impersonations of the modern stage; but the Fidelio scarcely came up to universal expectation. Herr Reichardt, on the other hand, pleased everybody by his artistic singing in Florestan, and by the correctness and energy of his acting. Mdlle. Sedlatzek acted well as Marcellina, but has scarcely voice enough for the part, and Herr Hölzel acted with great intelligence and sang remarkably well in Pizarro. Herr Lane appeared in Jacquino, and Mr. Hamilton Braham threw the weight and prestige of his talent into the small part of the Minister.

It is not necessary to enter into long details. Mad. Caradori, who did not appear to the greatest advantage in the first act, was excellent in the second and third, and admirable in the whole of the grave scene, filling up the business to perfection. She was happy in catching the traditional points, and brought down the house when she presented the pistol at Pizarro. In short, in her acting, Mad. Caradori showed that she had studied the part earnestly and with zeal, and realised her conceptions like a true artist. Mad. Caradori has a real soprano voice, but something more than a soprano voice is required to give effect to the music of Fidelio, which is written as much for the middle and low, as for the high voice. It was the want of a middle voice, no doubt, which prevented Mad. Caradori from doing full justice to the famous "Hope" song in the first act. In the second and third acts Mad. Caradori sang with power and skill, and produced a decided impression. She was very much applauded in the grave scene and finale, and was twice recalled.

The encores were, the quartet in canon (Act 1), the song of Florestan (Act 2), remarkably well sung by Herr Reichardt, and the last movement of the finale. The chorus, which was all wrong in the scene of the Prisoners, was all right in the finale, and the performance finished with great éclat.

---

Willis's Rooms.—The Misses Cole and Mr. Albert Gilbert's second Classical Concert took place on Monday evening in the small room of Willis's, St. James's-street. The attendance, which was good, was for the most part composed of ladies. Mr. Alfred Gilbert and Miss Susanna Cole, in conjunction with Mrs. Noble, opened the concert with a trio by Bosen. The taste of the fair sisters is decidedly classical. Mrs. Gilbert sang Mozart's "Dove sono," and Miss Susanna Cole, Gluck's "Che faró," and both performances were entitled to no stinted praise. The sisters also joined their talents in Mendelssohn's two-part, "Evening Song," which was neatly and prettily warbled. Miss S. Cole was encored in the "Farewell," by Ings. Mr. Albert Gilbert performed Weber's Sonata for the pianoforte, in C, Op. 24, and succeeded perfectly. A fantasia, by Mr. Chatterton, on the harp, was encored; and Mr. Ben. Wells made a hit in a solo on the metallic flute. Mr. Frank Bodda sang, and Mr. Alfred Pierre sang. The Concert passed off with great spirit, and to the entire satisfaction of all present.

Digitized by Google

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

The second meeting took place on Thursday morning, at Willis's Rooms, when the following was the programme :—

Quartet No. 3, D minor, Cherubini; Quartet No. 6, C, Mozart; Grand Trio, E flat, Op. 70, No. 2, Beethoven; Quartet No. 1, A minor, Op. 13, Mendelssohn; Solo, pianoforte, "La Fontaine," Stephen Heller.

Executants—Violins, M. Sainton and Mr. Cooper; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Sig. Piatti; pianoforte, Miss Arabella Goddard.

It cannot fail to strike the most casual reader that there was a superfluity in the good things set before the audience, and that one of the quartets might have been omitted with advantage. Four long instrumental pieces, unrelieved by songs or solos, are too much at one sitting; and we are at a loss to conjecture why Messrs. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti insist upon giving their subscribers more than the value of their money.

Of Cherubini's quartet the following brief history is supplied in the analytical programme, written by Mr. G. A. Macfarren:—

"This quartet was, I am told by Herr Hiller, who was present at its first performance, written in 1835, when the composer was seventy-five years old, and when he had received almost every distinction that, not only the country of his adoption, but the world-wide circle of his admirers could offer to a great artist. Its composition was induced by the success of the two works of the same class that were played for the first time in England at the meetings of the Quartet Association in 1852; and it was published, together with these two, shortly after its production, and dedicated to Baillot, for whose celebrated quartet party it was written, and by whom it was originally performed. It is most interesting to find the venerable master, who had established an universal reputation by his sacred, and still more by his dramatic, music, entering with the ardour of youth upon a new branch of his art; and it adds no little to his character as a musician, that, while carrying out the principles established by the precedents of all great writers of instrumental music, he proves his freshness of invention to have been equal to his maturity of judgment, by the individuality of character with which this work is stamped."

Cherubini's quartet, notwithstanding, appears to us deficient in fancy, and has certainly little interest for the general hearer. It was listened to on Thursday with no great pleasure, and, although played to perfection by Messrs. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti, was received coldly.

The quartet of Mozart is pre-eminently beautiful, and made a profound impression. The minuetto and trio narrowly escaped an encore. M. Sainton led in Cherubini's quartet, and Mr. H. C. Cooper in Mozart's. The playing of Mr. Cooper in the last quartet was worthy of high praise.

Beethoven's magnificent trio is well known, and, executed as it was on Thursday, constituted the principal feature of the concert. Of the trio and the performances, we find the notice in the Morning Chronicle of yesterday so much to the purpose, that we take leave to quote it without abridgment :—

"Beethoven's trio is a work vast in design, exuberant in ideas, and a prodigy of learning. Moreover, it is exceedingly difficult, and requires the most accomplished performers to execute it properly. Miss Arabella Goddard was the pianist, M. Sainton the violinist, and Sig. Piatti the violoncellist. So complete and masterly a performance of this trio we never heard before. M. Sainton is a thorough lover of Beethoven, and few violinists, indeed, have more of that enthusiasm, which every true interpreter of the master should possess. Sig. Piatti is the most poetical, as he is the most admirable, performer living on the violoncello. Miss Arabella Goddard, both in her reading and her mechanism, excited the admiration of the connoisseurs who attended the concert, among whom were many of the noted pianists at present in London. From beginning to end, the execution was faultless. Every gradation of tone and every variety of light and shade were strictly and rigidly observed. The power displayed by the young artist was immense, and the ease with which she surmounted the greatest difficulties, attacking the most rapid and intricate passages as if she were merely playing the scales—was quite wonderful. Miss Arabella Goddard achieved no less decided a success yesterday in the pianoforte part of Beethoven's trio, than twelve months ago at one of the concerts of the Quartet Association, when she executed the same composer's sonata in B flat, op. 106, and took the town by storm."

Mendelssohn's Quartet was composed before he was fourteen years of age. Such a work, of so much power and beauty combined, displaying the hand of the master no less than the highest inspiration, and constituting a model to all writers of that class of music in which but few musicians have made themselves eminent, is altogether unprecedented in the history of the art. The Quartet created no less profound a sensation than the Trio, and the last two movements, especially, excited unqualified delight. It was played magnificently, Mr. H. C. Cooper leading.

Miss Arabella Goddard terminated the concert with a graceful and brilliant performance of Mr. Stephen Heller's admirable fantasia on Schubert's "La Fontaine," a most elegant and appropriate piece to display the power of a skilful pianist, since, besides being one of the most fascinating of its class, it abounds in showy and attractive passages, which are exceedingly effective, although more than usually difficult. Nearly the whole of the audience remained to hear this last performance of Miss Arabella Goddard, which, in its way, was quite as finished and expressive as the first.

M. Charles Hallé, who is in town for the season, will play at the next concert.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The fourth concert took place, on Monday evening, in the Hanover Square Rooms, before a numerous and distinguished audience. The programme was as follows :—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Symphony, "Pastorale" | Beethoven. |
| Song, "Daffodils" | Alfred A. Pollock. |
| Overture, "The Templar" | Henry Leslie. |
| Duet, "Thou Spring-tide art so true and good" | S. W. Waley. |
| March, "Le Prophete" | Meyerbeer. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "Ruy Blas" | Mendelssohn. |
| Fantasia for Flute, "Nel dolce incanto" | Benedict and de Beriot. |
| Ballad, "I do not ask a brighter lot" | Henry Leslie. |
| Selection from "Les Huguenots" | Meyerbeer. |

Conductor.—Mr. G. A. Osborne.

The first and second movements of the symphony were famously played; but as much can hardly be said for the movement in which a storm is described, when the wind instruments were continually at fault. The clever overture by Mr. Henry Leslie, of which we gave so favourable an account on the occasion of its first production, two years ago, was executed with a spirit and correctness highly creditable to the amateurs and their zealous conductor, Mr. Osborne. The fine dramatic prelude of Mendelssohn, too, was given with excellent effect, and the brilliant march from the Prophète could not have gone with more spirit and decision. The flute solo was a favourable exhibition of amateur talent. Mr. Le Patourel is an excellent player. His style is pure and unaffected, and he combines sweetness of tone with perfect intonation, and a taste which is never disfigured by exaggeration or eccentricity. The selection from the Huguenots, also, went well, and was especially successful, considering that it came at the end of the concert.

The vocal music was all interesting. Mr. Alfred A. Pollock's new song is even more graceful than his "Swallow, Swallow," which made such a "hit" at the Amateur Concerts, some twelvemonth ago. The words are among the quaintest and freshest of that sweet singer of the Elizabethan period, Herrick; and Mr. Pollock has caught the spirit of them happily. The duet of Mr. Waley is melodious and expressive, and, like all that gentleman composes, written in a thoroughly musician-like style. Mr. H. Leslie's ballad must be praised for similar qualities. The singers were Miss Fanny Rowland and Miss Lascelles, who both did themselves the utmost credit by their performance. Miss Lascelles has a contralto voice of unusual depth and quality. The concert, which was under the direction of Mr. H. Leslie, gave general satisfaction.

The next performance will be one of unusual interest. A symphony by Mr. H. Leslie, a selection from Mr. Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened, an overture by Mr. Osborne, and a song by Miss Gabriel, will form part of the programme—so that the concert will be three-parts English. So much the better.

Digitized by Google

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE following was the programme of the fourth concert (on Wednesday, the 10th inst., at St. Martin's Hall):—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (Minnesänger) | Benedict. |
| Immanuel (Selection from), Solo parts by Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss | H. Leslie. |
| Concerto in G, Pianoforte, Master John Barnett | Beethoven. |
| Scena (Orfeo and Euridice), Mr. Sims Reeves | Haydn. |
| Overture (Die Corsen) | Lindpaintner. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Grand Choral Symphony (No. 9), Solo parts by Madame Caradori, Miss Huddart, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss | Beethoven. |

Conductor, Herr Lindpaintner.

The Ninth Symphony drew, as usual, a vast crowd. The New Philharmonic Society has appropriated this colossal work to itself. It has been performed at these concerts under M. Berlioz, Dr. Spohr, and Herr Lindpaintner, successively, and triumphantly received on each occasion. No orchestral work—we may almost say, no choral work—is now more surely attractive, more popular with amateurs, or more keenly relished by the multitude. To give praise where praise is due, we owe this to Dr. Wylde, to whom, moreover, we owe the New Philharmonic Society.

The execution of the choral symphony, under the intelligent direction of Herr Lindpaintner, though remarkable for some trifling differences in the reading, was, as well as we could judge, quite as good as under his predecessors. The chorus was decidedly better, and the band was really superb. The solo singers, too, did all that could possibly be expected of them, with such difficult and ungrateful parts. Mr. Sims Reeves especially sang the tenor with as much ease as he would have sung "Young Agnes" (which he sings easier and better than all the French tenors put together) and with invariable energy and precision. All the power of the orchestral accompaniments failed to "put him down," or to stifle his magnificent voice. The performance was another laurel for the New Philharmonic Society, and another "feather in the cap" of Herr Lindpaintner. One or two refractory and discontented individuals—probably the same who distinguished themselves at the performance of Dr. Wylde's music to Paradise Lost—hissed at the end; but Beethoven will survive the attack, and his glorious masterpiece continue to be the annual great feature of the New Philarmonic concerts. The symphony, which was placed last, should have been placed first—or at least at the end of Part I.

The brilliant and animated overture to M. Benedict's MS. opera, which has achieved success both at the Norwich Festival and in the London concerts, was well played and loudly applauded. Herr Lindpaintner's vigorous and dashing work (also the overture to an opera, we believe), remarkable as much for its spirit and entrain as for its clear and masterly instrumentation, was played to perfection, and applauded to the echo. The selection from Mr. Henry Leslie's new oratorio was hardly so well executed as it deserved, except by the solo vocalists, who were admirable. The oftener this music is heard, the more warmly it is appreciated. The fine scena from Gluck's unfinished opera, was sung with splendid dramatic feeling by Mr. Sims Reeves.

The pianoforte concerto was an exhibition of remarkable and precocious talent on the part of Master John Barnett (pupil of Dr. Wylde), whose progress since last year is little short of wonderful. Though a mere boy, Master Barnett is already a master of his instrument. His reading of the gorgeous creation of Beethoven was as striking as his execution was correct and animated. He was applauded with enthusiasm, and recalled at the end. He introduced the two cadenzas which belong to the printed edition of M. Moscheles, and played the whole concerto from memory.

Altogether the concert was worthy of the high reputation of the society.

VERONA.—On the 3rd of May, the New Philharmonic Society gave, at their first concert, which drew an immense crowd, Rossini's Stabat Mater, which was remarkably well executed.

MR. AGUILAR'S CONCERT.

As usual, the annual concert of Mr. Aguilar (on Thursday, the 11th inst., in the Hanover Square Rooms) was worthy of every attention. Indefatigable as a composer, he had prepared a new symphony and a new overture for his friends and patrons, besides having studied Beethoven's grand pianoforte concerto in E flat, for pianoforte and orchestra, to such good purpose that he performed it with admirable effect and to the entire satisfaction of the connoisseurs. Mr. Aguilar's symphony, in D major, is remarkable for the regularity of its form, the variety of its ideas, and the brilliancy of its instrumentation. There are fine points in each movement; but that which struck us as the most original was the Allegro Maestoso alla Menuetto, in which the old minuet is represented in a manner not more new than happy. The orchestral combinations in this movement are fanciful and charming. The symphony was capitally played by the members of the London Orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Frank Mori, and was received with the greatest applause by one of the most crowded audiences ever assembled in the Hanover Square Rooms. The new overture, a composition of a lighter character, but showy, spirited, and well-instrumented, is intended for an opera, which, we understand, is in a forward state of completion. The concert-overture entitled Alpheus, perhaps the most imaginative of all the works of Mr. Aguilar, was repeated, in consequence of its favourable reception last season, and the good impression derived from the first hearing was fully confirmed. Both overtures were executed in a very efficient manner. To conclude, Mr. Aguilar played his pianoforte fantasia (solo) on an air from Fra Diavolo, which, though essentially an ad captandum piece, is sparkling and elegant, and well calculated to please those amateurs to whom music of a graver character is not exactly suited. He was applauded in this as in the concerto, and his playing well deserved the compliment.

We can only find space to add that a well-varied selection of vocal music was contributed by Mad. Amedei, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Miss Messent, Herr Reichardt, and Herr Formes; and that, last not least, Herr Ernst performed his capital fantasia on Hungarian airs, greatly to the delight of the audience. The concert ended with the "Wedding March" of Mendelssohn, which no one can ever be tired of hearing.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Mr. Henry Leslie's new and successful oratorio of Immanuel was performed for the first time, under the direction of Mr. Hullah, on Wednesday evening, before a very crowded audience. The chorus, as usual, consisted of Mr. Hullah's First Upper Singing School. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, Messrs. Lockey and Weiss. The oratorio was received with enthusiasm; the trio of the Blessing of the Children (for the three ladies and chorus) was redemanded, and, at the end, Mr. Leslie was unanimously recalled. The event was of consequence to our English composers, since it proved beyond doubt that an English work of length and importance could enchain the attention of a large mixed audience, even after those imperishable masterpieces which have hitherto constituted the chief attractions at St. Martin's as at Exeter Hall. The execution of Immanuel, though of course far from perfect, being a new work, and the chorus being composed of amateurs, was highly creditable to Mr. Hullah and his pupils.

PETERBOROUGH.—Mr. J. Thomson's first concert here, Tuesday, May 2nd, was numerously attended. Miss Dolby, Messrs. Newsome and Walter Bolton, were the vocalists; and Messrs. W. H. Holmes, Ridgway, Colchester, and Bray, the instrumentalists. Miss Dolby was enthusiastically received, as was also Mr. W. H. Holmes, who played two of his own pianoforte solos in splendid style. Two of Mr. Thomson's compositions were performed—a ballad (sung by Mr. Newsome), and a "Serenade" for violin, viola, and violoncello. Mr. Thomson also accompanied the vocal music, and played a pianoforte quartet with Messrs. Ridgway, Colchester, and Bray; a pianoforte selection, and a duet with Mr. W. H. Holmes. The concert was one of the best given in Peterborough for many a day.

NAPLES.—Pergolesi's Stabat Mater has been executed at the church of the Confraternità by the professors of the Academy; as also a Tantum ergo, by Carlo Conti.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The second concert of this excellent institution was as good as the first. The programme was excellent, as the following will show :—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet, No. 4, C minor - - - - | Beethoven. |
| Sonata, Pianoforte, D minor, Op. 29 - - | Beethoven. |
| Quartet, No. 5, E flat, Op. 44 - - - | Mendelssohn. |

Solos, Pianoforte.

Executants :—First violin, Herr Ernst. Second violin, Herr Goffrie. Viola, Mr. Hill. Violoncello, Mr. Van Gelder (his first appearance at these concerts). Pianiste, Mdlle. Clauss.

The very opening of Beethoven's fourth quartet brought out the large expressive style of Herr Ernst, who was in his happiest mood, and played superbly all the morning. It would be alone worth the annual subscription to the Musical Union to hear this great violinist sing the exquisitely pathetic adagio in A flat, in the fifth, and almost the grandest of Mendelssohn's quartets. His reading of this was almost divine in the truth and, at the same time, simplicity of its sentiment, which went home to every breast, and brought tears in the eyes of many. In the other movements, his execution was as masterly, as in this his feeling was profound; and in the scherzo, where Mendelssohn has outdone himself in romantic and exuberant caprice, Herr Ernst displayed a humour, if we may be allowed to say it, so entirely congenial with that of the composer, that it might easily have been believed he was playing extempore, and that all those original and fantastic thoughts were rushing spontaneously from his own heart and brain—his bow and fiddle being their interpreters to his hearers. Herr Ernst was admirably supported by Herr Goffrie, Mr. Hill, and M. Van Gelder, who promises to be a valuable acquisition to Mr. Ella, as violoncello, and to acquit himself honourably of the very difficult task of acting as occasional substitute for the incomparable Sig. Piatti.

The sonata in D minor of Beethoven—with its passionate and almost unfathomable first movement, its heart-rending recitatives, and its exquisite symmetry of form, preserved amidst so much of what at first looks like cold and ungovernable waywardness—requires a player of soul, a player full of poetry, to reveal its meaning to the crowd. In Mdlle. Wilhemina Clauss who can doubt that such a player was at hand? She gave the adagio to perfection; and will give the first and last movements to perfection another time, when she is a little less agitated, and when there shall be no cruel and envious thunderstorm to howl out of doors, and throw a dark gloom over the room and over the faces and figures of its occupants, the very moment she places herself at the pianoforte. Such an event would have disconcerted the strongest and boldest, much more one so sensitive, timid and retiring as this young and gifted artist. Towards the end of the concert, the clouds had scattered, the darkness was dispelled, the gloom had vanished; and little Wilhelmina came to the piano as bright and happy as the newly-arrived sunshine itself, to execute with her sympathetic touch and her wonted perfection, one of the languid and love-sick nocturnes of Chopin (in D flat), and the nobler, healthier and more vigorous Volkslied (in A minor), from the Lieder ohne Worte of Mendelssohn. Both in these and the sonata, Mdlle. Clauss was warmly applauded. The concert was interesting from first to last, and the room (Willis's), was crowded with fashionable, aristocratic, wealthy, and professional connoisseurs.

---

A Little Melody.—About fifteen years since, a noisy description of music had invaded all the lyrical theatres of Europe—not that we pretend to say it is quite banished from them at the present day. Some of the most classical geniuses of the time were, apparently, in danger of catching the infection. Even the late Spontini, the celebrated author of the Vestale, seemed willing to go with the current. A cutting observation of his Majesty the King of Prussia was his reward:—The king, who had been invited to be present at the performance of one of the composer's new works, written in the modern style, was shocked by the incalculable number of trumpets, trombones, gongs, and other boisterous instruments employed. After listening to the painful exhibition for some hours, he left the place, just as thirty drums were beating the tattoo. "Ah!" said his Majesty, "there is some melody at last!"

Mr. Walter Macfarren's Soirée.—The second and last chamber Concert took place on Friday evening, the 12th inst., before a very crowded audience. The performances began with a suite of solo pieces on the pianoforte, a prelude in E minor of Mendelssohn, No. 2 of Mr. Sterndale Bennett's Three Impromptus, Op. 12 (in E), which is too highly finished to deserve the title of "Impromptu," and the same composer's graceful movement entitled Allegro Grazioso (in A), all played by Mr. Walter Macfarren, who also executed, in capital style, the fine and difficult sonata of Beethoven, Op. 53 (in C), one of the two which the composer himself denominated "brilliant." From his own works, Mr. Walter Macfarren selected a grand sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, a duet for two performers on the pianoforte, and two romances, entitled "Madeline," and "Spring Flowers." The romances are pretty and expressive, and were played with great taste by the author. The violoncello sonata and the duet, both on a large scale, are compositions of more than ordinary talent. The scherzo in the former (which was effectively played by the author with Mr Lucas) is spontaneous and full of character. The last (the third work of the kind which Mr. W. Macfarren has produced) is, perhaps, even more interesting than the sonata. All the movements are spirited and well written, and the occasional glimpses of Weber and Mendelssohn were rather welcome than otherwise, since they are less plagiarisms than indications of the author's peculiar bent and reading. The performance of this duo by Mr. W. H. Holmes and Mr. W. Macfarren, was strikingly good, and the applause that followed each movement amply deserved. Both the sonata and duet are M.S. There was some vocal music by Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, and Mr. Frank Bodda. A pleasing duet by Miss Laura Barker, "Again rejoicing Nature sees" (poetry by Burn), sung by the two ladies, was encored. Altogether, Mr. Walter Macfarren's two chamber concerts have raised him in his profession, both as composer and pianist.

---

Cremona.—The theatre of the Concordia will open with a new opera entitled La Donna Bianca d'Avenello, music by Cesare Gallieri, poetry by Rossi. We presume that the poet has appropriated the libretto of Boïeldieu's La Dame Blanche.

Rome.—I Monetari Falsi, by Rossi, at the Valle, is played every night, and may be considered to have made a hit.—At the Argentina, Norma has been given, with Mesdames Giuli-Borsi and Finette-Batocchi, Signori Massimiliani and Terza. As regards the ladies—well; the tenor was wretched.

---

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK

To-Day.—Mrs. John Macfarren's Concert, 27, Queen Anne Street. Three o'clock.

Monday.—Philharmonic Society's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past three.

Tuesday.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms. Half-past three.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Exeter Hall. Half-past eight.

Wednesday.—New Philharmonic Society, Fifth Concert, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock. —— Miss Stabbach, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past eight.

Thursday.—Mr. R. Blagrove, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past two.

Friday.—Madame Puzzi, Grand Concert, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Two o'clock.——Mr. D. W. King, Concert, St. Martin's Hall.——Miss Binckes, Concert, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman Street, Oxford Street. Eight o'clock.—— Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past three.

Saturday.—Mr. W. H. Holmes, Second Concert of Pianoforte Music, Hanover Square Rooms. Two o'clock.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past eight.

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA,

DRURY LANE.

THE Directors respectfully beg leave to announce that Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves and Mr. and Mrs. Weiss will make their first appearance on Monday next, in Auber's comic opera, FRA DIAVOLO. The Opera will commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.—"DON JUAN." Mozart's Masterpiece, DON JUAN, will be given for the first time on Tuesday, on which occasion Herr Pasqué will make his first appearance, in this country, in the character of Don Juan. Herr Formes will also appear as Leporello. The other characters will be sustained by Mesdames Caradori, Rudersdorff, Büry, and Herr Reichardt. The Opera will commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

MUSICAL UNION, Tuesday, May 23rd, Willis's Rooms. Quartet, E flat, Mozart; Quartet (Posth), F minor, Mendelssohn; Sonata (dedicated to Kreutzer), Beethoven. Solos, violoncello and pianoforte. Executants: Ernst, Goffrie, Hill, Piatti, and Hallé. Single Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had as usual. The Pianist Prodigy, Master Arthur Napoleon, will play at the Fourth Matinée. Director, J. Ella.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr. Costa.—On Friday next, May 26, for the last time this Season, as an Extra Concert, not included in the Subscription, Mendelssohn's ELIJAH. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d., at the Society's Office, No. 6, in Exeter Hall.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL CONCERT will take place in the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform for the first time, BEETHOVEN'S CONCERTO IN G MAJOR, and other pieces. Miss Goddard will be assisted by a complete orchestra, and by several eminent vocal and instrumental performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

THE MISSES McALPINE have the honour to announce that their CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening, June 6th, under the immediate patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Abercorn, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Drogheda, the Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of Darnley, the Right Hon. the Lady Elizabeth Dawson, the Right Hon. the Viscountess Ebrington, the Lady James Stuart, &c. Full particulars will be duly announced.

HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—MISS MESSENT respectfully announces to her friends and patrons that her GRAND CONCERT will take place on Tuesday Evening, May 23, 1854. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Mdlle. Agnes Bury, Miss Poole, Miss Messent, Mdlle. Julie Mouat (her first appearance), and Miss Dolby; Herr Reichart, Mr. Herberte, M. Jules Lefort, Mr. Irwing, and Mr. Frank Bodda. Instrumentalists—Piano, Mr. Brinley Richards and Mr. Aguilar; Flute, Mr. Richardson; Violin, Signor Bazzini; Violoncello, Herr Romberg. Conductors—Messrs. F. Mori, Aguilar, Gantz, and Praeger. Tickets, 7s. 6d. Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea. To be had of Miss Messent, 6, Hinde-street, Manchester Square.

THE TWO OPERA HOUSES.—Boosey and Sons have now published in their series the following Operas complete for Voice and Piano (with English and Foreign words), in handsomely bound 4to volumes, adapted for the theatre or drawing-room. 1. Norma, 10s. 6d. 2. Sonnambula, 12s. 6d. 3. Don Juan, 18s. 4. Figaro, 16s. 5. Ernani, 15s. 6. Il Barbiere, 16s. 7. Lucrezia Borgia, 16s. (all with Italian and English words).—8. Faust, 12s. 6d, 9. Fidelio, 15s. 10. Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d. 11. Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. (with German and English words). And 12. Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s., (with French and English words). To be had of Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street; Addison, 210, Regent Street; Lacy, 17, Wellington Street, North Strand; and Keith and Prowse, 48, Cheapside.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN has the honour to announce that her Second Matinée of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), under the patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Camden, the Right Hon. the Countess of Bradford, the Lady Molesworth, Lady Isabella Stewart, will take place at the New Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Anne Street, on Wednesday, June 14th, to commence at Three o'Clock, when she will be assisted by Herr Ernst, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, and several other eminent artists. Erard's Pianofortes will be used. Single Tickets, 7s. each; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. To be obtained at Ebers's Library, 27, Old Bond-street, and of Mrs. John Macfarren, 40, Stanhope-street, Park-place, Regent's-park.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, 1854.—St. Martin's Hall.—The FIFTH CONCERT of the Season will take place on Wednesday Evening, 24th of May, to commence at Eight o'Clock. Programme: Part 1—Overture (Comus), Horsley; La Penitence, Beethoven—Mons. Jules Lefort. Aria, Mozart—Mad. Nissen Saloman. Overture, Silas; Fantasia, "La Chasse," for Pianoforte and Orchestra, Prudent—Pianoforte, Mons. Prudent. Scena, "Che farò," Gluck—Mlle. Favanti. Symphony in A minor, Mendelssohn. Part 2—Overture (Leonora), Beethoven; Aria, Mozart; Fantasia for Violoncello and Orchestra, Van Gelder—Violoncello, Herr Van Gelder. Aria, Weber; Overture, Præger. Conductor, Herr Lindpaintner. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d.; to be had at Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street. Willert Beale, Sec.

COLOGNE CHORAL UNION.—Mr. Mitchell takes an early opportunity of announcing that he has succeeded in making arrangements by which this distinguished Society will remain in London another week. Final arrangements:—Hanover-square Rooms, this evening, Saturday, May 20; Monday morning, May 22; and for Sacred Music, at Exeter Hall (for that night only), on Tuesday evening next, May 23; again, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on the mornings of Wednesday, May 24, and Friday, May 26. The last Concert will positively take place on Saturday, May 27. The Morning Concerts commence at Half-past Three; and the Evening Concert at Half-past Eight. Tickets may be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, and at all the principal librarians' and music-sellers' in the City and West-end.

MR. KIALLMARK has the honour to announce that his GRAND ORCHESTRAL MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday, May 29th, to commence at Half-past Two o'clock. Vocalists, Miss Pyne, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Ursula Barclay, Mons. Lefort, and Mr. Herberte. Pianoforte, Mr. Kiallmark, who will perform Hummel's celebrated concerto in B minor, and Moscheles' Recollections of Ireland. Violin, Herr Molique. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of the principal Music-sellers; Reserved Seats, 15s., to be had only of Mr. Kiallmark, 32a, Fitzroy-square.

MRS. ARTHUR STONE begs to announce that her CONCERT will take place on Monday evening, 29th May, at the Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Miss Hemming, and Mrs. Arthur Stone; Signor Belletti, and Mr. Adlington Wallworth. Pianoforte—Mons. Emile Prudent. Harp—Mr. John Thomas. Violoncello—Signor Piatti. Accompanyists—Signor Zamboni and Mr. Agullar. Reserved Seats and Tickets to be had of Mrs. Arthur Stone, 88, Great Portland-street, Portland-place; and Messrs. Cramer and Co., and Messrs. Addison and Co., Regent-street.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall. Mr. SURMAN'S ANNUAL NIGHT, Wednesday, May 24th.—Haydn's CREATION: preceded by the Cantata on the Birthday of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria (seventh time of performance). The words of the music being in the English language, will be interpreted by the following eminent English vocalists:—Miss Birch, Mrs. Temple, Miss M. Wells, Mr. J. Perring, (from the Gentlemen's Concerts, Manchester), Mr. Lawler, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Band and Chorus will consist of nearly 800 Performers. Conductor, Mr. Surman, Leader, Mr. H. Blagrove; Organist, Mr. T. Jolly. Tickets:—3s.; 5s.; and 10s. 6d. each. Books of the Words, at 6d. each, with 16 pages of the Music; or the Oratorio complete, the Exeter Hall Folio Edition, boards, 10s.; Cloth, 12s.; Half Calf, 15s.; Plate, 21s.; with a splendid portrait of the composer, and an interesting analysis, by J. D. Eaton, Esq., President of the Norwich Choral Society. Only Office, No. 9, Exeter Hall.

Digitized by Google

MME. PUZZI'S ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place on Friday, May 26, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, when the most celebrated artists, both vocal and instrumental, in town, will appear. Stalls and tickets to be had at all the principal Musicsellers and libraries, and of Mme. Puzzi, 5A, Cork-street, Burlington-gardens.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Haydn's CREATION will be performed on Wednesday evening, May 29th, under the direction of Mr. John Hullah. Principal vocalists—Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Weiss. Tickets, 1s.; galleries, 2s. 6d.; stalls, 5s. May be had of all Music Sellers, and at St. Martin's Hall. To commence at Eight o'clock.

MISS RAINFORTH will give TWO SCOTTISH ENTERTAINMENTS at the Whittington Club, Arundel-street, Strand, on Thursday evenings, May 25th, and June 1st. To commence at Eight o'clock. Members free, with the usual privilege for their friends; Non-Members, 1s. Programmes may be obtained in the Secretary's office.

MISS STABBACH begs to announce that her FIRST ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday Evening, May 24th. Vocalists—Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Nissen Saloman, the Misses Brougham, and Miss Stabbach, Signor Marras, Mr. Benson, Mr. Miranda, and Mr. Hamilton Braham. Instrumentalists—Herr Pauer, Signor Noronha, and Signor Paggi. Conductors—Signor Li Calsi and Mr. W. G. Cusins. Tickets—Reserved Seats, 5s.; Numbered Stalls, 10s. 6d. each; at the principal Music-sellers, and of Miss Stabbach, 11, Edgware-road, Hyde-park.

EXETER HALL—COLOGNE CHORAL UNION.—This distinguished Society will give ONE CONCERT of Sacred and Miscellaneous Vocal Music, which is fixed to take place, at the above Hall, on Tuesday evening next, May 23. Tickets, 2s., 4s., 7s.; and stalls, 10s. 6d.—The programme will comprise selections from their popular répertoire, terminating with "God Save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia." The eminent violinist Herr Ernst will perform two brilliant solos.—Tickets may be obtained at the office of the Sacred Harmonic Society, 6, Exeter-hall; at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and of the principal libraries and Music-sellers in the City and West-end.

MDLLE. ANNIE DE LARA has the honour to announce her FIRST ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday, June 13, under the distinguished patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Argyll, the Ladies Augusta and Honoria Cadogan, the Lady Anthony and Baroness M. de Rothschild, Mrs. William Morris, Mrs. Alfred Tennyson, Baron de Rothschild, M.P., Alfred Tennyson, Esq., &c., &c. She will be assisted by eminent artistes. Conductors—Signor Pilloti, Herr Meyer Lutz, Herr Stœpel, and Mr. Maurice Davies. Tickets, 7s.; Reserved, 10s. 6d.; Family Tickets, 21s. To be had of R. W. Olivier, 19, Old Bond-street; Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent-street; Mdlle. Annie de Lara, 14, Torrington-square; and of all Music-sellers.

MISS BINCKES' FIRST SOIREE MUSICALE (this Season) will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms next Friday, May 26th, at Eight o'clock. Part I—Sonata, Op. 53, Pianoforte, Miss Binckes, Beethoven; Canzonet, "My Mother bids me bind my Hair," Mrs. A. Stone, Haydn; German Ballad, "The Tear," Miss Binckes, Kücken; Solo, Harp, Mr. Frederick Chatterton; Recit. ed Aria, "Che farò senza Euridice," Miss Binckes, Gluck; Aria, "Lascia Amore," Mr. C. Cotton, Handel; Notturnos Pianoforte "Il Lamento," e "La Consolazione," Miss Binckes, Chopin. Part II.—Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, Pianoforte, Miss Binckes, Mendelssohn; Song, "Oh! what is Love?" Mrs. A. Stone, Kücken; Aria, "Oppresso dal duolo," Miss Binckes, Pacini; Aria, "Sorgete," Mr. C. Cotton, Rossini; New Ballad, "Think of me," Miss Binckes, Mrs. W. Johnson; Duet, Harp and Pianoforte, Mr. F. Chatterton and Miss Binckes, Bochsa. Conductor, Mr. Aspull. Programmes and tickets to be had at Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, B. Carte, 100, New Bond Street.

WILLIS's ROOMS.—Mdlle. CLAUSS has the honour to announce her GRAND CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday, June 14. For further particulars apply to Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

PATENT CONCERTINA.—WHEATSTONE & CO. find it necessary to state that the original PATENT for the INVENTION, as well as a subsequent one for improvements, was GRANTED only to them. They, therefore, caution the public against those persons who assume to be patentees, and who only use this subterfuge to sell inferior Concertinas at twice their real value. All Concertinas manufactured by the above firm bear their label, and may be had new (double action, with 48 keys,) from five guineas; or ditto, single action, three guineas. An extensive assortment for exportation.—20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

BOOSE'S NEW MODEL CORNET-À-PISTONS. Price Seven Guineas. In calling attention to a new and very beautiful model Cornet-a-Piston which Messrs. Boosey and Sons have lately completed, they would beg to observe that, with the assistance of the most able professors in London, they have succeeded in uniting in this instrument a perfect intonation with a clear, rich, and brilliant tone never before attained to such perfection in the cornet-à-piston. It can, further, be played without effort, even by one inexperienced in the use of brass instruments. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to Her Majesty's Army, and the Honourable East India Company's Service, &c.

MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Militia Regiments or parties joining Bands, and in want of Instruments, Music, or a Band Master, are invited to apply to Messrs. BOOSEY AND SONS, 28, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers, and Music Publishers to her Majesty's Army and the Hon. E. I. C.'s Service. The high character of their Instruments and Journals for Reed and Brass Bands are acknowledged throughout the Army.—A Register kept of the most experienced Band Masters.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles Street.

THE Successful Results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the Human Hair, and is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other preparations for the Hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey—strengthens weak hair—cleanses it from Scurf and Dandriff—and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of the Beard, Whiskers, Eyebrows, and Mustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. —Caution!—On the wrapper of each Bottle are the words, "Rowland's Macassar Oil," in two lines.—Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

MILITARY BANDS—REED AND BRASS.

C. BOOSE'S MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. BOOSEY & SONS, in submitting to the Army and the Musical Public a few of the latest improvements in the above CELEBRATED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, beg to return their sincere thanks for the patronage so liberally bestowed on their establishment; and to assure those who have not hitherto honoured them with their commands, that their undeviating principle of business is to manufacture instruments of the very best description only. By this means, Boosey and Sons trust to ensure the permanent patronage of their friends. A fair and moderate price is fixed on every Instrument. CLARIONETS.—Either of Cocoa-wood or Grenadille, with 13 German Silver Keys; of Box-wood, with 13 Brass ditto; or of German Silver, with 13 Keys of the same metal. The whole of these comprise every new improvement. FLUTES AND PICCOLOS.—In the usual keys, for Amateurs or Military purposes, either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with German Silver or Brass Keys, and every new improvement. FIFES (Boosé's Improved).—Either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with 4 German Silver or Brass Keys. BASSOONS.—The new French Model, of Maple-wood, with 16 Brass, or German Silver Keys. BOOSÉ'S UNRIVALLED CORNET-A-PISTONS.—The great success that has attended the introduction of Boosé's new patent Cornet, and the many flattering testimonials the beauty of the model and the exceeding richness of its tone have called forth, have induced the manufacturers to extend the improvements still further, and they have now the pleasure of announcing, that they have succeeded in adjusting to the same model, the Rotary Cylinder Action. By means of this beautiful and light action, the most rapid passages can be executed with marvellous quickness and dexterity. Price, with Valves, 7 Guineas, with the new Rotary Cylinder Action, 9 Guineas. Either instrument strongly Electro-plated (equal to Silver), 2 Guineas extra. CORNETTO SOPRANO, in D or E flat (for Brass Band); VALVE TRUMPETS, Althorns (Barytone), with Three Valves in B Flat, E Flat, or F. EUPHONIONS (Bass), in B Flat or C, with Four Valves. BOMBARDONS (Bass) in E Flat, or F, with Four Valves. All these Instruments can be had either with Valves or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Althorns are made on two models—either with Bell up or forward. The Euphonion is a new Valve Instrument, infinitely superior to, and rapidly superseding the Ophicleide. FRENCH HORNS either with Three Valves, or on an entirely new model, with the Rotary Cylinder Action. These Horns, Boosey & Sons can with confidence recommend as superior to any yet supplied to the Profession. Better cannot be made.—TROMBONES, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. In the usual Keys, either with Slides, Valves, or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Valve Trombone may be had either with the Bell up or forward.—THE NEW ROTARY CYLINDER ACTION. With this action, which is exceedingly light, the most rapid passage may be executed with marvellous dexterity and quickness. It is, further, more simple and much stronger than any patent actions that have hitherto been made.—VALVE, OR FIELD BUGLE, in B flat or C. By a simple contrivance, the valves of this instrument may be detached at pleasure, and placed in a small leather case, and the instrument remains an ordinary Field Bugle.—OPHICLEIDES, in B flat or C, with 10 or 11 Keys. Cavalry Trumpets, Turkish Crescents, Triangles, Military Tambourines, Drum Heads, Reeds, Music Stands, Music Paper, and every requisite for a Reed, Brass, or String Band.—DRUMS (BASS), Boosé's Improved, of Brass. The advantages in these over Wooden Drums, are, an infinitely superior tone and great durability, without any increase in weight. Boosey & Sons have received the most flattering testimonials from the many Regiments they have supplied with these Drums, both at home and abroad. Tenor and Side Drums, also of Brass.—BASS DRUM STICKS. Boosey & Sons have succeeded in manufacturing a Drum Stick of an entirely New Material, which requires no covering, and will last for TEN OR TWENTY YEARS, and thus a remedy is provided for the constant expense of recovering Drum Sticks. The Regimental Facings, and other colours, being tastefully introduced, render this Drum Stick an exceedingly handsome appendage to the Drum.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street, Musical Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to the Army.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

VERDI'S NEW OPERA IL TROVATORE.—Now ready, price 21s., Verdi's last and successful Opera, IL TROVATORE, complete for Voice and Pianoforte, unabridged and unaltered from the composer's score.

RIGOLETTO.—The French Edition of Verdi's Rigoletto may be had of Messrs. Boosey, price 12s., complete.

TEN NEW SONGS, by GORDIGIANI.—Just published, the Contents of Signor Gordigiani's Album for 1854, in 10 Numbers, price 2s. each.

NEW SONG, by CAMPANA.—"Io t'amero," Romanza, by F. Campana, of Rome, price 2s.

NEW EDITION of "ALL is LOST."—Just published, the Sixth Edition of "All is lost now," transposed to G, price 3s.

NEW BALLAD by GUGLIELMO.—"Love and Friendship still are thine," price 2s. The many admirers of Mr. Guglielmo's compositions esteem this ballad as the most charming of all his effusions.

MY HOME NO MORE.—Sung by Mdlle. Magner and Miss Stabbach, composed by Duke, price 2s. This popular song met with an encore at above thirty concerts in the provinces, where it was lately introduced.

NEW COMPOSITIONS by GOLLMICK.—"Farewell," price 4s. "German Volkslied" (Transcription), 3s. "Chanson à Boire," 3s. "Minerva," grande valse brillante, 3s. solo, and 4s. duet. "Belisario," grande duet, 5s.

NEW COMPOSITIONS by KUHE.—Le Feu Follet Caprice, played by Mdlle. Kastner, 2s. Heimweh, transcription, 2s. 6d. La Rose d'Hiver, Nocturne, 2s.

NEW COMPOSITIONS by VOSS.—Four Grand Fantasias, 4s. each.—1. Rigoletto. 2. Luisa Miller. 3. Linda di Chamouni. 4. La Sonnambula.

NEW COMPOSITIONS by OESTEN.—Popular Fantasias for Pianoforte, 3s. each.—1. Rigoletto. 2. Luisa Miller. 3. La Battaglia di Legnano. 4. Linda di Chamouni. 5. La Sonnambula.

NEW COMPOSITIONS by NORDMANN.—Rigoletto Galop di Bravura, 3s. solo, 4s. duet; The Nun's Prayer, second edition, 3s.; the Ghost Scene, second edition, 2s. 6d.; La Donna è Mobile, 3s. solo; 4s. duet; Alvars' Greek March, 2s. 6d. solo, 4s. duet.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS, of a popular character.—La Donna è Mobile, by Nordmann, 4s.; Alvars' Greek March, 4s; Rigoletto Galop, by Nordmann, 4s.; Belisario, by Gollmick, 5s.; Königsberg Polka, 3s.

RIGOLETTO, by MADAME OURY.—Price 4s. Fantaisie Brillante on Rigoletto, for the Pianoforte, by Madame Oury.

RIGOLETTO, by JULES BENEDICT.—Price 4s. Transcription of the celebrated Quartet for the Pianoforte, by Jules Benedict.

RIGOLETTO, by W. KUHE.—Price 4s. Grand Fantaisie on Rigoletto, for Pianoforte, by W. Kuhe.

RIGOLETTO, by CHARLES VOSS.—Price 4s. Fantaisie Brillante on Rigoletto, for the Pianoforte, by Charles Voss.

CORBEILLE D'ORANGES QUADRILLE on Auber's celebrated Opera, by G. Montagne. This very popular Quadrille is published, for pianoforte, price 3s., and for orchestra, 5s.

RIGOLETTO.—Festa da Ballo Galop on Verdi's celebrated Opera, by G. Montagne, is published, for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., and for orchestra, 5s.

NEW QUADRILLES as DUETS, by F. G. TINNEY.—1. Rigoletto. 2. Sonnambula. 3. Vive Paris. Price 4s. each.

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTOR FOR THE MILLION.—Now ready, price 2s. 6d., on a large diagram (of 28 in. by 17 in.), folded in a pocket case, the Railway Music Book, by Mrs. Joseph Kirkman. This work is intended for self-tuition, and may be described as a complete Manual of Instruction in Music and on the Pianoforte in a more simple style than ever before attempted. It is recommended to the Heads of Schools as adapted for hanging up in School-rooms, presenting at one view the rudiments of music.

STANDARD OPERAS for PIANOFORTE.—Messrs. Boosey beg to announce that they have just issued their series of Modern Pianoforte Operas in a new and very handsome binding (ornamental cloth, gilt embossed), at the same prices at which the Operas were formerly sold in blue paper covers.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, HOLLES STREET.

Digitized by Google

TO ORGANISTS.—An efficient DEPUTY, who is provided with undeniable references as to capability, &c., is desirous of an engagement. Address, T. R., Mr. Robson's, Organ Builder, 101, St. Martin's Lane.

MASTER ARTHUR NAPOLEON.—This pianist prodigy, whose performances have excited wonder and admiration at the Courts of Portugal and France, at the Musical Union, and recently at Dublin, is arrived in London. For address, apply to the principal Music-sellers, or to Mr. Ella, director of the Musical Union.

PIANOFORTES—FOR SALE.—Elegant PICCOLO PIANOFORTES, by a first-rate London maker, in handsome rosewood case 6¾ octaves. To be sold on very advantageous terms. May be seen at Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

A Bonâ Fide oppportunity is offered by which a handsome fortune can be obtained, in return for a small investment. Apply for Prospectuses (which will be sent post freee) to F. E. Fuld and Co., 32, Villiers-street, Strand, London.

WANTED.—An Organist for St. Margaret's Church, King's Lynn. Salary, 25*l.* per annum, and 25*l.* for teaching singing. Applications and references may be sent to J. J. Coulton, Esq., King's Lynn, on or before the 6th of June.

TO CONCERTINA PLAYERS.—Signor Carlo Minasi begs to notify to his friends and the public generally, that he has just patented his improvements in the manufacture of the above popular instrument, which will be found to give a volume of sound and freedom of touch hitherto unattained. Signor Minasi will be happy to show these instruments to any person who will favour him with a call at his residence, No. 16, Brecknock-place, Camden-road, where he gives lessons on the Concertina. Piano and Singing on moderate terms.

HARMONIUMS. — CAUTION. — George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durabillty, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

MARION'S RESILIENT BODICE and CORSALETTO DI MEDICI. They combine firmness with elasticity, fit closely, fasten easily in front, retain the original symmetry of their adjustment, and are judiciously adapted to every varying condition of the female form. Ladies in health, convalescents, and invalids wear them, with equal satisfaction; and, having experienced the comforts and advantages they ensure, will not return to the ordinary Stays and their attendant evils. PATENTED IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND AUSTRIA. Enlarged Prospectus, with Illustrations, (details of Prices from 14s.; children's, 3s.), explicit Directions for Self-measurement, &c., on receipt of Two Stamps for Postage. All Country Orders sent (without extra charge) carriage paid or post free. Mesdames Marion and Maitland, Patentees and Sole Manufacturers, 54, Connaught-terrace, Hyde-park, London.

"We think few who have seen it will be disposed to disagree with us when we assert that it is infinitely superior to anything of the kind yet introduced for the same purpose, and, in point of style and workmanship, it is alike unexceptionable."—Editorial notice in Le Follet, the leading Journal of Fashion.

IT WAS THE TIME OF ROSES—Ballad, by Thomas Hood, the music by John Wass—and sung by Mrs. Inman at Mrs. Galton's Concert—is published this day, price 2s., by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

DRAWING ROOM PIANOFORTE MUSIC by celebrated composers. The Alert, by Osborne, 3s.; Fantaisie on Rigoletto, by Kuhe, 4s.; La Danse des Fées, by Nordmann, 4s.; Feu Follet, by Kuhe, 2s. 6d.; Border Strains, by Holmes, 2s. 6d.; Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

THE BEST NAVAL SONG since the "Bay of Biscay."—Price 2s., The REEFER, by Rockstro. Sung by Mr. Leffler, and encored on every occasion. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street, and all Music-sellers.

MDLLE. CRUVELLI in FIDELIO.—Boosey and Sons' new and beautiful edition of FIDELIO, for the voice and piano, unabridged and unaltered from the author's score, with English and German words; Three Overtures; and a Life of Beethoven. Price 15s. handsomely bound. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

G. A. OSBORNE.—The ALERT, a new Morceau for the Pianoforte, by this celebrated Composer, is just published, Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

W. H. HOLMES.—The "Border Strains," a most elegant variation on a celebrated Scotch air, adapted for moderate players on the pianoforte, by W. H. Holmes. Price 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

TO MUSIC-SELLERS.—A respectable Young Man is desirous of an engagement in a Music warehouse, is proficient on the Organ and Pianoforte, can tune, and is also conversant with book-keeping. Good references. Address, G. M., at Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MUSIC FOR PRESENTATION, i.e. a Synopsis of ROBERT COCKS and Co's Catalogue of Musical Works (gratis, and postage free).—6, New Burlington-street. Publishers to the Queen.

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the Pianoforte, Enlarged, and Fingered by Carl Czerny. Fifty-sixth Edition. Robert Cocks and Co.

"Never in the history of publishing had a book of this kind so remarkable a run. It is a universal favourite. The teacher who uses it finds himself relieved of half his labour, and where a teacher cannot be had, this work (of all existing works) affords the best substitute. Its cheapness too is astonishing. Sixty-two large music pages for Four Shillings!"—New Burlington-street.

"EXCELSIOR." Ballad. 2s. 6d.—It is delightful to meet with a ballad like that bearing the above title, amid the mass of idle sentimentalism that loads our tables and our pianofortes. The words are Longfellow's, and are full of noble thoughts. The elevated sentiment of the poet has been fully imbibed by the fair and accomplished composer of the music, Miss M. Lindsay. Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, are the publishers of this really charming ballad.

Digitized by Google

RIGOLETTO.—The following numerous arrangements of this very popular Opera are now ready. The public is warned against purchasing a pirated edition of the Airs published by an unprincipled individual.

| | | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| VOCAL—THE ENTIRE OPERA, 12s. | | | | |
| Caro Nome che il mio Core (sung by Mdlle. Bosio) | Sc. e Polac... | S. | 2 | 6 |
| Cortigiani, vill Razza Dannata ... ... | Aria ..... | B. | 3 | 0 |
| Figlia! mio Padre! a te dappresso ... | Duetto, S. & B. | | 4 | 0 |
| La Donna è Mobile (sung by Sig. Mario) | Canzone ... | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Parmi veder le Lagrime ... ... ... | Aria ..... | | 2 | 6 |
| Questa o quella per me pari sono (sung by Sig. Mario) | Ballata . | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Signor, nè Principe io lo vorrei! ... ... | Duetto, T. & S. | | 4 | 0 |
| Somiglia un Apollo qual Giovane ... | Sc. Terz. e Tempesta | | 5 | 0 |
| Tutte le Feste, al Tempio ... ... | Sc. e Duet ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Un dì, se ben rammentomi ... ... | Quartetto, S. C. T. & B. | | 4 | 0 |
| V' ho ingannato—colpevole fui ... ... | Sc. e Du fin ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Possente amor mi chiami ... ... ... | Melodia ... | T. | 2 | 0 |
| Zitti, zitti, moviamo ... ... ... | Terz.... | S. T. B. | 3 | 0 |
| ENGLISH VERSION. | | | | |
| Fair shines the Moon to-night (La Donna) ... ... ... | | | 2 | 0 |
| Ditto ... ... ... ... ... | as a Duet ... | | 2 | 6 |
| PIANOFORTE SOLO. | | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Voss ... | Grand Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | "La Donna," Barcarolle, Rigoletto ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Galop di Bravura, Rigoletto ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia (Quartett) ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| Oesten ... ... | Homage à Verdi (Fant.), Rigoletto ... | | 3 | 0 |
| H. Cramer ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Kuhe ... ... | Fantaisie, Brillante Rigoletto ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Mdme. ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| | The Minuet in Rigoletto ... ... | | 1 | 6 |
| Benedict ... ... | Grand Fantaisie ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| PIANOFORTE, FOUR HANDS. | | | | |
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | | 6 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | La Donna e Mobile ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC. | | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | | 4 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| FLUTE AND PIANO. | | | | |
| Clinton ... ... | 2 Mosaiques from Rigoletto, each ... | | 4 | 0 |
| ORCHESTRE. | | | | |
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Tinney ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| MILITARY BAND. | | | | |
| Boosé ... ... | Grand Selection Rigoletto (from 'Boosé's Journal') ... ... ... ... | | 15 | 0 |

 Various arrangements for Concertina and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Cornet and Piano, are nearly ready.

Published only by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

FOR QUADRILLE BANDS.—The new Dance Music by Laurent, Gungl Tinney, and La Motte, performed at Her Majesty's State Ball, and at the nobility's Soirées Dansantes, and all the places of public amusement, is published for a quadrille band, by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, price 5s. each set for full band, or 3s. 6d. each for Septett.

LAURENT'S BELLE FRANCAIS WALTZ, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is just published, beautifully illustrated in colours, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE QUADRILLE, on Imperial Melodies, composed expressly for the French Ambassador's Grand Ball, and performed before Her Majesty the Queen. Price 3s.: Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S LEONORA WALTZ, on Melodies from La Favorite, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is now published, with an illustration, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles Street.

RIGOLETTO.—The Mario Waltz, from "Rigoletto," by Tinney, illustrated by the best portrait of Signor Mario that has appeared, in colours, by Brandard. Price 4s. solo, 5s. Orchestra.—Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSÉ'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosé's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

QUARTETT ASSOCIATION. The admired piece for the Pianoforte Solo played by Miss Arabella Goddard, with such great success, at the Quartett Association, on Thursday last, was "La Fontaine de Schubert," composed by Stephen Heller. Price 4s. 6d. Published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street, London.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ETOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

| Also just published— | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Valse Expressive, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 6 |
| Three Ghaseles, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Gondola, A. Lindahl ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 6 |
| Impromptu Styrienne, W. Kuhe ... ... ... ... | | 2 | 6 |
| Chant D'Adieux ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 3 | 0 |
| Thalberg's Six Morceau Originaux pour le Piano, from 1 to 6. each | | 2 | 0 |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street, and 167, North Street, Brighton.

GUNGL'S NEW DANCE MUSIC. — "Peterhoff Waltzes," 3s. "Immortellen Waltzes," 3s. "L'Orage Galop," 2s. 6d. Price 5s. each for Orchestra. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Campana's Album "Souvenir de Londres," containing Six New Romances, Price 8s. R. Mills, 140, New Bond-street. The Publisher reserves to himself the right of publishing the above and other new compositions by Signor Campana in Foreign Countries.

JUST PUBLISHED, Price 3s., the "HOLMESDALE GALOP," for the Pianoforte, composed and inscribed to his Pupils at Mrs. Brewer's establishment (Holmesdale, Reigate), by Edward Thurnam. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street (by special command), music-publishers to the Queen.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

TO MUSIC SELLERS AND PUBLISHERS.—To be Disposed of, with Immediate Possession, a moderate, but very good Music business, comprising Pianoforte Hire, Trade Quadrille business, Tuning, and general Sheet Music Trade. The house, with 10 years lease, is situated in an omnibus thoroughfare at the West End, and is exceedingly commodious. The proprietor leaving business in consequence of ill-health. Cards of address to be had of Robert Ollivier, 19, Old Bond Street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 21. SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(*From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)

(Continued from page 331.)

CHAPTER XVI.

(1785-1786.)

THE family correspondence, which, since Mozart took up his permanent abode in Vienna, gradually became more scanty, now ceases entirely, and with it the source of those authentic accounts from which I have drawn the principal materials for my work, up to the present chapter, and which there is no other means of supplying. My narrative will henceforth contain fewer details, since we shall now have to look to mere report for information, to the written testimony of contemporaries, to the valuable, although frequently defective, reminiscences of Herr Von Nissen, and to the chronological series of Mozart's most important works.

At the commencement of the year 1785, Leopold Mozart returned the visit which his son had paid him some years previously, and arrived just in time to hear the last three of the six quartets dedicated to Haydn. These immortal compositions were at length completed. The comparison of dates alone is sufficient to prove what care and mature deliberation Mozart had lavished upon a work that was to appear under such illustrious auspices. He who took less time to compose an opera than an Italian singer to study it, makes no effort to conceal the great and protracted labour which six pieces, of no extraordinary length, and written simply for two violins, a viola, and a violoncello, had cost him.† But the father of, and, until then, the only guide and model in, this kind of music, was to be his judge; and Haydn's approval was to be Mozart's recompense. It was imperative that the work dedicated should be as worthy of the master as of the pupil. After the quartets had been played through, Haydn went up to Leopold Mozart and pronounced these solemn words—"I tell you, in the face of Heaven, and as an honourable man, that I look upon your son as the greatest composer of whom I ever heard." How great does he himself appear, who was the forerunner and continuer of Mozart, when thus anticipating the just verdict of posterity upon the merits of one whom posterity will always rank above him!

There still exists a letter of Haydn, from which it is clear that his opinion of Mozart never changed. This letter is addressed to a friend residing at Prague, and bears the date, December, 1787. I cannot resist laying it before my readers:

"You require an opera buffa from me, and I will willingly grant your request, if you merely desire to possess a specimen of my vocal music for its own sake. But, if you wish to produce it on the stage at Prague, I am sorry I cannot oblige you, because all my operas are too closely adapted for our own company," (that of Prince Esterhazy) "and, besides, would never produce an effect worthy of the place. It would be a very different thing if I were so incalculably fortunate as to procure an entirely new libretto, for an opera, to be performed in your city. Even then, however, I should be risking a great deal, because there is but little chance of any one placing himself on a level with the great Mozart.* If I were only able to impress on every lover of music, especially on our grandees, the inimitable beauties of Mozart's works, and to make their musical appreciation and impressibility equal to my own, nations would outrival each other for the possession of such a treasure."

Mozart, on the other hand, placed Haydn above all musicians, dead and living:

"There is not one of us," he said, "who can do everything like Father Haydn: who can render his auditors merry or sad, who can excite them to laughter or tears, and all with the same success."

Among the Viennese composers, there was one of great activity, but moderate abilities, whose name, if I am not mistaken, was Kozeluch. Indulging in a common delusion, this gentleman thought he could raise his own works in the estimation of the public by running down those of a great master. Whenever an opportunity presented itself, it was his constant endeavour to lower the reputation of Haydn, and he expected to find in Mozart an ally as willing to promote his object as he himself would have been to forward that of Mozart, had Mozart been as foolish as himself. With this idea, he frequently brought quartets and symphonies of Haydn to our hero, pointing out, with a triumphant mien, some of those trivial grammatical errors—such, for instance, as hidden fifths—which the ear scarcely ever remarks, but which, nevertheless, afforded matter for pedantic criticism. Hunting after fifths was quite a mania in the last century. A clever sportsman was sure to find some of them everywhere. There were fifths both real and hidden, some perceptible only to the eye, others to the ear; while some, on the other hand, could neither be detected by the eye nor the ear—interpolated or imaginary fifths, for example. Mozart, who felt a thorough contempt for this ridiculous pedantry, at first endeavoured to avoid Herr Kozeluch's critical remarks, but, finding they were the sole end of his too frequent visits, he could no longer contain himself, but said bluntly:—"Sir, if it were possible for us to be both rolled into one, we should be very far from making one Haydn." This expression of feeling released him from a troublesome acquaintance, but procured him an enemy the more.

The annals of art afford few examples so honourable to the profession of the artist, and which characterise so nobly the real superiority of talent, as the constant and devoted

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

† Mozart himself says, in the dedication of the quartets, that "they are the fruit of long and toilsome labour."

* Mozart happened to be then in Prague.

Digitized by Google

friendship which existed between the two greatest musicians in the world. We have a proof of this in the high respect which they always expressed for each other, and, also, in their mutual communication of knowledge, for Mozart declared he had learned from Haydn how quartets should be composed; while Haydn asserted that it was from the universal Mozart he had acquired the experience which afterwards enabled him to write his last symphonies in his oratorio of the Creation, and the Seasons.

It remains for me to state how the quartets dedicated to Haydn were received upon their first appearance. The music publisher, Arteria, who purchased the manuscript, sent a number of copies for sale in Italy, but they were returned to him with the remark, that it was impossible to sell an edition "so faultily engraved." Nevertheless, they were perfectly correct; but this was not all. A Hungarian nobleman, Prince Grassalkowitch, a great lover of music, had the quartets executed by the members of his private chapel, but, before scarcely twenty bars had been played, he tore up the copies, being unable to revenge himself immediately on the composer and publisher who had cheated him in so scandalous a manner. More than this, the best paid, if not the most meritorious Capellmeister of his age, Sarti, published some critical remarks on one of the quartets, which ended with the sentence: "Si puo far di più per stonare gli professori" ("Is it possible to do more than this, to put the players out of tune?")

Such, then, was the amount of respect bestowed "upon the beloved children, after their father had sent them out into the wide world under Haydn's protection."* Such was the appreciation given to a work that will remain the everlasting type of the class of music to which it belongs—a marvel of composition, in which the lofty art of Bach, springing again into life, is united with all the seductive charms of modern music. Who was to blame?—Mozart, without doubt. While writing these quartets, he thought too much of Haydn, and too little of the publishers, the dilettanti, and the professional musicians who were his contemporaries.

The Directors of the Institution for Artists' Wives and Widows, requested Mozart to compose an Oratorio for their annual concert (1785). There was scarcely time to execute such a task; and it would have been physically impossible to produce a new work of sufficient length to occupy a whole evening in performance. But Mozart was not the man to refuse his assistance, on an occasion of this description, and he did what could only be justified by the urgency of the case, viz.: took the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" from the votive mass he had composed in Salzburg, and added an air for soprano, another for tenor, and a trio. The whole was then adapted, tolerably well, to Italian words furnished by the Association. Out of these heterogeneous materials arose Davidde Penitente, which, by its extraordinary beauty, and especially, its magnificent choruses, undoubtedly belongs to Mozart's classical productions, although it does not give us the full measure of what he could have effected, had he enjoyed leisure and opportunity.† The oratorio style, as every one knows, is peculiar, something between that of the theatre and of the church, independently of what may happen to be the peculiar features of the subject treated. A fragment of a mass, adapted to other words than those of the ritual, still remains sacred music, and can, therefore, only be judged fairly with reference to the original text. Davidde Penitente is, consequently, an oratorio with respect to the words and title, but not with respect to the music.

In the following year, 1786, Mozart had to write the Schauspiel-Director (Theatrical Manager), a one-act comedy with songs, which was commanded by the Emperor, for an entertainment at Schönbrunn. I do not intend to recur to this piece in the analytical portion of my work, and shall, therefore, take this opportunity of saying a few words about it, as I have already done about the opera of Idomeneo. It contains only four pieces of music: an overture, two airs and a trio, which last constitutes the finale. The overture is well known, but the rest far less. A dispute between two female singers, each of whom asserts herself to be the better, forms the substance of the plot. What, however, rendered this dramatic trifle rather piquant was, that Madlle. Cavaglieri and Mad. Lange (the former object of Mozart's affections) represented themselves, under the assumed names of Herz and Silberklang. They were the two first singers of Vienna—in other words, each was the first in her own line, and the second in that of her rival. The piece which they performed at Schönbrunn, before the court, was, as it were, a trial, in the supreme court of appeal, of the great cause in which the public tribunal could not come to a definite decision, since the judges were divided among themselves. It was the duty of the composer, under these extraordinary circumstances, to hold the balance equally between the two, and not to prefer one of the contending parties to the other, but, as far as lay in his power, to afford every opportunity for the display of the peculiar capabilities of each. Mozart accomplished his task with such real conscientiousness, that it is impossible to guess, from the music, whether Herz or Silberklang was his sister-in-law, and, alas! once the idol of his soul. Madlle. Cavagliari had an air; Mad. Lange had an air, each of which had its andante and allegro, and each was as beautiful as the other, although treated in a different manner. The melody and bravura are divided with mathematical exactness between the two; crochets, quavers, rests and half rests, everthing in a word, is measured out by line and rule. It was only when he came to the roulades and ascending scales, that Mozart was compelled to keep within the limits of each lady's vocal powers, and these powers were dissimilar. The voices ran up, and then down again, simply to go up still higher, like two skilful and lusty athletes striving to attain the summit of a lofty mast. At last, Silberkang reaches D in alto, but, at the same instant, Herz takes the high F in a naked third. She has gained the prize attached to the top of the mast! Herz has conquered! But who was Herz? Madlle. Cavaglieri or Mad. Lange? I am not in a position to give a positive answer. I think, however, it must have been Mad. Lange, because the airs written for Madlle. Cavaglieri in the Entführung and Davidde Penitente, ascend only to D in alto, that is, to the note with which Silberklang's passages terminate.

We see that, on the whole, the Schauspiel-Director was an extremely pretty little piece, which, even at the present day, would be sure to please, if interpreted by two singers with great vocal capabilities and a very florid style. We must not, however, seek to recognise Mozart. He has, it is true, written his name at the bottom of the work, but has forgotten to stamp it with his seal.

The reason why Mozart did not develope the Schauspiel-Director with his ordinary care was that it was not worth the trouble—a far more important subject already occupying his

* Words taken from the Dedication.

† Mozart, it is true, had written other oratorios, but they were works of his earliest youth, the mother childhood, and, at present, are no longer recollected.

MUSICAL LIBRARY
Digitized by Google

mind. Beaumarchais' Figaro was then interesting the whole world with his adventures. After the Barber of Seville had brought about his master's marriage he was desirous of taking a wife himself, and succeeded in spite of Almaviva and the Censorship; his nuptials were solemnized on every stage, and Europe was scandalised all the more for being amused. Figaro had become a great literary celebrity; and this suggested the idea of making him a musical celebrity as well. Mozart was selected to endow him with the gift of song, the only accomplishment, perhaps, in which he was hitherto deficient. Whether the task was one to Mozart's taste or not mattered little; the Emperor wished him to undertake it, and he was forced to obey. I very much regret that it is here out of my power to give details similar to those concerning his dealings with Herr Stephani; but we know thus much—that Mozart guided his new librettist, the Abbé da Ponte, as he had guided the other,—and in the most minute manner drew up the plan of the story, as well as the arrangement of the scenes, so far as they influenced the proper distribution of the music. The plan is, of itself, a masterpiece, and, with regard to the score, I think I am advancing nothing new when I say that Mozart has composed few things which are finer, and none which it was more difficult to write.

How comes it, then, that this inimitable chef d'œuvre a terra ging (fell to the ground), while Martini's La Cosa rara, given at the same time in Vienna, was lauded to the skies? Such a success, and such a failure are remarkable facts, which I must proceed to explain. Salieri, the head director (Ober-Director) patronised Martini, from whom he had nothing to fear, but much to hope, if Martini entered the lists with Mozart. The singers, also, patronised this maestro, who, like all maestros, was their very humble and devoted slave. In addition to this, the music to La Cosa rara, in which the talent of a very agreeable composer is evident, was easily caught up and appreciated by everyone. Le Nozze di Figaro, on the contrary, is one of those operas which will never please everybody, and one which must have been insupportable to the Italian singers, for reasons I shall mention in another part of this book. A concatenation of other circumstances favourable to the anti-Mozart party, of which Salieri was the head,* was not to be allowed to pass, without being turned to account. By entrusting his work to the members of a company, everyone of whom, from the Ober-Director to the lowest singer, was unequivocally his enemy, Mozart actually delivered himself into the hands of his executioners. The first two† acts of the opera were, therefore, most shamefully executed. The composer is said to have hastened, full of wrath, into the Imperial box, to implore the protection of the Emperor, who was himself indignant at what was going forward. Joseph II. caused the offenders to be severely reprimanded, and the remainder of the opera went somewhat better; but the scheme had already succeeded. The public heard the opera to the end with coolness. Figaro fell, and it was long ere he could recover the effects of his fall in Vienna.

* L. Mozart, who was then in Vienna, asserts this, without the least attempt at concealment, in a letter to his daughter.

† His opera, at present generally played in two acts, was originally in four.—A. Schraishuon.

[To be continued.]

Darmstadt.—Handel's Messiah has been performed by the Dilettanten-Verein, assisted by the members of the grand-ducal chapel.

DRAMATIC.

French Plays, St. James's Theatre.—On Monday last, Mademoiselle Fix made her début in Mellesville's drama of Valérie, and M. Regnier in Murger's one act piece, Le Bon Homme Jadis. Both were well received, the former from her highly pre-possessing appearance, and the latter as an old friend and an esteemed one. Valérie is a drama of the lachrymose school, which will always please a certain class of play-goers. It has several effective scenes, and the climax is one which, over the water, would be called "of thrilling interest." This class of works is infinitely better than the Macaire school which has succeeded it. The emotions are legitimate, and conduce to a moral object; and although the language is occasionally maudlin, it is never vulgar or impertinent. We remember the impression created by Mdlle. Mars, and, at a later period, by Mdlle. Plessy, in this piece. We cannot compare Mdlle. Fix with either of these great actresses for energy of expression; but, in the softer passages, she reminded us of both, and her reading was both graceful and pleasing. On her first appearance she won the hearts of her audience, and secured their sympathy as she progressed by the tenderness and placidity of her acting, the charm of her voice, which is exceedingly musical, and the admirable distinctness of her articulation. The last scene was perfectly free from exaggeration, and if it erred from being somewhat tame, the fault was on the right side. Mdlle. Fix was recalled, and received the customary ovation of bouquets. M. Brindeau played the part of Ernest with considerable tact, and shared the honours with Mdlle. Fix. The part of an old domestic found a most worthy representative in M. Tourillon, who is a very useful member of the company. The advent of M. Regnier was hailed by universal and long-continued applause. His impersonation of the lively, kind-hearted old man, was as good as ever, and so communicative was his gaiety, that the whole house shared in it, and the consequence was one continuous roar of laughter, from the rising to the fall of the curtain. We must add, that Mdlle. Fix heightened the effect of the piece, by taking the part of Jacqueline, which she made very interesting.

On Wednesday, Mad. Allen made her début, and with Mdlle. Fix and M. Regnier played in Madame Girardin's new piece, La Joie fait Peur. Mad. Allan's reputation, as one of the most finished actresses of French comedy, insured her a hearty welcome, and the perfection of her acting in the part of Mad. des Aubiers, was such as to place her on a level with the greatest artists of any time. The new piece, by the authoress of Lady Tartuffe, deserves particular mention, both from its own intrinsic merits and the admirable manner in which it is presented to the public. We warn our readers not to let slip the present opportunity of seeing what can be done by a combination of French comedians of the highest talent, all united on a work which is called a gem of its class—a play which, although only in one act, obtained for its authoress a far higher reputation than any of her previous efforts. Here we have the same story over and over again, and which should be an eternal lesson to our own dramatists. We allude to the superior sympathy elicited by a kindly and philanthrophic feeling to that which is generated by cutting satire and venomous sarcasm. No one will deny the wit and keen cutting satire of Lady Tartuffe; yet the play was not liked; while the present one, which appeals entirely to the best feelings of our nature, has been stamped as a masterpiece of genuine comedy. The story is extremely simple, and turns on the grief of a mother for the loss of her son, whose death has occurred in a foreign country. It turns out, however, that the news is incorrect, and the young man returns. A difficulty arises among the younger branches of the family as to the manner of communicating the news without inflicting a deadly shock on the afflicted mother. Blanche, the daughter, undertakes this task, and by degrees and easy transitions prepares the mother for the reception of her son. This outline is more than simple; but the manner in which each figure is elaborated and individualised, constitutes the perfection of dramatic art. The interest is gradually, but unceasingly increased until the climax, when the son rushes into his mother's arms. The general impression of melancholy conveyed by the deep mourning attire of the whole family on the rising of the curtain, is insensibly relieved as the action of the piece progresses, until a glow of perfect happiness is diffused over the scene by the restoration to the whole family of the most beloved of its members. The cast, as we have said, was brilliant. Mad. Allan's impersonation of the mother was a chef-d'œuvre; her sorrow for her lost son, her connection of the links of evidence at the possibility of his existence, her prostration when she embraces her child, the wildness of her maternal joy, formed a highly-finished and admirable picture. M. Regnier, as the old servant, who has to console everybody, and cannot find time for his own grief, was wonderful. Madlle. Luther and Madlle. Fix contributed materially to the general effect by the superior style of their acting. The applause was enthusiastic, and the house crowded.

Digitized by Google

HAYMARKET.—Mr. Buckstone has turned up another trump card in his hand, this time an ace. The new comedy by Mr. Planché, produced on Saturday night, achieved one of the most decided successes we have witnessed for a long time. It is entitled The Knights of the Round Table, and is founded on the French drama Les Chevaliers de Lansquenet. The knights are sharpers, who pursue a course of villany to ruin a young lady, whose brother joins in the attempt, and are foiled by the intervention of a certain horn-player and fencing-master. The comic details are highly amusing, and the serious scenes very interesting. We have not room to give the plot, which, however, would be only to anticipate the pleasure of the visitor to the theatre. Enough to say, that the piece is admirably acted throughout by Messrs. Buckstone, G. Vandenhoff, Howe, Compton, Clarke, Chippendale, Miss Reynolds, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam; that it is put on the stage with great splendour and appropriateness, and that Mr. Buckstone made one of his greatest hits in Tom Tittler, a character of legitimate comedy and not of farce. If The Knights of the Round Table had nothing else to recommend it than Mr. Buckstone's acting in the part of the joint horn-player and professor of fencing, it would be worth going to see, as an incomparable bit of genuine comedy. But it has everything to recommend it, and consequently everybody will pay the Haymarket a visit, or everybody who does not will be deprived of one of the most elegant and amusing entertainments of the day.

ADELPHI.—On Monday night, a new drama, in five acts, entitled The Marble Heart; or, the Sculptor's Dream, was played for the first time, and received with great favour. As almost every novelty now-a-days proceeds from the French, we were not surprised at finding the Marble Heart a simple translation of Les Filles de Marbre, a piece which achieved a great success last year in Paris, and was lately produced at the Soho Theatre, in Dean-street, by the French company who performed there. Mr. Charles Selby is the translator, but appears in the bills as the author. We presume this is allowable, according to the generally received notions of authorship. The Marble Heart, which, in its original shape, was scarcely conformable to English ideas of morality, had to undergo certain alterations in construction and dialogue, by no means to the improvement of the piece. The plot, in its new form, turns on the love of a young sculptor for a lady of rank and standing, who encourages him up to a certain point, and then dismisses him to make way for a more opulent suitor. The sculptor dies of a broken heart. The details are diffuse to a fault, and the dream in the first act, which foreshadows the reality of the drama, is entirely needless. The acting of Mr. Leigh Murray, as the sculptor, was real and powerful, and the mad scene managed with much art. The madness, notwithstanding, was spun out to too great a length—which was no fault of Mr. Leigh Murray, but of the translator or author—and thereby lost much of its impressiveness. Madame Celeste as Mdlle. Marco, the Marble Heart, acted with becoming elegance and composure, and gave a truthful picture of the woman of the world, who will not sacrifice position and appearance to feeling. Miss Woolgar made a most interesting and graceful Marie, the orphan girl, whose love and devotion might have saved the young sculptor, had not infatuation for the insensible Marco so thoroughly overpowered all his senses, and made his heart dead to every emotion but one. The comic part of the piece was assigned to Messrs. Paul Bedford and Charles Selby, both of whom indulged in their usual bouffonneries and extravagances, and excited considerable laughter. Mr. Benjamin Webster supported the part of the friend and counsellor of the sculptor with humour and point. The overture, a drinking song, and the incidental music by Mr. Alfred Mellon, are most charming and appropriate. The drinking song, given with unction, if not with voice, by Mr. Paul Bedford, was loudly encored. The overture would do no discredit as a prelude to an opéra comique—we have heard much inferior to an opera of pretensions—and the incidental music is written with the nicest meaning and taste.

The Marble Heart was applauded after every act, and, at the end, elicited loud and prolonged cheers from every part of the house. The drama has been put on the stage with the usual splendour and completeness which characterise the managerial direction of Madame Celeste.

THE ORGAN IN THE PANOPTICON.

THIS instrument, built by Messrs. Hill, is the largest in the metropolis. It consists of four manuals, each from C to $\overline{A}$, and a pedal board from C to $\overline{F}$; 30 notes. Every modern improvement is contained in it, as well as several inventions in mechanism, amongst which are a new method of drawing the registers, an improved system of composition pedals, and a pedal for drawing the registers in succession, so as to form a gradual and complete crescendo. The organ contains sixty registers (exclusive of the copulas) comprising every variety of tone, and embracing all the novelties of the continental organs. The wind is supplied by six bellows at different pressures, and lightness of touch is ensured by the application of the pneumatic lever. All the registers extend throughout the manuals with the exception of the "Vox Angelica" which commences at C. The bellows of this vast instrument are worked by steam power, and the system of "equal temperament" has been successfully applied.

As most of our readers are already aware, Mr. W. T. Best is the appointed organist; the instrument may be heard daily, and in the evening its lighter qualities are developed in the organ accompaniment to Handel's Acis and Galatea. Mr. Best seems determined that the compositions of the great organ writers shall be heard by the public, as well as music of a more miscellaneous and popular character. A description of the various registers of the Panopticon organ is given below:—

FIRST MANUAL (Choir Organ).

1. Double Stopped Diapason (wood), 16 feet.—2. Gamba (metal), 8 feet.—3. Open Diapason, 8 feet.—4. Stopped Diapason, 8 feet.—5. Gemshorn (metal), 4 feet.—6. Octave-Quint, 3 feet.—7. Super Octave, 2 feet.—8. Doublette (two ranks).—9. Stopped Flute, 4 feet.—10. Flageolet, 2 feet.—11. Bassoon and Clarionette, 8 ft.—12. Tromba, 8ft.

SECOND MANUAL (Great Organ).

1. Double open Diapason, 16 feet.—2. Open Diapason, 8 feet.—3. Salcional, 8 feet.—4. Stopped Diapason, 8 feet.—5. Quint, 6 feet.—6. Octave, 4 feet.—7. Octave Quint, 3 feet.—8. Super-Octave, 2 feet.—8. Fourniture (three ranks).—10. Sesquialtera (three ranks).—11. Mixture (three ranks).—12. Wald Flute, 4 feet.—13. Double Trumpet, 16 feet.—14. Trombone, 8 feet.—15. Trumpet, 8 feet.—16. Clarion, 4 feet.

THIRD MANUAL (Swell Organ).

Double Stopped Diapason, 16 feet.—2. Open Diapason, 8 feet.—3. Viol-di-Gamba, 8 feet.—4. Stopped Diapason, 8 feet.—5. Octave, 4 feet.—6. Octave-Quint, 3 feet.—7. Super-Octave, 2 feet.—8. Suabe Flute, 4 feet.—9. Sesquialtera (five ranks).—10. Oboe, 8 feet.—11. Trumpet, 8 feet—12. Cornopean, 8 feet.—13. Clarion, 4 feet.

FOURTH MANUAL (Solo Organ).

1. Tuba Mirabilis, 8 feet.—2. Octave Tuba, 4 feet.—3. Harmonic Flute, 4 feet.—4. Piccolo, 2 feet.—5. Claribel, 8 feet.—6. Glockenspiel.—7. Krumhorn, 8 feet.—8. Vox-Angelica (two ranks).—9. Vox-Humana (metal), 8 feet.

PEDAL ORGAN.

1. Double Open Diapason, 32 feet.—2. Open Diapason (wood), 16 feet.—3. Open Diapason (metal), 16 feet.—4. Bourdon, 16 feet.—5. Octave, 8 feet.—6. Octave-Quint, 6 feet.—7. Super-Octave, 4 feet.—8. Sesquialtera (five ranks).—9. Tromba, 8 feet.—10. Trombone, 16 feet.

There are seven copulas; nine composition pedals; two tremulants, and 4004 pipes. The organ is well worth a hearing, and it is almost superfluous to add, the organ player.

Digitized by Google

MRS. v. MADAME.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Permit me, in reply to your correspondent CROTCHET's letter, to state that, while I feel obliged and honoured by his coupling my wife's name with a lady of such undoubted talent and of the deservedly highest position in her profession as Madame Clara Novello (of the other lady I know little, save as the sister of the Misses Pyne, never having heard of her celebrity as a pianist, though it seems CROTCHET has), I must, however, be permitted to differ with him as to the right of an individual to interfere with or object to the style of title adopted by any persons for a public profession. Yet he shall have my reasons for the assumption of the "Madame" by my wife. Having for some years past been heard by the British public (and I believe, without doubt, most favourably), yet feeling there was more scope abroad than at home, and by the advice of several eminent German artists who have heard her sing, I (just previously to our marriage) had made arrangements for her appearance in certain towns in Germany, but which, owing to the unsettled state of continental affairs, is for the present at least postponed; and at the suggestion of the parties in question it was that the Madame was adopted, they deeming it better to obtain a few English criticisms as Madame Newton Frodsham than as plain Mrs. Frodsham. With respect to the retention of the Newton, it was done to show there was no attempt at coming before the public as a new singer, she retaining for a while at least that name by which she was so well-known. The custom is not singular, nor is the adoption of a name for the public at all strange, such as Madlle. Rita Favanti (Miss Edwards), Madame Amedei (Mrs. Fry), with many others I could quote.

Thus, having given a satisfactory reason for the "Madame," I trust it will be sufficient to Remain, my dear Sir,

Your's obliged,

19, Albany St., Regent's Park. BRIDGE FRODSHAM.

RAIMONDI'S "TRE ORATORI."

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Prior Park, Nr. Bath.

SIR,—As I see in last Saturday's Musical World that Raimondi's "Tre Oratori" is advertised for sale, and as I am anxious for it to be performed in this country, I shall be most happy to give any publisher, who may wish to possess this wonderful work, an explanation of its mysteries.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
STANLEY A. CLARKE.

Our columns are open to our correspondent.—ED. M. W.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Allow me to make reference to the letter of Mr. W. C. Dale, with the above title, in your paper of last Saturday.

I am surprised, Sir, that your correspondent should have made so strange a use of his figures and powers of calculation as to attempt to shew, in the manner he has, the profitableness of an Organist's salary of £50 a-year.

I have certainly never had £50 a-year for playing the organ, but I have had £40. I know I am a sad calculator; perhaps all musicians are bad calculators; perhaps, indeed, musicians are people to whom the ordinary rules of calculation cannot be applied; this is not, it appears, unlikely—I really do not know how those things may be—yet I suppose a salary (that is of course an organist's salary) of £40 a-year, would, if treated in as purely theoretical a way as one of £50, yield an enormous profit.

I regret exceedingly that at the time I was in receipt of my £40 I was in unhappy ignorance of my great advantage, and that the public never thought of it. As it was, I assure you, Sir, that this "primrose on the river's brim" was but a yellow primrose to me, and nothing more, for I had to work hard at my private professional duties, before I had eyes to see any poetry in my employments; and the public, too, who are fond of paying respect to a man of ample income, saw no more to reverence in me, in regard of my salary of £40 as organist, than if I had filled the office for nothing.

You can ill spare space, Sir, at this season, and with so much of importance as you are worthily engaged in, for many of my remarks, but I know enough of your editorial tone to believe that you will not unwillingly insert as much as fairness demands. Admit, then, that I as an organist work 400 hours for £50, I get but two-and-sixpence an hour for my labour; then, very far from my being one of the best paid functionaries in the world, I am, I think, one of the worst, and it is quite necessary to presume that I am an organist "properly so called" (I suppose that means one of a class of persons always underpaid) for no gentleman, a member of any other profession than that of music, could ever be brought to use his abilities for so small a consideration. Again, if I am unfortunate enough to have a bad instead of a good instrument, and also to have difficulties with my clergyman, congregation, and choir, as to the mode of doing the services of the church, selection of music, and practising the same, I have very little of the pleasure an inexperienced person might expect to attend the performance of my duties.

Again, if I am so situated as not to have many pupils for the organ, I have not the indirect opportunity of profiting your correspondent alludes to. Further, I do not see what justice there could be in making me my own paymaster out of my own natural affection for my art and its instruments, for I am sure you will acknowledge that it would not be more dishonest or insane of some bookseller, for example, to charge me with double or treble the proper price for any book he saw I admired, than it would be of some person to compel me, because, forsooth, I am an organist, "properly so called," that is a musician in love with a good church service, and so every way qualified for my office, to fulfil its duties for almost nothing.

I forbear to criticize the letter of your correspondent as a composition, partly because I am conscious of my own weakness of style, and partly because I do not wish him to think me ill-natured; I forbear to point out more at length the fallacy of his reasoning, because it must be self-evident to every attentive reader, and you have no room to spare; and I beg to conclude by commending my imperfect remarks to your kind editorial care, in the confidence that you will give them a report and to oblige, Sir, your obedient servant and constant reader,

Broad Street, Leominster, JOHN WILKES.
Monday, May 22nd, 1854.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Pray allow me to offer a few arguments in support of Mr Dale's views on the subject of organists' salaries.

First—An organist, if not engaged at a church, is unemployed on a Sunday, and has, therefore, the option of making his £40 or £50, or earning nothing, like other professional men. Secondly—There are many more organists than there are organs, and, consequently, there is enough competition to keep salaries low. Thirdly—It may be presumed (as Mr. Dale says), that the great organists would not accept minor situations, unless they were satisfied with their small salaries or their large organs—although which of the two inducements may be the greater it is difficult to say. And Fourthly—in answer to those who cry out that they are ill-treated, I say, it is simply ridiculous to expect rectors or churchwardens will pay more for an organist's services than their market value.

If salaries are to be increased, it can only be by an improvement in the public taste. The requisition for talented performers would then become general, and the common law of demand and supply would effect the desired rise in terms. But the second-rate professors, who made most noise on the subject, would then lose their business altogether—and I, therefore, recommend them to take their £40 or £50 salaries and quietly pocket the affront.

I, myself, sir, am a trombone player, and I shall be most happy to accept an engagement to play any number of services on Sundays for £20 a year.

I am, Sir, yours, obediently,
AN ILL-PAID SABBATARIAN.

IN RE "ORGANISTS' SALARIES" AND ST. MARTIN'S-IN-THE-FIELDS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

DEAR SIR,—The simplicity of your correspondent, Mr. Dale, is very amusing. He argues that organists are handsomely paid with fifty guineas a-year, because, considering the time actually occupied by their duties, that salary is, "according to Cocker," equivalent to about £1200 a-year for their entire time! We might as well argue that "cabby," who can earn "by time" two shillings an hour, is consequently to be reputed as realising the tidy income of about £600 per annum!

Mr. Dale then asks, with marvellous simplicity, "What profession is so well paid?" First of all, as I have proved, he has failed to show that organists are so well paid; and next let him think of the painter, who, by only a few months' or even weeks' labour, can frequently realise much more than Mr. D. names as the relative remuneration for a musician's whole time; and the barrister and the physician can even put this into the shade. Mr. Dale then crowns his simplicity by remarking that, besides their liberal salaries, organists have access to a splendid instrument to give lessons on. This is indeed a fit climax to his remarks, for in how many cases does it hold good?

Digitized by Google

According to my notions, an efficient organist must be a thorough musician, both theoretical and practical, pains-taking, careful, diligent, punctual, and a gentleman. To say that such an one is handsomely paid by about five shillings, or less, per hour, for his important services, is really too bad.

While on this subject, I beg to call attention to an advertisement in the Morning Herald, of Saturday, for an organist to St. Martin's, Trafalgar-square. The duties are—three full services every Sunday, Good Friday, and Christmas Day, besides attendance every Saint's day, for which the remuneration is slily stated as "commencing at fifty pounds per annum." Understanding that the organist's salary at this church had been fixed at the more commensurate sum of £80, I have inquired particulars, and learn that the present organist is to be pensioned off, as a reward for long and faithful service, with £30 per annum, and this, during his lifetime, is to be deducted from the future organist's salary, making it £50 pro tem. How kind and considerate the pensioning of a faithful servant sounds! but how easy a thing it is to be liberal, when we can manage it without dipping into our own pockets! There is an old saying absut robbing Peter to pay Paul—your readers may find its present application.

Yours, very truly,

May 22nd, 1854. JUSTITIA.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Notwithstanding Mr. Dale's assertion that organists are not underpaid, I beg to give it a direct yet gentlemanly contradiction.

Mr. Dale seems to imagine that the average salary of organists is £50 per annum. Let him take a quiet stroll to all the churches within three miles of St. Paul's, and he will find that not one in twenty receives that salary—the amount which by courtesy receives that name being generally £25 to £35 per annum. For myself, I have to attend three services on Sunday, one week-day service, take charge of a singing class, and practise the children twice a-week, for which I receive £25 a-year, and the gratuitous impertinence of a portion of the congregation, who fancy, because they can play a psalm-tune with one hand, that they know a great deal more about music than I do.

If Mr. Dale wishes to subject himself to the ani-mad-versions (have I not well chosen the word) of those who barely know the difference between a crotchet and a comet—if he wishes to have his life worried out of him by the inattention of children whom he has to teach to sing—if he wishes to be tricked out of his situation by a little neat-handed jugglery of the churchwarden, who wishes a friend to have it—if, to shew his mastery of the organ, he plays one of J. S. Bach's Pedal fugues, and afterwards wishes to be coolly insulted by a one-handed psalm-tune-player, asking him if that thing he played was an exercise? let him by all means become an organist. In fact, to a man perfectly blasé or one who has serious thoughts of committing suicide through ennui, an organist's situation would be a perfect godsend; it would completely restore him, if the thought that he would have to endure all this for £25 or £30 a-year had not already done so.

One word with Mr. Dale. A person has to study and practice well for five or six years before he really is an organist. Is £50 a-year too large a sum as remuneration for all the hours he has so spent. Instead of Mr. Dale wishing to disparage organists and persuade persons that they are amply remunerated (for that is what he means), let him seek to raise the standard by which organists are chosen; let it not be because the applicant is a ratepayer, "Buggins and five small children for organist;" let it not be because he is blind (are blind persons generally competent?) or brother, or sister to a churchwarden, or his mother a district visitor; let it rather be on account of his professional ability. Let Mr. Dale do this, and he will confer a great boon on the profession, raise the character of organists and organ-playing generally, and then twice £50 will not be too great a salary for an organist.

Yours obediently, PEDALS.

HERR DEICHMANN, the violinist, performed two violin solos at the Cologne Choral Union on Saturday morning—an étude, in form of a scherzo, of his own composition, which is very musician-like, and a fantasia by Vieuxtemps. Both were greatly and deservedly applauded.

GENOA.—Beaucarde, the tenor (who was some years ago at Her Majesty's Theatre in London), has been engaged for the opening of the Teatro Nuovo in the spring of 1855.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It is at the Grand Opéra, and not the Théâtre Lyrique, as erroneously announced, that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha's opera, Santa-Chiara, is about to be produced. The principal parts will be sustained by Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli and M. Gueymard. The original libretto will be translated into French by M. Gustave Oppelt, who performed the same office for the royal composer's Casilda. Meanwhile, the representations of M. Halévy's Reine de Chypre continue. Mdlle. Cruvelli, who returns immediately after the expiration of her London engagement, will make her rentrée as Valentine in the Huguenots, on Friday, June 2.—At the Opéra-Comique, Mdlle. Rey, who lately made a successful début in La Dame Blanche, has appeared as Marie in La Fille du Régiment.—La Fiancée du Diable, of MM. Scribe and Victor Massé, is announced for this week. Maître Wolfram will have been represented at the Théâtre Lyrique before you receive this letter. The Minister of the Interior has prolonged M. Jules Séveste's privilége, as manager of this theatre, for ten years, as a mark of approbation of that gentleman's exertions.

At the Théâtre Français, Mdlle. Rachel will probably make her re-appearance as Phèdre.—A five-act comedy, entitled: Que dira le Monde? by M. Ernest Serret, has been very successful at the Odéon. The principal parts are sustained by Mesdames Grassau, Grangé, Mdlle. Fernand, MM. Leferrière, Rey, and Kime.—A very peculiar piece, La Bête du bon Dieu, by MM. Fournier and Decourcelles, has made a "hit" at the Porte Saint Martin.—A little drama, Giraud, le puisatier d'Ecully, is in rehearsal at the Gaîté. Your readers will, probably, recollect Giraud's marvellous escape from death, some short time since. It is on this circumstance that the piece is founded.—La Viellesse d'une Grisette is the title of the last novelty at the Délassements-Comiques. It is from the pen of MM. Thirion and Pélissier.—The inauguration of the opening of the picture-gallery, bequeathed by the Duke de Feltre to the city of Nantes, has been celebrated with great éclat. There was a flower-show, a concert in the theatre, and another in the Cercle des Beaux Arts.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.).—Sig. Verdi's Trovatore has been given at the Imperial Opera House for the first time. The following pieces were among those which pleased the public most: the romance, "Deserto sulla Terra;" the cavatina, "Tacea la notte placida;" the song, "Stride la Vampa;" the duet, "Mal reggondo;" and the aria, "Balen del suo Sorriso." Fräulein Demeric and Herr Bettini were greatly applauded in the parts of the Gipsy and the Trovatore. Herr Bettini was called forward three times after his air in the third act. Mdme. Bendazzi played Leonore, and Herr Ferri, the Count. The choruses and orchestra, under the able direction of Herr Eckert, were highly satisfactory, and the same might be said of the mise-en-scène. The opera was quite successful. We have, also, had Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia. An apology was made for Mdme. Medori, on the score of indisposition, but the charming artist needed no excuse, for she both played and sang the part of the heroine admirably. Herr Mirate was Gennaro, and Herr Debassini, the Duke.

Mdme. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt has given her seventh concert, in the room of the Musikverein. She sang Mendelssohn's "Die Sterne schauen doch herab," the grand air of Donna Anna, from Don Juan, the trio from Vielka with two flutes, and the finale from La Sonnambula. Herr Otto Goldschmidt performed a concerto of his own composition, with orchestral accompaniment. Herr Königslöw played the adagio and finale from Mendelssohn's violin concerto. His rendering of the first was good, but he was far from doing justice to the last. The room was densely crowded.

A concert has been given in Herr Seuffert's Rooms for the benefit of the little violinists Friedrich, Sofie and Victor Ráczek, pupils of Herr J. Hellmesberger, artistic director of the Conservatory. The young musicians played the adagio and rondo from De Beriot's third concerto, an air varié of Herr J. Mayseder, a rondo of Herr J. Jansa, and a trio concertante of Herr G. Hellmesberger. They created a furore. Their playing was really wonderful for their age, but I cannot help thinking that such hot-house forcing of talent is by no means conducive to the true interests of art. Fräulein Schamberger sang the page's air from Le Nozze di Figaro remarkably well, and Herr Puttler, jun., played M. Prudent's Hirondelle just as ill. Mdme. Sofie Schröder, who was formerly such a deserved favourite with the frequenters of the opera, from which she retired some time since, has taken a benefit at the Hofburgtheater, on which occasion she appeared as the Meisterin in Schiller's Lied von der Glocke (Lay of the Bell) with Herr Lindpaintner's music. There was not a vacant place in the whole house, and the manner in which the lady was received, must have convinced her that she still lives in the memory of her former patrons and admirers. The orchestra was well conducted by Capellmeister Titl. At the conclusion of the entertainment, Mdme. Sofie Schröder delivered a touching address, expressive of the satisfaction she felt at the accomplishment of the desire she had so long entertained of once more appearing before her former friends.

Digitized by Google

Mdme. Medori has concluded, per telegraph, an engagement, commencing from the 1st of September next, for the Carnival of 1855, at the theatre of San Carlo, in Naples. She has obtained very high terms. It is not improbable that, in the autumn, she will sing a few times in Bologna. Herr S. Sechter, Court organist, and professor at the Conservatory, having presented a copy of his work, Die richtige Folge der Grundharmonien oder vom Fundamentalbass und dessen Umkehrungen und Stellvertretern, has received the gold medal of the Arts and Sciences. A new mass, by Capellmeister L. Rotter, will be performed on St. John's day, in the Imperial Church.

Berlin.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A series of concerts is announced to come off at the Summer Theatre in the Friedrich-Wilhelmstadt. The first has already taken place. Herr Grunwald played a concerto by Lepinsky and M. Ernst's Rondo Papageno. Herr W. Müller, son of the well-known Brunswick quartetist, also performed on the violin and gave manifestations of great promise. Herr Fischer executed several brilliant pieces for the trumpet, while Herr Fahrenholz, from the theatre at Aix-la-Chapelle, and Fräulein Eiswald sang one or two Italian songs. A very numerous audience assembled in the concert-room of the Theatre Royal, to hear the oratorio, Die Sündfluth (the Deluge), the music of which is by Herr Damm, and the text by Herr Rellstab. It was successfully produced, five years ago, in the Garnisonkirche. The principal parts were sustained by Fräulein Trietsch, Mad. Bötticher, Herren Pfister and Zschiesche. Stern's Verein lately performed Händel's Israel in Egypt in the Garnisonkirche. The proceeds were devoted to a charitable institution. The effect was greatly heightened by Herr Küster's masterly performance on the magnificent organ. The solos were sung by Mesdames Schultze, Hoppe, and three gentlemen, members of the Verein. Herr Stern conducted. The church was densely crowded.—In token of his great approbation of the efforts of the Sieg-Rheinischer Lehrer-Gesang-Verein to introduce to the public and into the church service the classical music of the 16th and 17th centuries, the King of Prussia has placed at the disposal of the association the complete edition of Palestrina's sacred music, published by Alfieri at Rome in seven folio volumes. It is his majesty's intention, that every member of the Verein shall be enabled to have free access to the work in question.—John Sebastian Bach's Passions-Musik to the Gospel according to St. Matthew is announced for the 19th in the Singakademie. Herr Concertmeister H. Hubert Ries celebrated lately his Silberne Hochzeit (Silver Wedding), or, in other words, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his wedding. Herr Theodore Formes has married Fräulein Ahrens.

Venice.—The success of Verdi's Traviata, newly arranged, is now confirmed at the Theatre San Benedetto, having been previously brought out at the Fenice, where it was received with indifference. This is attributed to the perfection of the cast. Mad. Spezia threw the whole weight of her dramatic genius into her part. The tenor, Landi, was excellent, both as a singer and actor, in Alfredo, and Coletti added considerably to the effect of the ensemble. The orchestra, under the direction of Gallo, was loudly applauded in the introduction.

Trieste.—A new opera by Badia, entitled Il Conte di Leicester, is in preparation.

Aix-la-Chapelle.—The following announcement, relative to the Niederrheinisches Musikfest, has appeared in the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung: "Conductor of the Festival, Herr von Lindpaintner; director of the choruses, the municipal music-director, Herr von Turanyi.—The performances on the 4th of June will consist of Gluck's overture to Iphigenia in Aulis, and Händel's Israel in Egypt—the solos by Mad. Sophie Förster, soprano; Mad. Findorff, contralto; Herr Schlösser, tenor; and Herren Pischek and Büssel, bass.—The performances on the 5th will consist of Herr von Lindpaintner's overture to the Genueserin, the finale to the Vampyr, by the same composer, Beethoven's symphony in A major, Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, and Mozart's Davidde Penitente—the solos by Mesdames Caradori, Förster, Herren Schlösser, Pischek, and Büssel. On the 6th, there will be a concert opening with Mendelssohn's overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and concluding with a chorus from Israel. M. Vieuxtemps will perform his violin concerto in D minor and Paganini's Le Streghe, and Herr von Turanyi, Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in E flat. The following solos have already been selected:—a sacred air by Alessandro Stradella, Mad. Förster; an air by Vincenz Lachner, Herr Schlösser; and an air from Herr Marschner's Hans Heiling, Herr Pischek. The other vocal pieces have not yet been decided on.

Potsdam.—Herr von Flotow's opera of Rübezahl has been performed by the express command of His Majesty. The Berlin Männergesangverein "Melodia," consisting of about forty members, have given a grand concert, which was very numerously attended. Herr Braune conducted, and Fräulein Ida Brauns, from the theatre at Königsberg, Herren Fichtenholz, Schütz, Bromme, Grunewald, and H. Müller, lent their valuable assistance.

Cologne.—The Musikalische Gesellschaft lately gave a symphony by Schnyder von Wartensee, and Herr F. Hiller's Traum in der Christnacht. Herr Beck, from the Imperial Opera House, in Vienna, has concluded a successful "starring" engagement. His last appearance was as the Jäger, in the Nachtlager von Grenada. He proceeds hence to Stettin.

Dresden.—The Faust of M. Hector Berlioz has been produced, under the direction of that gentleman in person. The reception seems to have been equivocal.

Leipsic.—In an article of the Leipziger Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, Dr. Liszt vindicates the claim of the Weimar Theatre to the honour of having been the first to rescue from oblivion "the second Fidelio" of the day. This "second Fidelio" is, according to Dr. Liszt, the Benvenuto Cellini of M. Hector Berlioz. The barytonist, Herr Mitterwurzer, from the Theatre Royal, Dresden, has been singing here.

Stuttgart.—Mad. von Marra has taken her departure, and Mad. Marlow has returned. Herr Kücken has been unwell for some time. He had scarcely recovered before he undertook to superintend a rehearsal of Mendelssohn's St. Paul. In consequence of exposure to a draught in the concert room, he has had a relapse. Luckily his illness is not dangerous, although very painful, being caused by a tumour inside the left ear. Herr Schüttky has commenced his engagement in the character of Saint Bris. Fräulein Garrigues, formerly of the Stadttheater, in Hamburgh, is singing here.

Bremen.—Fräulein Johanna Wagner and Herr Tichatscheck have been creating a furore. On account of the high terms required by these two celebrated artists, the management was obliged to raise the prices, at which the good people of Bremen were greatly displeased.

Lubeck.—Herr Ferdinand Hiller's oratorio, Die Zerstörung von Jerusalem has been produced, under the direction of Capellmeister Hermann, with great success.

Hamburgh.—Herr Young has concluded his engagement, having appeared as Lionel, Raoul, Elvin, and Stradella. He will first visit Leipsic, and then proceed to Munich.—Mad. Tedesco, from the Grand Opera in Paris, will appear in August.—A concert, numerously attended, has been given for the benefit of the late F. Schneider's family.

Frankfort-on-the-Maine.—Herr Wagner's Lohengrin has been performed three times. Fräulein J. Ney has created a sensation.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R. W. B.—We would willingly assist our Correspondent, but not enjoying the advantage of the lady's intimate acquaintance, we are unable to advise him on the matter. The verses on MARIO, though really poetical, are scarcely equal to the others. We can well understand that a true minstrel would be more likely to derive inspiration from the eyes of such a lady than from the symmetrical perfection of the Apollo Belvidere itself.

ERRATUM.—In the last number of the memoir of MENDELSSOHN, for "tonical" read "historical" concerts.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 27TH, 1854.

THERE are many apostles of Falsehood, but Truth is in want of disciples. The lies that are begotten by the apostles of Falsehood upon the bodies of Sophistry and Corruption are so numerous that the heavens are darkened by them. But Truth shines behind, like the sun, and it is for her worshippers to make war against the locust host of lies, and, dispersing them, let the world behold the full glory of the light they have for a while obscured. We, as the humblest of Truth's disciples, shall draw sword in the cause, and fight her battles against her enemies. What we shall say will offend many and hurt some; but Truth is vital to the health of art, and the interests of private individuals are as dust in the balance.

Lord Bacon, the wisest of philosophers, in his golden book, exclaims against the idola that blind the eye of men's judgments and prevent their beholding Truth naked. The idola are the prejudices, which are born of various parents. It is for those who would behold the face of Truth, and make it glorious to mankind, to wage war against them and destroy them utterly. They are stubborn enemies of progress; the poisonous sophists that distort and vilify. Until they are swept away, the mind cannot comprehend a simple proposition. Let it be, then, our task to uproot them from the soil they render sterile; let it be for us to cast them into the fire, until they be consumed and stench the air no more. Like good husbandmen, we must weed the pastures, or they will not bear fruit.

The art of music is but a type of other arts. Its growth is fostered or stunted by favourable or adverse circumstances. But it is the youngest of the arts. There is yet time to save it from corruption. From examples in the history of other arts we may know what to do, and what to eschew. Let us then study them and profit.

First, the professors of music should be brought up in the eternal principles that apply to all art. Next, the taste of the laity should be educated. If an artist do well and yet be not appreciated, it is an injury to art. If he do not well and yet be favoured, it is an injury to art. But, if when he does well he be encouraged, and when he does ill he be admonished, it is a glory for art. To promote this end, for the sake of art, should be the aim of all criticism; but, to promote it requires certain learning and endowments that not many critics possess, and, indeed, at the present time, scarcely any. We shall not, by a process of logical ratiocination, enlabour to give the reason of this deficiency, but shall endeavour to make it appear as if it were an inevitable consequence of the facts that we adduce, and the observations we shall make upon them.

It will be said that we make over-much of music, and magnify its importance. But this will be an error; for, though music, like history, be not a matter of magnificence and memory, like poetry, it is a matter of refinement and aspiration. Shelley, the poet, has said, that "Poets are the unacknowledged legislators of the world." Translate his meaning largely, and he is right; he speaks of all poets, no matter what their medium of expression. Poetry and music address themselves to the intellect through the medium of the ear; painting, sculpture, architecture, through the medium of the eye. There is no art that addresses itself to the intellect through the organs of taste, or feeling, or smelling; therefore are the organs of hearing and seeing the greatest and most magnanimous of the senses; and the ear and the eye may be likened to carriers that bear the mind its food and riches; and according to the manner of its nourishment and clothing is the health or sickness of the mind. The important office of these carriers cannot be over estimated; on them depend refinement and wisdom, and according to their burden is a man a barbarian or a civilian in the universal meaning. Therefore Shelley's apothegm should be written in gold, and inscribed upon the Temple of Truth:—"Poets are the unacknowledged legislators of the world." These are the words of an oracle.

Would the world be better, or worse, had Mozart, Handel, Beethoven, Mendelssohn never lived? This question has been often asked but never answered. We say the world would have been much worse for the want of them. For the mind, when contemplating sublime images, is admonished of its immortality. That which is body can corrupt and perish, but that which is ideal cannot be effaced; its style is not of earth but of heaven; not of the finite but of the infinite. In listening to the divine music of these mighty poets, we are walking with them in the country of the infinite. Their inspiration is from God, and is a proof that man is not as the cattle; for, if man's mind can comprehend what is inspiration, it can embrace the enigma of imperishability. And, surely, that which makes us feel and know we are immortal is of the highest consequence. Of how great import is it then that art should be rid of all that clogs its wings and prevents its flight upward—that it be not, as the soul in a weak body, or as the fingers on a defective instrument, unable to declare the hand that has enforced it. The perfect accomplishments of art are the endeavours of the immortal spirit to fly up to the anima mundi of which it is a portion. Spinoza, forgetting art, left out what would have made his ethics perfect. He overlooked the link that binds the finite to the infinite. For, in so much as mathematics is tangible and finite, is it inferior to art which is intangible and infinite. Mathematics is the symbol for all that man can seemingly reduce to elements and know entirely, but art is the symbol of what he desires to know and cannot, being human. One is the earth we tread upon, the other the heaven we aspire to. In one we walk step by step, in the other we traverse boundless space in an instant. Reason has barriers, imagination none.

M. BLUMENTHAL'S Matinée Musicale will take place at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, on Monday next, May 29. A new romance, "Gondoliera," by the eminent virtuoso is announced for Signor Gardoni.

Digitized by Google

TO SOPHIE CRUVELLI.

(On hearing her sing "Non mi dir," in Don Giovanni, at the Royal Italian Opera.)

S ing on, sweet warbler, with the beaming eye!
O nward and onward, let thy waves of song
P rophetic flow, in sounds that cannot die,
H aving no end but in the memory's wrong.
I nspired maiden!—lift thy voice on high,
E nvy itself cannot resist thee long.

C harm us, enchantress! with that air again;
R are melody like thine doth soften pain.
U nloose the silver strings! To thee belong
V ariety of tones that reach the heart.
E namour'd silence wakens at the strain,
L ending a voice in echo to Mozart;
L ike a weak shadow on a sunny plain,
I t hovers near thy lips—alas! in vain.

——Pimlico, May 20. H. F. C.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first performance of Verdi's Rigoletto, on Saturday, attracted a large attendance of the subscribers and the public. Every box was occupied, and the house presented a dazzling appearance. We are now in the heart of the season, and it would be strange indeed, if, at such a time, with an opera so popular with the subscribers as Rigoletto, so perfectly cast, and so powerfully executed throughout, the Royal Italian Opera were not filled in every part. If Verdi were to hear his opera performed at Covent Garden, it is possible that he would be in no hurry to hear it again at any other theatre. Never was opera more splendidly sustained in every particular. Signor Mario's Duke is only inferior to his Count Almaviva, Mad. Bosio's Gilda is her most admirable assumption, and Signor Ronconi's Rigoletto one of the greatest dramatic masterpieces of the day. Mad. Nantier Didiée, in the small but important part of Magdalen, is all that can be desired, and Signor Tagliafico fills out the character of the assassin, Sparafucile, with the skill of a true artist. In Verdi's music the band and chorus have no great difficulties to contend against, so that their part is done to admiration.

The performance of Saturday was one of the finest ever given by the Royal Italian Opera. Signor Mario was in exquisite voice, and sang his three songs with incomparable taste and feeling. The sparkling ballata, "La donna è mobile," created the usual furore, and was encored in a hurricane of applause. The dramatic quatuor, "Bella figlia dell' amore"—sung and acted to admiration by Signors Mario and Ronconi, and Mesdames Bosio and Nantier Didiée—was also repeated. The duet in the first act between Gilda and Rigoletto, "Veglia, o donna, questo fiore," was also redemanded and repeated. The omission of the duet in the last scene, between the dying Gilda and her distracted father, was very judicious; and the brief but terrible exclamation of Rigoletto, when he sees his daughter in place of the Duke in the sack, brought the opera to a more satisfactory conclusion.

Ronconi's acting throughout was sublime in its earnestness and intensity.

Rigoletto was repeated on Tuesday, but the audience were disappointed by the announcement that Mad. Bosio was suddenly indisposed and could not appear, and the directors had to substitute Mdlle. Marai at the last moment in the part of Gilda. Mdlle. Marai had played the part previously at St. Petersburg, and was therefore not entirely taken by surprise. The change, however, threw a damper over the whole house, and many left the theatre from sheer disappointment. Mdlle. Marai exerted herself in the new part to the utmost of her ability, and succeeded admirably, proving herself not only an accomplished singer, but a valuable acquisition to the theatre.

On Thursday a grand extra night was given, consisting of the second act of Fidelio, and the whole of the Barbiere. Such a bill of fare must have proved of itself an immense attraction; but the attraction was rendered still more powerful by the announcement that it was the last appearance but one of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli. The performance of one act of Fidelio only was original, to say the least of it—such an event, we are satisfied, never having previously occurred on any stage in any country, and we fervently hope may never occur again.

With deference to the management, and with unabated love and admiration for Il Barbiere—one of the greatest masterpieces of dramatic music—we think it would have been more graceful, not to say reverential, to have given Beethoven's serious opera entire, and to have curtailed—curtailment being necessary—Rossini's opera buffa. We thought so when the curtain rose on Fidelio; and we thought so ten times more when the curtain fell; since never did the music of the mighty master make a deeper impression, and never was the soul of Leonora laid bare to the crowd in purer and diviner beauty. Mdlle. Cruvelli appeared determined to do honour to herself, and what is more to Fidelio, and took leave of Beethoven—it was her last performance in his opera this season—in a manner which proved how deeply she felt and how magnificently she interprets the grandest and sublimest of dramatic aspirations. The moment Mdlle. Cruvelli appeared, we felt convinced she had made up her mind to do her utmost; and she did her utmost, which, in the loftiest school of vocalisation, is better far than the best we have heard since Malibran. Mdlle. Cruvelli was in the perfect command of her voice—one of the most powerful, rich, and exquisitely sympathetic ever listened to—and sang and acted superbly from beginning to end. The second act could not have produced a greater sensation had it been preceded by the first act, and the curtain fell upon genuine and enthusiastic applause, independent of claque, party, or hired bouquets. It would be unfair to omit paying a tribute to Signor Tamberlik's Florestan, which is unsurpassed on the modern stage.

The performance of Il Barbiere would have been more enchanting than ever, but that Signor Mario had a slight cold. The greatest tenor, nevertheless, sang and acted to perfection, and the opera passed off with immense éclat. Signor Ronconi was irresistible; and Signor Lablache more than usually overflowing with drolleries and impromptu bons-mots. As for Signor Tagliafico—look at his hat.

The house was crowded in every part, and the audience intensely delighted with the whole of the music, from the first bar of the grand Leonora overture, to the last note of the melodious finale to Il Barbiere.

To-night another olla podrida—two acts of Masaniello, and the whole of L'Elisir d'Amore.

Royal Opera, Drury Lane.—The management, we understand, has it in contemplation to bring out Verdi's last opera, Il Trovatore.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The first blow was struck for English opera on Monday night; but the blow should have been given with English oak instead of French maple. The maple is a good tree, notwithstanding, and, in the exquisite polish and grain of Fra Diavolo, is to be recommended, though an exotic. The performance of Fra Diavolo, with Mr. Sims Reeves, attracted the greatest house of the season. There was not a single place unoccupied, and hundreds were compelled to stand, during the whole performance, in the pit and galleries. So powerful is the prestige of a great name, which attracts even more than the best operas or the best dramas! That Mr. Sims Reeves is an immense favourite with the public, was demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt on Monday. His reception was uproarious, and every note of his singing was listened to with attention. The performance fully justified the excitement. Mr. Sims Reeves was in excellent voice, and sang with the greatest effect from first to last. It is not requisite to speak at large of Mr. Sims Reeves' Fra Diavolo, which is so well known and admired by the public. Enough, that it had all the merits of last year, was as powerfully sustained, and as enthusiastically applauded. The great "hits," as usual, were the barcarole, "Young Agnes, beauteous Flower," and the grand scena, "Proudly and wide my Standard flies." The first was encored twice, but was only repeated once; and the last was applauded with fervour. No tenor, by the way, we have ever heard, could sing this scena, with so much force and expression combined, as Mr. Sims Reeves.

Mrs. Sims Reeves is a very engaging Zerlina. Her acting is full of vivacity and animation, and she sings the music as Auber himself would not object to hear it. She was also received as an acknowledged favourite, and applauded frequently throughout the opera. The manner in which Mrs. Sims Reeves manages her toilet in the bed-chamber—a very delicate point for an actress—is in the best possible taste, and displays the judgment and tact of a true artist. Still, we could dispense with the interpolated air from Le Serment, cleverly and brilliantly as it was sung.

Mr. Weiss is quite at home in Lord Allcash, and sings the music with excellent effect; and Mad. Weiss wants nothing but a little practice to soften down the asperities of Lady Allcash. Mr. St. Albyn, who has not a bad voice, is not yet a good singer; he will become a good singer one of these days, however—we have little doubt. The thieves (politely styled briganda), Fra Diavolo's accomplices, are represented with a great excess of superfluous and dispensable "gagging" by Mr. Leffler (who should know better) and Mr. Farquharson Smith (who should learn better). This "gagging" is famous when in place, and amusing in the bargain; but when out of place is *in*famous and "embétant" in the bargain.

The opera went off with éclat, and the success of Mr. Sims Reeves was as genuine and triumphant as his first reception.

On Tuesday the company returned to German opera, and gave Il Don Giovanni (it should have been Don Juan) in German. The cast comprised two novelties—Mad. Rudersdorf in Donna Anna, and Herr Pasqué in Don Giovanni. The other parts were distributed as follows:—Donna Elvira, Mad. Caradori; Zerlina, Mdlle. Agnes Büry; Ottavio, Herr Reichardt; Masetto, Herr Hölzel; and Leporello, Herr Formes. The general execution was not satisfactory. The band and chorus were inefficient—which was no more than the natural consequence of giving operas every night. It is impossible for artists to be at the theatre night and morning, and if there be not nights set apart for rehearsals—at least in such cases as the production of elaborate works like Don Giovanni—the performance can never be satisfactory. On the first suggestion of an English opera at Drury Lane, we pointed out the impolicy of adhering to the old system of giving performances every night. If the directors of the Royal Opera do not acknowledge it now, they never will.

We have not much to say about the principal singers in Don Juan. Mad. Rudersdorf, as challenging criticism in the lofty part of Donna Anna, is entitled to first notice. She has, or rather had, a clear soprano voice, and is impassioned both in her singing and acting. Her singing, however, is almost entirely spoiled by a habit of dragging her time; and her acting is slow and laboured. Herr Pasqué, who, at Darmstadt, is the acknowledged impersonator of the accomplished Don, has little chance of being so acknowledged in London. His voice is worn, and his acting is conventional and unnatural. As far as physique goes, nature has been kinder to Herr Pasqué than he has been to himself. Herr Reichardt made a capital Ottavio, and sang the two songs of the despairing lover admirably. He introduced the exquisite air, "Della sua pace," which is usually omitted, and has been lately sung with so much effect by Mr. Sims Reeves at the Philharmonic Concerts. We must give special praise to Mdlle. Agnes Büry for the charming manner in which she played Zerlina, and the charming manner in which she sang "Vedrai Carino." Herr Hölzel was inimitable as Masetto. Mad. Caradori was out of her element in Donna Elvira. Mr. Hamilton Braham as the Ghost, sang the music of the last scene very well. Herr Formes' Leporello, with the exception of certain essays of caricature, and certain extravaganzas of gesture and action, was as powerful, graphic, true and masterly as ever. The opera created a furore; everybody came on at the end of everything, and the audience went away deafened with their own applause.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The sixth concert took place on Monday evening, in the Hanover Square Rooms, which were extremely well attended. There was no novelty in the programme; but it was a good one, as the following will show:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia in G minor | Mozart. |
| Aria, "Se i miei sospiri," Sig. Gardoni | Stradella. |
| Concerto, Violin, M. Sainton | Mendelssohn. |
| Recit. and Aria, "Dove sono," Mad. Clara Novello | Mozart. |
| Overture, (Oberon) | Weber. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia Eroica | Beethoven. |
| Duet, "Forsake me not," Mad. Novello and Sig. Gardoni | Spohr. |
| Overture, (Der Alchymist) | Spohr. |

Conductor.—Mr. Costa.

Mozart's exquisite and passionate symphony was played with great vigour and precision. A piano now and then would have been pleasant, but it seems to go against the grain of our orchestras to play soft. They are not like Othello, who instructs his clown to ask the serenaders of himself and Desdemona, for "some soft music;" nor is Mr. Costa at all like the Moor of Venice, who "cared not greatly for music that might be heard." He loves to hear his music; and so do we; nevertheless, a piano in Mozart's symphony, would have been pleasant. The magnificent minuetto, with its gentle, unobtrusive trio, was magnificently played, and encored.

The stupendous Eroica, which Napoleon lost when he assumed the imperial purple, was nobly executed, the solitary want being, as in Mozart's symphony, a piano here and there. "Napoleon has made himself Emperor!" "Oh!"—exclaimed Beethoven—"then he sha'nt have my symphony!" The decision was sublime; the man was sublime who made it; and the symphony was sublime which the man had composed who made the decision, and would dedicate his work to a republican, but not to an emperor. Which will live the longest—the Eroica or the hero—the symphony or the Emperor—Beethoven or Napoleon? Punch and Douglas Jerrold will answer "Napoleon." The Musical World and posterity will give a verdict for Beethoven.

Of M. Sainton's performance, without going into details, we may say at once, that it was worthy of the composition; and of the composition, we may repeat what we have already said, that it is "the finest concerto ever written for the violin." The success of the great French fiddler—who is only French by birth, since, as an artist he has caught the finest qualities of the three great schools—was triumphant.

Spohr's very splendid overture to Der Alchymist should have had the place of honour. Every one knows the Oberon by heart, but very few are acquainted with the other; and Weber could afford to give way, for once, to the great and venerable musician of Cassel, of whose symphony in D minor Mr. Chorley—in his volumes of Modern German Music, Recollections and Criticisms—asserts, that it is "sweet without sickliness, and solid without stupidity." Both overtures were performed with fiery and ungovernable impetuosity.

Digitized by Google

Why does Signor Gardoni—who is in better voice, and singing better than ever—so obstinately cohere to the musty and melancholy aria of old Stradella, with its lugubrious accompaniment of the lower strings? Has he no other strain, when he will perforce assume the "classical?" And why will Clara Novello, with her gushing, clear, and sonorous soprano, as sweet and as strong as any nightingale's (and sweeter and stronger than the Nightingale's), persist in "adorning" Mozart's most divine melody of "Dove sono"—which "when unadorned is adorned the most"—with cadenzas and ricercate? Echo answers, "Why?"

The next concert will be honoured by the presence of Her Majesty the Queen. Shall we, for this, be deprived of a concerto? And, if so, is it the Queen, or the Seven Wise Men of Hanover Square (the directors), who shall be responsible to the subscribers for shortening and curtailing their measure of enjoyment? Echo answers—"Which?" We can whisper confidently in the ear of Echo—"Not the Queen."

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The fifth Concert, on Wednesday evening, brought a crowd of amateurs to St. Martin's Hall which filled it to the corners. The programme was an experimental programme, as may be seen below—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (Comus) | Horsley. |
| Recit. ed Aria, "Champs paternels" (Joseph) M. Jules Lefort | Méhul. |
| Recit. ed Aria (Fidelio) Madame Palm | Beethoven. |
| Overture (Olivier Brussen) | Silas. |
| Fantasia, "La Chasse," M. Prudent | Prudent. |
| Recit. ed Aria, "Che farò" (Orfeo) Mdlle. Favanti | Gluck. |
| Symphony in A minor | Mendelssohn. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (Leonora) | Beethoven. |
| Aria, "Madamina," Sig. Cimino | Mozart. |
| Fantasia, Violoncello, Herr Van Gelder | Van Gelder. |
| Scena, "Ocean! thou mighty monster," Mad. Palm | Weber. |
| Overture | Praeger. |

Conductor, Herr Lindpaintner.

Of the three new overtures we shall say nothing until we hear them again. What more can their clever and industrious composers desire at our hands? We will not prejudge, lest we should misjudge them. Of Mr. Horsley's Comus, to which the overture performed on Wednesday night is but the prelude, we shall hear more anon at his Concert in Hanover-square.

The glorious symphony of Mendelssohn went almost to perfection, under the experienced guidance of Herr Lindpaintner, who was never more zealous and painstaking. The magical scherzo was encored; and the whole performance created "enthusiasm" in the fullest acceptation of the term. Equally good was the execution of the Leonora overture, which, often as we hear it, we never tire of hearing, since, if for no other reason, it conjures up before the mind's eye the whole history of Fidelio, and to the mind's ear all the deep and infinite pathos of that wonderful and absorbing music, which is equal to Don Giovanni because it is so utterly unlike it.

There was too much vocal music; but, en revanche, it was all very good. M. Jules Lefort, who has a fine tenor-barytone, or barytone-tenor voice, and an excellent method, sang the beautiful air of the greatest of French composers, except Auber and Boïeldieu, remarkably well. Mad. Palm, who appeared in London, five years ago, as Donna Anna, etc. (at Drury Lane, when that memorable German company, which introduced to us Herr Formes, first appeared in London), sang the grand air from Fidelio with more energy, feeling, and power of voice than any German artist we have heard, Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli alone excepted. The scena from Oberon was less successful, and is not so well suited to the voice and means of Mad. Palm, who is, nevertheless, a legitimate and skilful singer. Gluck's "Che farò" is less fitted to that very clever vocalist, Mdlle. Rita Favanti, than "Una voce poco fa," etc., where her extraordinary command of the bravura and florid styles is exhibited to such advantage. Sig. Cimino gave a touching and pathetic reading of the "Madamina," and almost wept over the catalogue of Elvira's wrongs and Giovanni's infidelities. The "Ma in Ispagna son già mille e tre!" nearly brought the tears into our eyes. Sig. Cimino is a buffo singer, with a voice of his own. Herr Van Gelder is a first-rate violoncellist, as far as execution goes, but his tone is neither rich nor sweet. Of him it can hardly be said, that his tone is "sweet without sickliness," or that his fantasia with orchestra is "solid without stupidity." Herr Van Gelder was much applauded.

M. Prudent's fantasia is a capital thing of the kind, and was played in so brilliant a manner, and with such irresistible entrain as to elicit an encore. M. Prudent retired the second time covered with plaudits.

It was too bad to place Mr. Praeger's overture to a MS. opera, which still pants for a title, at the end. If a new work be given, it should have a favourable position in the programme. It is not fair, in the face of a young composer, to make his overture a voluntary involuntarily, or to press him into the ranks as a volunteer, against his will.

Mrs. John Macfarren's First Matinée.—A very elegant audience assembled on Saturday last, at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne Street, attracted by a first-rate programme provided by Mrs. John Macfarren, one of our most rising and talented pianists. Indeed, so thoroughly good a concert we do not expect at a Matinée, and its excellence was, therefore, the more welcome from having been unexpected. The important pieces were—Beethoven's trio, in C minor, for piano, violin, and violoncello; and Mozart's sonata, in A major, for piano and violin. Mrs. Macfarren executed both pieces with brilliancy and power, and evidenced a decided improvement since last year. She was supported in the trio by M. Sainton and Sig. Piatti, and in the sonata by M. Sainton. Mrs. John Macfarren was especially happy in the sonata, which exhibited her touch and nice feeling to great advantage. Mrs. Macfarren also played solos by Mendelssohn, (Andante, in E flat, Lieder ohne Worte, Book 6,) and Weber (Presto, sonata in C,); and Thalberg's Fantasia on L'Elisir d'Amore, acquitting herself admirably in all of them. The fair pianist was warmly applauded. Mrs. Enderssohn, Mad. Weiss, Mad. F. Lablache, and Messrs. Weiss and Montem Smith were the vocalists, while M. Sainton executed a solo of his own composition on the violin. Mr. Frank Mori was the conductor.

Mr. Richardson, the eminent flautist, gave an interesting concert on Monday, at the concert-room of the Réunion des Arts, in Harley Street. Mr. Richardson played some of his most admired morceaux. The principal attraction in the vocal department was Mdlle. Favanti's exquisite rendering of the well-known "Una voce." The greatest difficulties were executed with such apparent ease and purity of tone, that it called forth a unanimous encore, and the refined taste she displayed in the variations cannot be too highly praised. Mdlle. Favanti also sang a cavatina of Ricci's with equal success. The concert was well attended.—Globe.

Re-union des Arts.—On Wednesday evening, a "reception" was given by the Directors of this Society to Herr Ernst and Mdlle. Siona Levy. A numerous and brilliant party was present, and greatly enjoyed the entertainment, in which the two distinguished artistes themselves assisted. Herr Ernst performed his variations on the "Carnaval," and two original nocturnes. Mdlle. Levy's recitations were from Racine and Corneille, and were delivered with remarkable energy and feeling. The visitors were welcomed by Mr. Kiallmark, who, on these occasions, acts the part of host, with great warmth and hospitality.

Digitized by Google

Miss Stabbach, one of our most promising chamber singers, gave her first Annual Concert at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on Wednesday evening, and was honoured by a full and highly fashionable attendance. The vocalists who assisted Miss Stabbach were Misses Louisa Pyne, Brougham, Mdme. Taccani Tasca, Signor Marras, and Messrs. Benson, Miranda, and Hamilton Braham; the instrumentalists—Herr Ernest Pauer and Sig. Montuoro (piano), and Sig. Briccialdi (flute). Miss Stabbach sang the recitative and aria, "Per orrido cammin," from Flotow's Stradella; a song, "Angels are near," by F. Ehrenstein; and joined in two duets, and the popular quartet from the last act of Rigoletto. We cannot compliment Miss Stabbach on her choice of vocal pieces; we can, however, praise, and very highly, her singing, which was both correct and excellent. Ehrenstein's song, a pretty trifle, she sang very charmingly, and with great taste and precision; and in the duet "Deh conte," from Norma, with Miss Louisa Pyne, she fairly divided the applause with that accomplished singer. Among the audience we noticed the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marquis and Marchioness of Stafford, the Countess of Clarendon, and Lady Constance Villiers, Mr. Harcourt and Frances Countess of Waldegrave, Lady Elizabeth and the Misses Bulteel, Earl of Somers, Lady Moeys, Lord Robert Clinton, Lady Armytage, Sir Walter Riddle, &c., &c., whose aristocratic presences were evidenced by loud talking and a seemingly total abnegation of the performance.

Miss Coletti's Concert took place on Friday, the 19th inst., at Willis's Rooms, and was attended by a fashionable and crowded audience. The fair bénéficiaire was warmly applauded for her skilful execution of Beethoven's lovely duet sonata for piano and violin, in F, with Mr. Henry Blagrove; of Prudent's brilliant Fantasia upon themes from Lucia, and Mendelssohn's sprightly and delicious Andante and Rondo Capriccioso. Madame Taccani Tasca sang with small voice, but great taste, the aria, "Perchè non ho," from Lucia, which was encored, but she declined the compliment. She also sang an Italian romance by Li Calsi, "Addio a Venezia," and a charming trifle, called "A tuoi dette," both of which pleased immensely. Händel's song from Acis and Galatea, "Oh, ruddier than the Cherry," was ably sung by Mr. Lawler, who also gave Mendelssohn's "I'm a Roamer," in a very effective manner. Mr. Henry Blagrove was very successful in his Fantasia upon Motifs from "I Martiri," and the audience had a rich treat in listening to several graceful melodies composed and sung by Signor Marras, who, together with Mad. Taccani, sung a duet from L'Elisir d'Amore. Miss Ursula Barclay, Miss Nason, and Mr. Furtado also contributed to the programme, and Mr. Frank Mori accompanied at the piano in his usually efficient manner.

Miss Messent's Concert.—Miss Messent never invites the public to her soirées in vain. She is too much of a favourite to display her banners and find no followers. The concert on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover Square Rooms, attracted a large concourse of her friends and admirers. Miss Messent had, as coadjutors, Mesdames Amedei, Poole, Dolby, and Julie Mouat; and Messrs. Reichardt, Herberte, Jules Lefort, Allan Irving, and Frank Bodda, as vocalists; and Messrs. Brinley Richards and Aguilar (pianoforte), Mr. Richardson (flute), Signor Bazzini (violin), and Herr Romberg (violoncello), as instrumentalists. The programme, although it did not altogether ignore the classics, had a tendency to the popular style. Miss Messent's share of the entertainment included Donizetti's recitative and aria, "Io l' udia;" a ballad, entitled "Time wore a flow'ry Wreath;" the duet from Rossini's Gazza Ladra, "Ebben per mia memoria," with Madame Amedei; and a part in the terzetto from Don Giovanni, "Protegga il giusto cielo," with Mdlle. Julie Mouat and Herr Reichardt. Miss Messent certainly did not intrude on her friends; nevertheless, her friends would not have felt indignant had she indulged them with one ballad more—one of those in which she produces so unmistakable a sensation at Exeter Hall, or St. Martin's in the Acre. On Tuesday evening, Miss Messent signalised herself particularly in the ballad above-named, by one Duchemin, which she rendered with perfect taste and with the nicest feeling. Miss Messent's voice is charmingly adapted to ballads, in the singing of which she is excelled by few. But not in ballads alone does she exhibit talent. She sings florid music neatly, although she has scarcely power enough for the bravura style. Mdlle. Julie Mouat made her début on this occasion. She is, we believe, a pupil of Miss Messent, and is pretty and striking in appearance. As yet she is very young, and far from confident, and certainly, on Tuesday evening, did herself no justice. Her voice, however, speaks for itself. It is full, strong, and of good quality. She sang two songs—Marliani's "Stanca di più," and a German song by Kücken, "Vöglein mein," in both of which she was much applauded. The rest of the concert demands no particular notice. Mr. Aguilar conducted.

Signor and Madame Ferrari's Annual Concert.—This event came off on Friday evening, in last week, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The programme was long, and of the popular kind; and the talented profession only attempted to conciliate the lovers of high art by the introduction into their scheme of the famous sestet from Don Giovanni, "Sola, sola," and the duet, "Sull' aria," from the Nozze di Figaro. The vocalists, in addition to Signor and Madame Ferrari, were Mesdames Mortier de Fontaine, Augusta Thompson, Messrs. Herberte, H. C. Regaldi, and Adlington Wallworth; and the instrumentalists, Mrs. F. B. Jewson and Mr. George Russell (pianoforte), Signor Giulio Regondi (concertino), Mr. John Thomas (harp), M. Paque and Mr. Schroeder (violoncello), and Mr. Folkes (violin). Signor and Madame Ferrari sang a duet from Verdi's Il Trovatore, an opera which has lately excited so much enthusiasm in the different theatres of Italy. The duet is very dramatic, and was sung with energy and decision by both artistes. Signor Ferrari sang Mercadante's aria, "Liete voci," and joined Mr. Herberte in the well-known duet from Belisario, "Liberi siete," and sang the bass part in the quartet from Rigoletto, "Bella figlia dell' amore." He also took part in Mozart's septet, and in a quartet, called, "Dream the Dream that's sweetest," composed by Mr. Lake. Madame Ferrari sang a cavatina, "Tacea la notte placida," another extract from Verdi's Trovatore; Panseron's romance, "He is still far away;" the duet, "Sull' aria," with Miss Augusta Thompson (encored); besides aiding in the sestet and the two quartets already mentioned. Signor and Madame Ferrari are accomplished vocalists, and highly respected in their profession. The Hanover Square Rooms were extremely full, and the audience appeared gratified in no small degree by the entertainment.

Mozart's Votive Mass in C minor, (composed on the recovery of his wife.)—The movements selected from this composition, with the additional pieces composed for the Davidde Penitente (which work has never appeared complete in either this country or on the continent), were compiled from various authentic sources, and an English version adapted from the "Psalms of David," by Mr. R. Andrews, Professor of Music, Manchester. This edition has been twice publicly performed at Norwich. On the first occasion, the principal vocalists were the Misses Williams and Mr. Hobbs. The success of the work induced its repetition at the Norwich Festival in 1848, under the conductorship of Mr. Benedict, when the tenor song was given by Mr. Sims Reeves, the mezzo-soprano air by Miss Williams, the soprano song by Mad. Castellan, and the trio, for two sopranos and tenor, by the Misses Williams and Mr. Lockey. The choruses were highly effective; and the concluding one, with its magnificent fugue, was executed in a striking and impressive manner.—Communicated by a Correspondent.

---

Weimar.—Fier-à-bras, an opera by the lamented Franz Schubert, whose career was so short (he was born in 1796 in Vienna, where he died in 1830), will shortly be produced under the direction of Dr. Liszt.

Hanover.—Herr Franz Lachner's Catharina Cornaro has been revived. Fräulein Janda, from Prague, played Rosine. This lady has gone on a professional visit to London, being engaged for the Royal Opera, Drury Lane.

Munich.—Herr Ander, from Vienna, has become a great favourite here. The projected musical festival will not take place, for want of a suitable building.

Königsberg.—The Brothers Wieniawski have given a series of concerts, all of which were numerously attended.

Digitized by Google

LESUEUR'S "TE DEUM."

(Translated from Ménéstrel).

It was in 1793. A musician had been incarcerated for having dared to compose religious music. Accused of so great a crime, he was, of course, condemned to perish. One of the chiefs of the district of the Jacobins—a furious dubiste (in appearance, at least)—perceived the young artiste in the prison-yard. "What are you doing here, aristocrat?" he asked in a voice of thunder.

"Composing a Te Deum," was the answer.

"Oh! a 'Te Deum,' retorted the tribune of the market-place, in a tone which he tried to render savage; "you intend it, doubtless, to celebrate the triumph of the Republic over its former tyrants?"

"No, I do not," said the musician, calmly.

The revolutionist appeared deeply moved. Surrounded by republican prisoners and enthusiastic gaolers, however, he assumed the usual demeanor of the so-called terroristes, and gave his physiognomy as great an expression of harshness as he possibly could. But he had recognised the musician. The same evening, he proceeded to the Jacobins' Club, and rushed up to the tribune to propose a patriotic motion.

"It is Citizen Chénier," exclaimed the crowd of Septembriseurs. "Let us hear Citizen Chénier."

It was Chénier. "Citizens," said the orator, "a republican, full of talent, youth, and promise for his country, is now pining in prison, where he is engaged in the composition of a Te Deum destined to celebrate the victories of our triumphant arms. Will you suffer the Tyrtæus of our nation, the friend of the man who wrote the Chant du Depart, and saw Gossec arrange the immortal Marsellaise for the orchestra, to be deprived of the breath of liberty?"

"No, no, we will not," shouted a thousand voices. "The singing boy is right" (this was a nickname which had been bestowed on Chénier, on account of his youthful functions at the Saints-Innocents). "Let us proceed to the Committee of Public Safety, and demand the release of—of—whom? What is his name?"

"Citizen Lesueur," answered Chénier, "the descendant of a painter who was an honour to France."

The intervention of the members of the club was attended by the happiest result. Chénier, bursting with emotion and joy, threw himself into Lesueur's arms, and gave him the order which restored to society one of her greatest ornaments, and to the arts one who was destined to contribute so much to their glory. When afterwards created superintendent of the Chapelle de la Couronne, re-established by Napoleon, Lesueur never forgot what he owed Chénier. The Te Deum thus commenced within the damp walls of the republican prisons served to celebrate, in succession, the victory of Austerlitz, in 1804, the conquest of Algiers, in 1830, the safety of the Royal Family, after Fieschi's attempt, in 1836, and lastly, in 1838, the birth of the Comte de Paris.

[Add to which, it was performed, in 1851, in presence of Louis Napoleon, now Emperor of the French, at the ceremony of thanksgiving for the coup-d'état.—Ed.]

---

Madrid.—Camillo Sivori has had the honour of playing at the court before Her Majesty the Queen.

Sinigaglia.—The tenor, Carrion, has signed an engagement for the forthcoming season. He will then proceed to Paris, where he will appear during the Carnival of next year.

Naples.—Madame Medori has been engaged at the Theatre San Carlo, to sing three times a week, from the 1st of September. Madame Castaldi has also signed an engagement.

Dusseldorf.—The operas of Indra and Giralda have been revived, this season, with new dresses, appointments, etc. The theatre closed on the 30th ult.

Bromberg.—The Danzic company have been playing here. The most successful operas were: Figaro's Hoch Zeit (Le Nozze di Figaro), Das Nachtlager, and Der Freischütz.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

To-Day.—Mr. W. H. Holmes, performance of Pianoforte Music, Hanover Square Rooms. Two o'clock.——Mdlle. Anne Pelzer, Matinée Musicale, 27, Queen Anne Street. Three o'clock.——Cologne Choral Union, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past eight.

Monday.—Mr. Jacques Blumenthal, Soirée Musicale, Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly.——Mr. Kiallmark, Grand Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past two.——Mrs. Arthur Stone, Soirée Musicale, 76, Harley Street.——Mr. Hullah, Creation, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock.

Tuesday.—C. Oberthur's Grand Concert, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's.

Thursday.—Mr. Neate, Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past two.——Cecilian Society, Death of Abel, Albion Hall, London Wall, City. Eight o'clock.

Friday.—Mr. C. Horsley, Grand Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

---

ADVERTISEMENTS.

UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE.

DR. ALTSCHUL will deliver, on Friday Evening, June 2, at Eight o'clock, a LECTURE (in English) on Goethe's FAUST, with German Readings from the Text, and MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS, selected from Beethoven, Schubert, Spohr, Lindpaintner, &c., by eminent vocal and instrumental artists. Reserved Seats, 8s.; Area, 3s.; Gallery, 2s. Tickets to be had at Cramer, Beale and Co.'s, Regent-street; Mitchell's, Lonsdale's, Old Bond-street; Sams', St. James's-street; and at the

MARYLEBONE LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION,

17, Edwards-street, Portman-square, where the Lecture will be delivered.

---

MR. JACQUES BLUMENTHAL'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on Monday next, May 29th, at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly, by the kind permission of the Right Hon. Lord Ward.

---

THE MISSES McALPINE have the honour to announce that their CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening, June 6th, under the immediate patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Abercorn, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Drogheda, the Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of Darnley, the Right Hon. the Lady Elizabeth Dawson, the Right Hon. the Viscountess Ebrington, the Lady James Stuart, &c. Full particulars will be duly announced.

---

MRS. ARTHUR STONE begs to announce that her CONCERT will take place on Monday evening, 29th May, at the Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Miss Hemming, and Mrs. Arthur Stone; Signor Belletti, and Mr. Adlington Wallworth. Pianoforte—Mons. Emile Prudent. Harp—Mr. John Thomas. Violoncello—Signor Piatti. Accompanyists—Signor Zamboni and Mr. Aguilar. Reserved Seats and Tickets to be had of Mrs. Arthur Stone, 88, Great Portland-street, Portland-place; and Messrs. Cramer and Co., and Messrs. Addison and Co., Regent-street.

---

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform Beethoven's Concerto in G major, Mendelssohn's Serenade, and a selection of solo pieces; assisted by the members of the Orchestral Union. Vocalists—Miss Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr. Alfred Mellon. Tickets, 7s.; reserved seats, half-a-guinea each; to be had of the principal music-sellers; and Miss Goddard, 47, Welbeck-street, where a plan of the room may be seen.

---

MR. KIALLMARK has the honour to announce that his GRAND ORCHESTRAL MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday, May 29th, to commence at Half-past Two o'clock. Vocalists, Miss Pyne, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Ursula Barclay, Madame Amedei, Mons. Lefort, and Mr. Herberte. Pianoforte, Mr. Kiallmark, who will perform Hummel's celebrated concerto in B minor, and Moscheles' Recollections of Ireland. Violin, Herr Molique. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of the principal Music-sellers; Reserved Seats, 15s., to be had only of Mr. Kiallmark, 32a, Fitzroy-square.

Digitized by Google

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mdlle. Clauss has the honour to announce her GRAND CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday, June 14. For further particulars apply to Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

THE MISSES COLE and MR. ALFRED GILBERT Beg to announce that their MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place at Willis's Rooms, June 5th, at Three o'clock, being the last of the Series. Tickets to be obtained of Mr. A. Gilbert, 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Triple Ticket, One Guinea; Single Ticket, 10s. 6d.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN'S SECOND AND LAST Matinée of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), on Wednesday, June 14th. Herr Ernst, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. C. Harper, M. Baumann, Mr. W. H. Holmes; Miss Hughes, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Mr. Walter Macfarren, &c. Tickets at 40, Stanhope-street, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Haydn's CREATION will be performed on Wednesday evening, May 29th, under the direction of Mr. John Hullah. Principal vocalists—Miss Birch, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Weiss. Tickets, 1s.; galleries, 2s. 6d.; stalls, 5s. May be had of all Music Sellers, and at St. Martin's Hall. To commence at Eight o'clock.

THE BROTHERS HOLMES will give an EVENING CONCERT, on Tuesday, June 20th, at the Hanover Square Rooms. Vocalists, Misses Messent, U. Barclay, Madlle. Mouat, the Misses Coles; Mr. Perren, Signor Nappi. Instrumentalists, Madlle. St. Marc, M. Silas, M. Vogel, Herr Romberg. Violin, The Brothers Holmes. Conductors, Herren Rummel, Gollmick, and Mr. Gilbert. Tickets, 5s. and 7s.; Reserved, 10s. 6d.; to be had of The Brothers Holmes, 52, Frith-street, Soho, &c.

MR. C. E. HORSLEY has the honour to announce that his GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday, June 2. Vocalists — Madame Clara Novello, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. Solo Violin, Herr Ernst. On this occasion (besides a selection from the works of various composers) will be produced, for the first time, COMUS, a cantata, the words selected from Milton's Masque, the music composed by Mr. C. E. Horsley. The orchestra and chorus will be complete in every department. Tickets 7s., reserved seats half-a-guinea each, to be had at Chappell's, Cramer's, Addison's, Leader and Cocks', Ewer and Co.'s; Keith and Prowse's, Cheapside.

MISS DOLBY and Mr. LINDSAY SLOPER'S ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday, June 9, when they will be assisted by Madame Persiani, Miss Amy Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Belletti and Herr Ernst. The orchestra, complete in every department, will consist of the members of the Orchestral Union. Conductors Messrs. Benedict and Alfred Mellon. Tickets, half-a-guinea each, may be had at the principal music warehouses; reserved seats 15s. each, or three for two-guineas, to be had of Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201, Regent Street; of Miss Dolby, 2, Hinde Street, Manchester Square; and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, 7, Southwick-place, Hyde Park-square.

HERR CHARLES OBERTHÜR (Harpist to H. R. H. The Duchess Pauline of Nassau) has the honour to announce that his MORNING CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Tuesday, May 30. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Mdlle. Herrmann, Monsieur Jules Lefort. Instrumentalists—Miss Arabella Goddard, Signor Giulio Regondi, Mr. Trust, and Herr Oberthür. Conductors—Mr. Aguilar and Herr Praeger. Tickets, 7s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; to be had of Wessel and Co., Schott and Co., and of Herr Oberthür, 14, Cottage-road, Westbourne Park-terrace.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA will perform at Mr. Kiallmark's Grand Morning Concert, on Monday, May 29th. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MDLLE. LOUISE CHRISTINE has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place on Friday, the 23rd of June, at her residence, 3, Eaton-square, under distinguished and noble patronage, when she will be assisted by artistes of eminence. Grand Pianoforte, Miss Arabella Goddard. Further particulars will be shortly announced. Tickets, One Guinea; to be obtained only at Andrews, Bond-street, and Cramer and Beale, Regent-street.

MR. G. A. OSBORNE has the honour to announce that his ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, June 5th, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Mdlle. Marie Sedlatzek, Miss Dolby, Mr. G. Benson, and Herr Reichardt. Instrumentalists—Pianoforte, Mr. G. A. Osborne; Violin, M. Sainton; Violoncello, M. Pacque; Oboe, Mr. Nicholson. Pianist Accompagnateur—Mr. Heinrich Bohrer. Reserved Seats, Half-a-Guinea; Tickets, Seven Shillings and Sixpence each. To be had at all the Principal Music Warehouses, and of Mr. G. A. Osborne, 33, Devonshire-street, Portland-place.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

THE SAXOPHONE.—Rudall, Rose, Carte, and Co., 100, New Bond street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

BOOSE'S NEW MODEL CORNET-À-PISTONS. Price Seven Guineas. In calling attention to a new and very beautiful model Cornet-a-Piston which Messrs. Boosey and Sons have lately completed, they would beg to observe that, with the assistance of the most able professors in London, they have succeeded in uniting in this instrument a perfect intonation with a clear, rich, and brilliant tone never before attained to such perfection in the cornet-à-piston. It can, further, be played without effort, even by one inexperienced in the use of brass instruments. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to Her Majesty's Army, and the Honourable East India Company's Service, &c.

MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Militia Regiments or parties joining Bands, and in want of Instruments, Music, or a Band Master, are invited to apply to Messrs. BOOSEY AND SONS, 28, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers, and Music Publishers to her Majesty's Army and the Hon. E. I. C.'s Service. The high character of their Instruments and Journals for Reed and Brass Bands are acknowledged throughout the Army.—A Register kept of the most experienced Band Masters.

MDLLE. CRUVELLI in FIDELIO.—Boosey and Sons' new and beautiful edition of FIDELIO, for the voice and piano, unabridged and unaltered from the author's score, with English and German words; Three Overtures; and a Life of Beethoven. Price 15s. handsomely bound. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE Successful Results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the Human Hair, and is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other preparations for the Hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey—strengthens weak hair—cleanses it from Scurf and Dandriff—and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of the Beard, Whiskers, Eyebrows, and Mustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. —Caution!—On the wrapper of each Bottle are the words, "Rowland's Macassar Oil," in two lines.—Sold by A. Rowland and Sons, 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

W. RYALLS' (Professor of Singing) Pianoforte Repository, Hamilton-street, Birkenhead. Pianofortes on hire and taken in exchange.

MESSRS. BEVINGTON and SONS respectfully inform the Clergy, Gentry, and Public, that although they have sustained a heavy loss by the Fire at their Manufactory, Rose-street, yet the greater portion of their timber being saved, and having taken premises at 59, Greek-street, until the Factory is rebuilt—they are enabled to execute any orders with which they may be favoured, without delay. Organ Manufactory, 48, Greek-street, Soho.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. — Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

THE ONLY EXHIBITION PRIZE MEDAL FOR HARMONIUMS, price Ten Guineas, with all the late improvements, manufactured solely by Messrs. WHEATSTONE and Co. Has the full compass, with improved expression stop, a rich sustained tone, in power ad libitum, is an excellent substitute for the organ, does not require tuning, and is admirably suited to play with the pianoforte. Messrs. W. and Co. have an extensive assortment of the above ready for exportation; also a variety of French Harmoniums, with the various stops, at very reduced prices. Warren's Instructions for the above, 4s.

Wheatstone and Co., Patentees and Inventors of the Concertina, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

ST. MARGARET'S, near RICHMOND.—CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY. Rights of Choice on this valuable Estate are now on Sale at the offices, 33, Norfolk-street, Strand. The Register of the Rights to be disposed of, is open daily for Public inspection. The allotment is fixed for Wednesday, the Seventh of June. CHARLES LEWIS GRUNEISEN, Secretary.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

HARMONIUMS. — CAUTION. — George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE OPERA.—BOOSEY'S STANDARD LYRIC DRAMA, a collection of 12 chef-d'œuvres, published in the most handsome form ever attempted. Each opera for voice and piano, with English words, the original text, and instrumental notes, memoir, &c. All uniform, in ornamental cloth, suitable for presents. Figaro, 16s.; Zauberflöte, 12s. 6d.; Don Juan, 18s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 16s.; Il Barbiere, 16s.; Ernani, 15s.; Iphigenia, 18s; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d. Any opera postage free. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MARSCHAN'S PIANOFORTE HAND-BOOK, a new, complete, and cheap school for learning the elements of music, and acquiring a masterly execution on the Pianoforte. It contains the theory of music, all the Scales in both modes, and 91 Exercises, Studies, and Pieces.—Price 10s. 6d., in a large book.—Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

BORDOGNI'S SOLFEGGI. Five Sets of these celebrated Solfeggi are now published, viz.: Twenty-four new easy Vocalises for all voices, 12s.; Twelve for Contralto, 12s.; Twelve for Baritone, 12s.; Twelve for Mezzo Soprano, 15s.; Thirty-six for Soprano or Tenor, in 3 books, price 10s. each.—Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

VACCAJ'S SINGING METHOD.—A Second edition of this celebrated work is published, price 15s. Also, all Bordogni's, Crescentini's, Panseron's, Garcia's, Aprillis, Rossini's, Catrufo's, Zingarelli's and Rudolphe's Vocalises, are published and sold by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

LEMOINE'S PIANOFORTE METHOD, in English and French, 21s.; Ravina's 25 Studies, 12s.; Ravina's 12 Studies, 12s.; Marschan's Hand book, 10s. 6d.; Logier's Pianoforte Method, 8s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

FOR PROVINCIAL QUADRILLE BANDS.—Boosey's Orchestral Journal is published every month, and comprises the best Dance Music by the most famous English and Foreign Composers. Price 3s. 6d. each number for Septett, or 5s. for full orchestra. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

ROMBERG'S VIOLONCELLO SCHOOL, the greatest modern work for this instrument. A second edition, with portrait and plates, is published, price 30s., by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

NEW PORTRAITS of HANDEL, MOZART, BEETHOVEN, and MENDELSSOHN. Price 6s. each, on fine boards; size, 25-in. by 20-in.—Boosey and Sons' new and beautiful portraits of these great masters, are the most truthful and best executed likenesses that have appeared. 28, Holles-street.

NEW FLUTE, VIOLIN, AND CORNET SOLOS.—Boosey's Violin Journal, 12s.; Boosey's Cornet Journal, 15s.; Boosey's Flute Journal, 12s.,—are the best modern works for these instruments, and contain each above 250 popular Operas, Dances and Songs, admirably selected and arranged.—Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, London.

WITH WORDS.—Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Norma, 10s. 6d.; Don Juan, 18s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 16s.; Il Barbiere, 16s.; Ernani, 15s.; Figaro, 16s.; Der Freischütz, 12s. 6d.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.—Boosey and Sons 28, Holles-street, London.

WITHOUT WORDS.—Sonnambula, 4s.; Norma, 4s.; Don Juan, 5s.; Lucrezia Borgia, 4s.; Fra Diavolo, 5s. Boosey and Sons' new and beautiful editions of these Operas, complete without words. No other perfect copies exist. 28, Holles-street London.

Digitized by Google

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS. Marx's School of Composition, £1 1s. Gottfried Weber's Theory of Music, £1 11s. 6d. Albrechtsberger's Theoretical Works, £2 2s. Cherubini's Theoretical Works, £1 11s. 6d. Czerny's School of Composition, £4 14s. 6d. Kalkbrenner's Harmony for the Pianist, 10s. Mozart's Practical Thorough Bass, 5s. Boyce's Cathedral Music, (by Warren), £6 6s. Czerny's Pianoforte School, 4 vols., £6 6s.; Supplement, 15s. Haydn's Twelve Grand Symphonies (by Czerny), £3 6s. Haydn's Eighty-three Quartets, £6 6s. Handel's "Messiah" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Handel's "Israel in Egypt" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Octavo Edition of "Messiah" (by Bishop), 6s. 6d. Haydn's "Creation" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Octavo Edition of "Samson" (by Dr. Clarke), 6s. 6d. Horsley's Vocal Harmony, 6 vols., £5 8s. Beethoven's Seventeen Quartets, £6 6s. Also his Four Trios and Four Quintets (all by Rousselot), £3 2s. Beethoven's Nine Symphonies (for Piano), £3 8s. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London; and of all music-sellers.

THE SUNSHINE OF OUR HOME.—Song. Words by J. E. Carpenter, Esq.; music composed expressly for Miss Dolby, by Edward Land, 2s. A lovely song, breathing a depth of feeling which may remind one of Beethoven's matchless "Adelaide." London, Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, publishers to the Queen.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ETOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

| Also just published— | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Valse Expressive, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Three Ghaselen, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Gondola, A. Lindahl ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Impromptu Styrienne, W. Kuhe ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Chant D'Adieux ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Thalberg's Six Morceaux Originaux pour le Piano, from 1 to 6, each | 2 | 0 |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street, and 167, North Street, Brighton.

NOW REPUBLISHING (by subscription), TO SUBSCRIBERS ONLY, 9s, MOZART'S "DAVIDDE PENITENTE." Complete edition, as given at the Norwich Festival. English version from the Psalms of David, with compressed arrangement, from the original score, by R. Andrews. The Work contains about Seventy engraved music pages, large size, and includes Ten original compositions of Mozart, consisting of Songs, Duet, Trio, Chorus, and Grand Double Chorus, and is the only edition ever published entire of this highly gifted composer's work—a great portion of which was selected by himself from his "Votive Mass in C Minor," and as the original score of this Mass was not completed by Mozart, it has never been published in England in consequence of its being in an unfinished state. The first edition of this work, produced by Mr. R. Andrews, was published at 15s. The second edition, in consequence of a larger number of subscribers, was published at 12s., and another edition being required, the publisher is induced to offer it at a still further reduction to those subscribers who may honour him with their names before the 1st of August next, and to give, in addition to the former complete edition, a Soprano Song by Mozart, with obligato accompaniments for Flute, Oboe, and Bassoon, arranged expressly for Madame Clara Novello, and to whom it is (by permission) dedicated. The original orchestral parts, and single voice parts of the entire work, may be had of the Editor, R. Andrews, 84, Oxford-street, Manchester, or of Messrs. Addison and Hollier, Regent-street, London, where subscribers' names are also received.

M. PRUDENT'S LA CHASSE.—This celebrated Morceau, which was encored at the New Philharmonic Concert, on Wednesday evening last, is published (price 4s.) by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSE'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosé's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE FOR CONCERTINA and PIANO, arranged by G. REGONDI. Now ready:—Verdi's Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, three Nos., 3s. each, &c., &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE FOR CORNET AND PIANO, arranged by STANTON JONES, &c. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c., &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for FLUTE and PIANO, arranged by JOSEPH CLINTON and W. FORDE. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in two Mosaiques, 4s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Romeo and Juliet, one No., 4s.; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c., &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for VIOLIN and PIANO, arranged by F. BOSEN and others. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda di Chamouni, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LOGIER'S celebrated PIANO-FORTE METHOD.—The 50th thousand, a new edition, price 8s.; Logier's System of the Theory of Music, in one vol., price 21s.; Lemoine's Method for the Piano, one vol., price 21s.—Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, publishers of all Logier's and Green's works.

FOR QUADRILLE BANDS.—The new Dance Music by Laurent, Gungl Tinney, and La Motte, performed at Her Majesty's State Ball, and at the nobility's Soirées Dansantes, and all the places of public amusement, is published for a quadrille band, by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, price 5s. each set for full band, or 3s. 6d. each for Septett.

LAURENT'S BELLE FRANCAIS WALTZ, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is just published, beautifully illustrated in colours, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE QUADRILLE, on Imperial Melodies, composed expressly for the French Ambassador's Grand Ball, and performed before Her Majesty the Queen. Price 3s.: Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S LEONORA WALTZ, on Melodies from La Favorite, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is now published, with an illustration, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW SONG, Now Ready, "The Departure for the East," Composed and Dedicated by permission to Her Grace the Duchess of Wellington, by Louise Christine. "It did not fail to hit the warlike enthusiasm of the public, and was unanimously encored."—Musical Transcript. Charles Jeffereys, Soho-square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S "La Fontaine de Schubert," Caprice for the Pianoforte, price 4s. 6d.; played by Miss Arabella Goddard with the greatest success, at the concert of the Quartett Association, and at Mr. Blagrove's concert at the Hanover-square Rooms. Published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street, London.

THE BALTIC.—A PORTRAIT OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, by a Distinguished Artist, will embellish the title page of the Baltic Galop, by Albert Wagner, to be published in the course of a few days by Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No.22. SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

REVIEW.

HANDEL'S "SUITES DE PIECES," in Two Books. Edited by MOSCHELES. Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street.

HANDEL'S Suites de Pièces were composed before the symphonic form, suggested by Gossec, Vanhall, Ditters, etc., and perfected by Haydn, was known. A suite de pièces consists of four or five movements of various characters, all in the same key. Each movement is complete in itself, though the composer's intention is to have the whole played as one piece. A suite de pièces is consequently a set of pieces to be performed at one time, as a single composition. Handel and John Sebastian Bach produced the finest specimens of this form of composition, and indeed the only ones now known that have any musical interest or value. Handel also composed sets of fugues for the harpsichord. Scarlatti's "Pieces" consist of single movements, nearly in the same form as some of the shorter pieces of Handel. Occasionally a fugue stands in the place of a piece. The Fantasia, invented by Bach, a kind of feat in modulation without regular form, was for some time confined to that composer and his son, Philip Emanuel. Mozart, however, subsequently produced specimens which far excelled those of the inventor, and Beethoven, still later, united the attraction of orchestral accompaniments to the same kind of composition. The fantasias of Mendelssohn and Bennett are misnamed, since they differ in nothing from the regular sonata. The fantasias of the school of modern-romanticists, are, in comparison with such music, little better than nonsense. Hummel alone, among the recent composers for the pianoforte, has given specimens of the real fantasia, invented by Bach, and perfected by Mozart—perfected by Mozart, we say, because he found the art of combining melody, exquisitely developed, with the exigencies of this kind of writing, without departing from its original form—and thus doubled its attraction.

In Handel's first book, which is by far the most elaborate, there are eight sets of pieces. In five of them there are fugues, which, with deference to those who place Bach above Handel in this species of composition, we insist are the finest existing models. But we shall speak of them in their places. The first Suite consists of a prelude, an allemande, a courante, and a gigue—four pieces, varying in character, and all in the key of A major. The Prelude, as the modern acceptation of the word implies, is a number of discursive chords and passages, without form, in the key of the piece which is to follow. The only difference between the present one and a prelude likely to come from the fingers or the head of a modern pianist, is to be found in the nature of its progressions, which though rare are very fine. (En passant, we may say that the preludes in the Clavier bien tempéré, and other works of Bach, are usually elaborate compositions in which a particular figure of melody is carried through a variety of keys by a regular series of modulations and progressions. Mendelssohn's preludes are much longer, but are generally formed on this model, of which Handel has given very few specimens.) The Allemande (a piece in the German style, we presume) is a melody in two parts, the one ending with a half close, the other with a full close in the key. Each part is repeated. The object of this kind of movement appears to be the development of a melody by the assistance of rich and various harmonies, and cunning interruptions and protractions of the cadence, so as to obtain a beautiful and satisfactory climax. The first Suite of Handel presents one of the most exquisite specimens of this lengthened melody, the art of producing which now seems to have hung by the thread of Mendelssohn's existence. It is in three parts, each of which is a melody almost complete in itself. The Allemande is always in common time; the style graceful or passionate, but never capricious or trivial. The Courante has much the same characteristics as the Allemande, with the exception that it is invariably in three-time, 3-4, or 3-8. The present is a most finished and beautiful specimen. The Gigue is a quick, lively movement in 12-8, 9-8, or 6-8 time. This movement is generally characterised by a quantity of free imitations, the subject not seldom being answered immediately in canon. It is written, with few deviations, in two parts throughout, and requires great neatness and agility of finger to execute properly. The present gigue in 12-8 time, is a short, but excellent specimen of this kind of movement, and being one of the least elaborate will be more easily compassed by the amateur pianist.

Suite II. comprises an adagio, an allegro, another adagio, and a fugue, all in F, except the second adagio, which is a fragment beginning and ending on the dominant of D minor. As this is the only instance we can find where one of the suites is interrupted by a movement in a different key from the rest, we cannot but consider it an accidental interpolation from the suite immediately following, which is in the key of D Minor. The adagio in Suite II. is a fragment which chiefly serves to display the performer's agility in trills and ornaments, for which it is a mere framework. This was the characteristic of adagio-playing in Handel's time. It was for Haydn to discover the slow movement as it now stands, with developed melody and symmetrical form to back it. By some freak of fancy, Handel has made this fragment end in A minor, although it begins in F, and the allegro, which follows—an exquisite specimen of writing in two parts, the right hand florid and the left hand simple—is also in F. The fugue with which this suite concludes is most masterly. The inner-counterpoint to the third answer is made use of as a second subject, with wonderful skill. This fugue not only displays the profoundest learning and ingenuity, but is beautiful from beginning to end, the subjects being melodious, and the harmony natural and pure. It is here that we find Handel superior to Bach. In the fugues of the latter, with few exceptions, there are points which a refined ear cannot tolerate; but in those of Handel, the progressions are so natural, the parts flow so easily, and yet in fine counterpoint, that no such disagreeable effects can ever be found in them. Our theory is that the laws of harmony cannot possibly be violated with impunity, and as Handel rarely or never violates them, we consider him a more legitimate musician than Bach, who constantly does. And yet we yield to none in our veneration for that great man's genius, which we hold to have been one of the phenomena of the era in which he flourished.

The third suite is in D minor. It begins with a brilliant prelude of scale passages and arpeggios, which is followed by a fugue. This perhaps, is not so exquisitely finished as the fugue in the preceding suite, but its character is more passionate. The subject is mysterious, and one of the counterpoints is most charmingly treated as an episode, in two parts, near the end; this point is of itself worth a whole modern opera. The point which will least please musicians in this fugue is a long digression into

Digitized by Google

F, beginning with a somewhat trite sequence, and ending with a sequence on the dominant pedal, which is borrowed from the fugue in F in the preceding suite. An allemande and a courante, which come after the fugue, are both lovely. An air with variations concludes the suite. The air is in the florid style of the adagio in the last suite, but the variations formed upon its outline are ingenious and beautiful. There are five of them; the first three are the most beautiful; the second has a florid base, and the third a florid inner part, on the top of which rides the melody. (Cramer and Steibelt have each borrowed this variation for the basis of one of their studies. Cramer wrote his in E major, thinking to avert recognisance of the theft. Steibelt, more bold, assumed the same key, and almost the same notes, as Handel. Steibelt's is the best study of the two after all, which will go far to excuse his appropriation of Handel's property.) After the five variations, a very fine movement, presto, in 3-8 time, developed to considerable length, concludes the third suite.

The fourth suite, in E minor, begins with the brilliant and magnificent fugue in that key, which is known to all pianists who love good music. This is perhaps the finest composition in the entire Suites de pièces, but the difficulties attending its execution are enormous. You may play Liszt and Thalberg wholesale without being able to play this fugue. An allemande and a courante follow; they are plaintive and beautiful, and will remind the performer of similar movements in the Seven Characteristic Pieces which Mendelssohn composed in his early youth, when red-hot from the study of his Bach and Handel. The influence of these great writers on the style of the greatest composer of our time cannot indeed be overlooked, or too often considered. A Sarabande comes next. This is a slow dance tune in 3-4 measure, in the style of a minuet, but played more leisurely. Handel makes these dances the framework for the finest harmonic progressions. The fourth suite concludes with a gigue, in 12-8—a pretty subject treated for the most part in free canon. The only fault of this gigue is its brevity, the whole being compassed in a single page.

The fifth suite, in E major, comprises a prelude in the style of Bach—an allemande, the longest and most beautiful of all—a courante of almost equal merit—and the charming air with variations popularly known as the "Harmonious Blacksmith." This suite is sure to be the most in favour, not only with amateurs, but the majority of professors. Be it so—though there is no fugue, the allemande and courante will be all powerful in their influence, and taste must be perfected by the study of such refined specimens of art.

The sixth suite comprises a fine prelude à la Bach, a stately largo in 3-4 time, with some grand points of harmony, a sublime fugue with two subjects, and a gigue, the best composition of its kind in the book—the whole being in F sharp minor.

The seventh suite, in G minor, sets out with an overture, which consists of an adagio in the florid style, followed by a short presto, repeated twice, with the intervention of a fragment of the adagio after the first time; the allegro is a kind of free fugato (a short movement with imitations in the fugued style), and a striking character is given to it by its unbroken rhythm and sustained dotted accent. A beautiful andante, in the style of the allemande, gives way to another allegro, a sort of courante in double time (3-8 instead of 3-4), a movement somewhat in the manner of Scarlatti, but more profoundly treated than anything that master has left us. But for the antique cut of the cadences this short movement might have passed under the name of Mendelssohn. At all events, the influence which the harpsichord music of Handel has had in developing and colouring the style of that great musician is strikingly exemplified in this allegro, which is incontestably the germ of more than one of those intermezzo movements wherein Mendelssohn was so fertile, and which, by the way, are very often in the key of G minor, that of the present suite. The allegro is followed by another sarabande and a very fine one, which in its turn is replaced by a gigue, short and sweet. The whole concludes with a passacaille—a series of variations on a short harmonic progression. The progression chosen by Handel in the present instance is as follows:—common chord of G minor, 6-3 on E flat, common chord of F major, ditto of B flat major, ditto of E flat major, 6-3 on C, seventh on D with major third, and common chord of G minor. On this simple progression he has founded no less than fifteen variations. These are brilliant and effective, but not otherwise remarkable.

The eighth suite, and last of the first book, is in F minor. It opens with a fine prelude, which, after going through a variety of beautiful progressions, stops upon the dominant harmony and gives way to a fugue on one subject, answered in the fourth below, and written in three or four parts ad libitum. This, though the least elaborate of the five fugues contained in the suite, is by no means the least striking. The subject is simple and majestic, and the treatment masterly. A magnificent effect is produced in several places, by the introduction of the subject in full harmony. The last time this occurs, the subject is given in the bass, in full chords, and a sublime point is effected by a sudden progression to the relative major of the key, which must be heard to be understood. This point alone would induce us to play the fugue over a dozen times, for the sake of coming to it in its proper place and receiving exactly the same sensation of surprise at every repetition. An allemande, a courante (both beautiful), and a gigue almost as good as the one in F sharp minor, conclude this suite and the first book. The subject of the gigue is answered in canon on the octave, and a capital contrast is produced by reversing the subject in the second part, taking the dominant harmony in place of the tonic, and vice versâ.

We must defer noticing the second book of Handel's Suites de Pièces, till our next. Meanwhile let us most urgently recommend all our readers, who are pianists, and who wish to make acquaintance (not being already acquainted) with one of the greatest works that have ever enriched the répertoire of the harpsichord—or, as it is now improved and developed, the pianoforte—to purchase without delay the first book of Handel, of which we have drawn up this crude and hasty sketch. It bears strong marks of having been a labour of love, and abounds in evidences of that astonishing genius which elsewhere manifested, has long been ranked among the wonders of the world. The present edition is beautifully engraved and printed, and when in the next impression the few errors that have escaped the experienced eye of Mr. Moscheles, the editor, shall have been rectified, it will be perfect. A little more of such music as this, and a little less of the modern fantasia-school, would benefit the musical taste of the country.

---

HERR LINDPAINTNER has gone to Aix-la-Chapelle, where he is engaged to direct the grand Festival, the particulars of which have appeared in the Musical World.

ROYAL NAVAL FEMALE SCHOOL.—The committee of this noble institution, founded in 1840 by the late Admiral Sir Thomas Williams for the education of the daughters of necessitous naval and marine officers, at the lowest reduction of cost practicable to the parents, have just issued a powerful appeal to the sympathies of the public in order to raise the sum of £15,000, to be invested in the purchase of a freehold edifice, calculated to accommodate the numerous pupils, requiring the advantages of this admirable school. It appears that the directors of the Conservative Land Society, taking into consideration the national object of the institution, which presents at the present moment the strongest claims for public support, now that our naval officers are fighting the battles of their country, have given the committee of the Royal Naval Female School until the 24th of June next, the refusal of the mansion and four acres of ground at St. Margaret's, near Richmond, on peculiarly favourable conditions. This magnificent building, which is now open to public inspection, and has been viewed recently by upwards of ten thousand persons, was built by Cubitt from a design of Vulliamy, at the cost of £21,000, expressly for the Earl of Kilmorey, and the committee of the Royal Naval Female School are of opinion that the house and grounds are admirably adapted in every respect for the purposes of the institution. The appeal has been signed on behalf of the committee by Lord Manners, the chairman of the meeting, and Admirals Waldegrave, W. Fitzroy, Colchester, Bowles, W. J. Parry, Sir Henry Cholmondeley, M.P., all vice-presidents, and the Honourable Captain Maude, the honorary secretary. The Royal Naval Female School is under the especial patronage of her most gracious Majesty the Queen. The pupils receive a sound secular and religious education, qualifying them to obtain an honourable livelihood.

Digitized by Google

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Mr. W. C. Dale is very unfortunate in his allusion to the organist of St. Sepulchre's Church, whose case offers a tacit and complete contradiction to the sentiments expressed by your singular correspondent. It ought to be well known to your readers that neither the large organ nor the remuneration attached appear sufficient inducements to retain the undivided services of the talented organist, who holds appointments in many other quarters as deputy or assistant organist, and, in consequence, is obliged to avail himself largely of his pupils' abilities for the services at St. Sepulchre's Church.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

May 29, 1854. AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—I dare say you will be troubled with more than one reply to the letter which appeared in your columns last week, subjective of "Organists' Salaries." The curious arguments, and strange logic, propounded by Mr. Dale, have no pretensions either to justice or reason.

I cannot see what analogy there exists between the salary which an organist receives for his weekly duties, and the erratic calculation made by your correspondent.

It would be a parallel absurdity to say, that because a physician for ten minutes' consultation receives a guinea, that his yearly income is therefore £52,560.

True, an organist would receive at the rate of £1,200 a-year, and so would a physician receive at the rate of what I have stated; but it would be difficult to convince either one or other that his income was such.

If so many first-rate organists of Mr. Dale's acquaintance are contented with their salaries, and are "wedded to their instruments," let us hope that their incomes are not limited to what their church performances may realise, or the matrimonial state to which he refers is not likely to be fraught with much happiness.

I am not myself an organist, but I entertain more respect than is generally felt towards this much-disregarded class. It forms a very large proportion of the musical profession (the mitigation of whose sufferings occupies such a large portion of your journal), and is, therefore, I think, entitled to a share of your sympathy and defence.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

London, May 26th, 1854. J. W. PARKER.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—I conceive that the remarks upon the above subject by your correspondent, "An Ill-paid Sabbatarian," are but little to the real purpose. It may suit such an one as himself, professedly a trombonist, to accept an organist's situation, the duties of which occur on his leisure day, for £20 per annum, and we can go still lower and lower, and at last find some one who, for the sake of practice, will undertake a situation gratuitously. But this is not the way to have such duties properly performed. To one really qualified, who has duly studied and practised the instrument, and made himself theoretically as well as practically acquainted with his profession, I conceive that the remuneration ought to be commensurate with his talent and care, and the importance of the services which he renders. When those who have the engagement of an organist want such an one as I have described, and wish to retain him, it can only be accomplished by offering a fair and proper return. Yours, very truly,

May 29th. JUSTITIA.

BATH.—Mr. Roeckel's Pianoforte Recital was highly interesting. Mr. Roeckel, who is one of the best pianists of the day, performed selections from Frescobaldi, Scarlatti, Händel, Bach, down to the modern composers, and several clever pieces of his own.

BRIGHTON.—The Messiah was given by the Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, on Thursday evening, in the Upper Room, Town Hall. The orchestra was powerful, but had two great a preponderance over the voices. Mrs. Bond, Miss Clara Henderson, Mr. J. Marshall, and Mr. G. Perren, were the singers. Mr. Cox presided at the Harmonium. The leader was Mr. Gibbons, and the conductor, Mr. Bond.

DRAMATIC.

FRENCH PLAYS, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On Wednesday last, M. Lafont took his benefit, on which occasion Madame de Girardin's piece, Jois fait Peur, was played, together with Jean, and a novelty called Au Printemps. M. Lafont, who, during his short management, has made himself much too scarce, was warmly received by the house. He is an old and highly-esteemed favourite, and we sincerely trust that his speculation has been successful. The season, which commenced on April 28th and terminates to-night, has been one of the shortest on record; but we may also say it has been one of the most brilliant, from the unusual combination of histrionic talent by which it has been signalised. Several new pieces have been presented to the public, and the extraordinary success of Madame de Girardin's new play has precluded the production of some of the old favourites promised in the prospectus. Of this we do not complain. The public taste must be consulted in such matters.

We cannot refrain from saying a few words on the new piece, Au Printemps, a one act comedy, in verse, by M. Leopold Laluye (brought out at the Odéon on the 5th of April last), which seemed to us a charming trifle of the wig and powder school—a sort of Watteau, or rather Boucher, in action. The scene represents a wood, in which two couples are wandering—the one of mature age, discoursing of worldly wisdom, the other in the spring time of life, speaking of never-ending love and unfathomable affection; the former representing the mother of the young lady and the uncle of the young gentleman. The two couples meet, when an explanation ensues, and the curtain falls, as usual, upon a scene of pre-connubial happiness. The part of the young lady was very prettily played by Mdlle. Luther, and Messrs. Léon and Tourillon displayed much tact in the characters allotted to them. The piece is well written, and many of our objections to verse comediettas vanished before the influence of the atmosphere, the subject, and the costume of the period. The primness of rhymed verse would seem to be in keeping with the powdered hair and hoops of the women, and the long curly wigs of the men.

During the short season of M. Lafont a perfect galaxy of stars have appeared in rapid succession—viz.: Madame Allen, Mdlles. Fix and Luther, MM. Regnier, Lafont, Brindeau, and Ferville.—On Monday next, the Opera Comique, with Mdlle. Marie Cabel, as prima donna, will commence a series of twelve representations.

STRAND.—A dramatic version of Mr. Dickens's last tale, Bleak House, was produced on Monday. The prominent and dramatic points of the story have been seized and put together with the requisite knowledge of the stage, and the piece has been got up with care. Among the performers, Mr. Williams, of Sadler's Wells, made an excellent lawyer Tulkinghorn, and Miss Fanny Beaumont gave the humour and pathos of poor Joe in a pleasing manner. The piece was well received.

SADLER'S WELLS.—There is no lack of novelty here. Mr. Wright has been amusing the Islingtonians with his peculiar humour, and has been succeeded by Mr. Flexmore and Madlle. Auriol. Then, next week, we are to have Mr. Davenport and Miss F. Vining. Meantime, the clever Miss Harriet Gordon, in the double character of actress and vocalist, is fast gaining ground with the public. Her performance of Gertrude in the little piece, The Loan of a Lover, would alone repay a visit to the theatre. We would only caution the fair artist against a tendency to over-acting, a fault common to youthful performers at the "Minors."

MDLLE. SOPHIE CRUVELLI left for Paris on Tuesday afternoon, by the mail train. She was to make her rentrée last night, as Valentine in the Huguenots, at the Académie Impériale de Musique.

MAD. CARADORI, the prima donna at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane, started on Thursday morning for Aix-la-Chapelle, where she is engaged to sing at the Festival.

M. JULES DE GLIMES, the fashionable conductor and professor of singing, has arrived in London, from Brussels, for the season.

Digitized by Google

CONCERT AT OSBORNE.

The following is the programme of the concert given on Her Majesty's birthday, May the 24th, at Osborne.

Lied, "Noch eh, ich dich gesehen," Herr Hölzel—G. Hölzel. Air (Ezio)—Händel; Lied, Mad. Nissen Saloman—Kücken. Capriccio, Pianoforte, Mrs. F. B. Jewson—Mendelssohn. Duetto, "O Du Geliebte," Mad. Nissen Saloman and Herr Hölzel—O. Nicolai. Oestreichisches Lied, "Der gusti Rath," Herr Hölzel—G. Hölzel. Etude, Pianoforte, Mrs. F. B. Jewson—Goria. Romances Nationales Suédoises, Mad. Nissen Saloman. At the Pianoforte, Mrs. Anderson.

Herr Hölzel sang, in addition, by command of Her Majesty, two Lieder of his own composition—"Der Fröhliche Zecher," and "Die Thräne."

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The sixth concert took place on Monday evening, and though so great an attraction as Don Giovanni was announced at the Royal Italian Opera, and Mr. Hullah's pupils were busily engaged with a performance of the Creation, still there was a sufficiently large muster of the members and their friends to form a very brilliant audience. The orchestra did not fare so well under these circumstances, as the leaders of the various departments were obliged to send deputies, leave from Covent Garden being granted to none. This will easily account for the occasional want of steadiness in the band. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Wedding March | Mendelssohn. |
| Symphony in F | Henry Leslie. |
| Song, "Mine be a Cot" | Val Morris. |
| Overture (Evelyne) | G. A. Osborne. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Song, "The Lady and the Nightingale," with Pianoforte obbligato | Lindsay Sloper. |
| Selection (Il Don Giovanni) | Mozart. |
| Concerted Piece, "Rosalind," for Voice and Pianoforte | Miss Gabriel. |
| Overture (Coriolanus) | Beethoven. |

Conductor, Mr. G. A. Osborne.

Of Mr. Henry Leslie's extremely clever symphony, which displays a more than ordinary degree of musical feeling and experience, combined with a knowledge of the classical models and a facility in the use of the various instruments, the result of close and diligent study, we have spoken more than once in terms of high favour. It improves on every hearing. The Amateurs know it thoroughly, and, on the whole, it is one of their best performances. Nevertheless, we should like to hear this symphony by one of our Philharmonic orchestras.

In consequence of the illness of Mr. Eliot Galer, we had no opportunity of judging of the merits of Mr. Val Morris's song; but, in order that no gap in the programme should occur, Mr. Alfred Pollock kindly performed on the oboe, with his accustomed taste and facility, something that seemed to us a modern air written in a quaintly Händelian style. Mr. Pollock is certainly the first amateur player on the oboe in this country.

The light, brilliant, and very effective overture of Mr. Osborne brought the first part to a satisfactory conclusion, and was received with great applause.

Miss Dolby sang Mr. Lindsay Sloper's scena as Miss Dolby always sings (need we say more?), and most ably was she accompanied in the brilliant and effective obbligato by Mr. S. W. Waley on the pianoforte. The more we hear "The Lady and the Nightingale," the better we like it, as something new in form, and exceedingly pleasant to listen to. The only remaining feature of the programme requiring notice is the song of Miss Gabriel, which, though somewhat ambitious in title, is nevertheless cleverly written both for voice and piano. It was sung by Miss Alleyne and accompanied by the fair authoress, who, on entering and leaving the orchestra, was greeted with loud applause.

We hear that the London Deutscher Männer-Chor, under the direction of Herr Pauer, are again to perform at the seventh concert on June 12th, and, after their deserved success on a former occasion, we have no doubt they will prove a great attraction.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The third concert of the tenth season, on Tuesday (the 23rd ult.), was one of the most perfect ever given, and never did a more distinguished audience of noble, fashionable, and professional connoisseurs assemble within the walls of Willis's Street great music-room. It was a kind of morning Almack's, with music instead of dancing for the entertainment, and Mr. Ella instead of M. Jullien, as the caterer. The programme, both as regards selection and execution, was faultless.

Quartet, E flat, Mozart; Quartet, No. 6, F minor, Mendelssohn; Sonata, Op. 47, pianoforte and violin, Beethoven; Fantasia, violoncello solo, Piatti; Solos, pianoforte.

Executants—First violin, Herr Ernst; second violin, Herr Goffrie; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Signor Piatti; pianoforte, Herr Hallé.

The lovely quartet of Mozart is much too rarely played in public. It could not have been interpreted with more genuine simplicity, fervor, and real Mozartian style than by Herr Ernst and his coadjutors, nor could it have been more thoroughly appreciated and relished by the discriminating audience assembled.

The very grand, sublime, and passionate inspiration of Mendelssohn, the last great cry from his immense and noble heart, has been more than once described at length in these pages, and an analysis of great length from the pen of Mr. Macfarren appeared last year in the Musical World ("Ante"—we forget the date) when it was performed by the members of the Quartet Association. If there were nothing else to prove the transcendent genius of Herr Ernst, his performance of this astonishing quartet, which equals in difficulty, as in grandeur and sublimity, any that ever was written, would sufficiently attest it. No orator was ever more eloquent, had he the golden tongue of Gandelyn—no oracle, shrouded in impenetrable mystery, more impressive. His reading throughout attained the highest degree of poetical expression. It was Mendelssohn who spoke, through Ernst, his high priest and interpreter. The quartet made a deep and lasting impression on the audience.

In the Kreitzer sonata, Herr Ernst (who was more than himself throughout the concert) was worthily associated with the accomplished pianist, M. Hallé. The violoncello solo asserted Sig. Piatti's unrivalled tone and extraordinary command of his instrument; and the solos by M. Hallé brought the concert to a close with éclat.

Herr Charles Oberthur, the well-known and fashionable harpist, gave a morning concert on Tuesday last at Willis's Rooms. The programme was an excellent one of the popular kind, and appeared to please the audience greatly. The vocalists were Mesdames Clara Novello, Hermann, and Sedlatzek, and Miss Jules Lefort; the instrumentalists, Signor Giulio Regondi (concertina), Herr Oberthür and Mr. H. J. Trust (harp), Mr. Praeger and Miss Arabella Goddard (piano). Herr Oberthür played five times in all. His first performance was a solo on Scotch airs; his second, a duet with Miss Arabella Goddard on Lucrezia Borgia (both his own compositions); a duo for concertina and harp with Signor Giulio Regondi; the accompaniments to the air from Otello, "Assisa a piè d'un Salice," sung by Mdlle. Sedlatzek; and a duet for two harps, on the Huguenots, with Mr. Trust. Herr Oberthür has first-rate executive powers, and plays with feeling and expression. His Scotch fantasia was remarkably well performed, and excited unanimous applause. He introduced the airs "Robin Adair"—which, by the way, is no Scotch air, but, as we have said "one thousand and three" times, genuine Irish—and "Logie O'Buchan," with good effect. The duet for harp and piano, however, was most liked, and was famously executed by Herr Oberthür and Miss Arabella Goddard. Miss Arabella Goddard also played Theodore Kullak's Perles d'Ecume—a graceful and effective morceau of its class—with so much brilliancy and taste as to elicit a loud encore. Mad. Clara Novello sang Herr Schimon's romanza, "Lidi Amati," and a cavatina, by Signor Cangoni, "Ah! se potessi anch' io," superbly. Two pleasing Lieder, by Mr. F. Praeger—"Vöglein, wohin so schnell?" and "Warum?"—were nicely given by Mdlle. Hermann. The rooms were filled with a brilliant assemblage.

Digitized by Google

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

THE third concert took place at Willis's Rooms on Thursday afternoon, before a crowded audience. The following was the programme:—

Quartet in B flat, Op. 42, B. Molique; Sonata, No. 2, in A, Pianoforte and Violoncello, Op. 47, E. Pauer; Quartet, No. 7, in F, Beethoven; Solos, Pianoforte, Beethoven and Mendelssohn. Executants—Violins, M. Sainton and Mr. Cooper; Viola, Mr. Hill; Violoncello, Sig. Piatti; Pianoforte, Herr Pauer.

Herr Molique's ingenious and beautiful quartet improves on every hearing. It was led by Mr. Cooper, capitally played, and thoroughly pleased the audience. Herr Pauer's violoncello sonata is extremely clever and thoughtful. Nothing could have been better than the execution by the composer and Sig. Piatti. The grand performance of the day, however, was the superb "Rasoumowsky" of Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 1, in F), which was played to perfection. We have never heard M. Sainton broader in tone, more energetic in style, or more admirably sure, effective, and entrainant in his execution. The "honors of the day" were to the great French violinist, who is playing better than ever this year. The charming Andante of Beethoven (in F), and the very fine and impetuous Caprice of Mendelssohn (in A minor, one of the set dedicated to Mr. Klingemann, Op. 33), were both well played by Herr Pauer. The concert, on the whole, was not so interesting as the last, but more agreeable on account of its greater brevity. The Quartet Association seems to be making way. It well deserves to succeed. There cannot be too many institutions founded on such admirable principles, and calculated to do such benefit to art, and such good service to the progress of musical taste among the higher classes of society.

---

M. ROSENHAIN, the distinguished pianist annd composer, has arrived in London.

MISS BINCKES' SOIRÉE MUSICALE.—Miss Binckes, an accomplished vocal and instrumental artist, gave the first of a series of three concerts at the New Philharmonic Rooms, in Newman Street, on Friday evening, the 26th ult., before a numerous audience. The piano selection evinced no small care, and equally judicious was that of the vocal. Beethoven's Sonata in C seems to be as great a favourite with modern pianists as it was with the great author himself, who would, when visiting his select friends, frequently delight them by playing it. Vandyke used (it is said) to carry about with him his celebrated portrait of Gevartius, as a sample to his employers, of his accomplishment in the art; Beethoven might, with equal justice, have done the same with his sonata. It was played with just conception and delivery. Force and decision, however, were the prevailing features of the performance, which produced an applause as genuine as it was merited. The Notturnos of Chopin, beautiful as they are, and well played as they were, are too tristes for a public room; not so, the Rondo Capriciosо, by Mendelssohn, with its lovely andante, which was played with uncommon vigour and precision, and was the gem of the evening. Miss Binckes' voice is a contralto-legeresza, of fine quality, and has been carefully trained. Gluck's "Che farò Orfeo" served, with Kücken's "Tear," and Pacini's "Oppresso dal duolo," with a ballad of Mrs. Wm. Johnson's, to show her variety of style, and were sang extremely well and received with great applause. Mrs. Arthur Stone sang, with much sweetness, "My Mother bids me bind my Hair," and Mr. Charles Cotton, whose voice is a legitimate basso, gave one of the most beautiful airs of Händel—"Lascio amore"—with the true Händelian feeling. He would have been equally good in Rossini's "Sorgete" but for an unfortunate termination on the upper F, which, owing to previous exertion, he failed to reach. Mr. Frederick Chatterton, on the harp, was encored, and, in the duet ("The Coronation March" by Brehon) with Miss Binckes, was even still more successful. The piece concluded with the National Anthem, at which the audience rose en masse, testifying in loud plaudits their gratification. Mr. Aspull conducted with great ability. Miss Binckes has announced her second soirée musicale to consist of English compositions only.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The operas this week have been La Reine de Chypre, Le Prophète, and La Favorite. Le Philtre is to be revived in a few days. We are also promised the new ballet for Mad. Cerito; but this has been so often promised that I shall not believe it till I see it. There is a talk of reviving La Juive, as M. Gounod's Nonne Sanglante will not be ready for some time.—At the Opéra Comique, the first representation of La Fiancée du Diable, of MM. Scribe and Victor Massé, has been postponed in consequence of the indisposition of M. Puget, who has a part. It will, however, in all probability, be brought out before Saturday. L'Etoile du Nord continues as attractive as ever. Mdlle. Zoé Belia has temporarily assumed the rôle of one of the Vivandières, formerly played by Mdlle. Decroix, whose mother died recently.—At the Théâtre Lyrique, the new opera of Maître Wolfram, the words by M. Méry, and the music by M. Ernest Reyer, has been favourably received. MM. Grignon and Tallon were very well, but the success of the piece was mainly attributable to the singing and acting of Mad. Meillet.

Mad. Marie Cabel, who has made a trip to Bordeaux, will return at the end of the present month. On the 1st June, she will play, for the last time this season, in La Promise, for the benefit of the régisseur. On the 3rd June, the company leaves for London, where Mad. Cabel will make her début on the 5th, in Le Bijou Perdu. The theatre will re-open in September with a three-act comic opera by M. Victor Adam, the principal part in which is intended for Mad. Cabel. The next novelty on the list is the new work of M. J. Wekerlin.

At the Théâtre Français, Mdlle. Rachel makes her reappearance this week in her great part of Phèdre.—A new piece, entitled Le Marbrier, by M. Alexandre Dumas, has been produced at the Vaudeville with success. M. Bocage was excellent in the character of M. Gervais. A comédie-vaudeville, entitled Le Bûcher de Sardanapale, by MM. Albert Monnier and E. Martin, has also been well received.—At the Gymnase, Le Gendre de M. Poirier will shortly be withdrawn from the bills, as M. Berton and Mad. Rose-Chéri are about to take their annual congé.—A new one-act vaudeville, entitled La Rose de Bohême, from the pen of MM. Marc-Michel, Siraudin and Delacour, has been produced.—Two novelties were brought out on the same evening at the Variétés, Pas Jaloux, a vaudeville, by MM. Laurencin and Lubize, and Sous un Bec de Gaz, a pochade, by MM. Jallais and Lelarge. M. Numa was particularly humourous in Pas Jaloux.—La Bête du Bon Dieu is very attractive at the Porte Saint Martin.—The Gatté was honoured twice last week by the presence of the Emperor and Empress.—The Contes de la Mère L'Oie has been produced with great splendour at the Ambigu Comique, and draws crowds every evening.—The last novelty at the Délassements-Comiques is a three-act vaudeville, by MM. Thirion and Cedeau, entitled La Brasserie de Munich. A number of students are represented by ladies, whose assumption of male attire has had no small share in the success of the piece.

The Académie des Beaux Arts has selected the cantata for the grand musical prize for 1854. The subject proposed was Françoise de Rimini. There were a great many compositions sent in, but the successful candidate was M. Emile Bunaux. The prize consists of a medal worth five hundred francs. The Section de Musique of the Académie des Beaux Arts, at its sitting of Saturday, the 13th of May, appointed the following six candidates to contend for the grand prize for musical composition:—1. M. Delannoy, pupil of M. Halévy; 2. M. Vast, pupil of M. Adolphe Adam; 3. M. Durand, pupil of MM. Halévy and Bazin; 4. M. Barthe, pupil of M. Leborne; 5. M. Conte, pupil of M. Carafa; and 6. M. Demersmann, pupil of M. Leborne.

M. Meyerbeer has not yet quitted Paris. He was present last Friday at the inauguration of M. Ducroquet's grand organ at St. Eustache.—The choruses at the Italian Opera are being reorganised, and M. Ragani is already making arrangements for next season. Several papers have given the following list of artists as engaged for 1854-1845:—Soprani, Mesdames Frezzolini, Bosio, Gassier, Cambardi, and Weith. Contralto, Mesdames Borghi and Mammo. Tenori, MM. Boccardé and Neri Basaldi.

Digitized by Google

Baritoni, MM. Gassier and Graziani. Bassi, MM. Rossi, Dalle, Aste, and Susini.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—There has been nothing new at the Imperial Opera House, since the production of Sig. Verdi's Trovatore, which continues to please the public. Sig. Verdi is under great obligation to Fräulein Demeric and Herr Bettini for the manner in which they sing the music allotted to them. I Masnadieri, by the same composer, is to be the next novelty. The ballet of Esmeralda has been given for the benefit of Madame Maiwood. Whether it was that the public were attracted into the country and places of amusement in the open air, or had seen Esmeralda quite often enough, I know not, but there were plenty of empty places in the theatre. A concert has been given in Seuffert's rooms by the pupils of Herr Josef Vogt, member of the orchestra of the Imperial Opera House. The performances, on the whole, were satisfactory. The pianist, Herr J. Tedesco, has arrived here on his way to Carlsbad. It is his intention to give a series of concerts next winter. Operas will again be given in the Theater an der Wien. A company has been formed by Mesdames Reuss, Gandelius, Schreiber-Kirchberger, Herren Wepe, Haag, and Cesar, who will first give three representations. Herr Cornet is making a tour through Germany, for the purpose of filling up the places of those artists who have retired from the Imperial Opera House, for which, by the way, Capellmeister Eckert is composing a new opera. He is said to have obtained a most excellent libretto. This is positively all I have to tell you this week. I trust that my next letter will be a longer one. Apropos de bottes. What is the reason that you, as well as all your English contemporaries, will always persist in writing the name of the great composer "Händel," "Handel?"

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent).—Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor has been played at the Opera House, the principal characters by Mesdames Herrenburger, Köster, Fräulein Gey, Herren Krause, Zschiesche, Pfister, Mantius, Mickler and Lieder. Herr Taubert conducted. We have had an excellent performance of Bach's Passions-Musik to St. Matthew.—Auber's Fra Diavolo is to be revived at the Theater Royal before the end of the season, which concludes on the 24th June.

COLOGNE.—The last soirée for chamber music was given in the Hôtel Disch. The programme contained two violin quartets of Haydn, one of Beethoven (A major, Op. 18), and the pianoforte quartet of Robert Schumann (Op. 47.) Herr T. Pixis, who had been suffering from rheumatism for some time previous, played the first violin, and Herr Reinecke presided at the pianoforte.—Herr August Manns, formerly band-master of the 33rd regiment of the line, has accepted an appointment in London. His farewell concert, which he gave in the Gertrudenhof, was attended by more than 1,000 persons.

CASSEL.—Dr. Spohr's Faust, with the recitatives added by the composer, for the Royal Italian Opera, London, in 1852, has been produced at the theatre here with great success.

MILAN, May 23rd, 1854.—(From a Correspondent).—The current season is generally an unfortunate one for the theatres in this city, the public gardens and the circus being the greater attractions. The Impresarii have, consequently, suffered much in their financial affairs. The last novelty at the Carcano has been I Masnadieri, which has had but indifferent success; the prima donna, Signora Monfrini, being a débutante prematurely brought before the public. I Puritani has been reproduced with another prima donna, but with only a slight shade of improvement in the execution.—At the Teatro Re, Don Procopio has been represented with Signora Lipparini, the tenor, Errani, and Cambiaggio as the Protagonista. The success has not been great, but the principal applause was for the acting of Cambiaggio. In a few days will be given the new opera, Amilda, by the Maestro Prati.—At the Santa Radegonda, Il Podestà di Gorgonzola has had but two representations. This new and only opera of the dilettante, Cagnola, has been rather an interesting subject of conversation in the musical circles—it having been partially composed twenty years ago, and only finished within the last few months. It is dedicated, by its author, as a memorial to his fellow citizens, "I Milanesi," to whose indulgence it was recommended. The music, generally speaking, consists of antique reminiscences of Pergolesi and Cimarosa; some from Rossini, Bellini, and Donizetti, and, towards the end, a few pieces of the modern school. This work gives proof of some talent and knowledge of the art, the principal merit being in the clever manner in which it has been combined; but of course it has made a decided fiasco, and, in all probability, will never be again performed. The execution was wretched. The theatre has been closed, within the last few days, before the termination of the season, in consequence of the losses sustained by the Povero Maestro, who was unfortunately also the Impresario.—A concert, for the benefit of the Philharmonic Society, has been given at the Canobbiana. Madame Plodowska sang a piece from the Domino Noir, and the cavatina of Isabella in Robert le Diable. The celebrated clarionet, Bassi, and the violinist, Casorti, also gave their assistance.—A new opera is in rehearsal, at the Teatro Re, entitled Amilda, the music by Prati.

VENICE.—The Traviata of Verdi—which was performed at the Fenice, in the carnival of 1852 and 1853—with but little fortune, has now been re-produced at the San Benedetto with brilliant success. The rehearsals of the new opera of the Maestro Zanardini have already commenced.

GENOA.—The tenore, Carrion, has obtained the first honours in the Sonnambula, at the Carlo Felice; the prima donna, Penco, had also her share of applause. The new ballet, called Fiamella di Monticini, has been well received, with many calls for the composer. The pas de deux of Pochini and Signor Lepri was enthusiastically applauded.

TURIN.—At the Teatro Reggio a grand vocal and instrumental concert has been given for the benefit of the Society Pio Filarmonica, in the presence of a numerous and select audience. The concert commenced with an unpublished overture of Rossini, which was deservedly applauded. Several other pieces of classical maestri were well executed; but the "Huntsmen's Chorus" in Der Freischütz, the quartet from Beatrice of Bellini, and the beautiful hymn of Romani, composed by the Maestro Bercanovich, were the pieces that pleased most. The sisters Ferni, violinists, executed the Fantasia Pastorale of Leonard, and that upon the Favorita in a manner which produced for them great applause, that amounted to enthusiasm, after their performance of the celebrated Carnival of Venice of Ernst.

NAPLES.—A new opera, Il Conte di Rossiglione, in three acts, the words by Ribera, the music by Miceli, has been produced at the Teatro del Fondo, with indifferent success. The libretto has some good situations, which were, however, not turned to account by the composer, who would seem to have written his music first, and to have adapted it to the poem afterwards. The singers were Madame de Roissi and Signori Pancani and Walter. —At the Teatro Nuovo, Verdi's Trovatore was received with a combination of hisses and applause, the former predominating when the unfortunate tenor Villani appeared on the stage, or rather before he appeared at all on the stage, his first aria being sung behind the scenes; the latter when Signora Cappelli came forward. The lady had it all her own way, and so captivated the audience that she carried the opera through in spite of the short-comings of the villanous Villani, who is described as not having a note in his voice, so that poor Verdi was the sufferer, as far as his tenor-music was concerned.

FLORENCE.—Verdi's Rigoletto has been played at the Teatro Leopoldo by Signora Tilli and Messrs. Croft, Capriles and Delle Sedie. The lady was much applauded, and the tenor was encored in the air, "La donna è mobile."—At the Teatro Standisch, a concert has been given by the violinist, Ferroni, which was well attended. He was assisted by Ciardi, Jandelli, and Frascani.—The composer, Mabelini, chapel-master to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, has been created a knight of the Royal Order of Isabella the Catholic of Spain, for his Requiem, the music of which is published by Richault, of Paris.—The composer, Cosentino, has written a new opera, which will be brought out at the Teatro Alfieri.

HAMBURGH.—Die Zauberflöte has been given. Fräulein Liebhardt has concluded her "star" engagement in the character of Maria in the Regimentstochter, and Fräulein Ney has commenced hers in that of Norma, in the opera of the same name.

Digitized by Google

PESTH.—Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt has been paid 3500 florins for singing at three evening concerts in this town.

POTSDAM.—Every place in the theatre was taken at the representation of Herr von Flotow's Riibezahl, which was performed at the express command of his Majesty.

MONACO.—Verdi's Rigoletto has been successfully played at the theatre here.

ROME.—At the Teatro Argentina, Verdi's Macbeth has been warmly received. The artists sustained their parts with much credit: the prima donna, De-Giuli, and baritone, Oresci (Macbeth), obtained the first honours. Il Teatro Valle has been closed after a few representations of I Falsi Monetari, in consequence of its having been almost deserted.

At the Teatro Canobbiana, the new ballo, Djema, of the coreografo Rota, has created a furore, and obtained for its author more than a dozen calls.

STETTIN.—Mad. Herzberg-Löwe and Herr Beck have appeared as Donna Anna and Don Juan respectively in Mozart's chef-d'œuvre.

BRESLAU.—Fräulein Wildhauer, from the Imperial Opera at Vienna, has been playing here.

LAUBAN.—The Männergesang-Verein celebrated their second anniversary on the 1st inst.

MAGDEBURG.—To the satisfaction of all the lovers of true music, M. Vieuxtemps gave a concert on the 7th and another on the 8th ult. There was a very large audience on each occasion.

ERFURT.—In consequence of an invitation from the Erfurter Musikverein, the brothers Müller, the celebrated quartetists, have given three concerts here. They were very successful, and fully justified their reputation.

HANOVER.—Fräulein Bauer, from the Stadttheater in Würzburg, has appeared as Rosina, and Herr Beck, from the Royal Opera, Dresden, as Figaro, in the Barbier von Sevilla.

---

NEW YORK, May 16.—In the New York Daily Times of today, we read as follows:—"Foremost in the attractions for this week—foremost by merit and desert—are M. Jullien and his unrivalled orchestra. After a prolonged tour in the South and South-west, he has returned to New York, and purposes giving ten more concerts prior to his departure for Europe. Merely as an industrious, pains-taking man, Jullien deserves our sympathy and support. It is no ordinary undertaking to drill a powerful orchestra in a country where each resident member of it thinks himself as great a man as his Conductor, and where one and all are apt to grumble at the number of rehearsals which a man like Jullien is compelled to exact. Having, however, conquered all difficulties, M. Jullien remains for nine nights more to reap his reward. If Castle Garden is crowded nightly to its greatest capacity, it will be but a proper testimonial to a deserving man of genius. We have no hesitation in saying that Jullien has done more for the cause of art than any dozen maestri who have preceded him. He has familiarized the public ear with good music, performed in the best possible manner, without dosing it with compositions that are alike unintelligible and unpalatable to ninety-nine out of every hundred listeners.

"The first of the ten concerts was given last night, and we are happy to say attracted a crowded audience. Since our last visit to Castle Garden, some alterations have been perfected; the seats upholstered; the interior decorated; new chandeliers added, etc. It is of course improved in a relative degree, and presents a truly elegant appearance. Of M. Jullien's programme, we can only speak in terms of praise: the opening overture, the selection from the Huguenots, the Sleigh Polka, were rendered in a manner which could not be excelled, and has never been equalled. Mdlle. Anna Zerr sang two or three old acquaintances in the delightful manner peculiar to herself, and was encored as usual. We hope there will be no reluctance in giving M. Jullien the most ample support. The good taste of our musical public is involved in the issue of this campaign."

BOSTON.—Dwight's Journal of Music alludes to Jullien's farewell concert at Boston in the following complimentary terms —

"JULLIEN AND HIS ORCHESTRA.—We should have said with half his orchestra, if the question were of numbers; but with that most effective half, in which the real vitality of every organization resides. Yet the announcement of four farewell concerts, with Jullien for the general (together with his staff) of even such diminished forces, could not fail to crowd the Music Hall even in this warm weather. The programmes have been essentially the old story; but there was the rich, vivid, unsatiating euphony of the collective orchestral sound; there was the wonderfully perfect precision; there was the charm of hearing the world's best solo instruments winding in and out amid the polyphonic harmony; there was the inimitable mastery of Jullien himself, with his real genius for the understanding and using of effects, of the powers and qualities of instruments, of feeling and playing upon that wondrous "harp of (not too) many strings," the popular taste and feeling; and of course the last chance of enjoying all this was not to be lost.

"Yesterday afternoon and evening were announced as the last concerts in Boston. Could not Jullien give us such a Sunday evening concert as he gave us once, and which proved one of the most satisfactory of entertainments to all parties? It was a great thing to win so many ears to listen to rich-tone combinations; to acquaint so many with the powers and glories of a mighty orchestra; to make known to multitudes the characters of instruments and the last perfection of skill in the handling of each; to give the public mind such an ideal of precision and unity in a combined performance;—and, last and not least, to shower so much brilliant and graceful entertainment over our barren and utilitarian lives, at the same time educating the musical sense by the most rapid process. We regret to part with Jullien, and to think that such a splendid organization of the musical elements can ever be dispersed as it has already begun to be. But Jullien is inexhaustible in his resources, and will, we scarcely doubt, return to conquer new worlds more than once."—May 13.

---

MR. KIALLMARK gave his annual concert at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on Monday morning. He was assisted by the London orchestra, conducted by Mr. Frank Mori; and had, as vocalists, Mesdames Louisa Pyne, Ursula Barclay, and Amedei, Messrs. Herbert, and Jules Lefort. Mr. Kiallmark, a pianist of standing, talent, and repute, performed Hummel's Concerto in B minor, for the pianoforte, and Moscheles' "Recollections of Ireland," both of which well-known and effective compositions tax the powers of the pianist to the utmost. It was well executed by Mr. Kiallmark, and well accompanied by the members of the London Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Mori. The pieces assigned to the Orchestra were, the Overture to Oberon, Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March, from A Midsummer Night's Dream, all of which were played with effect, and loudly applauded. The symphony was a real treat. Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Amedei, and Miss Ursula, contributed, by some excellent singing, to the success of the concert. The first-named lady sang, with great charm and cleverness, Auber's air and variations from The Crown Diamonds, "Oh, je veux briser ma chaîne," and a graceful ballad of Mr. Macfarren's, called "There are Mem'ries." Miss Louisa Pyne also sang the grand dramatic duet from Semiramide, "Ebben a te ferisci," with Madame Amedei. Herr Molique played a very ingenious and interesting fantasia of his own composition for the violin, on Austrian airs, in his most brilliant and effective manner, and both performance and composition created an evident sensation. The room was full.

BIRMINGHAM.—The members of the Town Hall Glee Choir have presented their conductor, Mr. Stimpson, with a silver card-case, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to James Stimpson, Esq., by the Birmingham Town Hall Glee Choir, as a small but sincere expression of respect and esteem. May 24, 1854." The ladies' committee of the recent Wesleyan Bazaar have presented Mr. Stimpson with an electro-plated salver, ornamented with a view of the Bristol-road chapel and schools. In a note, they observe—"The article is of small value, but may remind you that our committee gratefully acknowledge your courtesy and kindness."—The concert given in aid of the Relief Fund of the Festival Choral Society attracted a large audience, though, from the small charge of admission, no great profit can have been made. Händel's oratorio Samson was performed, and the principal vocalists were Miss Amelia Hill, Mrs. John Hayward, Mr. Perring, Mr. Savage, and Mr. Thomas. Mr. E. Shargool presided at the organ, and Mr. Stimpson conducted.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A COUNTRY ORGANIST.—Were we to comply with the request of our Correspondent, we should be encroaching upon our advertisement columns, which we are sure that, on reflection, he would not wish us to do.

MR. D. FRANCIS (Mile End).—A letter from our correspondent, dated March 14, came to hand to-day—rather too late to enable us to comply with the request it contains.

MR. J. M'KEWAN'S communication is an advertisement.

E. T. (Reigate).—With the utmost pleasure.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.—We have received so many letters on this subject, that we are compelled to cry, "Hold—enough!" For the future, we cannot afford space for any except those to which the name of the writer is affixed; and even of these we cannot promise to publish more than a very few.

LUMLEY v. GYE.—The whole of this interesting case, now proceeding in the Court of Queen's Bench, will be published in the next number of the MUSICAL WORLD, when a Supplement of four pages will be given. The LIFE OF MOZART, which press of matter has obliged us to omit this week, will be continued in the same number.

AJAX.—We regret to be unable to supply our correspondent with the information he desires.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 3RD, 1854.

IT may be gathered from the opinions we have so frequently advanced, that we regard the oratorio of Elijah not only as the finest composition of Mendelssohn, but as the most masterly effort of art that has proceeded from the pen of any living musician. What at first strikes us is its entire originality of character. Dramatic form and dramatic colour are here, for the first time, exclusively adopted in the composition of an oratorio. The dry formulæ of counterpoint, which have hitherto been regarded as indispensable in a grand sacred composition, are, for the first time, wholly disregarded in Elijah. How far Mendelssohn found success in this bold innovation upon the long-established forms, exhibited by Handel in their highest perfection, and adhered to, as well as in them lay, by all composers who have followed him, we have more than once endeavoured to show.

It is well to observe here that Haydn in his Creation, and Beethoven, somewhat later, in his Mount of Olives, laid, as it were, the first stones of this new art-monument. Both these great works are written in the dramatic style, and both eschew the formal severities of counterpoint. The poem of the Creation, however, being didactic, the dramatic form is absent, though the dramatic colour exists in the music. But, in the Mount of Olives, the poem and the music are equally dramatic both as to form and colour. Now, however sceptical certain pedants may be as to the contrapuntal accomplishments of Beethoven, there cannot be the shadow of a doubt but that Haydn was one of the most learned as well as the most gifted of musicians. That he could write fugues, and employ the fugal style in his free compositions, he has proved in a hundred different instances. His sparing use of them in the Creation may, therefore, be considered as the prophesy of a great change in the highest school of musical art; and the Creation may be likened (not to speak it profanely) to the Baptist who foretold the coming of the Messiah (Elijah). Beethoven needs no apology for his adherence to the free school, in which all his writings are composed. His symphonies, and quartets, sonatas, etc., with a few striking and two or three singular exceptions, although evidencing that facility in all the resources and contrivances of art which we cannot separate from our idea of a master, plainly demonstrate how little his inclination tended to the superfluous ingenuities of contrapuntal elaboration; his glorious impulses could no more submit to the fetters of the musical schoolmen, than the horses of the Sun to the feeble guidance of Phaeton.

Besides these masters, Cherubini may be cited, as having, in his requiems and masses, given strong indications of a leaning towards the free school of writing in church music. There are very few instances of strict and elaborate fugue to be found in any of his greater works.

Now, while we admit in the fugues of Bach, Handel, and Mozart, a certain solemnity which is not out of keeping with the loftier phases of religious expression, their frequent use cannot be divested of a stiffness at utter variance with what we must needs regard as the object in allying music with sacred matters. Certainly this must be to endow them with an attraction that shall bring them still closer to the human heart—to utter them in a language intenser and more fascinating—to glorify God by showing that one of his greatest wonders is appreciated. The error has been to confound the end with the means. Fugue is a means, not an end; but it has been treated as an end, and not a means. It is easy to cite the Messiah, Israel in Egypt, the Clavier bien tempéré, the Requiem, and the last movement of the Jupiter Symphony—easier, indeed, to cite than to imitate them. These prodigies of invention and art must be regarded as exemplifications of that mighty power of genius which enabled the happy possessors to triumph over the barriers of counterpoint, to trample on the restrictions of pedantry, and to speak like gods from the bars of a prison-house. And here be it understood, that, while we defend the position which Mendelssohn has taken in his Elijah, we are of opinion that no composer should presume to essay the highest flights of art—the symphony, oratorio, and quartet—unless he be a thorough master of those very means which we object to when employed as an end. It is only perfect accomplishment in all the various exercises of art that can make a master in the true meaning of the term. There are many pleasing and even admirable composers to whom the distinction of MASTER cannot be justly applied. To be a master, knowledge must be universal and genius original. Bach, Handel, Haydn, Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven, Cherubini, Spohr and Mendelssohn—these are the true masters of the art of music; no others have yet proved themselves worthy of the title. Weber and Rossini are men of splendid genius, but not masters; Cimarosa and Auber are men of lively fancy, but not masters; Méhul and Dussek are men of a passionate and poetical temperament, but not masters; and so we could make out a list ad infinitum.

That Mendelssohn was one of the greatest of masters is a fact beyond controversy. That he could write in the severe style, he has incontestably proved in his first oratorio, Paulus, which has many instances of fugue, and some developed with great elaboration. Moreover, there are his organ-works and several of his pianoforte compositions (such as his Seven Characteristic Pieces, Six Preludes and Fugues, etc., etc., etc.,) which present unanswerable proofs of his intimate acquaintance with the art of counterpoint, in all its branches. But, inasmuch as Paulus, in the midst of its freshness of melody, and the original colouring of its harmony and orchestration, adheres principally to the old-established forms of the oratorio-school, it must be regarded as a less striking proof of the composer's genius than Elijah, which, equally beautiful and still more elevated in style, is entirely new and unlike anything previously written. In no work of Mendelssohn is there a greater number of beautiful melodies than in Elijah. It is as a ripe harvest of tune when the year is most favourable; the ear is replenished with it, as the air is loaded with the grateful odour of the abundant crop; and the sun of harmony bathes it in the golden splendour of its noon-day fire. As a work of art, Elijah must take its station by the side of the Messiah and Israel in Egypt. It is not for us to say whether it shall stand as No. 1, 2, or 3, in the great triad of masterpieces; rather should we accept it as inseparable from the Handelian inspirations, helping to constitute a glorious art-trinity, inscrutable, indivisible, and imperishable. Christus, alas!—was not finished, or Handel might have lost his throne.

Digitized by Google

If, however, we must be forced to comparisons in such mighty matters, we shall not fear to make them openly. Elijah, in our opinion, has the advantage over the Messiah in symmetry of design and completeness of development. The Messiah falls off in interest, if not in musical beauty, after the grand climax of the "Hallelujah" chorus; but Elijah is sustained from first to last with a power that never sleeps, and a vigour of invention that never tires. Elijah has equally the advantage over Israel, in symmetry of design and the relation of its concomitant parts to the whole. The second part of Israel—magnificent as it is, and evidencing a power even greater than that manifested by Elijah—is but a repetition of the first. There is no evident reason why Handel should have twice described the miracles of Exodus in the same work. That he has so done needs only a reference to prove; and that he has brought a genius nothing less than stupendous, a prodigality that astonishes and delights, and a power of dramatic expression that towers above sublimity, is not the less true. Handel only would have dared, Handel only could have accomplished a feat so seemingly impossible. The first part of Israel is descriptive, the second part didactic; the first part is action; the second exultation; the wonders of Jehovah are exhibited in the one, and his praises, on account of those wonders, in the other. But Elijah is a single effort, perfect in all its parts, and, as a whole, beautiful and majestic. It is, moreover, thoroughly human. It treats of the griefs and sufferings and undying faith and ultimate glorification of a very man—of a man full of belief in the Good, strong in sincerity of intention, great in aspiration of soul, meek in kindliness of heart, beautiful in purity of manners, and god-like in patient endurance. It is a drama as real and as full of interest as any play of Shakspere. Mendelssohn himself supplied the materials for the German version from the Old Testament; and this is only another proof that his genius was essentially dramatic.

Perhaps there was never a composer so happily situated as Mendelssohn. While others have been equally endowed with natural gifts, and equally accomplished through study and experience, we cannot cite an example of one so placed by circumstances above the chances and changes of fortune as to justify him in setting the caprices of fashion and popular taste at defiance, and in writing only as he felt moved to write, and in such manner as satisfied his own judgment. Mozart, it is well known, was obliged to compose all manner of trifles for subsistence; and even his symphonies, quartets, and operas, written to provide the necessities of life, were finished in haste, which—though, undoubtedly, Mozart was the greatest genius that the art of music has possessed—left marks of carelessness and unripe consideration, that are sometimes spots upon their beauty. Mendelssohn, luckily for himself and the art, was never in this embarrassed position, and thus never compelled to give his works to the world in an unfinished state. His earlier compositions exhibit the ardour of youthful impulse, and the freshness of original genius; his later efforts display the good effects of thought and study, which, while they curbed the impetuosity and restrained the exuberance inseparable from early labours, supplied the form and beauty of consistency, that, "by chastising, chasteneth," by moderating, perfects and makes impregnable. In the overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream was exhibited the first spark of a genius that afterwards grew into a sun, to light the whole world of art, and round which subsidiary planets roll, in passive obedience to their destiny. Elijah was the meridian of its glory—the happy result of genius matured by reflection, during a life of calm serenity, which circumstances allowed to be wholly devoted to the consideration of a great and beloved art.

TO MARIETTA ALBONI.

(On hearing her sing "Ah, mon Fils," in the Prophète, at the Académie Impériale de Musique, in Paris.)

M elodious voice! across my senses stealing,
A s winds that o'er some moonlit ocean stray—
R iver of music, mingling with the waves
I n which their voices, murmuring, lose their way;—
E ver thine accents, on my spirit falling,
T reasures of joy, mix with the beating blood,
T hat flows, all ears, and yearning to thy strain—
A pulse of pleasure—a song-guided flood!

A ll-charming daughter of celestial song!
L ove springeth, fledged and full-grown, from thy tongue;
B eneath thy lips the dimpled Cupids throng—
O racles, by some Paphian priestess sung—
N o pause in the delight, until each tone
I nto deep silence dies, and leaves the soul alone,

Pimlico, May 27. H. F. C.

M. Vieuxtemps, the celebrated violinist, after performing at the Rhine Festival at Aix-la-Chapelle, will arrive in London about the middle of the present month, to perform at the Musical Union.

Réunion des Arts.—Mrs. Arthur Stone's Evening Concert came off at the Harley-street Rooms on Monday last. The programme was brief and good, and was consigned to Mrs. Arthur Stone, with Miss Hemming, Mad. Amedei, Signor Belletti, and Mr. Adlington Wallworth, as vocalists; and Mr. John Thomas (harp), Mr. Prudent (piano), and Sig. Piatti (violoncello), as instrumentalists. The accompanyists were Sig. Zamboni and Mr. Aguilar. The room was filled to excess. Mrs. Arthur Stone is a rising soprano, but should choose less difficult songs than "Casta Diva." We were much pleased with Miss Hemming (a daughter of the late esteemed actor, Mr. Hemming, of the Adelphi Theatre), who is young, has a nice voice, sings with taste and evidently good method. She sang two very pretty and simple airs—a romance by Sig. Zamboni, called "La Feuille," and a ballad, "The old Village Clock," by Mr. F. Praeger.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The Elisir d'Amore, which had been announced for Saturday, together with two acts of Masaniello, could not be represented in consequence of the indisposition of Sig. Tagliafico. Don Giovanni was substituted with the same cast as before, one character excepted—viz., that of the Commendatore, which was sustained very creditably by Sig. Susini, who used to play it at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1851, and at the Théâtre Italien in Paris in that and the following year.

There was an extra night on Monday, when Don Giovanni was given for the third time this season. The house was crowded with real connoisseurs, and the performance was almost in every respect the most complete and effective of the season. Sig. Tagliafico, having recovered, sustained the part of the Statue with greater power than ever. What was said of Mr. Robson's Shylock may apply with equal justice to this performance, which is undoubtedly "one of the histrionic phenonema of the day"—or lyric phenomena, whichever you will. Sig. Ronconi is taking more pains with Don Giovanni on every occasion. His acting in the last scene was first-rate—picturesque, truthful, and impressive. Of Mad. Bosio, Mdlle. Marai, Sig. Lablache, Sig Tamberlik, and Sig. Polonini, we have nothing new to say; they were as good as ever.

The Donna Anna of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli must, in strict justice, be pronounced one of the grandest and most artistic performances of the modern stage. So much really fine and elaborate acting was never bestowed on the part, in our remembrance, of Don Giovanni, nor was the music ever sung so magnificently from the first scene to the last. We make no exceptions—nor Pasta, nor Grisi, nor the best of the Germans, when there were great tragic singers among them, like Schroeder Devrient. The first trio, where Donna Anna is struggling to detain the libertine, the passionate duet with Ottavio, "Fuggi crudele," the superb recitative and aria in which Donna Anna describes to her lover the attempt of Don Giovanni, and the last beautiful recitative and air, "Non mi dir," were sung with equal power of voice, depth of expression, and admirable dramatic effect. Better, in any sense, they could not have been sung. We were pleased to observe, that, in the allegretto of the "Non mi dir," Mdlle. Cruvelli adopted the original key, E flat, and that she persisted in taking the last movement allegretto, as Mozart intended it, and not andante, as Mozart did not intend it—although Mr. Costa and his unrivalled orchestra always lead off the symphony in the last-mentioned time, thereby annulling the effect of contrast between the allegretto and the preceding movement. But it was not only in the solo displays that Mdlle. Cruvelli distinguished herself. Her acting, in every scene where Donna Anna is engaged, was as graphic and forcible and full of earnest purpose, as her singing was correct and energetic. In the quartet, in the trio of masques, in the whole, in short, of the first finale, and last, not least, in the enormously grand sestet ("Sola, sola"), her splendid voice and thorough feeling for the music were of the utmost import. Mr. Costa and his unrivalled orchestra do not allow Mdlle. Cruvelli to take the same liberties as the other singers of the establishment; and sometimes even, in the excess of their zeal for Mozart's text and his "tempi," go far to rob the poor young lady of her breath. But Mdlle. Cruvelli was born at Bielfeld, in Westphalia, and is, therefore, not an Italian (and the Italians will not be persuaded that anybody can sing who is not Italian, and who has not studied under Pilotti, Pinsuti, or some of the great masters from the south, who prefer the north); moreover, Mdlle. Cruvelli was a prima donna for three years at Her Majesty's Theatre (1848-51-52), and helped Mr. Lumley to keep open his establishment, even in the face of Mr. Costa and his unrivalled orchestra, at the Covent Garden Opera; and these are sufficient reasons why Mdlle. Cruvelli should sing in tempo giusto from the beginning to the end of an opera—whether she will or no. Nevertheless, in spite of the tempo giusto, Mdlle. Cruvelli manages to get on very well, and on Monday night carried everything before her, receiving such a farewell "ovation," at the end of "Non mi dir"—unanimous and genuine applause, recall, showers of bouquets (from the grand tier), etc., etc.—as must have satisfied her that she is an immense favourite (which she always has been, and always must be) with the English public, aristocratic and popular, and must also have inspired her with a wish to pay London another visit next season, if not at the Royal Italian Opera, somewhere else. The trio of masques, too, was loudly encored, and repeated, and again demanded; but the tempo giusto prevailed, and the audience were not allowed to have it a third time—of which we were not sorry, since we object to encores on principle. Suffice it, Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli could not have received, at her last performance, a more flattering testimony of the public esteem. She has played altogether, during her short engagement, nine times—Desdemona twice, Leonora four times, and Donna Anna thrice. The musical public has, therefore, to thank her for four representations of Fidelio and three of Don Giovanni—the two greatest masterpieces of dramatic music, and both composed by Germans, not Italians.

The other encores in Don Giovanni, on Monday, were "Batti, batti" (Mad. Bosio and Sig. Ronconi), "Vedrai carino" (Mad. Bosio), and "Il mio tesoro," admirably sung by Sig. Tamberlik.

On Tuesday, I Puritani was repeated. Her Majesty and Prince Albert were present. At the end of the second act an apology was made for Sig. Mario, who was suddenly deprived of the use of his voice; and an act of the Barbiere, with Sig. Luchesi as Almaviva, was substituted for the third act of Bellini's opera. All the artists required, including Mad. Bosio, Sig. Ronconi, Sig. Lablache, and Sig. Tagliafico, were luckily in the theatre—most of them, indeed, engaged in the performance of I Puritani.

Thursday was a gala night. It was the return of Grisi, and in her grand part of Norma. The house was thronged and the excitement unprecedented. Everybody knew that Grisi had been engaged for twelve farewell representations, and that this was the first of them. Farewell to Grisi?—a sad farewell, alas! "We could have better spared a" worse prima donna. A better than Grisi we never knew, and are compelled to take so much of Prince Hal's speech about Sir John as suits—the "worse" for the "better." The reception accorded to the old and admirable favourite of the public was "tremendous" and long enduring.

Grisi's Norma! What is to be said of it that has not been said and said again, that to re-say it would be to become garrulous? We really know not anything to say. If the "Diva" would descend from her celestial place, and become mortal and less than herself, a thing to rail at and pick holes in, then indeed we might find something to say. But she will not. Year after year she looks so provokingly well, sings so provokingly well, and acts so provokingly well, that really she leaves the critic little more to do than to turn to his book of superlatives and apply them one after the other to the various parts of her performance.

The "great points" of Thursday night were the "great points" which have astonished and delighted us for so many years in succession. After the opening recitative and, "Casta Diva," Grisi was all herself. The duet with Adalgisa (the confession), the trio with the same and Pollio (the reproach), were as fine as ever, the first as tender and expressive, the last as impetuous and overpowering. The furious bravura passage, "Oh! non tremare, O perfido," delivered with surprising energy, was vociferously re-demanded, and repeated with increased effect. The curtain fell upon a demonstration which was an echo of the applause that made the house "ring again" in the scene of the Druid grove. Two recalls, one for Grisi, Mdlle. Marai, and Sig. Tamberlik, the other for Grisi alone, accompanied by deafening cheers and waving of all sorts of kerchiefs, silk and cambric (and cotton up above), brought the first part of this annual solemnity to a close.

Digitized by Google

The second act—always, in our opinion, the most complete, expressive, and highly elaborated of Grisi's performances—was literally as powerful and faultless as ever on Thursday night. The scene where Norma is about to murder her children, that in which she confides them to the care of Adalgisa (where the very undramatic and popular duet, "Deh con te," occurs), that in which she summons the Druids to prepare for war, that where she confronts Pollio and threatens Adalgisa with destruction, if the Pro-consul refuses to abandon her—and, last not least, the finale, comprising the pathetic reproach to her repentant lover, "Qual cor tradisti," and the exquisite appeal to Oroveso on behalf of the children, "Deh! non volerli vittime," were one and all so true, so pathetic, and so dramatically impressive, that no words can describe them, no analysis render them full justice. We must be content, therefore, to record that their effect upon the audience, though not so "ad captandum" as the salient points of the first act, was far more profound, and, it must be added, far more legitimate.

Another double recall attended Grisi at the fall of the curtain, accompanied with cheers and plaudits, and showers of bouquets and wreaths—and such bouquets and wreaths, and from such hands, too, such fair and tiny hands! A triumph—a triumph—a triumph! But that is nothing new for Grisi, who for twenty years has been "triumphant."

Mdlle. Marai, a charming Adalgisa, singing the music well, and acting very prettily, was all but Amalia Corbari, who in this interesting part has never found an equal. Signor Tamberlik's Pollio is superlative. In his hands the Roman soldier becomes a man; and, no longer an insipid nonentity, wins the sympathies of the audience. He was enthusiastically applauded and recalled after the noisy air, "Me protegge, me difende," which he absolutely makes agreeable. The Oroveso of Lablache is druidical, severe, large, impressive, simple, stern, fatherly, and sublime. The great basso, nevertheless, omitted the air with chorus in Act II, which he was wont to thunder out in such magnificent tones.

The general performance was excellent, and had the chorus sung in tune, would have been perfect. An exception, however, may be made to the rude sforzandi of the orchestra, in the "Qual cor tradisti," which were wholly without meaning. Two acts of Auber's unfortunate Masaniello concluded the entertainments. To-night Norma is to be repeated.

---

Mrs. Plummer's Soirée Musicale (the third and last) on Friday, gave great satisfaction. The bénéficiaire, Miss Messent, Miss Thirlwall, Messrs. Williams, and Bolton were the vocalists. Mr. Praeger, with Messrs. Ries and Romberg, gave his trio in C minor, and a brilliant fantasia.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

Lucia di Lammermoor was produced, on Thursday night, in Italian, it having been found impossible, we suppose, to give it in English. Mr. Sims Reeves has previously played Edgardo in English at Drury Lane, under the management of M. Jullien, when that most energetic of entrepreneurs, in 1847, attempted the foundation of an English Opera—and Mr. Weiss had appeared as Ashton in an English version of Lucia at the Princess's Theatre; so that no difficulty of rendering the opera into the vernacular presented itself as far as two of the principal singers were concerned. Mdlle. Agnes Büry, however, the only prima donna of the establishment who could undertake the part of the gentle Lucy with a certainty of success, was not ready to sing in English, and so, per force, the opera was given in Italian. For our own parts, we did not object to this arrangement. The translation of an Italian opera into English has seldom been attended with success, the music suffering considerably by the change, and the singers having infinitely more difficulty to contend against. It was somewhat paradoxical, nevertheless, that Mr. Sims Reeves, who was avowedly engaged for English opera, should have first appeared in Fra Diavolo, a French opera, in English, and next in Lucia di Lammermoor, an Italian opera, in Italian. But, so long as we can hear Mr. Sims Reeves in his famous part of Edgardo, in English or Italian, we are content, and we must not quarrel with the management which gives us a performance so really great.

Mdlle. Agnes Büry is a vocalist of considerable merit, and acts earnestly and gracefully. The music of Lucy, which was written for Mad. Persiani, however, is too florid, brilliant, and exacting for her means. We may have been spoiled in our notions of Lucia by the vivid recollections of Persiani, Jenny Lind, and Dorus Gras, not to mention Mad. Castellan and Miss Catherine Hayes. Mdlle Agnes Büry's performance, nevertheless, exhibited many points of excellence, and in the mad scene she was really admirable. So far as appearance goes, by the way, Mdlle. Agnes Büry looks the part better than any of her predecessors, Mad. Castellan, perhaps, excepted. Mr. Weiss made a vigorous Ashton, more in accordance with the notions of Sir Walter Scott, than with those of the librettist or musician. He sang the music in a manly, and, as it were, soldierly style, by his acting giving no bad idea of the ambitious and uncompromising brother. A more appropriate costume, however, would have been desirable. Bide-the-bent was well sustained by Signor Arnoldi, who sang extremely well, and took great pains with the part, even restoring an air which is seldom or never introduced at present.

The Edgardo of Mr. Sims Reeves may be ranked with the most finished impersonations of the modern stage. The music is exactly suited to him, and he sings it with intense expression. It was in the character of Edgardo that Mr. Sims Reeves first appealed to a British audience, and at once became a distinguished favourite. Each succeeding year, since 1847, has strengthened his hold on public opinion, and, as he has never ceased to study to improve in his art, he is well entitled to the great popularity he enjoys. He was received on Thursday night in the most enthusiastic manner, and, though a printed bill was distributed in the house to the effect that he was suffering from a cold, and requesting the indulgence of the audience in his behalf, we failed to discover any falling off in the power or quality of his voice. The duet with Lucy was perfectly sung, and both artists were recalled with acclamation. In the malediction scene, there was, perhaps, wanting the former vehemence and energy, and this alone indicated that the great tenor was not in full possession of his resources. The scene, however, was worked up with immense earnestness, and created a profound impression on the audience. The famous "Fra poco" was given with as great beauty of voice as ever, and with even greater pathos. In the management of the mezza voce Mr. Sims Reeves has rarely been surpassed; and in this scene, where the last agonies of death are supposed to be represented, it is used with admirable effect. The curtain fell upon a genuine triumph, followed by a burst of applause from all parts of the theatre, and all the principals having appeared to the summons, a separate call was made for Mr. Reeves, who again came on, and was hailed with deafening cheers.

Digitized by Google

The other operas during the week have been Don Juan, Fra Diavolo, and La Sonnambula. The houses have been full, and the business looks flourishing.

---

Mr. Aguilar had the honour of performing some of his newest compositions on the pianoforte at the Viscountess Combermere's assembly on Thursday evening; and Madame Anichini sang several favourite morceaux. There was a large number of the élite of the aristocracy present.

Mr. Richard Blagrove's Annual Concert.—This came off on Thursday morning at the Hanover Rooms. The event of the concert was the first appearance in London for some seasons of the celebrated vocalist, Madame Persiani, whose name in the bills, no doubt, was one of the chief causes of the rooms being so well filled. Madame Persiani, we understand, came to London from Paris with the expectation of being engaged at the Royal Opera, Drury Lane, but could not agree as to terms with the director. Madame Persiani is but little altered in appearance, or in vocal power, since last we saw and heard her at the Royal Italian Opera. Her voice has the same quality, and apparently the same extent, and she vocalises with the same extraordinary facility, and exhibits the same art in her singing. She commenced on Thursday morning with the cavatina, "Avvi un dio," from Maria di Rohan, which she decorated with the most fanciful and brilliant fioriture. She is still the great mistress of roulades, and has hardly a rival at present. Madame Persiani also sung Mercadante's "Ah! rammenti," from Il Giuramento—an opera, we believe, written expressly for her—and joined Miss Dolby and Signor Marras in two duets—"Di Conforto," from La Vestale, and "Da quel di," from Linda di Chamouni. Linda was also composed expressly for Madame Persiani. The presence of so illustrious a songstress lent the greatest interest to the concert, which, with little pretension, was one of the most pleasing and gratifying of the season. Among other noticeable points, we may allude, en passant, to Miss Arabella Goddard's performance of Stephen Heller's charming caprice, "La Fontaine de Schubert," which was played to perfection, and excited universal delight. A very quaint and admirably written Romance and Allegro Agitato, for concertina, violin, viola, violoncello, and contra-basso, composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, deserves calling particular attention to, were it for no other reason than being so well played by Messrs. R. and H. Blagrove, Hill, Lucas, and Howell. It is something strange to find a composer like Mr. Macfarren dedicating his muse to such an instrument as the concertina. Herr Molique, however, has also, we are informed, written a concerto, with orchestra, for Sig. Regondi. We shall be curious to hear it. Miss Ransford, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Frank Bodda, and Mr. Walter Bolton further assisted in the vocal department; and Mr. Henry Blagrove executed Vieurtemps' Fantaisie Caprice on the violin in the most admirable manner. Miss Lavinia Taylor joined Mr. R. Blagrove in a duet for two concertinas. Mr. Charles Blagrove accompanied the vocal music on the piano.

Mr. W. H. Holmes, the eminent professor of the pianoforte, gave his second concert of pianoforte music on Saturday morning, at the Hanover-square Rooms. It was attended by a large assembly of his friends and patrons. Two pieces, one arranged, the other written, for four pianofortes, were introduced by Mr. Holmes, to exhibit the talents and capabilities of some of his pupils. Beethoven's Grand Sonata, the famous B flat, Op. 106, was executed by Messrs. W. H. Holmes, S. J. Noble, Misses Arabella Anderson and Scott. The execution of this enormously difficult work was really remarkable, and entitled to great praise, the quick movements being taken nearly as fast as intended by the composer. The fact of possessing three pupils capable of accompanying him in such an extraordinary effort says volumes for the system of teaching pursued by Mr. Holmes, who is decidedly one of the best professors of the pianoforte in Europe. The quatuor for four pianofortes, by Czerny, is extremely brilliant, and was executed by Messrs. Donce, Tomlins, Maine, and W. H. Holmes, in a masterly and effective manner. Mr. Holmes performed no solos himself—much to the regret of his admirers. He joined, however, Mr. T. Chatterton, Mr. S. J. Noble, and Miss Huet, in a Romance à deux minutes, for four performers on two pianos, his own composition, which was encored; and played with Mr. Adlington a duet for two pianofortes, also his own composition, called Musical Reminiscences of Derbyshire. Both these pieces are charming, and afforded the greatest pleasure to the audience. It was, however, not the less a real disappointment that Mr. Holmes did not play a Concerto or Sonata. He is one of our most accomplished pianists, and at his own concerts his admirers naturally count upon hearing him. The rest of the programme was agreeable and well varied. Miss Dolby sang thrice—her first song (by particular desire) being Mr. W. H. Holmes's "The Blind Flower Girl," a melodious and expressive song; the second and third, an Irish ballad, and a Scotch ballad. Mr. Frank Bodda, and Mrs. Francis Taylor, also assisted. The gentleman sang Mozart's recitative and aria, "Hai gia vinta la causa," from the Nozze di Figaro; and the lady, Coote's song, "Time." Mr. Balsir Chatterton played a fantasia on the harp with his accustomed skill and good taste, and Mr. Lazarus displayed his unrivalled tone and fluent execution in a Concerto on the clarionet. Mr. Land was the conductor.

Madame Puzzi's Concert.—This year, contrary to custom, Mad. Puzzi gave her annual entertainment at Willis's Rooms, Her Majesty's Theatre, where formerly she was wont to meet her friends and the public, having been closed against all performances. Differing from of old, the concert this year—on Friday morning in last week—was but a "mild monster," compared with former concerts, and comprised no more than twenty-five pieces, and twenty-six artists. Mad. Puzzi, nevertheless, presented so excellent a programme, that the veriest gourmand of music must have left Willis's Rooms perfectly satisfied. From twenty-five pieces, all of which were good, and executed by first-rate artists, it is not easy to make a selection for especial approval. Let us notice, however, Mad. Clara Novello's aria from Figaro, "Deh, vieni, non tardar," which she sings better than anybody else, except Jenny Lind; Signor Gardoni's romance, "Le Chemin du Paradis," by Blumenthal—which is a charming song, and was sung so charmingly as to elicit the only encore of the morning; Mrs. Sims Reeves' "Oh, send me not away from Home"—a new ballad written expressly for her by Mr. John Parry—a specimen of the purest ballad singing; a brilliant fantasia on the pianoforte by M. Prudent, who played admirably, and delighted the fashionables immensely; a violin solo capitally played by Sig. Bazzini: a fantasia solo on the horn by Sig. Puzzi, who exhibited his usual mellow tone and irreproachable taste; a brilliant execution of Persiani's cavatina, "Ah! no, non è ver," by Miss Louisa Pyne; and Mr. Sims Reeves' ballad, "As weeping on my breast she lay," from Mr. Benedict's Minnesänger—a beautiful song delightfully sung. Signors Belletti, Ciabatta, Burdini, Bettini, and Flavio, Herr Formes, M. Jules Lefort, Mr. Harrison, and Mesdames Amedei, Nissen, Caradori, Pyne, Cesarini, and Grace Alleyne also contributed to the vocal programme. Mdlle. Cesarini, who gave the cavatina from Linda with remarkable sweetness, is fast rising in public esteem. The conducting was distributed among Messrs. Benedict, Pilotti, Vera, and Schira. The rooms were crowded, and the air so close that several ladies fainted and had to be carried out during the performance. There was not, it seemed to us, sufficient ventilation.

Mr. G. Lichtenstein, a Hungarian pianist of talent, gave an Evening Concert on Friday the 19th ult., at the Réunion des Arts, Harley-street. He was assisted by Mesdames Agnes Büry, Doria, Henriette Nissen and Hermann, M. Jules Lefort, and Herr Gustav Hölzel, as vocalists, and Herr Jansa (violin), and Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss (pianoforte), as instrumentalists. M. Lichtenstein performed solos by Mendelssohn, Stephen Heller, and Lichtenstein, and, with Herr Jansa, Beethoven's Duo for violin and pianoforte, in E flat, Op. 12. M. Lichtenstein played with considerable taste and skill, and produced a favourable impression. Mdlle. Clauss played a Lied ohne Worte by Mendelssohn, and an Impromptu by Chopin, with her incomparable grace and feeling. The concert was well attended.

Digitized by Google

Mr. and Mrs. Donald King's Concert took place yesterday se'nnight, at St. Martin's Hall, which was completely full. Mrs. Donald King's name was not in the bills. The programme was adorned by the names of a great number of native artists of reputation and talent (we have no space to specialize them). It consisted of upwards of thirty pieces, which provoked nearly half as many encores. At eleven o'clock, when we came away, we must have left nearly two hours of the concert behind us. We give the leading features of what we heard. Miss Louisa Pyne was recalled after the air and variations from The Crown Jewels, "Love, at once I break thy Fetters," which she sang better than ever. Mr. Alfred Pierre was encored in Donizetti's "Spirto gentil." Mr. Donald King gave a new war-song, by Mr. J. L. Hatton. It is a mere bagatelle, but the popularity of the subject and the exertions of the artist obtained an unequivocal encore. Miss Messent sang one of her favourite ballads charmingly, and Mrs. Weiss conciliated the classical part of the audience with Beethoven's song and arduous dramatic scena, "Ah, perfido." Among the instrumental pieces were a performance on the sax-horns, by the Messrs. Distin (encored); a solo on the pianoforte by Miss Coles; and the Adagio and last movement of Beethoven's pianoforte trio, in B flat, excellently played by Messrs. Alfred Mellon, Lucas, and Willing. Mr. Sims Reeves, in the second act, was enthusiastically encored in a new "national song," composed for him expressly by Mr. Frank Mori. The singer and the song created a furore.

Mdlle. Anne Pelyer gave a Matinée Musicale at the New Beethoven Rooms, on Saturday last. This lady is ambitious of shining. She not only aims at playing well, but is desirous of being considered a composer. Besides Beethoven's sonata in G, op. 30, for piano and violin, and Döhler's fantasia on Anna Bolena, which the fair pianist played—the first in conjunction with Mr. H. C. Cooper—she introduced a sonata for violin and pianoforte, of her own composition. The sonata shows indication of talent; but naturally shows inexperience. Madlle. Anne Pelyer's playing is distinguished by promise, to say the least of it. Miss Louisa Pyne was the principal vocalist. The concert was judiciously short.

Nourrit and Garat.—The unfortunate Adolphe Nourrit, as is well known, was passionately fond of his art, for which his father, Louis Nourrit, who preceded him at the Grand Opéra, professed the greatest indifference. The evening that Louis Nourrit appeared for the first time in the character of Orpheus, Garat, his master, came into his dressing-room, and, with that energetic southern accent for which he was noted, said, "After such a success as that you have achieved, you may aspire to everything." "I am delighted at having pleased you," replied Nourrit, "but I am not ambitious." "Not ambitious, unhappy man!" exclaimed Garat; "then why are you here?"

Artistic Hatred.—The Pamphlet of Jean-Jacques Rousseau, entitled, Lettre sur la Musique Française, excited the fury of his opponents to a pitch that defies description. The composers and musicians of the Opéra burnt him in effigy in the courtyard of the Académie Royale de Musique. In spite, too, of the great success of his Devin du Village, then in the zenith of its popularity, the directors of the Opéra struck his name off the free list, and it was only restored twenty years afterwards at the intercession of Gluck.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

To-Day.—Cologne Choral Union's last Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past Eight o'clock.

Monday.—Philharmonic Society's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Mr. G. A. Osborne's Matinée Musicale, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past Two o'clock.——Misses Cole and Mr. Alfred Gilbert's Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Three o'clock.——Madame Anichini's Matinée Musicale, Campden House, Kennington. Three o'clock.

Tuesday.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Quarter-past Three o'clock.——Misses Mc.Alpine's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——City Musical Union's Concert, Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate Street. Eight o'clock.

Wednesday.—New Philharmonic Society's Concert, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock.——Mr. Bensons' Annual Concert, 27, Queen Anne Street.

Thursday.—T. H. Wright's Morning Concert, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Three o'clock.——Mr. H. Blagrove's Violin Soirée, 71, Mortimer Street. Eight o'clock.

Friday.—Sig. Bazzini's Morning Concert, Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Two o'clock.——Miss Dolby and Mr. Lindsay Sloper's Morning Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Two o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

W. H. HOLMES'S THIRD PIANOFORTE CONCERT, Hanover Square Rooms, Wednesday morning, July 5th, at Two o'clock. Tickets (all reserved) 10s. 6d. To be had of W. H. Holmes, 36, Beaumont-street, Marylebone.

MISS BINCKES' SECOND SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, Oxford-street, on Friday June 16th, and will be devoted entirely to the works of English composers. To commence at Eight o'clock. Tickets to be had of Messrs. Cramer, Beale and Co., Regent-street.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN'S SECOND AND LAST Matinée of PIANOFORTE MUSIC (third season), on Wednesday, June 14th. Herr Ernst, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. C. Harper, M. Baumann, Mr. W. H. Holmes; Madlle. Agnes Büry, Miss Hughes, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Mr. Walter Macfarren, &c. Tickets at 40, Stanhope-street, Gloucester-gate, Regent's-park.

MR. BENSON has the honour to announce to his friends and pupils, that his ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT will take place next Wednesday, June 7th, at the Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Ann-street, at which he will be assisted by several eminent artists. Programmes and Tickets to be had at the principal music sellers.

MR. BLAGROVE'S VIOLIN SOIRÉES.—SECOND CONCERT, Thursday Evening, June 8th, at 71, Mortimer-street, at Half-past Eight o'Clock. Tickets, 7s. and 5s. Classes and Amateur Practices for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello continue throughout the season. Applications to be made to Mr. Blagrove, 18, Alfred-place, Bedford-square.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—St. Martin's Hall, (Last Concert this Season,) on Wednesday June 7th, when will be performed Beethoven's Overture, "Egmont;" Beethoven's Symphony in C minor; Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor; Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" Overture, "Ruler of the Spirits," Weber. Pianoforte, Mr. Hallé; Violin, Signor Bazzini; Vocalists, Madame Amedei, and Madame Rudersdorff. Conductor, Dr. Wylde. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d. To be had at Cramer, Beale, and Co's.

SIGNOR BAZZINI has the honour to announce that his GRAND MORNING CONCERT is fixed for Friday, June 9, 1854, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's; to commence at half-past Two, precisely, when he will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Miss Louisa Pyne, Mad. Caradori, Miss Pyne, and Mad. Amedei, Sig. Gardoni, Sig. Bettini, Sig. Beletti, Sig. Ciabatta, M. Jules Lefort, M. Hallé, and Sig. Piatti. Conductors—Sig. Schira, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, Sigismond Schnuyer, and Sig. Li Calsi. Tickets, 7s. 6d.; Reserved Seats, 15s., may be had of Cramer and Beale, and of all the principal music-sellers and librarians, and of Signor Bazzini, 6, Arundel-street, Coventry-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—FOURTH MATINÉE, June 6th, Willis's Rooms.—Quintet in G, Op. 33, Spohr; Violins, Molique and Ernst. Notturno, D flat; Pianoforte, Dohler. Quintet in C, Op. 29, Beethoven; Violins, Ernst and Molique; Violas, Hill and Goffrie; Violoncello, Van Gelder; Pianoforte Solos, &c., Arthur Napoleon, the Portuguese Prodigy. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Cramer and Co., Ollivier and Chappell, Bond-street. Doors open at Three. Director.—J. Ella.

THE MISSES McALPINE have the honour to announce that their CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening, June 6th, under the immediate patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Somerset, Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Abercorn, the Most Noble the Marchioness of Drogheda, the Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of Darnley, the Right Hon. the Lady Elizabeth Dawson, the Right Hon. the Viscountess Ebrington, the Lady James Stuart, &c. Vocalists—Madame Amedei, Madlle. Hermann, Misses McAlpine, and Miss R. Isaacs; Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Allen Irving, Herr Kinni, and Mr. Charles Cotton. Piano, Maddle. Coulon; Harp, Mr. F. Chatterton; Violin, Herr Deichmann; Violoncello, Sig. Piatti; Concertina, Mr. G. Case. Conductors—Sig. Schira, Herr W. Ganz, and Mr. C. Blagrove. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d; Tickets, 7s.; to be had of the principal Music-sellers, and of the Misses McAlpine, 9, Stanraer-place, Maida-vale.

Digitized by Google

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mdlle. Clauss has the honour to announce her GRAND CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday, June 14. For further particulars apply to Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

MONS. JULES DE GLIMES begs to announce that he has returned to town for the season. All communications to be addressed to him at Leader and Cock's, New Bond-street, corner of Hanover-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform Beethoven's Concerto in G major, Mendelssohn's Serenade, and a selection of solo pieces; assisted by the members of the Orchestral Union. Vocalists—Miss Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr. Alfred Mellon. Tickets, 7s.; reserved seats, half-a-guinea each; to be had of the principal music-sellers; and Miss Goddard, 47, Welbeck-street, where a plan of the room may be seen.

MADAME PERSIANI, Miss Amy Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Belletti, and Herr Ernst, with the Orchestral Union, will appear at Miss Dolby's and Mr. Lindsay Sloper's ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday next, June the 9th. Single Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had at the principal Music Warehouses; Reserved Seats, Fifteen Shillings each, or three for Two Guineas. To be had of Messrs. Cramer and Co.; of Miss Dolby, 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square; and of Mr. Lindsay Sloper, 7, Southwick-place, Hyde-Park-square. A few seats in the Orchestra at Five Shillings each. To be had only of Messrs. Cramer and Co.

HERR B. HILDEBRAND-ROMBERG begs to announce that his MORNING CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms on Saturday, 17th June, at Half-past Two o'clock, when he will be assisted by the following eminent performers:—Vocalists: Mad. Doria, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Mdlle. Herrmann, Herr Hölzel, and Signor Bettini. Instrumentalists: violin, Herren Ernst and Ries; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Herr Hildebrand-Romberg; pianoforte, Herr Pauer; conductors, Mr. Grattan and Herr Praeger. Tickets, 10s. 6d., reserved seats, 15s.; to be had of Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent-street; Ewer and Co., 390, Oxford-street; and of Herr Hildebrand-Romberg, 22, Bentinck-street, Manchester-square.

SIGNOR CAMPANA begs to inform the nobility and gentry that his FIRST GRAND MATINEE MUSICALE, under distinguished patronage, will take place, by the kind permission of the Right Hon. Lord Ward, at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly, on Monday June 19th, when Signor Campana's latest compositions will be executed by the most eminent artists. Tickets, One Guinea each. To be had at Signor Campana's, 25, Chapel-street, Belgrave-square; and at the principal music sellers.

GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—Under the immediate patronage of Her Majesty, H. R. H. Prince Albert, H. R. H. the Duchess of Gloucester, H. R. H. the Duchess of Cambridge, and H. R. H. the Princess Mary. The German Hospital at Dalston has since its establishment relieved 14,000 English poor, out of a total number of 29,949 out-patients, and nearly one-eighth of the beds in the hospital are occupied by English, which the Committee trust will give the Institution a strong claim upon the benevolent support of the British public. A Musical Festival for the benefit of this Charity will be held in connection with the Harmonic Union at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, June 14th, when Emile Naumann's Oratorio, "Christ, the Messenger of Peace," will be performed for the first time in this country. Vocalists—Madame Caradori, Mdlle. Agnes Büry, Miss Stabbach, Herr Reichardt, M. Miranda, Herr Hölzel, and Herr Formes. Tickets 5s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each, at the Hospital, the Committee Rooms, 7, Sussex Chambers, Duke-street, St. James's, and at the office of the Harmonic Union, 5, Exeter Hall.

CHARLES WESLEY, D.D., ADOLPHUS WALBAUM, } Hon. Secs.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—In consequence of the opening of the Crystal Palace, on Saturday, June 10th, the Third Academy Concert, announced to take place on that day, is postponed to Tuesday, June 13th.

ROYAL PANOPTICON OF SCIENCE AND ART, LEICESTER SQUARE.—Mr. W. T. Best will play the following compositions upon the Grand Organ, on Monday, June 5th, and during the week. For convenience of visitors, the hours of performance are added to the programme. 12-30.—Aria, "O had I Jubal's Lyre," Handel; March (posthumous work), Mozart. 1-45.—Andante, Op. 65, Hummel; Overture, "Olimpia," Spontini. 3.—Prelude and Fugue, Mendelssohn. 4-30.—Pastorale, for the Organ, Gordigiani—Double Chorus from the "Censer," Handel. Also in the Evening at 7-15.—Preghiera, "Dal tuo stellato," Rossini. 8-15.—Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber.

MR. T. H. WRIGHT respectfully announces that his MORNING CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Thursday, June 8th, at Three o'Clock, when he will be assisted by the following eminent artists:—Madame Ferrari, Miss Ursula Barclay, Signor Ferrari, and Signor Marras. Pianoforte, Miss Arabella Goddard; Violin, M. Bezeth; Concertina, Signor Guilio Regondi; Harps, Miss Knowles (Pupil of Mr. T. H. Wright), Mr. H. J. Trust, and Mr. T. H. Wright. Conductor, Mr. Aguilar. Tickets to be had of Mr. Wright, 14, Norton-street, and the principal music shops.

OPERA COMIQUE, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The Directors of the Théatre Lyrique, Paris, beg to announce that the entire troupe of that theatre, including the services of Mad. Marie Cabel, will commence a short series of French Opéras Comiques at the above theatre, on Monday next, June 5th, immediately after the completion of M. Lafont's season. The first representation will consist of Adolphe Adam's new and very successful opera entitled "Le Bijou Perdu," in which Madame Marie Cabel will make her first appearance in this country. Subsequent performances will be selected from the new and favourite operas of "La Promise," "Galathée," "Le Domino Noir," "Le Roi des Halles," "La Tante Aurore," "Le Postillon de Longjumeau," "Le Toréador," "La Sirène," "Les Deux Voleurs," "Le Tableau Parlant," "L'Eclair." All of which are completely prepared for representation. The nights of performance will be on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. Subscriptions will be received for twelve representations. Prices of admission for the night: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Boxes (Dress Circle), 5s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Amphitheatre, 2s. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made to Mr. Seguin at the Box Office of the Theatre, and at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

W. RYALLS' (Professor of Singing) Pianoforte Repository, Hamilton-street, Birkenhead. Pianofortes on hire and taken in exchange.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE FOR CONCERTINA and PIANO, arranged by G. Regondi. Now ready:—Verdi's Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, three Nos., 3s. each, &c., &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE FOR CORNET AND PIANO, arranged by Stanton Jones, &c. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c.; &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for FLUTE and PIANO, arranged by Joseph Clinton and W. Fonde. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in two Mosaiques, 4s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Romeo and Juliet, one No., 4s.; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c., &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for VIOLIN and PIANO, arranged by F. Bosen and others. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda di Chamouni, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed. J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

PATENT CONCERTINA.—WHEATSTONE & CO. find it necessary to state that the original PATENT for the INVENTION, as well as a subsequent one for improvements, was GRANTED only to them. They, therefore, caution the public against those persons who assume to be patentees, and who only use this subterfuge to sell inferior Concertinas at twice their real value. All Concertinas manufactured by the above firm bear their label, and may be had new (double action, with 48 keys,) from five guineas; or ditto, single action, three guineas. An extensive assortment for exportation.—20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

HANDEL.—In the Church of Little Stanmore, near Edgeware, is an organ doubly renowned as having been built by Schmidt, and played upon by Handel for many years, whilst he was Chapel Master to the Duke of Chandos. This instrument wants considerable repair, and, to rescue it from decay, the incumbent and his parishioners solicit some pecuniary assistance from the admirers of this immortal musician. Donations will be received and very gratefully acknowledged by the Rev. G. B. Tuson, incumbent of Little Stanmore.—Rectory, May 11, 1854.

BOOSE'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boose's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

RIGOLETTO.—"La Donna è Mobile."—This celebrated Barcarolle, sung by Signor Mario, is published, with Italian words, price 2s.; with English words ("Fair Shines the Moon") as a Song and Duet, price 2s.; for the Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 3s.; as a Pianoforte Duet, for Violin and Piano, 3s.; for Flute and Piano, 4s.; for Cornet and Piano, 3s.; for Concertina and Piano, 3s.; for the Harp (Solo), 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION, and SOFT AND FAIR HANDS AND ARMS, are fully realized and sustained by the use of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Preparation, which, by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels of the SKIN, promotes a healthy tone so essential to its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance. Freckles, tan, pimples, spots, discoloration, and other cutaneous visitations are eradicated by the KALYDOR, and give place to a radiant bloom and transparency of complexion.

During the heat and dust of summer, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

CAUTION.—The words ROWLANDS' KALYDOR are on the wrapper of each bottle, and their signature, A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, in red ink, at foot.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

MARION'S RESILIENT BODICE and CORSALETTO DI MEDICI. They combine firmness with elasticity, fit closely, fasten easily in front, retain the original symmetry of their adjustment, and are judiciously adapted to every varying condition of the female form. Ladies in health, convalescents, and invalids wear them, with equal satisfaction; and, having experienced the comforts and advantages they ensure, will not return to the ordinary Stays and their attendant evils. PATENTED IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND AUSTRIA. Enlarged Prospectus, with Illustrations, (details of Prices from 14s.; children's, 3s.), explicit Directions for Self-measurement, &c., on receipt of Two Stamps for Postage. All Country Orders sent (without extra charge) carriage paid or post free. Mesdames Marion and Maitland, Patentees and Sole Manufacturers, 54, Connaught-terrace, Hyde-park, London.

"We think few who have seen it will be disposed to disagree with us when we assert that it is infinitely superior to anything of the kind yet introduced for the same purpose, and, in point of style and workmanship, it is alike unexceptionable."—Editorial notice in Le Follet, the leading Journal of Fashion.

Digitized by Google

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS. Marx's School of Composition, £1 1s. Gottfried Weber's Theory of Music, £1 11s. 6d. Albrechtsberger's Theoretical Works, £2 2s. Cherubini's Theoretical Works, £1 11s. 6d. Czerny's School of Composition, £4 14s. 6d. Kalkbrenner's Harmony for the Pianist, 10s. Mozart's Practical Thorough Bass, 5s. Boyce's Cathedral Music (by Warren), £6 6s. Czerny's Pianoforte School, 4 vols., £6 6s.; Supplement, 15s. Haydn's Twelve Grand Symphonies (by Czerny), £3 6s. Haydn's Eighty-three Quartets, £6 6s. Handel's "Messiah" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Handel's "Israel in Egypt" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Octavo Edition of "Messiah" (by Bishop), 6s. 6d. Haydn's "Creation" (by Bishop), folio, 15s. Octavo Edition of "Samson" (by Dr. Clarke), 6s. 6d. Horsley's Vocal Harmony, 6 vols., £5 8s. Beethoven's Seventeen Quartets, £6 6s. Also his Four Trios and Four Quintets (all by Rousselot), £3 2s. Beethoven's Nine Symphonies (for Piano), £3 8s. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London; and of all music-sellers.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ETOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready: Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

| Also just published— | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Valse Expressive, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Three Ghaseles, F. Hiller ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Gondola, A. Lindahl ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Impromptu Styrienne, W. Kuhe ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Chant D'Adieux ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Thalberg's Six Morceaux Originaux pour le Piano, from 1 to 6, each | 2 | 0 |

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street, and 167, North Street, Brighton.

FOR QUADRILLE BANDS.—The new Dance Music by Laurent, Gungl, Tinney, and La Motte, performed at Her Majesty's State Ball, and at the nobility's Soirées Dansantes, and all the places of public amusement, is published for a quadrille band, by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, price 5s. each set for full band, or 3s. 6d. each for Septett.

LAURENT'S BELLE FRANÇAISE WALTZ, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is just published, beautifully illustrated in colours, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE QUADRILLE, on Imperial Melodies, composed expressly for the French Ambassador's Grand Ball, and performed before Her Majesty the Queen. Price 3s.: Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S LEONORA WALTZ, on Melodies from La Favorite, as performed every evening at the Argyll Rooms, is now published, with an illustration, price 3s.: by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

DRAWING ROOM PIANOFORTE MUSIC by celebrated composers. The Alert, by Osborne, 3s.; Fantaisie on Rigoletto, by Kuhe, 4s.; La Danse des Fées, by Nordmann, 4s.; Feu Follet, by Kuhe, 2s. 6d.; Border Strains, by Holmes, 2s. 6d.: Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE BEST NAVAL SONG since the "Bay of Biscay."—Price 2s., The REEFER, by Rockstro. Sung by Mr. Leffler, and encored on every occasion. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, and all Music-sellers.

MDLLE. CRUVELLI in FIDELIO.—Boosey and Sons' new and beautiful edition of FIDELIO, for the voice and piano, unabridged and unaltered from the author's score, with English and German words; Three Overtures; and a Life of Beethoven. Price 15s. handsomely bound. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

G. A. OSBORNE.—The ALERT, a new Morceau for the Pianoforte, by this celebrated Composer, is just published, Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE SUNSHINE OF OUR HOME.—Song. Words by J. E. Carpenter, Esq.; music composed expressly for Miss Dolby, by Edward Land, 2s. A lovely song, breathing a depth of feeling which may remind one of Beethoven's matchless "Adelaide." London, Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, publishers to the Queen.

TO MUSIC SELLERS AND PUBLISHERS.—To be disposed of, with immediate possession, the lease and goodwill of a moderate but very good Music Business, comprising Pianoforte Hire, Trade Quadrille Business, Tuning, and General Sheet Music Trade. The house, with ten year's lease, is situated in an omnibus thoroughfare at the West End, and is exceedingly commodious. The proprietor leaving business in consequence of ill health. Cards of address to be had of A. Steather, 18, Lower Eaton-street, Eaton-square.

W. H. HOLMES.—The "Border Strains," a most elegant variation on a celebrated Scotch air, adapted for moderate players on the pianoforte, by W. H. Holmes. Price 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS, of a popular character.—La Donna è Mobile, by Nordmann, 4s.; Alvars' Greek March, 4s; Rigoletto Galop, by Nordmann, 4s.; Bellisario, by Gollmick, 5s.; Königsberg Polka, 3s.

RIGOLETTO, by MADAME OURY.—Price 4s. Fantaisie Brillante on Rigoletto, for the Pianoforte, by Madame Oury.

RIGOLETTO, by JULES BENEDICT.—Price 4s. Transcription of the celebrated Quartet for the Pianoforte, by Jules Benedict.

RIGOLETTO, by W. KUHE.—Price 4s. Grand Fantaisie on Rigoletto, for Pianoforte, by W. Kuhe.

RIGOLETTO, by CHARLES VOSS.—Price 4s. Fantaisie Brillante on Rigoletto, for the Pianoforte, by Charles Voss.

CORBEILLE D'ORANGES QUADRILLE on Auber's celebrated Opera, by G. Montagne. This very popular Quadrille is published, for pianoforte, price 3s., and for orchestra, 5s.

RIGOLETTO.—Festa da Ballo Galop on Verdi's celebrated Opera, by G. Montagne, is published, for the pianoforte, price 2s. 6d., and for orchestra, 5s.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, HOLLES STREET.

SIX ROMANCES for the VIOLIN, by E. W. Thomas, in books of three each, with Pianoforte Accompaniments. Also, Violin Scales, Book 2, by H. Blagrove. Published by W. Blagrove, 71, Mortimer-street.

THE BALTIC GALOP.—A PORTRAIT OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, by a Distinguished Artist, will embellish the title page of the New Galop, by Albert Wagner, to be published in the course of a few days by Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

PERLES D'ÉCUME, played by Miss Arabella Goddard, and enthusiastically encored at Herr Oberthür's Concert, in Willis's Rooms, on Tuesday morning, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., only by Wessel & Co., 229, Regent-street, London.

CITY MUSICAL UNION.—Crosby Hall. Conductor, Mr. Gadsby. On Tuesday Evening, June 6th, a selection of Secular Music will be performed. Principal Vocalists, Mrs. R. Limpus, Miss L. Rhemmeiogh, Miss A. Hincks, Miss Grace Alleyne, Madlle. Norie, Mr. G. Tedder, Mr. A. Wallworth, Mr. G. Taylor. Accompanyists, Mr. R. Limpus and Herr Ganz. The Band and Chorus will be efficient and complete. Tickets, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. To commence at Eight o'Clock. Annual Subscriptions to Monthly Concerts, 10s. 6d., £1 1s., and £2 2s. G. Taylor, Hon. Sec.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 23. SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

REVIEWS.

HANDEL'S "SUITES DE PIECES," in Two Books. Edited by MOSCHELES. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

(Second Notice).

LAST week we reviewed that book of the Suites de Pièces, which, according to the outward cover, was the second; but since then we have seen other copies, and find the indicated number transferred from one book to the other. We think it necessary to state this, because the enthusiastic praises we bestowed upon the book of Pièces in question, can by no means be applied with equal justice to its fellow, which is a work in most respects of a far inferior order; a work addressing oftener the popular than the refined taste, and evidently written more with an eye towards the advantage of music-sellers than the glorification of art. Be it, then, clearly understood, that the book of Handel's Suites de Pièces, which we recommend to the attention of musicians and cultivated amateurs, as a prodigy of genius and art, is the one which contains the five fugues. The other book has no fugues at all, which makes the matter clear without further explanation. The number of the book ought, to prevent mistakes, to have been indicated on the title-page; and we recommend the publishers to adopt the precaution forthwith. Having explained this, we shall now proceed to speak of the other book—the book which is not the book.

This collection opens with a very long set of pieces in the key of G major. (It may not be out of place to state here, that Handel has not indicated the divisions in this book by the terms Suite prèmiere, Suite seconde, etc, as he has in the other.) As these have for the most part but little musical interest, a brief survey of their merits must suffice. A quick prelude in 3-4—an allemande—and an allegro in common time, written almost throughout in two parts, are only remarkable for the simplicity of their structure, the meagreness of their harmonic treatment, and the scantiness of their modulations. A courante, which follows, is more interesting: there is more variety of harmony, and more continuity of development; the motivo is pretty, the progressions are natural and pleasing; but the writing bears marks of haste, as though Handel was not very much in love with his task, and wished to get over it as quickly as possible. In the ninth bar, there is a very bare and unsatisfactory specimen of part-writing, which we shall instance:—

Right hand.—C, D, E, F sharp, G, A, F sharp.
Left hand.—A, B, C, B, A, G, D.

Nothing can be more disagreeable than the succession of perfect fifth, major seventh and major ninth, and its resolution to D with a major third by no means excuses it. Such instances, rare in Handel, are more frequent in this book of suites than in any work of his that ever came under our notice. A short aria which follows, in common time, presto, makes up for this oversight; it is a fresh and lovely melody, and a perfect gem of two-part writing. A minuet, to which it gives way, is remarkable for containing a long progression in semi-quavers at the commencement of the second part, which is almost the counterpart of a similar passage to be found in Mendelssohn's ingenious Caprice in F sharp minor. Mendelssohn sips the beauties of the old masters as the bee the sweets from the flower-cups; but, like the bee, he makes honey of them, and right content are we to taste what he has gathered and set before us in so savoury a form. Yet these laudable thefts, like pious frauds, are worthy noting, and should be recorded, if only in justice to the fine old masters who were the first tillers of the soil which after-husbandmen have made so fertile. A gavotte and eight variations upon it, in two parts throughout, come next. These are pretty and sparkling, but somewhat monotonous from the poverty of the counterpoint—the result of the base moving incessantly in thirds with the treble. The suite terminates with a gigue in 12-8 time, on the whole a good specimen. But, take it for all in all, this suite has not an amount of musical interest at all commensurate with its extravagant length, and its predominant style is too trivial to engage the continued attention of those who look for something more than notes.

The second suite in D minor is also very long, but far superior to the preceding one. It opens with an allemande which has some charming points, though the melody does not always flow so easily as in most of Handel's inspirations. An allegro 3-8 (a quick courante), written in two parts, but not otherwise remarkable, comes next, and gives way to a slow air in 3-4 time—a kind of song without words—a most heavenly melody, only disfigured by the shakes and trills in deference to the detestable fashion of the period. Next comes a gigue, and one of the best of them. There are one or two points in this which help to illustrate the superiority of the new method of noting the minor scale, which prescribes the use of the flat sixth when a harmony in the key is indicated by the passage. Handel is always uncertain in this particular, sometimes adopting one method, sometimes the other, as though he felt an instinctive hesitation on the subject. Wherever he uses the old method the passage is just as offensive to the ear as it is grateful when he employs the new.* A minuet, with three variations, follows the gigue; it is a pleasing trifle. The allemande and courante, which come next, built upon one progression of harmonies common to both, are very beautiful, especially the courante, which might have been placed in the other book without damaging its musical interest. Still more charming is the grave and melancholy sarabande to which it gives way, with its simple and beautiful harmonies, forming the basis of two ingenious variations. A short gigue, which offers no particular points for remark, concludes the suite. On the whole the effect of this suite must necessarily be monotonous. Fancy, reader, nine pieces in succession, all in one key, and that a minor key!

The next is a short suite of three pieces—an allemande, a courante, and a gigue in E minor. These are of the highest order of poetical beauty. The passionate melody of the two first pieces is almost unendurable, so deep is its dejection, so agonising its tenderness. We would give worlds to know in what train of mind was Handel when he poured forth this flood of tristful eloquence, which, to use a simile applied by Coleridge to Romeo and Juliet, is like a long drawn sigh. The gigue, one of the very finest possible, is replete with beautiful progressions of harmony, and delicious passages of

* It may not be out of place here to express our fervent hope that the late Dr. Alfred Day's system of harmony will soon be adopted by all sensible musicians. Its rejection at our Academy was an instance of short-sighted prejudice, by no means creditable to our only musical institution. It was rejected without examination—at least, our own conviction of its unanswerable truth inevitably brings us to this conclusion—which makes the matter worse.

Digitized by Google

sequence. The whole is as fresh and new, both in melody and harmony, as though it had been written but yesterday. Master Felix!—Master Felix!—Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy!—where did you dig up some of the loveliest ideas in your two slow movements (in E minor, too!) of the Seven Characteristic Pieces, if not from this mine of wealth—aye, if not from this very corner of the mine? This suite should be preferred to the other book. It is too beautiful for association with its present companions. By the way, there are one or two places in the allemande and courante (by mistake headed "saraband" in this edition) which we imagine must be errors overlooked by the editor. But where there is so much beauty the defects are lost in a veil of borrowed light—like those pictures of Claude in the National Gallery which are hung close beneath the glowing splendour of Turner—and he must be a cold critic who would stop to point them out.

A bold and vigorous air, in G major (chaconne), with eight brilliant variations, commences the next suite. The chaconne is in 3-4 time, in character something between a minuet and a saraband, not so lively as the one nor so grave as the other. This is the finest specimen Handel has left us. Next follows a charming adagio, 3-4, in G minor, with six variations in the minor, and five in the major, all of them ingenious, brilliant, and effective. Then we find an allemande in G minor, which may compete with any piece in either book. It opens with a long passage in the treble, answered, reversed, by the bass, and then a feast of semiquaver-counterpoint à la Mendelssohn. The whole of the second part is beautiful. A passage commencing with a progression from C minor into B flat, repeated afterwards in the relative minor, is of surpassing loveliness. The form of this piece is that usually adopted by Scarlatti, and the cadence at the end of both parts is taken almost notatim from that which Scarlatti affixes to nearly all his movements in the minor key. But though the form is like, the spirit which is its soul, soars far above the level of the old Italian. (It is singular that we should have begun our notice of this book in a strain anything but eulogistic, and that as we advance we should find so many beauties opposing our passage, as to make us already incline to alter our verdict of partial indifference into one of hearty approval.) A courante follows the allemande, with the same progression of harmony for its foundation. And yet how differently treated. The beautiful passage in B flat again appears, in a form scarcely less insinuating. Towards the end of the second part there is an extraordinary effect of surprise produced by the unexpected transition from the chord of E flat to that of C. In the last bar but seven, an instance of the ancient minor scale occurs, so unpleasant that it must surely be an oversight. Handel's refined ear could not have tolerated the E natural which occurs in that bar. With Dr. Day's E flat the passage would have been unexceptionable; but as it stands, the shock upon the ear is so violent that it goes far to spoil a movement in all other respects beautiful. This very interesting suite concludes with a gigue, which is the longest and most elaborate of all the specimens Handel has left us—so long, and so elaborate, indeed, so lucid in design, so complete in development, that it might serve for the last movement of a work of the largest pretensions, and we cannot but think that Haydn was much indebted to it for the origin of those rondo movements which are the glory of so many of his best symphonies. Although one figure of triplets is sustained through nearly six pages, the variety of which it is here made susceptible proves the wonderful mastery of Handel over the science of counterpoint, and the prodigal resources of his invention.

The next suite, in B flat, consists of an allemande, courante, sarabande, and gigue—of which, though all are melodious and pleasing, the last is the most interesting and the best. The subject is answered in canon on the octave, the second part taking the subject reversed. It would be impossible to write in three parts more clearly and more naturally. In the last bar of the first part of the allemande, and in the sixth bar of the courante, there are some evident errors in the bass. A superb prelude follows, which contains some of the most surprising and magnificent progressions of harmony that ancient or modern composer has ever conceived. It is followed closely by a charming movement, in which a continuous motion of semi-quavers is admirably sustained to the end. This gives way to a delicious aria in the Italian style, with five clever variations. The fourth of these is the undeniable germ of the chorus of the priests of Bel, in the oratorio of Deborah, which is in the same key. The last suite opens with a quaint minuetto in G minor, diversified by a quantity of turns and graces not by any means to our taste. A chaconne with sixty-two variations, (!) all in G major, finishes the suite and the book. These variations involve almost every conceivable figure of passage that can be founded on a short progression of harmony such as the present, which is nothing more than a modulation from the tonic to the dominant, and back again from the dominant to the tonic, the whole comprised in eight bars of 3-4 measure. The types of almost all the variations of those composers whose exclusive vocation is to write them may be found in this singular manifestation of fancy and invention.

So much for the Suites de Pièces! If what we have thus hurriedly noted can persuade any of our readers, not already acquainted, to make themselves now acquainted with one of the most interesting and remarkable manifestations of the genius of Handel, we shall be too happy to have laboured successfully in such a cause.

---

"Ah! Why so Sad?" Song for voice and piano. Poetry and Music by J. Thorne Harris. Wessel and Co.

Mr. J. Thorne Harris is a resident professor in Manchester, well-known, we believe, as a composer of considerable promise, and as a pianist of no ordinary talent. Both his vocal and instrumental compositions, which are very numerous, display assiduous study of the best masters, and a remarkable freedom from imitation. The song before us has little pretension, but it is not the less attractive on that account. Its chief merit is the close affinity in spirit between the poetry and the music; each illustrates each, while the latter varies with every change indicated by the words. Much of this is doubtless due to the fact that Mr. Harris writes his own words, so that the poetry and the music are twin-born—two streams issuing from the same fountain, one winding through the flowery beauties of language, the other penetrating into the beautiful regions of melody and harmony. The theme of this song, though simple, is expressive, while the accompaniment, vigorous and free, is always made subordinate to the effect of the melody. A composition like this should be welcome to all who appreciate music that is legitimate and pure.

---

Souvenir de Londres—Album Musical. Composed by Signor F. Campana. R. Mills.

The above is a collection of arias mostly in the sentimental style—six in number. Some of them are graceful, if not particularly original, and the majority are likely to please amateurs, being written within a moderate compass. We may mention No. 4, "Il Trovatore," as a very pretty tune, in 3-4 measure, and No. 5, "L'onda è quieta," a sort of barcarolle in 3-8 time, which falls agreeably on the ear, and is neatly written. No. 6, "La tomba," is a romanza which is equally grave both in the major and minor keys, and opens with a plaintive strain in the first few bars, which betokens a genuine feeling for vocal melody. Although written in the somewhat recondite key of A flat minor, we have no doubt that it will become an especial favorite with those who incline to the plaintive school of ballad music.

---

Stafford.—On Monday evening, the 29th ult., the Stafford Choral Society gave their second concert of the present season in the Lyceum, which was tastefully fitted up for the occasion. The programme consisted of selections from the oratorios of the Messiah, Creation, Elijah, St. Paul, and Mozart's Twelfth Mass. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Bull, of the Birmingham Concerts, Mrs. Paget, R.A.M., and Mr. Paget. The Staffordshire Advertiser says—"The selections were performed with much skill and ability." Mr. E. Shargool conducted, and Mr. Shargool of the Birmingham Concerts led the band.

Digitized by Google

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER, JUNE 1.

(Sittings in Banco, before Lord CAMPBELL and Justices ERLE and CROMPTON.)

LUMLEY v. GYE.

Sir F. Thesiger, Sir F. Kelly, Mr. Hoggins, Q.C., Mr. Cowling, and Mr. Huddleston appeared for plaintiff; the Attorney-General, Mr. Bramwell, Q.C., Mr. Creasy, and Mr. Willes for defendant.

Plaintiff, Benjamin Lumley, lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre, had brought an action against Frederick Gye, director of the Royal Italian Opera, to recover damages for wrongfully and maliciously enticing and procuring Johanna Wagner to break a contract into which she had entered with plaintiff, to perform as prima donna at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1852. The declaration contained several counts, to which the defendant pleaded the general issue. At the trial, before Lord Campbell at Guildhall, at the sittings after last Hilary Term, the jury, in substance, found a verdict for defendant. Lord Campbell left three questions to the jury for consideration:—Whether Miss Wagner's agreement with Lumley remained in force when it was alleged Gye induced her to break it; Whether Gye induced Miss Wagner to break her agreement, and she broke it through his inducement; and, Whether Gye at that time knew that the agreement between Miss Wagner and Lumley was still a subsisting agreement. The jury found the first two questions in the affirmative, but the third and more material in the negative, viz., that Gye did not know that Miss Wagner's agreement with Lumley was at the time subsisting. Lord Campbell had previously directed the jury that if Gye bonâ fide believed that Miss Wagner's agreement with Lumley had ceased to be binding upon her, the scienter was not proved, and the jury ought to find a verdict for Gye. Verdict was accordingly found for defendant.

In the early part of Easter Term Sir F. Thesiger obtained a rule calling upon the defendant Gye to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial granted, upon the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and that certain evidence offered by defendant had been improperly received. This evidence related to negotiations into which defendant had entered with Miss Wagner previous to her agreement with plaintiff, and which tended, as defendant contended, to rebut the charge made in the declaration, that defendant had "maliciously" enticed Miss Wagner to break her contract. Plaintiff contended that, as these negotiations took place anterior to the contract as well as to the breach, the evidence respecting them was only calculated to create prejudice, and inadmissible as part of the res gestæ.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL, rising to show cause against the rule, said the action was brought to recover damages from defendant for wrongfully and maliciously inducing Miss Wagner to break her contract with plaintiff. Three questions had been left to the jury:—Whether Miss Wagner's contract with the plaintiff was a subsisting contract; Whether defendant induced her to break it; and, Whether he did that with knowledge that the contract was subsisting. The verdict of the jury had determined the last and material question in favour of defendant. In showing cause against the rule, the learned Attorney-General said it would be necessary for him to give a short summary of the history of the transaction. So early as 1845 defendant had become acquainted with the talent of Miss Wagner, and in 1850 he went and made her, either at Hamburg or Berlin, the offer of an engagement. Miss Wagner at first entertained the offer, but finally declined it, for reasons which she stated, connected with her engagement at the Theatre Royal, Berlin. She, however, by her father, returned thanks to defendant for his offer, and requested that he would not forget her for the next year, 1852, and desired him to make his proposals in November, 1851. In September, 1851, defendant, at the end of the season, went to Berlin, and renewed the proposals he had made in the previous year, viz., that he would engage her services for the season for the sum of £2,000. Miss Wagner declined giving an answer till the following month. Defendant then went on his tour to Italy, and was soon after informed that Miss Wagner had been induced to enter into an engagement with plaintiff. It appeared that between October, 1851, and January, 1852, Miss Wagner had become acquainted with a Dr. Bacher, who was not, as had been represented, previously a friend of the Wagners. Dr. Bacher, who represented himself to be a Doctor of Civil Law of Vienna, though he had never practised the law at all, but had only been a clerk in a lawyer's office, had been employed by plaintiff in making arrangements with operatic performers; and, having no doubt heard of the offer which defendant had made to Miss Wagner, he went and made her an offer, which she was induced to accept. It was known how that consent was obtained. It was by Dr. Bacher's representing that defendant's theatre was only a second-class theatre; that by singing there Miss Wagner would lose the benefit of the prestige which would attach to her appearance at plaintiff's theatre; and, finally, that the press of this country was hostile to defendant's theatre and favourable to plaintiff's, and that, if she appeared at the one, the criticisms of the press would be damaging, while, if she appeared at the other, they would be favourable. Miss Wagner alluded to those circumstances in a letter which she wrote to the defendant on the 7th of December, 1851, and in which she said:—

"I must naturally appear ungrateful to you, but we have told you again and again the peculiar reasons which compel me for this once to sing at Mr. Lumley's against my feelings; you know them well. I expect little good from this engagement; but, on my word, I could not act otherwise. I am very unhappy about it, I and especially my father, who expects nothing but evil from this connection. Nevertheless, I hope for your pardon, and even that you will receive us in London as friends. Will you not, Monsieur? In this hope, we anticipate with pleasure seeing you again. A thousand compliments from our family.

"From your devoted,

"J. WAGNER."

Lord CAMPBELL observed that that letter was one of the letters the admission of which in evidence was objected to.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said it was so, and he should have to answer that objection by and by. To that letter defendant replied as follows:—

"London, Jan. 9, 1852.

"Dear Miss Wagner,—I was not in London when your most amiable letter arrived, but in Paris, where I remained some days; your letter has caused me both regret and pleasure—regret, because it informs me that you are to sing at a theatre so opposed to my interest; pleasure, because it tells me I am to have the happiness of seeing you in London. The twofold pleasure of seeing you here and deriving benefit from your success was, it seems, too much for me to enjoy, at least this season. I must, therefore, content myself with the hope that all this pleasure is only reserved for next year. A thousand compliments, if you please, to your amiable family.

"Yours, entirely devoted,

"F. GYE."

That letter showed that defendant submitted to his disappointment, seeing that what had been done could not be undone. Having had occasion subsequently to go to Berlin to see M. Meyerbeer, defendant asked Miss Wagner to sing for a few nights at his theatre, after she had completed her engagement with plaintiff, and also to sing at his theatre in the following year, 1853. Defendant might have done all that with the greatest propriety, and might have urged the great disappointment which he had sustained as some reason for pressing his request. Miss Wagner, however, declined to sing in 1852, though willing to sign for 1853. Up to that time defendant had done nothing which he might not do with the greatest propriety, particularly when it was borne in mind in what manner a young and talented artiste had been got away from defendant by the cunning and unscrupulous conduct of Dr. Bacher. So matters stood till March, 1852, when it became notorious that plaintiff was in serious difficulties, and it was doubtful whether he would be able to open his theatre. Money due to performers for the previous season was unpaid, creditors were clamorous, and plaintiff had been arrested for £2,000 or £3,000, and locked up.

Sir F. THESIGER said, plaintiff had been answerable for another party, but the matter was at once arranged.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, he would take it then, as the fact was, that plaintiff had been locked up for only three days; but it was now said that he was not in pecuniary embarrassments. Why, then, was he not put in the witness-box? for he might have entirely disproved the suggestion. It was clear that in March there was a hitch somewhere, and this led the defendant to write to Miss Wagner the letters of the 9th and 30th of March, 1852, in neither of which did he ask her to break her contract with plaintiff, but only sought to secure her services in case anything should happen to prevent her agreement with plaintiff from being carried out. In the letter of the 9th of March defendant said the only thing wanting to make his programme complete was the name of Miss Wagner, and asked if there was any possibility of that. In the letter of March 30, he wrote:—

"London, March 30, 1852.

"Dear Mdlle. Wagner,—Will you have the goodness to write me one word in reply to my last letter? Forgive me for troubling you, but it is said here that your arrangements are not quite fixed with Mr. Lumley. Is this true? My theatre opened last Saturday. The opening of Mr. Lumley's theatre was announced last Saturday, but it did not take place; it was again announced for to-night, but was again put off. Another bill has now come out, in which the opening is announced for Thursday, but there is much doubt. You will see by the enclosed pro- gramme that M. Negrini, the tenor singer of whom I spoke to you, is engaged at Covent-garden; the troupe is fine, is it not? Excuse me for writing in such a hurry. Give me two lines in answer.

Digitized by Google

"Believe me, &c., F. GYE."

These were the letters which plaintiff relied upon to show that defendant attempted to induce Miss Wagner to break her contract; whereas they only showed that, if her engagement with plaintiff should not be carried out, he (defendant) would still be ready to adhere to the proposal which he had previously made for her to sing at his theatre, and to secure her services, at all events, for six nights. The Attorney-General then proceeded to detail the circumstances under which the time of Miss Wagner's appearance in London was extended by agreement from the 1st to the 16th of April, 1852; and said, he thought he was entitled to the verdict upon the ground that it was not proved that the £300 had been tendered by plaintiff to Miss Wagner in time to make the agreement a subsisting agreement on the 5th of April, when defendant induced Miss Wagner to enter into her agreement with him. But Lord Campbell having expressed his opinion that there was evidence for the jury upon that point, the Attorney-General passed to the circumstances under which defendant left London on April 2nd, 1852, in order to see Miss Wagner at Berlin. He had made arrangements for the performance on the 3rd of April, and left London for a few days, the next week being Easter week, in order to have a personal interview with Miss Wagner, and to ascertain how matters really stood. He had received no answer to either of his two letters of the 9th or 30th of March; he knew that Mad. Sontag had not come; that Miss Wagner had notcome; and it was therefore not at all extraordinary that he should avail himself of those few days of holiday to ascertain how matters were. He went to Berlin, and found Miss Wagner had gone to Hamburgh, where he followed her. On being introduced to her, he inquired why she had not answered his letters; but, without answering that question, Miss Wagner said, almost the first thing, "En effet, je suis libre." She then explained that Lumley was bound to pay her 300*l.* on March 15th, but had not fulfilled his agreement. It was then the 5th of April. Under those circumstances, defendant said he was ready to enter into an agreement with her, and took paper to write one out. While engaged in so doing he asked to see the agreement with Lumley, and that portion of it was shown to him which related to the payment of the 300*l.* M. Wagner said he had no doubt the agreement was broken according to Prussian law; but, as he doubted whether it would be so according to that of England, he asked defendant if he would have any objection to give an indemnity. Defendant, having no doubt upon the subject, and having no idea that the time for paying the 300*l.* had been extended, at once consented, and gave a written indemnity, which was executed at the same time with the agreement with Miss Wagner. All the circumstances of that interview tended to show that all parties believed the agreement with the plaintiff had been broken. When Miss Wagner arrived in London, her father, M. Wagner, asked defendant to give a more formal indemnity, and an instrument was afterwards drawn by M. Wagner's attorney, which recited the agreement with plaintiff and that it had been broken. That instrument, so drawn up according to instructions given by the Wagners alone, was based upon the fact that the contract with plaintiff had been broken, and was executed by defendant. The question now was, whether on April 5th defendant knew that the agreement with plaintiff was subsisting. Upon that point there was the positive oath of defendant, who declared that he knew nothing of the extension of the time for the payment of the 300*l.* till it came upon him by surprise in the Chancery proceedings. If that statement was not true, defendant had been guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury; but there was nothing whatever to shake his testimony. He (defendant) was a gentleman of irreproachable character. M. Wagner, too, was a man of business, and acute, and it was not likely that he would have taken an indemnity based on a false recital. It was now sought to set aside the verdict upon mere inferences, and that, too, in a case where the jury had not been carried away by prejudice, but had been satisfied with the evidence which defendant had given. The jury had found two of the questions submitted to them in favour of plaintiff, and one for defendant; and the question which they had found for defendant was one, as Lord Campbell observed at the trial, peculiarly for the decision of the jury. The attempt was now made, by the present application, to supersede the proper functions of a jury, it being sought to overturn a decision which had been come to by the deliberate verdict of a full special jury of the city of London, who discharged their duty in such an admirable manner as to constitute the most substantial argument in favour of preserving that mode of trial. It was said, Why did defendant go to Hamburgh, if it were not to induce Miss Wagner to break her contract? The answer was, that Dr. Bacher had got her away from him by importunity and cunning, and defendant felt he was justified in getting her back if he could do so legally; and, if he believed her engagement with plaintiff was not likely to be carried out, there was nothing unreasonable in defendant's writing to Miss Wagner on March 30th, to know whether that was the case or not, nor in his going to Berlin during the Easter holidays, in order to ascertain the real state of the case. It was said that we had only defendant's statement as to what took place at the meeting at Hamburg, and that the commission to examine Miss Wagner had been abandoned. That was true; for, finding that, if the commission were executed, it might lead to legal difficulties, and probably to an appeal to the House of Lords, defendant thought it was better to abandon the commission, and to tender himself for examination as a witness. The Attorney-General here minutely went through the particulars given by defendant of the interview, and argued that there was no improbability, as alleged, in the account given of it by defendant.

Lord CAMPBELL suggested to the Attorney-General that he should be glad to hear his explanation of defendant's refusal to wait two or three days at Hamburg, as requested by Miss Wagner, in order to see if plaintiff would send the £300.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, his explanation was this:—Defendant had only a few days that he could be absent from London; and, having gone round to Hamburgh by way of Berlin, he had already lost two days, and was under the necessity of being in London as soon as possible. Under those circumstances, he was obliged to tell Miss Wagner that he could not wait, and that she must make up her mind one way or another without delay. The jury had given their verdict in this case as long as thirty-six hours after they had heard his (the Attorney-General's) address, and but a short time after listening to the eloquent reply of Sir F. Thesiger, who had never shown greater ability than on that occasion. The Lord Chief Justice, in summing up, had adverted to all the various points in the case, and the jury, having deliberated for two hours, gave a verdict which it was now sought to overturn, upon the mere assumption that defendant had committed wilful and corrupt perjury. With respect to the alleged improper reception of evidence, the Attorney-General observed, that the charge against defendant was, that he "maliciously" enticed and procured Miss Wagner to break her contract, so that his state of mind at the time was of the very essence of the inquiry. Sir F. Thesiger had opened the case to the jury as one in which defendant had "maliciously" as well as wrongfully endeavoured to destroy his rival. He had put the case to the jury in a way that was calculated to excite the honest prejudices of the jury; and it became necessary to restore their minds to a state of judicial equilibrium. The charge against defendant was, that he induced Miss Wagner to break her contract by unfounded suggestions: it was necessary, therefore, to lay all the circumstances of the case before the jury—to bring the whole of the res gestæ before them—in order that the real state of defendant's mind might be exposed. It was said that his (defendant's) representation of what took place at Hamburg was improbable. Now, in order to test the probabilities of the case, it was necessary to show the nature of the antecedent circumstances, and, when those facts were brought forward, it appeared from Miss Wagner's letter of the 7th of December, 1851, and from defendant's letter of January 9th, 1852, and other circumstances, that Miss Wagner had unwillingly entered into the original agreement with plaintiff, and that there was no improbability at all in defendant's evidence. Those letters also showed that defendant had not been actuated by any malice against plaintiff. They proved that he had acted in good faith; that his story was probable; and they were necessary to be laid before the jury, in order that they might not be inflamed by the case which plaintiff had laid before them. When the state of mind of a party was of the essence of the charge, as in the case of libel, antecedent as well as concomitant circumstances were properly admissible, to show the animus of the party, and upon this ground he (the Attorney-General) submitted the evidence had been properly admitted.

Mr. BRAMWELL, Q.C., Mr. CREASY, and Mr. WILLES followed on the same side.

Sir F. THESIGER, in support of the rule, said, he thought it would be better for him, in the first instance, to address himself to the propriety of receiving the evidence which had been objected to. Three questions were raised—first, as to the existence of the contract; second, as to the knowledge of defendant of its existence; and, third, whether, with that knowledge, he induced Miss Wagner to break it. According to the law laid down by the majority of the Court in a previous stage of the cause, plaintiff would be entitled to recover, as damages, in proportion to the loss which he had sustained. The existence of "malice" would not enhance the damages, nor would the absence of "malice" mitigate the damages. Under the words in the declaration, which charged that defendant "wrongfully and maliciously" enticed and procured Miss Wagner to depart from her contract, all that plaintiff would have to prove was, that he did it with the knowledge that the contract existed; in other words, he would be required to prove the scienter. The evidence, therefore, which had been introduced to rebut the charges of malice was irrelevant to the issue, and ought not to have been admitted. Plaintiff did not set the example of introducing any facts which took place anterior to the contract, except so far as was necessary with a view to prove that Dr. Bacher was acting as plaintiff's agent. It was the Attorney-General who had adopted that course. He charged Dr. Bacher with making use of art and cunning, and outgeneralling defendant, and therefore said he would go into evidence of what took place before the contract. This case was entirely different from an action of libel, where the question of "malice" was material, and evidence of previous acts and statements was properly admissible. The learned counsel then commented upon all the facts of the case, with a view to show that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence; but, as we reported the learned counsel's argument at considerable length on the occasion when he moved for the rule, we deem it unnecessary to repeat it.

Digitized by Google

Sir F. KELLY, Mr. HOGGINS, Q.C., Mr. COWLING, and Mr. HUDDLESTON, then followed on the same side.

Mr. JUSTICE ERLE said, he was of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. The first question was, whether the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, and his (Mr. Justice Erle's) opinion was, that no substantial reason had been given that the decision of the jury was wrong. The action was brought for wrongfully and maliciously inducing Miss Wagner to break a contract which defendant knew was subsisting between her and plaintiff; and the material question was, whether defendant knew that the contract with plaintiff was subsisting at the time when he (defendant) made his contract with Miss Wagner. With respect to that question, there was evidence which might raise a presumption against defendant; but, on the other hand, there was very considerable evidence in his favour which ought to be regarded. The contract between Miss Wagner and plaintiff contained a stipulation that £300 should be paid to that lady by the 15th of March, 1852, and that was a condition precedent, so that, if the money was not paid by that time, Miss Wagner, if there had been nothing else, would have had the right to say she was free, for the contract was actually broken. But that original contract was not the one which ought to be regarded. In consequence of a letter written by Miss Wagner, her appearance in London was postponed for a period of fourteen days, and the payment of the £300 must be considered as likewise postponed for the same period. The letter of Miss Wagner's father, also, seemed to show that a further time beyond the 1st of April was recognized as the time of payment, on account of the date at which it was proposed to send the money to him at Hamburg. The question was, whether the extension of the time was known to defendant. On the part of defendant, we had his statement, given upon oath, that he did not know of the extension; while, on the part of plaintiff, circumstantial evidence was relied upon as showing the contrary, and particularly defendant's letters on the 9th and 30th of March, 1852. But those letters, though consistent with his knowledge that the contract subsisted, were also consistent with the contrary view, and if he was ignorant on that point, his conduct was perfectly legitimate, and he was as free to enter into a contract with Miss Wagner as plaintiff had been. Plaintiff strongly relied upon the long and sudden journey which defendant had undertaken to see Miss Wagner, his abrupt interview with her at Hamburg, the contract which he entered into, the indemnity which he gave her, and the suddenness of his departure. All that, however, was consistent with the other view of the case. There were signs that plaintiff could not go on, and it was therefore not strange that, under these circumstances, defendant should go and see Miss Wagner; and the other facts were consistent with the supposition that defendant believed Miss Wagner was free, and that he had a right to enter into an agreement with her. If so, defendant was not responsible. The jury had carefully considered all the circumstances, and he (Justice Erle) saw no ground for believing they had come to a wrong conclusion. The second ground for the rule was, that the letters written by defendant were inadmissible in evidence. Those letters showed that a previous treaty for an engagement had existed between defendant and Miss Wagner. It was said (by plaintiff's counsel) that those letters were tendered in evidence to mitigate the damages, and as showing a sort of set-off against the misconduct charged by plaintiff. But he (Justice Erle) did not understand they were seriously tendered in evidence by counsel, or admitted by the Lord Chief Justice with that view. The question, however, was, whether the letters were admissible, for, if so, it did not matter upon what ground they had been admitted. It appeared to him (Justice Erle) that they had a cogent relevancy on that which was the real issue in the cause, for the circumstances attending the agreement made by defendant with Miss Wagner on the 5th of April, 1852, would have been fraught with suspicion if they had stood alone and unexplained; but if it could be shown that defendant had had a previous treaty with the lady, and that the parties had been mutually known to each other and stood in a relation of mutual esteem, the conversation with the lady and the speedy result to which she came after so short a notice became highly probable. The letters given in evidence proved that state of things, and, so far from being inadmissible, he (Justice Erle) thought they were very cogent evidence and relevant to the inquiry. Upon that ground they were admissible, although, when admitted, they might have been used for another purpose, which it was not in the power of the learned judge who presided to prevent. Upon these grounds, he (Justice Erle) was of opinion that the rule for a new trial should be discharged.

Mr. Justice CROMPTON was of the same opinion. The objection to the admission of the letters was, that they related to a negotiation existing at a prior time. But he (Justice Crompton) thought they were admissible upon the ground that they tended to explain the conduct of defendant. If the evidence was irrelevant, the letters were not admissible, and the Court ought to make the rule absolute for a new trial; but his Lordship thought they were relevant and admissible, in order to show what the conduct of defendant was. It certainly was a suspicious circumstance that defendant should have rushed from England, and travelled so many miles without repose; but this was explained by showing that he wished to have a personal interview with the lady, and, when he heard the rumours afloat, that he went to see her. It was his (Justice Crompton's) opinion that, if the evidence had been rejected, the Court must have granted a new trial upon that ground. With respect to the verdict being against evidence, his Lordship said he was not satisfied that the verdict was so much against evidence that there ought to be a new trial upon that ground. The Lord Chief Justice did not say he was dissatisfied with the verdict, and if he (Justice Crompton) had been one of the jury, he could not have said that the verdict was wrong. The matter was peculiarly one for a jury to decide upon, and he (Justice Crompton) could not say that their verdict was so far against the balance of the evidence that the Court ought to make the rule absolute.

Lord CAMPBELL, said he was of opinion that the rule be discharged. As to the reception of the evidence, he thought he should not have been justified in excluding it, but begged it to be understood that he did not admit it in order to show the improper conduct of plaintiff or of Dr. Bacher, or in mitigation of damages. In his opinion, it would have been no answer to the action, and no justification, supposing defendant wilfully induced Miss Wagner to break her contract, if it could be shown that plaintiff in an unhandsome manner had got Miss Wagner away from defendant; nor could the amount of damages be enhanced or mitigated if it could be shown that defendant had acted maliciously. In his (Lord Campbell's) opinion, the correspondence objected to formed a part of the transaction, and the jury would not have been in a fair situation to come to a right conclusion, if the evidence had been rejected. Plaintiff's own evidence went back to 1850. The evidence objected to formed a part of the transaction, and tended to show what the conduct of defendant had been before the contract with plaintiff had been entered into, and before the breach had taken place. He (Lord Campbell) was, therefore, of the same opinion as at the trial. He agreed with the illustrations which had been offered by Justice Erle and Justice Crompton of the materiality of the evidence, as taking away from plaintiff the powerful argument which he had urged as to the improbability of defendant's story. The improbability of that story had been strongly urged, and, if unexplained, would have shown that defendant wilfully enticed Miss Wagner to break her contract. His Lordship pronounced a strong eulogium upon the manner in which justice was administered in this country in keeping parties to evidence upon the issue, and declared how much he had been sometimes shocked, when he had on some occasions attended judicial proceedings in foreign countries, at hearing evidence given as to the bad characters of the accused, and an account set forth of all the enormities which they had committed. With respect to the contradiction of the evidence, he had hitherto forborne to give any opinion, for he had never been in a position to say that he was dissatisfied with the verdict. If defendant was to be believed, the jury were clearly justified in finding in his favour, for he showed to their satisfaction that he had acted bonâ fide. He (Lord Campbell), in deference to the opinion expressed by the majority of the Court, had no difficulty in saying that the action was maintainable, but there must be the malus animus, and unless there was that state of mind, the action was not maintainable. If the jury believed defendant was acting in good faith, the verdict was right. Miss Wagner said she was free, and, if defendant believed that, the jury were justified in their verdict. There was, indeed, evidence on the other side which was very powerfully urged on the jury, but the jury did not believe it; and he (Lord Campbell) could not say that the verdict ought to be disturbed, because the jury believed defendant when he was not contradicted by positive evidence. The trial by jury, his lordship observed, had long flourished in this kingdom, and he hoped it would long continue to flourish under the controlling authority of the Court, possessing the power to submit the question to another jury when the verdict given was wrong, and, even in cases were there was a conflict of evidence, having the power to say which side ought to have succeeded. In the present case the jury had believed Mr. Gye, and he (Lord Campbell) was not prepared to say they were wrong. Upon the whole, his Lordship said, he rejoiced that this litigation had come to an end, and added, Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litis.

Digitized by Google

Rule discharged.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)*

(Continued from page 351.)

CHAPTER XVII.

(1786-1788.)

In spite of its condemnation on the first night, Le Nozze di Figaro subsequently met with more just or more competent judges. Those works of Mozart to which the taste of the Viennese could not accustom itself, naturally found their way to Bohemia, where they were sure of a welcome like that afforded by foreign nations to those noble exiles whom an unthankful country has compelled to seek an asylum abroad. Figaro appealed to the public of Prague, and the public of Prague gave him ample compensation for his failure at Vienna. Let us hear an eye-witness, Professor Niemetscheck, whom we have already had occasion to quote :—

"Le Nozze di Figaro was produced at Prague, in 1786, by Bondini's company, and played by them alternately in that city, Leipsic, and Warsaw. Its success on the very first night can only be compared to that which was afterwards achieved by Die Zauberflöte. I am strictly confining myself to truth when I record that this opera was performed, almost without interruption, throughout the whole winter, and completely restored the fallen fortunes of the manager. The enthusiasm it created was unparalleled; the public could not hear it too often. An excellent edition for the pianoforte and another for wind instruments were brought out by one of our best professors; it was arranged as a series of quintets for the chamber, and the tunes were transformed into dances of all kinds: in a word, Figaro's songs resounded in every street and garden, while even the harpists in the beer-shops were obliged to strike up "Non più andrai" if they wished to obtain an audience.

"These facts are, without doubt, principally to be accounted for by the excellence of the work, but only a public possessing a taste for what is really beautiful in music, and numbering as many thorough connoisseurs as that of Prague, would have so quickly appreciated its real value. In addition to this, we must mention the incomparable orchestra of the opera at that time, which could realize Mozart's ideas with such accuracy and effect. The new harmonies and the vigorous character of the vocal music produced the deepest and most unmistakeable impression on the meritorious members of this body, who were the more competent judges and the better orchestral-performers from the fact of but few of them being virtuosi or concert-players. The late well-known conductor, Strohbach, frequently asserted that he and those under him became so excited at each representation, that, in spite of the great labour they had undergone, they would willingly have played the opera a second time, from beginning to end.

"The admiration entertained for the composer of such music went so far that one of our most distinguished noblemen and best judges of music, Count Joseph von Thun, who had an excellent private chapel, invited Mozart to Prague, offering him board and lodging, with every possible comfort, in his (the Count's) own house. Mozart was too much delighted at the effect produced by his music upon the Bohemians, and too anxious to become acquainted with a nation possessing such a taste for the art, not to avail himself joyfully of the invitation. He reached Prague in February, 1787. Figaro was performed on the night of his arrival, Mozart himself being among the audience. The news of his presence in the pit was immediately spread about, and, as soon as the overture was concluded, the public welcomed him with applause and other marks of distinction."

A few days later, Mozart gave a concert in the same theatre in which he had appeared before the Bohemian public during the representation of his opera. The practical musician met with the same prodigious success as the composer, and "the union of the two characters in one person," says another contemporary* "produced an impression upon his hearers which resembled some sweet and magical charm." At the end of the concert, Mozart sat down at the piano, and extemporised for more than half-an-hour. A detailed account of the immense enthusiasm he excited, of the marks of approbation, which seemed as if they would never end, the endeavour to find expressions which must inevitably wander into the region of mere common-place, since it is impossible to invent words to describe an indescribable pleasure—would be as unnecessary as tedious, more especially in reference to a concert which took place above sixty years ago. But there is one fact worthy of being recorded, viz.: that Mozart had, perhaps, never before extemporised so magnificently. This, however, is easily understood, for the soul of an extemporising artist is an instrument on which the moral temperature to which he is subjected exercises a very decided influence, and of which the public voice can either extend or limit the capabilities. The inward chords resound more loudly and more clearly the greater the sympathy they awaken in the breast of the public. By their lively interest and tokens of approbation, manifested at the right moment, the audience make the artist experience the same excitement to which they are themselves subjected by his genius, thus supplying and heightening the sources of inspiration. To this we must add that the Bohemians, who are naturally judges of an art which is indigenous even among the lowest classes of the people,† had never heard anything to approach that which they heard from Mozart, while he, on the other hand, had never played before a public so worthy of listening to him. The artist and his public thus worked together, because they mutually knew how to appreciate each other. In this musical city, people rivalled each other in their endeavours to show most honour to the king of music. Everyone wished to see and speak with him in private, and they who were fortunate enough to succeed liked him even still better, if possible, than before. How simple and unaffected was the great Mozart, who sat down and played for the first comer, as readily as at the command of a monarch!—how unassuming the manners, and how simple the language of this sublime artist! Such was Mozart. But how comes it that his disposition, which procured him so many enemies in Vienna, in Prague only obtained him friends—true, warm, devoted and enthusiastic? None of his biographers have discussed this question, which I shall, therefore, endeavour to answer; the task is not difficult. In Vienna, Mozart was only half understood,

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

* Stiepaneck, who translated Don Juan into the Bohemian language.

† Classical music is often heard even among the peasants.

Digitized by Google

while in Prague the people thoroughly appreciated him, and consequently no one could be so mad as to be jealous of his success. On the other hand, Mozart saw himself surrounded by artists and dilettanti whose extraordinary admiration of his talent was itself a proof of the extent of their musical knowledge. Wherever he went, he heard nothing but what was agreeable and flattering. He had, therefore, no occasion to give way to his critical spirit, and ran no risk of offending by his uncompromising candour. His well known frankness was in fact an advantage for him, since it was a guarantee to his new friends that his affection for them was genuine. The members of the orchestra were devoted to him body and soul; they played his music marvellously, and nowhere were his operas so admirably executed as in Prague, both as to the details, and the ensemble. Ensemble, did I say? Were then the singers in Prague endued with a greater appreciation of Mozart than their colleagues in Vienna? I do not know, but at least they were more interested in doing their duty. Le Nozze di Figaro filled the treasury, and, for a long time, enabled the manager to pay their salaries punctually. For this reason, alone, they did all in their power to do justice to Mozart's operas, and this was the grand secret why every one in Prague—Bohemians and Italians, professional musicians and amateurs, members of the orchestra and singers, the nobility and the middle classes—was well inclined towards our hero. Nothing, therefore, I repeat, could be more natural. If Mozart could rise from the grave, the whole world would be his Prague, since the musicians of all nations would understand him in 1847, as those of Prague alone in 1786.

I have dwelt rather at length upon the foregoing details, not because I had the slightest idea that the fact of a great artist and composer achieving a local success was more worthy of being impressed upon the reader, than a thousand similar instances, but because I attach especial importance to this particular case, since it produced a result which must for ever sanctify it in the annals of music.

Mozart, deeply moved by the welcome he had received from the inhabitants of Prague, convinced of the genuineness of their enthusiasm, and, astonished at finding, for the first time, among the masses, so lively an appreciation of the Beautiful in Art, resolved on shewing his gratitude and respect in a striking manner. "Since the inhabitants of Prague understand me so well," he said, "I will write an opera exclusively for them." The impresario, Bondini, took him at his word, and concluded an agreement by which Mozart bound himself to complete an opera by the beginning of the following winter. The selection of a libretto was left entirely to the composer. On returning to Vienna, Mozart applied once more to the same Abbé da Ponte, who had once before served him so well in the case of Figaro. The Abbé happened to have just completed a lyrical sketch founded upon the old Spanish drama of Tirso de Molina: El Combidado de Piedro (The Stone Guest). Molière and Goldoni had used the same subject, which, however, in the form they gave it, that of a comedy, had failed to please. Perhaps the Abbé made the attempt to convert it into an opera merely for his amusement; or perhaps he wished, by the aid of Spanish authors, to brighten his imagination, which was exhausted by his official exertions as Court poet and successor to Metastasio. However this may be, Il Dissoluto punito, osia il Don Giovanni—such was the title of the opera—was not bespoken by any one. When Mozart went to see the Abbé, the latter shewed him the sketch, and said: "Will you have it?" Our hero has not recorded his opinion of this libretto; but thus much is certain—he did not look out for another. Was he enabled, at the first glance, to comprehend the boundless field which such a subject offered to the musician? did he instantly feel how opportunely it came for the accomplishment of the promise he had inwardly made, of surpassing all his former efforts, being about to write an opera especially for a public of competent judges?

The work was in a tolerably advanced state, when Mozart again went to Prague in September, and took up his abode with his friend Dussek (Duschek), who possessed a country house, situated in the midst of the vineyards of Kossir (Kosohirz), not far from the city. In this place, our hero completed the score of Don Giovanni, that eighth wonder of the world, which entirely compensates the lovers of music for no longer possessing the other seven. Mozart went to town every day. The singers studied their parts under his superintendance, and he conducted the pianoforte rehearsals himself. After the first general rehearsal, Mozart went to take a walk with Kucharz, director of the orchestra, when the conversation naturally turned upon the subject which then occupied the thoughts of both of them.

"What do you think of my music to Don Juan," said Mozart, "Will it be as successful as Figaro? It is of another character."

"How can you doubt it?" answered Kucharz. "The music is beautiful, original, and profound. Anything of Mozart's is sure of pleasing the Bohemians."

"What you say quiets me," replied Mozart. "You are a judge. I have spared neither time nor trouble, however, to do something unusually good, for Prague. I assure you, my dear friend, that no one has so diligently studied composition as I have. There are very few great masters whose works I have not carefully gone through several times."

Hear this, young composers, who fancy your unaided genius is sufficient, and that you have no need to study.

At the first general rehearsal, two amusing episodes occurred. Signora Bondini, who sang the part of Zerlina, was always at fault in the finale of the first act, where she has to call out for help. She either did not scream in the right place or else not loudly enough; this might easily have produced confusion in the music, and, considering the importance of the situation, have given the piece, in a dramatic point of view, a blow from which it might not have recovered. Mozart impatiently stepped on the stage, caused the last bars of the minuet to be repeated, and, at the instant Zerlina's voice should be heard behind the scenes, seized the lady so tightly by the waist that she cried out this time in good earnest. "Brava Donella!—that is the way you must scream," said our hero. On coming to the churchyard scene, he stopped the rehearsal, as one of the trombonists who had to accompany the Commander's song, "Di rider finirai," made a mistake. The passage was repeated two or three times, and, on each occasion, the same mistake occurred. The composer then left his place, and, going to the incorrigible trombonist, explained how he wished the passage to be played. The musician answered rather drily: "It is impossible to play it so, and I am not going to learn how to do it from you." "Heaven forbid that I should attempt to teach you the trombone, my good friend," replied Mozart, laughing. He then asked for pen, ink, and paper, and added two oboes, two clarinets, and two bassoons to the accompaniment, at the same time altering the impossible passage for the trombone.

The day of the first representation arrived, and Mozart appeared to have forgotten the overture. On the previous evening, he had invited to his house a joyous circle of friends, who drank to the success of Don Juan. One of them reminded Mozart that the opera could not be played without an overture. This reasonable but somewhat tardy observation made every one anxious. Even Mozart himself grew thoughtful, and looked at the hand of the clock, which pointed to midnight; there was no time to be lost. He withdrew into the next room, and, on the following morning, at break of day, the copyists were roused, and ordered to set to work with the greatest diligence. They had scarcely concluded their task at the hour appointed for the opera to commence, the parts were brought in, covered with sand and almost wet, and the musicians had to play the overture a prima vista.

Digitized by Google

Herr von Nissen relates this circumstance, which he cites—like so many others, as an example of the wonderful facility with which Mozart worked—as follows: "The overture to Don Juan," says the Danish biographer, "was composed and written in less than four or five hours." He might, however, have gone beyond all former examples, and magnified a fact of itself sufficiently marvellous, without in the least outstepping the bounds of truth. The others did not see Mozart at his work, since he had withdrawn at midnight; but Herr von Nissen, or, which is the same thing, Madame von Nissen did, since she kept our composer company during this memorable night. The lady informs us that, while he was writing the magnificent overture, he had a glass of punch on the table before him, which made him so sleepy that his head was continually sinking upon the paper. In order to neutralise the effects of the treacherous beverage, and to keep Mozart awake, she was obliged to tell him all sorts of amusing stories—such, for instance, as Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp, Cinderella, etc. As the exertion, the drowsiness, and the frequent dropping and nodding of the head, however, rendered his task so laborious, she advised him to take a short nap, promising to awake him in an hour. Mozart, nevertheless, slept so soundly that she had not the heart to rouse him before the expiration of another hour; and, when she did, it was five o'clock in the morning. The copyist had been ordered to come at seven; he came punctually, and found the overture completed. The overture to Don Juan composed in a state betwixt sleeping and waking! Here was an exemplification of the facility of Mozart! How wonderful! What would he have done had he been in the full possession of his mental faculties!

Can it be true that reflection is not absolutely necessary to any one who writes a book? Let the reader carefully weigh the particulars of this story as it is related, compare them with others which must occur to him, and decide for himself. It is the night before the first representation of an opera. The composer of this opera, so solemnly promised, produced with such a lavish display of genius, and expected with so much impatience, has not even thought of the overture. One of his boon companions must first remind him that it is not yet written. The maestro strikes his forehead and hastens away to extract ideas from a glass of punch. The fact is sufficiently improbable—is it not? Nevertheless, most worthy biographers, I will grant it to be true, but only on condition that you will have the kindness to follow me into a little arithmetical calculation. On your account I have reckoned the number of bars in the overture to Don Juan. It contains about three hundred, which, when multiplied by the twelve lines included in the brackets, make up a total of some three thousand six hundred; some filled up and some empty, but all traced with the pen. Moreover, observe, that the allegro have four tempi—the andante, consisting mostly of semiquavers and demi-semiquavers; the allegro almost entirely of quavers. I have in my time scribbled so much music that I am competent to judge whether the swiftest and most practised hand, even with the use of the customary abbreviations, could write down only half legibly, a musical manuscript of this extent in less than five or six hours. But Mozart is said to have taken no longer to compose his overture and to write it out; so that the mental labour requisite for a work of this importance, a work composed in the most learned and scientific style, did not cost him so much as one moment's reflection! Yet even this is not impossible—I grant it; and have only one observation to offer. The whole of the music of Don Juan was completed with the exception of the overture—was it not? Decidedly; it was all finished, studied, and rehearsed, and ready to be produced the next day. The andante of the overture, remember, is nothing more than a reproduction of the principal motive in one of the scenes of the opera—the terrible scene where the statue comes to supper. The andante, at least, was, therefore, finished when Mozart sat down to write. Might not this have been the case with the allegro?

All Mozart's biographers, including Herr von Nissen, have given us a long account of the manner in which our hero was accustomed to work. They inform us that he composed his greatest productions in his head, that he sometimes carried them about with him in his wonderful memory for a long period, without forgetting a note, and, having a certain repugnance to the mechanical labour of writing them out, did not put them upon paper till the last moment, when he was obliged to send them in; this is the whole secret. Now I can understand the glass of punch, the drowsiness of the composer, and his attention to the stories. He was engaged on a mere mechanical task, one that was most irksome to him. He was simply copying.

Mozart's history is, in my opinion, so extraordinary of itself, that his biographer has no need to look at the various incidents through a magnifying glass, which merely distorts them. Let us not seek for marvels when there are none at hand, but content ourselves with seeing them where they really exist. On this occasion, the marvel was on the part of the Prague orchestra, which played the overture to Don Juan at first sight, and that, too, in such a manner as to satisfy the composer. "A good many notes fell under the desk, but the overture went very well for all that!" were Mozart's own words. He was right in applying the epithet his to that orchestra, which justified such extraordinary confidence and boldness on the part of the composer. Heaven had probably created the one for the other. The overture, thus played at sight, excited immense enthusiasm among the audience, and was followed by protracted and tumultuous applause. The whole work was as fully appreciated as the lofty opening, and from that day, November 4th, 1787, Don Juan, which was elevated by the Bohemians to the rank due to it as the opera of all operas, has steadily maintained its place in their estimation, so that our contemporaries, the present inhabitants of Prague, have constantly shown themselves worthy of the immortal gift presented by Mozart to their forefathers.

In Vienna, Don Giovanni met with a very different fate. Badly put upon the stage, badly studied, badly played, badly sung, and appreciated still worse, it was completely thrown into the shade by Salieri's Axur,* just as had been the

* Axur is also a piece of Beaumarchais', but the subject is of a far more lyrical nature than that of the Marriage of Figaro. I am acquainted with the score of Axur, which is one of the best specimens o the old Italian school as improved by Gluck.

Digitized by Google

case with Figaro and La Cosa rara. I leave to psychologists the task of deciding whether the day on which Salieri openly triumphed over Mozart was the happiest or most terrible day of his life. He did in truth triumph, thanks to the ignorance of the Viennese and his own talent as a conductor, by which he so distorted his rival's work, so as to render it almost unrecognisable; and thanks, also, to the servility of his subordinates. In all these respects he must have been contented; but Salieri was not only envious, he was a great musician. He had read the score of Don Juan, and it is a well-known fact that the works which we peruse with the greatest care are those of our enemies. With what mingled despair and admiration must the perusal of this work have filled the soul of an artist, more desirous of true fame than of transient celebrity! To what a decision he must have come in the secret recesses of his heart! What new and hissing vipers must have twined themselves in the laurel crown that had just been placed upon his head.

In spite of the non-success of his opera, which he appears to have anticipated, or which he bore, at least, with great composure, Mozart, who was, doubtless, more happy than his conqueror, enriched the score with some fresh chefs-d'œuvre, adding four pieces at the desire of the Viennese singers. Of these we shall have occasion to speak in a subsequent part of this work.

[To be continued.]

DRAMATIC.

St. James's Theatre—Théatre Lyrique.—On Wednesday last, a part of the troupe of the Théâtre Lyrique in Paris appeared for the first time at this house.

The directors were ill-advised in commencing their season with such an opera as the Bijou Perdu of Adolphe Adam, which is in no wise a bijou, and the sooner it is perdu the better. We have no time to lose in going through the score of such a hodge-podge of crude, undigested, and indigestible matter, and can only account for its success in Paris by the talent of the artists, or, we should rather say, that of the prima-donna, Mad. Marie Cabel. Such an overture was never heard, and, with the exception of the first air, sung by M. Pierre Laurent, who is a clever actor and a good singer with a pleasing voice, we could not find such a thing as a melody of any description. The opera may be described as a tissue of cobwebs, in which the fioritures are everything, and, as these were executed with wonderful cleverness by Mad. Marie Cabel, the public applauded, not the composer, but the exécutante. Flimsy as is the music, it is not at all original, and the "tune," which occurs in the overture and several times afterwards, is nothing more than the old round we heard in our childhood—"Quand trois canes s'en vont aux champs." Fancy an opera concocted out of a nursery rhyme!

With the exception of Madame Marie Cabel and M. Pierre Laurent, we may dismiss the whole troupe as something below mediocrity. The lady had the weight of the performance on her shoulders, and bravely she carried it. We do not give her out as a perfection. She has certain faults of style and execution peculiar to the French school, but she has also very great and admirable qualities. Her voice is thin in volume, but clear, silvery, and generally well intoned. Her florid bravura singing is nothing short of wonderful, and her scales are even, pearly, rapid, and singularly brilliant, the ascending scale especially. She attacks the higher notes with audacity, and always with certainty. It is, indeed, in the upper register of her voice that lies the principal charm and strength of Mad. Marie Cabel, and we may mention the cadenza in the air of the singing lesson in the second act, in which she performed the most singular and prodigious feats of vocalisation. Madame Cabel is also a clever actress, lively, agreeable, avenante, and fascinating—extremely pretty and well made to boot. She was recalled after every act, and achieved a success which, at times, amounted to enthusiasm. Madame Cabel first appeared at the Théâtre Lyrique, in October, 1853. She had, however, previously made her début, which was not successful, at the Opéra Comique, and afterwards sung in the provinces.

The orchestra was well conducted by M. Deloffre, formerly second violin at the Musical Union in London, but now director of the music at the Théâtre Lyrique. In the overture, M. Remusat played an elaborate flute solo, with admirable taste and facility. The house was crowded. At the end of the opera, "God Save the Queen" was sung, Madame Marie Cabel taking the second solo verse.

Surrey.—The third and last season of Miss Romer's lease of this theatre commenced on Monday last, with Meyerbeer's opera, Robert the Devil. The cast differed somewhat from that of last year. Miss Rebecca Isaacs was Alice, in place of Miss Romer; Mr. Eliot Galer, Robert, and Mr. St. Albyn the peasant; Mr. H. Drayton, and Miss Lowe, retained their old parts. Although the music is too high for Miss Isaacs, she delivered it with her usual ease, and where rustic simplicity is required, Miss Isaacs is always at home. Mr. Eliot Galer did his best, and as much may be said of Mr. St. Albyn. Mr. Flexmore and Mdlle. Auriol were the principal dancers in the ballet. The house was crammed from floor to roof.

Strand.—Mr. Barry Sullivan commenced an engagement here on Monday, in the character of Claude Melnotte in the Lady of Lyons, and was aided by Mrs. C. Poole as Pauline. The lady is intelligent and agreeable. Her acting was in good taste, though never impassioned, and free from exaggeration and mannerism. Miss Fitzpatrick, who appears next Monday, will be a useful and agreeable addition to the company.

Sadlers Wells.—Mr. Wilkins's little piece, Charity's Love, has been brought out to introduce Mr. Davenport and Miss Fanny Vining. The former was an excellent representative of the heroic and glorious British sailor—Captain Algernon; and Miss Fanny Vining, in the character of Charity, was suitably homely and domestic. The acting of Miss Ellen Horton, as Charity's rival, in spite of a weak and inefficient voice, gives some promise. The revival has been successful, and the house well filled during the week.

Surrey Zoological Gardens.—The transpontine summer amusements have begun in earnest. The gardens opened on Monday week, in spite of the cold and cloudy weather. The holiday folks filled them to repletion. The vocalists are Miss Poole, Miss Bansford, and Mr. Manvers, an unusually strong corps for the beginning of the season. The first flower-show takes place next week.

Madame Persiani has been engaged to sing for fifteen nights at the Teatro Comunale at Bologna.

Mdlle. E. St. Marc has been compelled to postpone her annual concert, announced for some time past, in consequence of a special engagement to perform at concerts in the Hague, her native place. The fair pianist leaves London on the 22nd inst., and returns about the middle of June.

Dr. Altschul's Lecture on Göthe's Faust, with musical illustrations by M. Maurice Lévy, took place at the Marylebone Institution, on Friday, the second instant, under distinguished patronage. Dr. Altschul, who is evidently well acquainted with the subject, began with a preliminary lecture, in the English language, on the intentions of the great German author in writing his celebrated work. He then proceeded to read extracts from the poem, in German. The learned Doctor was assisted by M. Lévy, who illustrated the different passages, on the pianoforte, in a musicianlike and highly intelligent manner. In the course of the evening, various musical pieces were performed; among others, Lindpaintner's overture to Faust, on the piano, by Mdlle. Coulon and M. Maurice Lévy; Beethoven's sonata, quasi fantasia ("Moonlight"), by Mdlle. Coulon; and some Lieder ohne Worte of Mendelssohn, by M. Maurice Lévy (the "duet" in A flat and the Volkslied from Book 4). Miss Stabbach gave a song by Spohr, "Mir ist, als müsst' ich dir was sagen" (I feel 'tis idle), and Marguerite's song at the spinning-wheel, by Schubert ("My repose is fled"), in which she was encored. Altogether the lecture and the musical illustrations gave great satisfaction.

Digitized by Google

M. Vivier, the celebrated performer on the horn, has arrived in London for the season.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The Chevalier de Chatelain is informed that it is not the custom of the Musical World to insert advertisements gratis.

G. J. P. G.—The professional allowance will be made to our correspondent and subscriber.

Sig. Pilotti has written to say that he has been the instructor of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli ever since she appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre, in 1851. Credat Judæus! What did he teach her? We have mislaid his letter, but shall look for it, and publish it next week, with such remarks as may be necessary to place the question in a proper light—that is in a light which we are inclined to think Sig. Pilotti does not well understand.

Mrs. F. H.—It shall be noticed at the earliest opportunity.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, June 10th, 1854.

A glance at the present state of music reveals a picture of activity so great and universal as has scarcely existed at any previous period; excepting, perhaps, during the lovely days which once shone upon Italy and Spain. Then, indeed, the stream of holy song gushed from the open doors of every church, flowed down from every pilgrim-crested eminence; from every balcony the clang of festive trumpets enlivened the banquets of nobles and princes, and, in the stillness of the night, the trembling chords of mandolines and citherns mixed with the tender voices of the singers. Thus also Germany resounded, in the days of Luther, with his songs of warfare. Exciting, inspiring, and convincing, they swelled from the choir, and through the doors spread over the crowded market-place, filled the busy street with shouts of religious enthusiasm, penetrated to the family circle, and the lonely chamber of the pious Christian.

That which, in those countries and those days, arose spontaneously as the natural medium of expression of a people easily excited, and inhabiting a country rich in nature's sweetest charms, or as the natural voice of holy zeal, has come down to the present time; not, it is true, as something foreign and extraneous—for it had been lying dormant in the poetic mind of the German nation long before it was awakened—but still as something acquired, in the form of a gift, presented for their enjoyment, and as an ornament of existence.

Thus their public gardens, their social circles, and their festivals, are everywhere filled with harmony; bands of music, consisting of numerous instruments, the number of which is ever increasing, parade before their military hosts, or make the ball-room vibrate with the "phrensy of delight." Where is the town in Germany, however small, which does not attempt to get up, at least, a series of winter concerts? How many virtuosi, how many quartet-societies, how many concerts of every kind and description, divert the music-loving multitudes of its larger cities! At what time were there almost everywhere so many opera performances nearly the whole year round? What time or country can show any thing equal to their musical festivals and societies? Or, lastly, in what foregoing age has music been so universally recognized as an indispensable branch of education, both in word and deed, and with such sacrifices of time and money?

For this diffusion of music the lively interest universally taken in its cultivation, in every sphere of life, provides the ·lest means. However great the cost of instruction, instruments, printed music, etc., every family in the middle as in the higher ranks of society endeavours to obtain them. There is no where a lack of teachers; singing is practised in every school; seminaries, universities, and special music schools, continue the instruction and lead it to a higher point; academies of singing, instrumental and general musical societies, established for the purpose of collective practice and performance, are everywhere established and increasing. Municipal authorities and governments find means for the performance of works of art in chapels and in choirs, or for the musical instruction of the people; publishers and music-sellers diffuse the works of all nations and all times to an extent and in a form unprecedentedly cheap and convenient; and even the acquisition of good instruments has been facilitated by the progress of mechanics.

Wonderful influence of the art of sound! It opens all hearts — engaging the interest and drawing contributions even from those who, for want of instruction, or a defective organization, are denied participation in its pleasures, yet willingly make sacrifices for those belonging to them, and step aside, content with the feeling of having afforded a pleasure to others which they themselves cannot enjoy!

Why has music this power?—and how does it reward our love and self-devotion?

It has this power, and is all-directing over mankind, because it touches every fibre, sensually and spiritually, and gives body and soul sensations and ideas. The rudest nature thrills under the effect of its strains, and is soothed by its sweetness. Its sensual effect is in itself irresistibly enchanting; for the merely sensual hearer feels that this trembling of the nerves penetrates to the inmost depth of the heart, that this physical delight is purified and sanctified by a hidden connection with the origin of our existence. But he who has experienced in his own person how music calls forth, and leads, at pleasure, the most tender, powerful, and secret feelings of the soul, imparting brightness to its twilight, awakening it to a dreamy consciousness; he to whom perceptions and ideas present themselves as spirits, diverting and raising him above the fluctuating play of feelings and emotions, who, in short, is conscious that our existence would be imperfect did not the world of sound supply the deficiency; he best knows that the most intellectual pleasure the sense derives from hearing music is merely an attraction to its spiritual fountain, from which are drawn purity, elevation of mind, the contemplation of a boundless world of ideas, and a new sphere of existence. The one is the all-penetrating, universally prevailing power of sound; the other, the promise of a higher and a happier existence, in which, knowing or anticipating, we confide, and upon which so many of us are wholly bent.

But its nature, like man's own, is twofold: partaking both of the material and the spiritual. It has power to raise us from a rude and barren state of being to a more susceptible and etherial existence, to soften and refine our feelings, to awaken ideas of pure and spotless humanity, to exalt us above humanity to the sphere of the Divinity, and, in this mental elevation, fill our hearts with love and zeal for all that is good and noble. But the spell of melody and harmony may also bury the unrevealed indwelling spirit in the alluring waves of excitement, obliterating from the soul the noblest feelings, and gradually leading it to that weak desire for sensual pleasure which stifles the finest sentiments, and in whose train are found the strange twins, satiety and insatiability, and that terrible condition of the mind which is expressed by indifference.

Digitized by Google

How then does this dangerous but cherished art reward our love and self-devotion?

In art itself all is pure, healthy, and good. It is the fault of our weakness, if its gifts are turned to poison, if we linger inactively upon the threshold of its sanctuary, or allow its call to die away unheeded, and, instead of joining the company of the initiated in the sacred temple, lose ourselves in courts destined for the offal of the sacrifices.

Many things have conspired to embitter the enjoyment and interrupt the cultivation of the art of music in the present times. The waves of mighty events are rushing over and acting upon every form of social and spiritual life, while the nations are still without a uniting and a guiding principle. Stupendous facts and deeply rooted memories have called forth, on the one hand, vehement desires, and a prevalence of violent and suddenly changing impressions; on the other, inanition, and a longing for peace and quietness. In both directions, the material, as a means of strong excitement, or of soothing the mind into pleasurable repose, has acquired undue preponderance over the spiritual element of art. In such moments, when the tension of the German mind and character, in the masses of the people and those who speak to their hearts, suffers relaxation, foreign influences, especially the frivolous loquacity of the French, and the enervated sensuality of the Italians, wrest the sceptre from native talent. In respect to music, it is in the opera especially that foreign mediocrity at such times gains its easiest victories, and carries everything before it in its rapid course. How many different means are resorted to in these productions, to take the hearer by surprise and confound his judgment, so that their worthlessness remains concealed beneath the seeming novelty of effect! And how can the evil influence thus brought to bear upon the highest and most commanding point, fail to affect, in a similar manner, every other sphere and branch of art?

"We are compelled," say the German æsthetic critics, "on the one hand, to censure the debasing materialism of the foreign opera, whose tendency in our days is the more irresistible, because we are forced, on account of the more highly developed political and public life of our western neighbours, to look to their country as the balance-wheel of the great European clock; while, on the other hand, we acknowledge that which is positively good in those operas, and which has been too much neglected by our writers and composers for the theatres—viz., dramatic, or at least scenic animation, and the progression from mere individual conditions, to more public and universally interesting relations of life," They are right. Only when this positive element shall have been more generally perceived and appreciated by poets and musicians, amidst the poverty, lowness, and errors of the foreign opera, will German art, in other respects so much more pure and true, be able to triumph over its rivals in the theatre, as certainly and signally as in the church and in the orchestra.

---

We can never lean to the notion that a composer should not have a property in his works all over the world; and if there be no international law to that effect, the sooner such a law is made the better. It is very hard upon one who has toiled night and day, for months, perhaps years, in the composition of an opera—that another, who has not toiled at all, shall be enabled to sell it for his own especial profit, without any advantage whatever to the author. The injustice is manifest, and no argument is strong enough to defend it.

Considered in another point of view, the example is injurious in every respect. A nation which can rob other nations of their books and music, will neither have the will nor the energy to produce for itself. Take Belgium for example. Belgium is the greatest thief in Europe; she steals wholesale from France and England, and offers nothing in return. Were she unable to steal from others with impunity, it is possible she might do something to encourage industry at home; but while she can fatten upon piracy, depend upon it she will always be idle.

It is probable that Belgium would not agree to an international copyright with France and England, since the sacrifice would be on her own side. She would abandon a rich booty, and receive little or nothing in exchange. Who ever heard of a Belgian opera or a Belgian book? Yet, doubtless, there are those in Belgium capable of writing both, and ready for the task, were there any chance of a market; and here lies the philosophical view of the question, for her statesmen to consider. The wrong done to France and England is bad enough; but the wrong done to Belgium herself is worse. Of America we say nothing. The Yankee looks upon everything as his own by right; and regards European literature and art as another kind of Mexico and Texas.

We give our vote for an international copyright for two reasons. First, it is plain justice that an author should be able to sell his works all over the world; no plausible sophistry can make it appear that Herr B——, at Leipsic, has any feasible property or right in the opera or novel of Mons. A——, or Mr. K——, in Paris or in London; the question will not bear discussion. Second, if it costs as much to buy a foreign as an English opera, our own musicians would have as good a chance of a bargain as the more favoured producers of the continent.

The question is not one of free trade, since robbing or piracy is not commerce; and if Messrs. Cramer publish an opera of Auber without paying for it, it is mere piracy, and no better, in the moral sense of the position. We do not advocate duties on books and music, but we wish to enfore a respect for the rights of their authors. The cheaper we can buy them the better. That depends on those who have them to sell. We want no protection in the "protectionist" sense of the term, but protection in the purely moral sense, which inculcates that the produce of a man's brain belongs to himself and to no other. What is just here is just all over the world; and it is difficult to imagine by what process of manœuvring a robbery on the property of M. Brandus or Herr Breitkoff can be defended any more than a robbery on that of Messrs. Beale or Mr. D'Almaine. If you print and sell the Prophète or the Enfant Prodigue, without the permission of M. Brandus, you are robbing M. Brandus; and if you perform those operas without the permission of the composers, you are robbing Meyerbeer and Auber—with the miserable plea that they are foreigners and live in France—as though the Straits of Dover could annul the universal recognition of the law that regulates meum and tuum. The error is monstrous, and the sooner it is corrected the better for all the world—for ourselves at home as well as for our friends abroad.

---

The following letter has been addressed to The Times:—

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—Although it is with the greatest reluctance I have brought the present question to your notice, I do not see how it would be possible to obtain a correct statement of the facts unless it be through the influence of your columns. Since the commencement of the New Philharmonic Concerts this season the members of the chorus (who are chiefly amateurs) have been led to believe that their services would be asked for at the opening of the Crystal Palace; at the last moment we are informed that application has been made to the New Philharmonic Society by the officials of the Palace, and an answer returned expressing our wish to render any service in our power. So the matter remained until the morning rehearsal of the New Philharmonic Society on Tuesday, when letters were read stating that a place had been assigned for us in the orchestra of the Palace, and that the tickets would be left for us at the temporary offices in Exeter-hall. On applying for the tickets during the concert last evening we were surprised to hear there was no chance for our attending on Saturday, as the tickets (although sent from the Palace Company) had mysteriously vanished from everybody's knowledge. Now, as there must be a fault somewhere, and we are the victims of it without having the means of obtaining a real statement of facts for ourselves, we shall feel obliged by your inserting this letter in your paper, when we have no doubt the lost tickets will come to light; that is, if they ever had existence. Trusting you will consider our anxiety to assist on this occasion as an apology for trespassing on your valuable time,

Digitized by Google

I remain, Sir, your most obedient servant,

ONE OF THE CHORUS.

London, June 8.

We are already in possession of some particulars, which we propose to publish next week, with any further information we may be enabled to obtain in the interval. We are inclined to believe that there has been an intrigue, that the New Philharmonic Society has been very unjustly treated, and that the Sacred Harmonic Society will have to give an explanation of the matter.

CRYSTAL PALACE BRASS BAND.—This much talked-of corps appeared, we may say, for the first time in public on Wednesday last, at the Royal Panopticon of Science and Art in Leicester-square. Although the performance was not advertised, it was pretty generally anticipated, and, consequently, the building was unusually full. The programme consisted of—

March, "Apollo," T. Brown.—Overture, Delonoye.—Aria, "Betly" (Solo, Trumpet), Donizetti.—Potpourri, "Robert le Diable," Meyerbeer.—Polka, "Angry Mamma," Eckner.—Duet, "La Vestale," Mercadante.—"God Save the Queen."

As we shall, in the course of a few days, have to speak fully of the band, we shall merely observe here that its power is very great, and that it contains elements which, properly directed, may lead to excellent results. Let us hope that care will be taken to secure efficient rehearsals, since, without that, nothing can be done that is worth doing. The band, under the direction of Mr. Schallehn, formerly bandmaster of the 17th Lancers, is composed as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| 2 Picolo cornettos, E flat | 2 Flugel horns, B flat |
| 7 Sop. chromatic horns, do. | 4 Trombones |
| 2 Saxophone, sop., B flat | 1 Euphonium, C |
| 2 Ditto alto, E flat | 1 Bass tuba, B flat |
| 4 Ditto tenor, B flat | 1 Bombardon, F |
| 12 Cornet-à-Pistons | 1 Ditto, ordinary pistons |
| 4 French horns | 2 Contra bass tubas, E flat |
| 1 Solo alt. horn barytone, B flat | 2 Side drums |
| 1 Alto horn, E flat | 1 Pair of kettle drums |
| 1 Ditto B flat | 1 Cymbal drum, side |
| 4 Trumpets | 1 Pair of cymbals |
| 2 Flugel horns, C | 1 Triangle |

DUBLIN.—A new opera, the composition of W. F. Gillespie, is in rehearsal, and will be brought out at the Theatre Royal in about a fortnight. Report speaks favourably of the music.

SHAKSPERE READINGS.—A dramatic reading of the second part of Shakspere's Henry IV. has been delivered by Mr. Wightwick, author of The Palace of Architecture. Mr. Wightwick does not aim at stage interpretation. Not that he is deficient in a talent for impersonation. His Sir John Falstaff was clearly, and even forcibly, delineated; but he is guilty of no exaggeration, and affects no broad distinctions. He is to be commended for taste and judgment.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

ON Saturday, Norma was given for the second time, and, it being the last appearance but one of Madame Grisi in that opera, the theatre was again filled in every part. The performance passed off with immense éclat. All the old points told with even more than usual force, and the audience was excited to a high pitch of enthusiasm at the end of each act.

I Puritani was announced for Tuesday, but, at the last moment, it had to make way for Il Barbiere, in consequence of the indisposition of Signor Mario, Signor Luchesi assuming the part of Count Almaviva. Many who went to hear Mario left the theatre disappointed, so that the attendance was not so large as would have been the case had the performance announced taken place. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the young King of Portugal, occupied the royal box.

The first performance of the Prophète on Thursday night, and the first appearance of Madame Viardot for three years, attracted an overflowing audience. Madame Viardot reassumed her original part of Fides, and Signor Tamberlik, for the second season, sustained the character of Jean of Leyden. Mdlle. Marai undertook the part of Bertha, in the room of Madame Castellan, and M. Zelger supplied the place of Herr Formes in the first Anabaptist. The minor characters were represented as before.

The theatre was very full. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the King of Portugal, were in the royal box, and the house presented a very brilliant appearance.

Madame Viardot's entrance was the signal for a genuine burst of applause. The public welcomed back an old favourite whom they have missed for three years at the Royal Italian Opera, and whose place had certainly not been supplied during her absence. Madame Viardot is still the great artist, the thoroughly accomplished singer, the earnest and intense actress, we have known and admired. She has studied the part of Fides profoundly and conscientiously, and has elaborated her conception of the character into a performance at once powerful and striking. If in her impersonation of Fides she has allowed art to do more and nature less, it is because she is indebted to nature for little and to art for much. Perhaps never before did artist achieve so much from such slight materials. Madame Viardot has totally created her own voice. Naturally hard and rugged, she has made it smooth and pliable, and has given tone and quality where originally there was nothing of the kind. This, in fact, is being an artist of the very highest order, and entitles Madame Viardot to be ranked with Signor Velluti, Madame Pasta, and Signor Ronconi, who made worlds out of nothing. Madame Viardot's style and method are models. It is the style and method of Garcia, of Malibran, Catalani, and Pasta. Her faults arise from the want of dependence on her vocal powers. Not being able to trust to her voice alone for producing effects, she is sometimes led to sacrifice natural and simple expression to an excess of elaboration, and a continual endeavour to make the most of every bar and phrase. But even this is done with wonderful skill, and is not always easily detected. As a mere vocalist, Madame Viardot is one of the greatest we ever heard. Her manner of enunciating, and her method of producing the voice might afford a useful lesson to some of her most famous contemporaries. Moreover—what cannot be said of many singers—she is a practised and skilful musician.

Madame Viardot's Fides needs no description. It has long been known as a thoroughly intellectual performance, deeply studied, poetically conceived, and finished to admiration. Madame Viardot was in her best force on Thursday night, and we have rarely heard her sing better. Her expression has lost none of its pathos, and the beautiful air, "Ah! mon fils," was as exquisitely sung as at any time. The song in the fourth act, "Pieta, pieta," where Fides appeals to the passers-by for charity, was impressive and touching in the extreme; and the very peculiar and difficult brâvura in the prison-scene of the last act, was a wonderful display of impassioned and energetic singing. The passages in this song are beyond the means of ordinary singers, but Madame Viardot executed them with such facility that no sense of their extreme difficulty disturbed the agreeable impression derived from her performance. We have taken exceptions to the acting of Madame Viardot in the coronation scene as being overstrained, and not sufficiently simple and natural, and see no reason to qualify our opinion from Thursday's performance; but her singing in this overwhelming situation would have made amends for a multitude of sins, much more the few that proceeded from a too ardent desire to elaborate everything. She produced an immense effect, and at the fall of the curtain, was recalled twice and applauded with enthusiasm. In short, Madame Viardot's success in Fides on Thursday night was as great as when she first appeared in the same character at the Royal Italian Opera, in 1849.

Digitized by Google

Signor Tamberlik's Jean of Leyden is even better than it was last year—not more powerful, but more finished, more easy, and more complete as a whole. The weight—of Mario's reputation in the character of the Prophet—which seemed to hang over Sig. Tamberlik last season like the sword of Damocles, ready to fall on his head, is gone. The great singer, disenchanted of all fears and surmises, is now himself, and his Jean may be reckoned among his finest and most powerful impersonations. He sang magnificently on Thursday, and on one or two occasions quite electrified the house. The "Re del cielo, e de beati," was a glorious display, and was followed by a unanimous recall. The famous bacchanalian, "Beviam, beviam," was no less effective, and was encored in a hurricane of applause.

The Bertha of Mdlle. Marai is entitled to unqualified praise. The music was sung with the greatest brilliancy, and even power, and her conception of the character was most truthful and admirably realized. Mdlle. Marai is making rapid strides in her profession. Every succeeding part tends to display her talents in a more favourable light, and her Bertha, we are inclined to think, has made a deeper impression on the public than any of her previous impersonations. The aria d'intrata, "Il cor nel sen batter sento"—a somewhat ineffective bravura, was admirably sung; and the charming duet with Fides in the first scene, "Della Mosa un di nell onde," was perfect. Indeed throughout the opera, more particularly in the fourth and last acts, Mdlle. Marai more than ever proved herself an accomplished vocalist, and an actress of impulse. Her engagement at the Royal Italian Opera has turned out a real fortune for the direction.

The general performance was the best we remember for years at the Royal Italian Opera. The loss of Herr Formes as the anabaptist Zaccharia was hardly felt, so efficiently did M. Zelger sustain the part; and Signors Stigelli and Polonini were as excellent as ever in Jonas and Mathisen. Sig. Tagliafico supported the character of Count Oberthal in his usual artistic and characteristic manner. The chorus sang well throughout, and we never heard the "Liberta" chorus in the first act given with greater power and precision. The skating scene, with Mdlle. Queniaux as principal dancer, as usual, delighted all eyes by its animation and variety; and the coronation won all hearts by its splendour and magnificence. To conclude, Thursday night was a great night for the Royal Italian Opera.

Last night was another great night, for the Royal Italian Opera. The performance was given in lieu of Tuesday the 29th of August, a subscription night. The Opera was the popular Lucrezia Borgia, so intimately associated, and for so long a time, with the names of Grisi and Mario. Perhaps no work in the répertoire of the Royal Italian Opera so soon calls up the names of the two incomparable artists, and consequently, its first announcement in the bills never fails to excite public curiosity, and public cupidity, to see and hear what all who have eyes and ears should see and hear.

Lucrezia Borgia, Donizetti's best opera, has seldom, probably never, been more admirably executed than last night, when it was given for the first time this season, in presence of an audience so crowded, that there was not a vacant place in the theatre, and circulation round the pit was impossible. The three principal characters—Lucrezia, Gennaro, and Alphonso—were of course represented by Madame Grisi, and Signors Mario and Ronconi. Of all Madame Grisi's characters, without excepting even Norma, or Semiramide, Lucrezia Borgia is, perhaps, that which most entirely suits her. Signor Mario's Gennaro, too, is one of his most inimitable performances; and Signor Ronconi's Alphonso is not inferior to either in masterly delineation. The opera passed off with immense éclat, and the three artists were overwhelmed with honour and applause. The evening, however, was not without its drawback, the rejoicing without its regret—it was the last performance but one of Madame Grisi, in one of her grandest and most powerful impersonations. Next week we shall have room for further particulars.

---

MR. G. A. OSBORNE'S ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, on Monday last, attracted a very crowded audience to the Hanover Square Rooms, the ladies exhibiting a decided majority. The programme provided by this fashionable and talented composer and professor of the pianoforte, was a good one. The concert opened with Spohr's first grand trio—in E minor—for piano, violin, and violoncello, which was remarkably well played by Messrs. Osborne, Sainton, and Pacque. After a song of Proch's, sung by Mdlle. Sedlatzek very prettily, Mr. Osborne played a Nocturne, by Chopin, and two of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte. A MS. duo for piano and violoncello, by Messrs. Osborne and Pacque followed. The duo, which is light, graceful, and particularly effective, was capitally played by the composer and M. Pacque. The trio, in A major, by Mr. Osborne, for piano, violin, and violoncello—which, at its first performance at St. Martin's Hall was warmly eulogised—was heard with renewed pleasure on Monday. Its execution by Messrs. Osborne, Sainton, and Pacque was as good as could possibly have been desired. A song of the sentimental school, by Mr. Osborne, called, "Floweret of the Heart," sung by Miss Dolby, was encored. It is very tuneful, and is nicely written for the voice. Miss Dolby sang it with perfect expression and taste. An Andante and Allegro, in manuscript, for piano and oboe, by Mr. Osborne, was performed by Messrs. Osborne and Nicholson, with excellent effect. It is clever, and well written for the instruments. After a song by Mr. Benson, Mr. Osborne brought the concert to a close with two sparkling compositions of his own—Nocturne, and A Summer's Eve. Herr Henry Bohrer accompanied the vocal music.

FEMALE ORCHESTRAS.—Such things have been heard of, or, at least, imagined. William Beckford, in Venice, in 1780, writes as follows:—"The sight of the orchestra," he says, "still makes me smile. You know, I suppose, it is entirely of the feminine gender, and that nothing is more common than to see a delicate white hand journeying across an enormous double bass, or a pair of roseate cheeks puffing, with all their efforts, at a French horn. Some that are grown old and Amazonian, who have abandoned their fiddles and their lovers, take vigorously to the kettle-drum; and one poor limping lady, who had been crossed in love, now makes an admirable figure on the bassoon."

Digitized by Google

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The seventh concert took place on Monday night, when, as we anticipated, there was no concerto, or solo. So that the annual visit of her Majesty the Queen entails a loss to the subscribers of one of the most interesting features of the performance. The room was very full, but not inconveniently crowded. The King of Portugal, and two of the Royal children, accompanied the Queen and Prince Albert. The following was the programme:—

PART I.

Overture, "Leonora" - - - - - - - Beethoven.
Aria, "Quel plaisir d'être soldat," Signor Gardoni - Boïeldieu.
Sinfonia in B flat - - - - - - - - Schumann.
Aria, "Come scoglio," Madame Castellan - - Mozart.
Overture, "Zampa" - - - - - - - - Herold.

PART II.

Sinfonia in D (No. 2) - - - - - - - Beethoven.
Duetto, "Ah, qual rispetto," Madame Castellan and Signor Gardoni - - - - - - - Rossini.
Overture, "Ruy Blas" - - - - - - - Mendelssohn.

Conductor, Mr. Costa.

The National anthem was played on the arrival of Her Majesty.

The only novelty was Herr Schumann's symphony in B flat, which made a dead failure, and deserved it. Few of the ancient "Society of British Musicians'" symphonies were more incoherent and thoroughly uninteresting than this. If such music is all that Germany can send us of new, we should feel grateful to Messrs. Ewer and Wessel if they would desist from importing it. The performance was spirited, but coarse and unfinished. The relative positions of Herold's olla podrida and Mendelssohn's magnificent overture—the place of honour being accorded to the set of quadrilles—was sufficiently amusing, and suggestive of the wisdom which inspires the counsels of the seven directors. In the redoubtable overture to Zampa, Mr. Costa and his unrivalled orchestra seemed to be out of their element. It was played without spirit, and without that chique, in the absence of which it is "tolerable and not to be endured." In revenge, the symphony by Beethoven—although the first two movements were taken too slow—went well throughout; and Mendelssohn's overture never went better, notwithstanding that the audience began to disperse the instant it began, to the annoyance of those who remained to hear. The Leonora was as grand as usual; but we should like to have heard Coriolanus, for a change. They are beating poor Leonora to death at these concerts; and, if the directors are not careful, she will lose her attraction. "Toujours perdrix" is not the thing, when it can be so easily avoided.

The vocal music was good. Mad. Castellan, who appeared for the first time this season, sang the difficult air from Cosi fan Tutti in a brilliant and energetic manner; and nothing could be better than Sig. Gardoni, in the gay and sparkling chansonnette from La Dame Blanche. The duet, one of Rossini's most approved Italian pattern, although from a French opera (Le Comte Ory), was unexceptionable. Her Majesty and party remained until the end. The next concert is the last of the season.

---

Mr. Neate's Third Morning Performance took place on Thursday, the 1st instant, in the Hanover Square Rooms. On this occasion, Mr. Neate played a quintet of his own composition for pianoforte, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and contra-basso, in conjunction with Messrs. Lazarus, C. Harper, Baumann, and Howell. The performance was admirable, and made a favourable impression on the audience. Mr. Neate also played Mendelssohn's quartet in B minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, with Messrs. Blagrove, R. Blagrove, and Lucas; Beethoven's grand sonata, Op. 47 (the celebrated "Kreutzer") for pianoforte and violin, with Mr. Blagrove, and some minor pieces of his own. As a specimen of his executive powers in the modern school of pianoforte playing, Mr. Neate performed Thalberg's well-known fantasia on the prayer in Mose in Egitto. The vocal department was supported by Sig. and Mad. Ferrari and Mrs. C. Saville Wallack. Sig. Giullo Regondi played a solo on the concertina. Mr. Lucas accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The sixth and last concert, on Wednesday evening, brought an immense crowd to St. Martin's Hall, and was altogether one of the very best of the season. The following was the programme:—

PART I.

Overture (Egmont) - - - - - - - Beethoven.
"The Calm and Prosperous Voyage" - - - Beethoven.
Concerto in D minor, Pianoforte, Mr. C. Hallé - - Mendelssohn.
Recit. and Air (Faust), Madame Rudersdorf - - Spohr.
Symphony in C minor - - - - - - Beethoven.

PART II.

Overture (Midsummer Night's Dream) - - - Mendelssohn.
L'Addio, Madame Amedei - - - - - Mozart.
Hymne Triomphale, for Violin and Orchestra; Violin, Sig. Bazzini. - - - - - - - - Bazzini.
Chorale for Voices, "Adoramus te" - - - Bortinansky.
Overture (Ruler of the Spirits) - - - - Weber.

Conductor, Dr. Wylde.

There was no novelty in this concert, but where all was so good, novelty could, for once in a way, be spared. The conductor during the whole evening was Dr. Wylde, who performed his duties with such efficiency, that, as a morning contemporary has justly said, the absence of Herr Lindpaintner, the admirable conductor in ordinary, was not felt. The overture and symphony of Beethoven were both magnificently played, and the last was applauded with enthusiasm. Equally good was the fiery Ruler of the Spirits. Mendelssohn's musical poem was not quite so irreproachable, the execution being at times unsteady. But Dr. Wylde took it at the real Mendelssohnian speed, to which, the band being accustomed to a slower time, must be attributed the occasional want of precision in the performance.

M. Hallé gave a fine reading of Mendelssohn's second concerto, and the accompaniments for the orchestra were played with invariable delicacy and point. Such splendid music and such admirable playing could not fail to delight the audience, and the applause at the conclusion was unanimous. Beethoven's cantata, so rarely played, though so very beautiful, was a real treat. It went well, and the chorus was all that could possibly be desired. Mad. Amedei's singing of Mozart's "Io ti lascio" was too laboured, and Mad. Rudersdorf's of the grand air from Faust too slow and capricious. The chorale of Bortinansky—60 years ago Kapellmeister to the Royal Chapel in St. Petersburgh—was sung to perfection by the chorus, unaccompanied. Nevertheless, we could see nothing whatever in the chorale itself, except a certain insipid smoothness. Sig. Bazzini's "Hymne Triomphale" is a very unmeaning composition; but his execution was dexterous and extraordinary. The performance did not excite much interest.

The third season of the New Philharmonic Society has thus been brought to a close in a manner which is honourable to Dr. Wylde, its founder and principal director. During the season the following works have been performed:—

Symphonies:—Eroica, Beethoven. In F, No. 8, Beethoven. In B flat, Beethoven. Choral, Beethoven. A minor, Mendelssohn. C minor, Beethoven.

Overtures:—Medea, Cherubini. Ruy Blas, Mendelssohn. Abon Hassan, Weber. Masaniello, Auber. Schauspiel Director, Mozart. Leonora, Beethoven. Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn. Egmont, Beethoven. Ruler of the Spirits, Weber.

Pianoforte Concertos.—Concerto in D minor—Miss Arabella Goddard—Mozart. Serenade in B minor—Mdlle. Graever—Mendelssohn. Concerto in G minor—Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss—Mendelssohn. Concerto in G—Master John Barnett—Beethoven. Concerto in D minor—M. Hallé—Mendelssohn. Violin Concerto—Herr Ernst—Mendelssohn.

A Selection from the Passions Music of St. Matthew, by Bach. Cantata, "The Calm at Sea and Prosperous Voyage," Beethoven.

Compositions by living Composers.—Overture, Naiades, Sterndale Bennett. Overture, Der standhafte Prinz, Lindpaintner. Music to Milton's Paradise Lost, Wylde. Overture, Die Corsen, Lindpaintner. Overture, Minnesängers, Benedict. Immanuel (a Selection from), Leslie. Overture, Comus, Horsley. Overture, Olivier Brussen, Silas. Overture, Praeger. Overture, Tannhäuser, Wagner.

Digitized by Google

The change of locale from Exeter to St. Martin's Hall has been a decided advantage. It has lessened the expenses, and increased the effect. We are glad to hear that the services of Herr Lindpaintner have already been secured for the fourth season, 1855.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mr. J. H. Wright, professor of the harp, gave a morning concert on Thursday, at the above rooms. He was assisted by Mesdames Ferrari and Ursula Barclay, Messrs. Marras and Ferrari as vocalists; and Mdlle. Coulon (pianoforte), M. Bezeth (violin), Sig. Giulio Regondi (concertina), and Mr. H. J. Trust and Miss Knowles (harp), as instrumentalists. The programme was entirely devoted to popular morceaux. The most effective performance of the evening was a grand concertante for voice, pianoforte, violin and harp, executed by Mad. Ferrari, Mdlle. Coulon, M. Bezeth and Mr. Wright. Mdlle. Coulon highly distinguished herself in Thalberg's serenade from Don Pasquale. Mr. Aguilar was the conductor.

THE COLOGNE CHORAL UNION gave a farewell concert on Saturday evening, in the Hanover Square Rooms, to a crowded and brilliant audience. There was nothing new in the programme (which was relieved by performances on the pianoforte and violin, by M. Charles Hallé and Sig. Bazzini), but the singing was as wonderful as ever. The engagement of the German chorus has been again highly profitable to Mr. Mitchell, both in London and in the provinces. We regret to hear that they will be unable to renew their visit next year. Mr. Mitchell should apply to the Liedertafel of Bonn, or the choir of the Berlin Chapel.

ST. MARGARET'S ESTATE, NEAR RICHMOND.—The allotment of the first portion of the estate took place on Wednesday, the 7th instant, at the offices of the Conservative Land Society. The proceedings excited the greatest interest throughout the day. At eleven o'clock the secretary commenced the calling over the Books of Rights, and it was six o'clock before the register had been gone through, when it was announced that no less than 195 plots out of 271 lots had been selected, amounting to more than £22,000 of land chosen by the shareholders, the prices of the lots varying from £496 to £50 each plot. This is by far the largest sum ever realised by a freehold land society in one day's allotment. Viscount Ranelagh, the chairman, Colonel Brownlow Knox, M.P., vice-chairman, H. B. Ray, Esq., J. W. Huddleston, Esq., Henry Pownall, Esq., Robert Steven, Esq., J. G. Maitland, Esq., Mr. Cribb, and the Rev. Dr. Worthington, the directors, were present, as also Colonel De Bathe, the Rev. Dr. Dodsworth, Rev. J. Callcott, Rev. C. Smalley, H. Godden, Esq., of Maidstone, W. Rodwell, Esq., of Ipswich, and other influential members. The committee of the Royal Naval Female School have the refusal of the mansion, built for the Earl of Kilmorey, up to the 24th of June.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—The Misses Cole and Mr. Alfred Gilbert's third matinée, the last of the series, was given on Monday. The programme, composed for the greater part of well-known and popular morceaux, was rendered important in the instrumental department by Beethoven's quintet, in E flat, op. 16, for pianoforte, clarionet, oboe, horn, and bassoon; and the sonata pastorale in D, op. 28, of the same composer. The quintet was extremely well executed by Messrs. Alfred Gilbert (pianoforte), Williams (clarionet), Nicholson (oboe), Standen (horn), and Baumann (bassoon). In the solo sonata, Mr. Alfred Gilbert was not less successful. Mendelssohn's four-part song (MS.), "I wandered by the Brook Side," by Mrs. Alfred Gilbert, Miss Susanna Cole, and Messrs. J. Parry Cole and Adlington Walworth, was the most interesting vocal performance of the evening. It was well sung, and deservedly encored. A couple of two-part songs—also by Mendelssohn—"I would that my Love," and "The May Bells," were given with much expression by Mrs. Alfred Gilbert and Miss Susanna Cole, who have studied ensemble singing so assiduously as to have brought it to a high degree of perfection. The charming sisters sing the music of Mendelssohn with the right feeling, and always make an impression in his duets. Signor Ferrari sang Mr. Lovell Phillips's clever aria, "Partenza" with his usual good taste and vigorous style; Miss Susanna Cole gave Beethoven's "In questa tomba," and Macfarren's "Forget it not"—both fine compositions and well sung: Mr. Williams executed a solo on the clarionet, exhibiting a tone remarkable for power and sweetness; and Mr. B. Wells played a solo on the flute. The room was full. Mr. Wilkinson accompanied at the pianoforte.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Mercadante's opera, Il Giuramento, has been given with Mesdames Medori, Borghi, Signors Bettini and Debassini in the principal parts. It was written for La Scala, at Milan, in 1837, and produced for the first time in Italian, at the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, in the year 1838, and in German on the 1st of February, 1838. It was played for the last time on the 10th of June, 1846, with Miss Catherine Hayes, Mdlle. Angri, Signors Fraschini, and Coletti. The revival has proved highly successful. Lucrezia Borgia was given for the benefit of Signor Debassini.

The harpist, Signor Antonio Zamarra, has given a concert in the room of the Musikverein. The bénéficiaire himself performed a fantasia with variations by Parish-Alvars, and La Danse des Sylphes, by Godefroid. Signor Mirate, Debassini, Scalese, Mad. Medori, and Fräulein Demeric, were the singers.

Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt gave her last concert on the 26th of May, before a densely-crowded room, the proceeds being devoted to the poor of Vienna and the Arbeitschulen of the Frauenverein. The "Nightingale" sang "Casta diva," from Norma, "Non Paventar," from Il Flauto Magico, Göthe's "Lied der Mignon," with Schubert's music, the "Abschied vom Liebchen," by Herr G. Hellmesberger, jun., "Der Schlottfegerbub," from the Swedish, by Herr A. F. Lindblatt, and last, not least, Schubert's "Ich muss noch einmal singen," which is so popular with the public here. Herr Otto Goldschmidt performed Mendelssohn's concerto in G minor, with orchestral accompaniment, and a prelude by John Sebastian Bach solus. In the intervals of the music Mad. Rettich recited some compositions by Herren Halm, Seidl, and Scherenberg.

The public examination of the pupils of the Academy of Music afforded very great satisfaction.—Signor Merelli, manager of the Italian Opera, has received a valuable diamond ring as a mark of the Emperor's approval of the manner in which he arranged the words of the Fest-Cantata, "Eine Reise nach Wien."—Capellmeister Herr Storch is seriously ill.—There was a performance lately, in the Franciscan Church, of several of Dr. Josef Drexler's compositions, consisting of a vocal mass for men's voices, with graduale, solo quartet for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass, an Offertorium, with solos for soprano and contralto, and a chorus for male voices. The execution of the various pieces was very praiseworthy.—In honour of the Emperor's marriage, Die Rose von Baierland, the words by Dr. J. N. Vogl, and the music by Capellmeister A. M. Storch, was performed by the Ollmützer-Musikverein, with great success.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.) Les Huguenots has been given at the Royal Opera House, and, as usual, when M. Meyerbeer's chef-d'œuvre is played, the theatre was crammed to suffocation. Mad. Köster sustained the part of Valentine, and Herr Theodore Formes that of Raoul.—Mad. Hermann-Csillag, from the Kärnthnerthor Theater, Vienna, and Herr Himmer, from Brunswick, have appeared in the two principal characters of La Favorite. Although this opera is not popular with the Berlin public, the two artists produced a very favourable impression. They were supported by Fräulein Trietsch as Ines, Herr Krauze as the King, and Herr Bost as the Prior. Mad. Hermann-Csillag has selected the part of Fides in the Prophète for her next appearance.—Herr Rubinstein, the pianist (an old "prodigy," in London, of the Liszt school), has arrived from St. Petersburg. He proceeds shortly to Weimar, and thence to Switzerland. He will probably return next season, and give a series of concerts.—I regret to inform you that Herr Robert Schumann's complaint has taken a very unfavourable turn. He has been growing worse during the last few weeks. The tenor, Franz Ditt, died on the 22nd of May, at three o'clock a.m., of an apoplectic fit, aged about forty. Herr Ditt, in the course of his professional career, belonged to several of the first theatres in Germany; among others, to those of Berlin, Hanover, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Breslau, Hamburgh, the Theater an der Wien, etc. For some years past, Herr Ditt suffered from a complaint of the throat, besides other disorders, which effectually prevented him from exercising his artistic duties. The dejection produced by this, no doubt, hastened his dissolution. He died penniless. The members of the Royal Opera did all in their power to assist him during the last period of his existance, and paid the expenses of his funeral. Herr Ditt has left a wife and two children totally unprovided for.

Digitized by Google

ROTTERDAM.—(From a Correspondent).—The arrangements for the grand musical festival in commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the Society for the Advancement of Music in Holland, to be held at Rotterdam in the second week of July, are now complete. The festivities will last for six days, three of which will be devoted to music, the whole to be concluded with a grand illumination and fireworks. M. Verhulst, Chevalier du Lion Nerlandais, is appointed conductor, and the following singers have undertaken the solo parts: Mdlle. Jenny Ney, from the opera at Dresden, Miss Dolby, M. Roger, the tenor from Paris, Pischek, and Formes. The chorus and orchestra will consist of 800 performers. Handel's Israel in Egypt, Haydon's Seasons, Beethoven's 9th symphony (choral), a psalm by Verhulst, and an overture by Hutschenruyter, are the works selected for performance. The following foreign artists, honorary members of the society, have accepted invitations to be present:—Meyerbeer, Lindpaintner, Liszt, Aloys, Schmitt, Marschner, Dr. Marx, the Prince de la Moskowa, and many others, whose answers are expected.

NAPLES.—At the Fondo, De Giosa's opera, Elvira, first produced at the Teatro Nuovo, in 1844, is given alternately with Miceli's Conte di Rossiglione, both with success, the house being crowded every night. At the same theatre, Petrella's opera, Elena di Tolosa, is in rehearsal, the principal parts by Signora de Roissi, and Signors Pancani, Walter, and Luzio. At the Teatro Nuovo two of Mercadante's operas are in production, Eleonora and Gli Orazi. No new work is spoken of at the latter house, whilst at the former, report speaks favourably of the new opera, semi-seria in three acts, Albini di Lerida, by Bruno. This composer is much liked by the Neapolitans, his last work at the same theatre having been very successful. It was produced in 1844 and had a long run. It was entitled, I Montanari Svedesi, and the principal parts were filled by Madame Dabeille, Signor Tamberlik and Beneventano. In 1849 he gave, at the Teatro Nuova, an opera buffa in two acts, entitled, Il Modello di Legno, the poem by Notaro, which was also well received. Verdi's Il Trovatore has been resumed at the same theatre. Signora Cappelli is described as having a good voice and method, but her acting is wanting in animation. The barytone, Brignole, has also a fine voice, which he turns to good account, but he is awkward on the stage—as for the poor tenor, Villani, his fate is sealed, the public will not have him at any price. There seems to be just now a terrible scarcity of tenors in Italy; the new tenor, Pacini, is described as having studied in a good school, but he has had a severe cold ever since his début in Elvino, and it is audibly whispered about that his cold will be a chronic one. Luigi Ricci is engaged to write a new opera for the Teatro Nuovo.

MILAN, 4th June, 1854.—(From our own Correspondent).—At the Teatro Re, on Wednesday, the 24th ult., the first representation of the new opera Amilda, music by Prati, took place, with Madame Lorini, the tenor Sarti, and the barytone Cima. This being the first opera of the young Maestro, much generosity was manifested by the public. Although Signor Prati was honored with many recalls, in conjunction with the artists, and the artists themselves did their utmost, the opera was a failure. A prevailing monotony, a want of graceful melody, and a superficial knowledge of the rules of art, were displayed in almost every part of the work, which has had but three representations. The 31st ult. being the last evening of the short season, a selection was given from M. Adam's Brewer of Preston, and Don Procopio, with the last two acts of Il Giuramento (Mercadante), and the cavatina of the Figlia del Fabbro of Panizza. The last piece was sung with excellent taste by the English contralto, "Madame Lemaire," who was warmly applauded, and called twice before the curtain.—At the Carcano, there has been no novelty, only a few performances of I Puritani, having taken place. Unfortunately, a week since, the impresario found it necessary to close the theatre for the present to avoid further loss. It is expected that it will be re-opened with other operas in a short time.

TURIN.—At the Teatro Regio, the Pio-Filarmonica Society has given its last concert of a series of three. Among the pieces most applauded, were an air from Don Sebastiano, by the barytone Monari; the finale of the third act of Ernani; a duet from the Barbiere, by Signora Candiani and Signor Marchisio; and a romanza from Luisa Miller, by Signor Milesi. The sisters Ferni (violinists) received their customary applause and calls.—At the Teatro Sutera, the new opera of Dominicetti, Due Mogli in Una, has been produced with indifferent success. It was interpreted by the prima donna, Donati, the tenor, Caserini, the buffo, Zambelli, and the barytone, Zambellini. This opera was performed for the first time, about twelve months since, at the Teatro Filo-drammatico in Milan, where it was rather favourably received, and its composer warmly applauded. The libretto is taken from the Postillon de Longjumeau.

NEISSE.—There are three associations here for the propagation of good music—the Singacademie, the Männergesangverein, and the Instrumentalverein, all under the direction of the Musik-director, Herr Stuckenschmidt. The following works have already been executed by the Singacademie:—Händel's Messiah, Haydn's Seasons, Mendelssohn's Paulus, Elijah, Walpurgisnacht, Lorely, Christus, and Psalms; Dr. Spohr's Vater-Unser, Gade's Comala, and several others. The Instrumentalverein gave its last concert before the holidays on the 19th May, on which occasion Weber's overture to Euryanthe, and Mendelssohn's Sommernachtstraum were performed. The ladies of the Singacademie undertook the choruses. The Instrumentalverein consists of about fifty members, professionals and dilettanti.

ROME.—Verdi's Macbeth has been played almost every night with increasing success. The opera is described as being well got up, and the artists engaged in it—Signora De Giuli, and Signors Cresci and La Terza—are warmly appreciated by the public. The lady is their idol, both as singer and actress. La Terza is an excellent Banquo, and sings with energy, although he is not a good actor. Cresci quite carries the house by storm in the duo, "Fatal mia donna." The next opera will be Donizetti's Maria di Rohan, with Cresci. The Teatro Valle, after a short struggle, has been closed. As usual, the fault is attributed to the management.

FRANKFORT.—The library of the celebrated Abbé Vogler is announced for sale on the 22nd inst.

HANOVER.—Herr Franz Lachner's opera, Catherina Cornaro, has been repeated with success. Fräulein Janda from Prague (now in London) has appeared as Orsino in Lucrezia Borgia. M. Vieuxtemps has given a concert, and, as usual, been enthusiastically applauded. Fräulein Johanna Wagner and Fräulein Ney are expected shortly.

BRUNSWICK.—Mad. Sophie Förster has appeared at a concert of sacred music, and was greatly applauded for her execution of the air: "Se i miei Sospiri," by Stradella. She also sang at Celle, at a concert given by MM. Haberbier (pianist), and Peters (harpist), from Paris. At the second concert, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the members of the Brunswick Capelle, the overture to Mendelssohn's Sommernachtstraum, Beethoven's Sinfonia eroica, and the overture to Tannhäuser were performed. The theatre closed on the 17th May with a representation of Der Freischütz. The festival of the Elmsingerbund which is shortly to be celebrated here, will be a very grand affair. About thirty Gesangvereine, from all parts of Germany, have promised their assistance.

MUNICH.—Herr Ander and Fräulein Scharzbach have appeared in Le Prophète, the gentleman as John of Leyden, and the lady as Bertha. Both were enthusiastically applauded and recalled several times.—M. Hector Berlioz will give a series of concerts in July, during the period of the Exhibition. He will afterwards proceed to Dresden to direct the execution of his opera, Benvenuto Cellini.

ANCONA.—Verdi's Giovanna d'Arco, executed by Signora Scotta, and Signors Negrini and Crivelli, has been successful.

BOLOGNA.—The violinist, De Giovanni, gave a concert at the Teatro del Corso, and played three pieces with great applause, amongst which we may mention a new fantasia by Ernst.

BRESLAU.—Herr Tichatscheck will shortly appear in Tannhäuser, and also Herr Young, from Pesth, as Lionel.

BROMBERG.—Fräulein Johanna Wagner has been very successful in the character of Romeo, in Bellini's Montecchi e Capuletti.

Digitized by Google

ESSEN.—The new organ, built by the brothers Ibach, of Barmen, for the Evangelical Church, was inaugurated on the 5th May. It has 1,600 pipes and twenty-seven registers. Its total cost was 2,600 thalers.

COLOGNE.—Herr Röder has obtained a prolongation of the lease of the theatre for two years. He has also been promised a subvention of 5000 thalers (about £750) by the members of the Town Council, who, at their last sitting, spoke in terms of high praise of his former exertions. (We hope he manages at Cologne better than he did in London at Drury Lane, and the Princess's in 1849.—ED.)

BONN.—A meeting of the inhabitants was lately held in the Rathhaus, to take into consideration the project for a grand musical festival, to come off in the beginning of August. The committee for carrying it out is appointed.

LEIPSIC.—Herr Mitterwurzer has become a great favourite here Mad. Schreiber-Kirchberger has appeared as Valentine, in the Huguenots.—Herr Theodore Formes is expected shortly from Berlin.—Herr Staudigl will appear for a limited number of nights. Herr Schulhoff, the pianist, passed through here on his way to Prague, where he intends remaining during the summer months.

NURNBERG.—Madlle. Bochkolz-Falconi and Herr Reer, from Coburg, gave a concert for the benefit of the persons lately burnt out at Hammelburg. Madlle. Falconi is now in London.

DRESDEN.—Fräulein La Grua, who, since taking her leave of absence from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, has been playing with success. at Lyons, will shortly appear in this city.

HOMBURG.—M. Vieuxtemps lately gave a concert, which was well attended. He afterwards left for Aix-la-Chapelle, to take part in the musical festival.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Rühl's Gesangverein executed Bach's Passions-Musik to the Gospel according to St. John, for the first time in this town, on the 29th of May.

CASSEL.—Herr Hochheimer, from the Kärthnerthortheater, Vienna, has appeared in Der Freischütz, the Huguenots, and Figaro's Hochzeit. Herr Roberti, also, from the theatre in Frankfort-on-the-Maine has made his début as the Czar in Lortzing's opera of Czar und Zimmermann.

SCHWERIN.—Figaro's Hochzeit and Masaniello have been given. Herr Tichatscheck played the principal part in the latter.

PRAGUE.—Herr Beck, from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, has made his début in this city as Wilhelm Tell, in Rossini's opera of the same name.

BRUNN.—Herr Erl has appeared as Raoul, Robert, Edgar, and José, (in Indra), with success.

GENOA.—At the Carlo Felice, Verdi's Trovatore has had the most brilliant success. Signora Peneo excited public enthusiasm to the highest pitch both as an actress and singer, and, more particularly in the fourth act, carried the house by storm. The tenor, Carrion, is also in high favour, and is nightly encored in his first aria. The baritone, Della Santa, is spoken of as a careful singer and an intelligent actor.

MANTUA.—L'Elisir d'Amore has been performed for two evenings only, as the execution did not prove satisfactory; Adina, Signora Drussilla Fiorio-Borella; the tenor, Petrovich; and the buffo, Borella. Cenerentola has been repeated with applause for the artists, the prima donna Forconi, Petrovich, and Borella.

---

NEW YORK.—Jullien's farewell series of concerts at Castle-garden has been largely attended, and the interest has been well sustained throughout. The performances, as usual, have been very superior, and have given the utmost satisfaction. Jullien has given two hundred and fourteen concerts in the United States. His success, so far as the public are concerned, has been gratifying. His audiences have been large and enthusiastic; and it is the general conviction that he is the best conductor who has flourished a bâton in America. He is certainly the most energetic and painstaking; and is said to be the only conductor who can obtain a pianissimo from a full grand orchestra. The pianissimos and crescendos of Jullien's orchestra are overwhelming. The auditors listen, with abated breath, to catch the mystic, weird-like tones which, at first stretching along the verge of silence, gradually deepen and expand, and sweep through the hall with irresistible power, filling the soul with tumultuous, sublime, and blissful emotions. It is said that Jullien sometimes spends several days in unremittingly drilling his band, in order to secure this marvellous degree of executive perfection, which has certainly never been equalled by any other orchestra that we have heard. His success as a conductor is in great part due to his attention to points of detail. In his opinion, nothing is of too little importance to be lightly passed over. Whatever will contribute to the effect and perfectness of a performance, he considers worthy of particular attention. Conductors of choirs and teachers of singing-schools, as well as conductors of orchestras, can learn a useful lesson from M. Jullien in this respect, namely, that the execution of their choirs and schools can never be brought to a satisfactory degree of perfection without the most thorough attention to every point, however seemingly unimportant, that has the slightest bearing upon the character of the performance. Jullien has done much for the cause of music in America. He has shown what can be done by an energetic, pains-taking, and enthusiastic conductor; and hereafter the public will not be satisfied with such orchestral performances as they were wont to applaud prior to the advent of Jullien and his accomplished assistants.

P.S.—Since the foregoing was written, we have heard it intimated that Jullien will prolong his stay with us, his success at Castle-Garden having been so great as to warrant a continuation of his "farewell series."—New York Musical Review.

BOSTON, May 22.—M. Jullien, with his hitherto unrivalled orchestra, has come and gone, and left us only the memory of the sweet sounds which he seemed to draw from his coadjutors almost at will, by the mere wave of his bâton. If scrupulously and religiously to keep his word, and not raise false expectations in the public mind be worthy of praise, then is Jullien, who has done exactly as he agreed, and furnished us with orchestral music better than we have ever listened to, an honourable man, and an impresario without fault. Jullien gave five concerts in this city, every one of which was crowded with the beauty and fashion of the town. Notwithstanding the orchestra was diminished by about one half, or forty players, the performances gave unbounded delight and pleasure.

---

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

MONDAY.—English Glee and Madrigal Union Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Three o'clock.——Mrs. Anderson's Grand Annual Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Half-past One o'clock.——Choral Fund Benefit Concert, St. Martin's Hall.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Quarter-past Three o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—Royal Society of Female Musicians' Concert, Hanover Square Rooms. Eight o'clock.——Harmonic Union, Nauman's Christ, Exeter Hall. Half-past Seven o'clock. Mr. Hullah, Elijah, St. Martin's Hall. Eight o'clock.——Mrs. John Macfarren, Matinée Musicale, 27, Queen Anne-street. Three o'clock.

FRIDAY.—Miss Binckes' Concert, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street. Eight o'clock.

SATURDAY.—Herr Hildebrand-Romberg, Morning Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Half-past Two o'clock.

---

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WM. STERNDALE BENNETT respectfully announces that his MORNING PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, July 3.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.—Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon. The Third Concert on Saturday next at the Hanover-square Rooms, commencing at Half-past Three. Symphony in E flat, Mozart; Concerto, Pianoforte, Beethoven; Fantaisie, Clarinet; Overtures, "Isles of Fingal," Mendelssohn, and "The Regicide," Lucas. Soloists—Pianoforte, Mr. W. G. Cusins; Clarinet, Mr. Maycock. Tickets, 5s. each, to be had at the usual places.

THE BROTHERS HOLMES will give an EVENING CONCERT, on Tuesday, June 20th, at the Hanover Square Rooms. Vocalists, Misses Messent, U. Barclay, Madlle. Mouat, the Misses Coles; Mr. Perren, Signor Nappi. Instrumentalists, Mdlle. St. Marc, M. Silas, M. Vogel, Herr Romberg. Violin, The Brothers Holmes. Conductors, Herren Rummel, Gollmick, and Mr. Gilbert. Tickets, 5s. and 7s.; Reserved, 10s. 6d.; to be had of The Brothers Holmes, 52, Frith-street, Soho, and the principal music-sellers.

Digitized by Google

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mdlle. Clauss has the honour to announce her GRAND CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Saturday, June 24. For further particulars apply to Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Mendelssohn's ELIJAH will be performed on Wednesday, June 14th, under the direction of Mr, John Hullah. Vocalists—Mrs. Enderssohn, Madame Weiss, Miss Dolby. Miss Freeman, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Buckland, Mr. Weiss. Tickets, 1s.; galleries, 2s. 6d.; stalls, 5s. May be had of all Music-sellers, and at St. Martin's Hall. To commence at Eight o'clock.

MUSICAL UNION.—Members are requested to observe that the MATINÉES in June will take place Weekly. Willis's Rooms, Tuesday, June 13th. Quartet, in D, Mozart; Trio Concertant, pianoforte, &c., E minor, op. 119, Spohr; Quartet, No. 5 in A, Beethoven. Solos, Pianoforte, Executants—Ernst, Goffrie, Hill, Piatti, and Hallé. Doors open at Three. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Cramer & Co., Regent-street; Ollivier, Chappell, & Co., Bond-street. Mdlle. Clauss is engaged for the 6th, and Vieuxtemps for the 7th Matinée. Director.—J. Ella.

HARMONIC UNION, EXETER HALL.—Next Wednesday, June 14th, under the patronage of Her Majesty, for the Benefit of the German Hospital, Emil Nauman's Oratorio, "Christ, the Messenger of Peace," will be performed for the first time in this country. Vocalists—Madame Caradori, Mdlle. Agnes Bury, Miss Stabbach, Mdlle Vestvali, Herr Reichardt, Mr. Miranda, Herr Hölzel, and Herr Formes. The Band and Chorus will consist of 500 performers. Conductor, M. Emil Naumann; Organist, Mr. W. Rea. Tickets, 5s., 10s. 6d., and 21s each. Office, 5, Exeter Hall.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform Beethoven's Concerto in G major, Mendelssohn's Serenade, and a selection of solo pieces; assisted by the members of the Orchestral Union. Vocalists—Miss Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr. Alfred Mellon. Tickets, 7s.; reserved seats, half-a-guinea each; to be had of the principal music-sellers; and Miss Goddard, 47, Welbeck-street, where a plan of the room may be seen.

HERR B. HILDEBRAND-ROMBERG begs to announce that his MORNING CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms on Saturday, 17th June, at Half-past Two o'clock, when he will be assisted by the following eminent performers:—Vocalists: Mad. Doria, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Mdlle. Herrmann, Herr Hölzel, and Signor Bettini. Instrumentalists: violin, Herren Ernst and Ries; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Herr Hildebrand-Romberg; pianoforte, Herr Pauer; conductors, Mr. Grattan and Herr Praeger. Tickets, 10s. 6d., reserved seats, 15s.; to be had of Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent-street; Ewer and Co., 390, Oxford-street; and of Herr Hildebrand-Romberg, 22, Bentinck-street, Manchester-square.

HANOVER-SQUARE CONCERT ROOMS.—Signor GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that his ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday, June 22, 1854, to commence at Two o'clock precisely. Vocalists—Mesdames Taccani Tasca, Ferrari, F. Lablache, and Miss Dolby; Signori Marras, Ferrari, and F. Lablache. Pianoforte, Madame De Fauche, Signori Li Calsi, and A. Montuoro; Harp, Herr Oberthur; Concertina, Signor Giulio Regondi; Accompanyist, Mr. Aguilar; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall; Conductor, Mr. F. Mori. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; to be had of the principal music-sellers. Reserved seats, 15s. each; to be had only of Signor Giulio Regondi, 56, Albany-street, Regent's-park; and Messrs. Wheatstone, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

MRS. ANDERSON, Pianiste to Her Majesty the Queen, has the honour to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, June 12, to commence at half-past one o'clock precisely. Vocalists: Mesdames Castellan, Louisa Pyne, Agnes Bury, Rudersdorff, Nissen Salomon, and Clara Novello: Signori Gardoni and Belletti, Herren Reichardt and Formes. Instrumentalists: pianoforte, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. F. B. Jewson, and Mr. W. G. Cusins; violin, M. Sainton; violoncello, Signor Piatti. Conductor, Mr. Costa. The orchestra will be complete in every department. Reserved seats and tickets may be secured at the principal music warehouses, and of Mrs. Anderson, 94, Nottingham-place.

UNDER the Immediate Patronage of her Grace the Duchess of Wellington, and other distinguished and noble persons. Mdlle. LOUISE CHRISTINE has the honour to announce that her FIRST SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place on Friday, June 23, at her residence, Eaton-square. Grand Pianoforte, Miss Arabella Goddard Harp, Mdlle. Louise Christine. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Further particulars will be shortly announced. Tickets to be obtained only at Andrews, Bond-street, and Cramer and Beale, Regent-street.

MADAME MORTIER DE FONTAINE and SIGNOR BOTTURA have the honour of announcing to their Pupils and Friends that their ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place on Saturday, 24th June, 1854, at Half-past One o'clock precisely, at the Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street, Cavendish-square. Vocalists—Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Mortier De Fontaine, and Madame Ferrari; Signor Gardoni, Signor Flavio, Signor Covas, Signor Belletti, Signor Burdini, Signor Bottura, and Signor Ferrari. Violin, Signor Bazzini; Flute, Signor Briccialdi; Violoncello, Mons. Paque; Pianoforte, Signor Arthur Napoleon. Accompanyists—Signor Pilotti and Herr Wilhelm Ganz. Single Ticket, 15s.; Double Tickets, One Guinea; may be had exclusively at Madame Mortier's residence, 48, Great Marylebone-street, Cavendish-square.

MDLLE. ANNIE DE LARA has the honour to announce her FIRST ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday next, June the 13th, under the most distinguished patronage. Vocalists: Mdlle. Rita Favanti, Miss Messent, Mdlle. Annie de Lara, Mrs. Arthur Stone, the Misses Brougham, Miss Blanche Tudor, Mr. Wrighton, Mr. Alfred Pierre, Mons. Villot, Mr. Charles Cotton, and Mr. Frank Bodda. Instrumentalists: Grand pianoforte, Mdlle. St. Marc; harp, Mr. Frederick Chatterton; violin, Mr. Viotti Collins; violoncello, Mr. George Collins; concertina, Mr. Bertioli. Conductors: Signor Pilloti, Herr Meyer Lutz, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, and Mr. Maurice Davies. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; unreserved, 7s.; family tickets, to admit four, 21s. To be had at R. W. Olivier's, 19, Old Bond-street; Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street; Mdlle. Annie de Lara, 14, Torrington-square; and all Music Sellers.

MISS BINCKES' SECOND SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, next Friday, June 16th, at Eight o'clock. Part 1.—Sonata, Pianoforte, Miss Binckes, Macfarren; Recit. and Air, "When the sigh long suppressed," Miss Messent; Recit. and Rondo, "Gone, he's gone" (by desire), Miss Binckes, Macfarren; Fantasia, Concertina, Mr. R. Blagrove; Recit. and Air, "They err who tell us Love can die," Miss Binckes, Mudie; Song, "I have travelled through all nations," Mr. Frank Bodda, Balfe; Solos, Pianoforte, Miss Binckes. Part 2.—Fantasia, Pianoforte (Maritana), Miss Binckes, Wallace; New Irish Ballad, "Kitty Tyrrell," Mr. Frank Bodda, C. Glover; Canzonet, "The Forget-me-not," Miss Binckes, W. Aspull; Ballad, "Come out to me," Miss Messent, Linley; Song, "Where the Bee sucks," Miss Binckes, Dr. Arne; Duet, Concertina and Pianoforte, Mr. R. Blagrove and Miss Binckes. Conductor—Herr W. Ganz. Programmes and Tickets to be had of Messrs. Cramer, and Co., Regent-street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Under the immediate patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, and Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge. Mr. Benedict has the honour to inform the Nobility and Gentry, that his Grand ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, on Friday Morning, June 23, to be supported by the Eminent Artistes and the Band and Chorus of that great Lyrical Establishment, including the services of Madame Grisi (being one of her farewell performances in England), Mdlle. Angiolina Bosio, Mdlle. Marai, Mdlle. Alkini, Mdlle. Nantier Didiée, and Madame Viardot; Signor Tamberlik, Signor Lablache, Signor Ronconi, Signor Luchesi, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Stigelli, Signor Susini, Signor Polonini, Monsieur Zelger, and Signor Mario. In addition to the above artistes of the Royal Italian Opera, the following ladies and gentlemen have most kindly offered their valuable services:—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Dolby, Signor Belletti, Monsieur Vivier, Miss Arabella Goddard, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Mr. Benedict, Herr Ernst, Signor Bazzini, Signor Piatti, and Monsieur C. Hallé. Prices of admission:—Stalls, £1 1s.; Boxes, Grand Tier, £5 5s.; Pit Tier, £3 3s.; First Tier, £4 4s.; Second Tier, £2 2s.; Pit, 5s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 5s. Applications for boxes, stalls, and places, to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre, or of Mr. Benedict, 2, Manchester-square.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The THIRD CONCERT, for the Exhibition of the Students, will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Tuesday Morning, the 13th of June, to commence at Two o'clock. Single Tickets, 5s.; Family Tickets (to admit four), 16s.; to be had at the principal Music-sellers, and at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square.

OPERA COMIQUE, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, King-street, St. James's.—The Director of the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, beg to announce, that owing to the great success achieved by Madame Marie Cabel, in the new opera, entitled, "Le Bijou Perdu," produced on Wednesday evening with the most brilliant éclat, it will be repeated on this evening, Saturday, June 10, 1854. The entertainments will commence at Eight o'clock precisely, with the new and very successful opera, entitled "Le Bijou Perdu;" Toinon—Madame Marie Cabel (as originally performed by her in Paris, and her third appearance in this country). Conductor, Mons. Deloffre. The nights of performance will be on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. Subscriptions will be received for twelve representations. Prices of admission for the night: Stalls, 10s 6d.; Boxes (Dress Circle), 5s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Amphitheatre, 2s. One Shilling booking is charged for Dress Circle. Amphitheatre (numbered and reserved), 2s. 6d. Private Boxes—Grand Tier, Four Guineas; Pit Tier, Three ditto; First Circle, Two ditto. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made to Mr. Séguin, at the Box Office of the Theatre, and at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

The Fourth Representation will be given on Monday, June 12, 1854, on which occasion Madame Marie Cabel, and all the artistes from the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, will make their third appearances, in the new opera, entitled "La Promise."

WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St. James's.—Under the most distinguished patronage.—MLLE. MARIE SEDLATZEK (of the Royal Opera, Drury-lane) and HERR SEDLATZEK (Kammer Virtuos of His Highness the Prince Paul Esterhazy), respectfully announce to the Nobility and Gentry that they will give a MATINÉE MUSICALE, at the above Rooms, on Wednesday, June 28, 1854. To commence at Half-past Two o'clock. Vocalists—Madame Caradori (by the kind permission of the Directors of the Royal Opera, Drury-lane), Mlle. Hermann, Mlle. Amedei, Mlle. Marie Sedlatzek (who will sing, for the first time, several favourite English Songs), and Madame Rudersdorf (by the kind permission of the Directors of the Royal Opera, Drury-lane). Herr Reichardt (by the kind permission of the Directors of the Royal Opera, Drury-lane), Signor Belletti, Herr Hölzel, and Herr Formes (by the kind permission of the Directors of the Royal Opera, Drury-lane). Instrumentalists—Violin, M. Sainton; Flute, Herr Sedlatzek; Oboe, Herr Barre; Clarinet, Mr. Lazarus; Bassoon, Mr. Baumann; Pianoforte, Mr. George Osborne; Harp, Herr Oberthür; Violoncello, Herr Hildebrand Romberg; Concertina, Signor Regondi; and Horn, Signor Puzzi. Accompanyists—M. Benedict, Mr. Aguilar, and Herr Praeger. In the course of the Concert, Reichard's celebrated Quintuor for Wind Instruments will be performed. Also, Herr Sedlatzek and Herr Oberthür will perform (by desire) a Fantasia for Flute and Harp, "Italy and Ireland," by Bochsa and Tulou. Tickets, 7s. each; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. To be had at the principal Music Warehouses, and of Mdlle. and Herr Sedlatzek, 28, Manchester-street, Manchester-square.

MR. PAGET (Bass), Mrs. PAGET (late Miss CLARKE), Royal Academy of Music, (Contralto).—All communications relative to engagements for Concerts and Oratorios to be addressed Atherstone, Warwickshire.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Naïaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

W. RYALLS' (Professor of Singing) Pianoforte Repository, Hamilton-street, Birkenhead. Pianofortes on hire and taken in exchange.

MUSIC TRADE.—To be disposed of, a first-rate, old-established Music Business, in one of the best and most leading thoroughfares at the West End. The shop has mahogany plate-glass front, and swing doors. Terms very moderate, as the Proprietor is about to leave shortly for America. Apply to G., 54, Albany-street.

TO CONCERTINA PLAYERS.—Signor Carlo Minasi begs to notify to his friends and the public generally that he has just patented his improvements in the manufacture of the above popular instrument, which will be found to give a volume of sound and freedom of touch hitherto unattained. Signor Minasi will be happy to show these instruments to any person who will favour him with a call at his residence, No. 16, Brecknock-place, Camden-road, where he gives lessons on the Concertina. Piano and Singing on moderate terms.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed. J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

THE ONLY EXHIBITION PRIZE MEDAL FOR HARMONIUMS, price Ten Guineas, with all the late improvements, manufactured solely by Messrs. WHEATSTONE and Co. Has the full compass, with improved expression stop, a rich sustained tone, in power ad libitum, is an excellent substitute for the organ, does not require tuning, and is admirably suited to play with the pianoforte. Messrs. W. and Co. have an extensive assortment of the above ready for exportation; also a variety of French Harmoniums, with the various stops, at very reduced prices. Warren's Instructions for the above, 4s.

Wheatstone and Co., Patentees and Inventors of the Concertina, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

Digitized by Google

HARMONIUMS. — CAUTION. — George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 108, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. — Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

SOUND AND WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through life as highly conducive to health and longevity. Among the various preparations offered for the purpose, ROWLANDS' ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE, stands unrivalled in its capability of embellishing, purifying, and preserving the teeth to the latest period of life. Prepared from Oriental Herbs with unusual care, transmitted to this country at great expense, this unique compound will be found to eradicate all tartar and concretions, and impart a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface, remove spots of incipient decay, render the gums firm and red, fix the teeth firmly in their sockets, and from its aromatic influence impart sweetness and purity to the breath.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' ODONTO" are on the Label, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government Stamp affixed on each box.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

CHANSON EROTIQUE, pour le Piano, par Jules, Egghard, Op. 19. Price 2s. LA HARPE ÉOLIENNE, Rêverie pour le Piano, par W. Krüger, Op. 25. Price 3s.—The manner in which these two pieces have introduced themselves and been received in musical circles has stamped them as the gems of the season.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

NAE PIER (Napier). An historical song, written, composed, and dedicated to Britain's Brave Tars, by L. Lindley. Price 2s.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

SONG OF SPRING (Frühlingslied). Dedicated to, and sung by, Mdlle. Agnes Büry. Composed by Carl Reinecke. Price 2s.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

DEDICATED by Permission to Her Majesty the Queen. —Mrs. JOSEPH KIRKMAN'S NEW SYSTEM OF HARMONY is now ready, price 15s. the complete set (or each part may be had separately); comprising the Model Scale, Harmonical Circle, and the Practical Analysis, with a Dictionary of all the Intervals, showing at one view their harmonical qualities; also an Exercise Book, in which the exercises are all prepared to be filled up by the pupil, which, when completed, will form a valuable compilation of all the essential harmonies in music. The diagrams illustrate the progress of harmony at one view. The study of the intervals is much simplified by means of a sliding representation of the pianoforte key-board, shewing at a glance their semitonic division and denomination; also, by a newly invented sliding model, is distinctly seen the manner in which chords are inverted, with their signature, root, and resolution. This system is well adapted for those who wish to obtain proficiency in playing the pianoforte; for while the exercises are illustrative of harmony and modulation, they are at the same time excellent for practice on that instrument. One week's attentive study of this perspicuous diagram will do away with the necessity of months of arduous and thankless labour. This system is well adapted to class teaching. The Publishers beg to direct particular attention to this novel system, the simplification of which subdues all difficulties, and systematically arranges the progressive paths, proving that the science of harmony is adapted to the capacity of all who will give moderate application to its attainment. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW SONG.—"AH! WHY SO SAD!"—Poetry and Music by J. Thorne Harris. Published by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

THE ELECTRIC GALOP, by GOLLMICK. A second edition of this celebrated galop is just published for the Pianoforte, price 2s.; and for Orchestra, 5s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE MARIO VALSE, by TINNEY, on Airs from Rigoletto, with a Portrait of Signor Mario, in colours, by Brandard, is published this day, price 4s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

PERLES D'ÉCUME, played by Miss Arabella Goddard, and enthusiastically encored at Herr Oberthür's Concert, in Willis's Rooms, on Tuesday morning, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., only by Wessel & Co., 229, Regent-street, London.

THE BALTIC.—A PORTRAIT OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, by a Distinguished Artist, will embellish the title page of the Baltic Galop, by Albert Wagner, published by Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, TAMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L' Elisir d' Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

NEW DUET BY CAMPANA.—"UNA SERA D'AMORE." Notturno à due voci, by F. Campana, to be sung at the Author's Concert on the 19th inst., is just published, price 2s. 6d. Also, the very popular Romanza, "IO T'AMERO," by the same Composer, price 2s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 1s. 6d., by post 2s., an Anthem, "By the Streams of Babylon" (Wrth afonydd Babilon), by William Owen Tremadoc. Originally composed on the Welsh version of the 137th Psalm. The English words by the Rev. Richard Parry, Ffestiniog. Organ or Pianoforte Accompaniment by Dr. S. S. Wesley. London: J. A. Novello, 69, Dean-street, Soho. May be had also from the author.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ÉTOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

Also, MEYERBEER'S MARCHE DE FLAMBEAUX, Solo, 3s.; and the same, arranged as a Duet by Wooliff, 5s.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street, and 167, North Street, Brighton.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC, BY ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | JUST PUBLISHED. | | |
| 1. | Chanson à Boire ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. | Farewell (transcription) ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 3. | German Volkslied (transcribed) ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 4. | Minerva, Grand Valse, Solo ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| | Ditto " " Duet ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 5. | Belisario, Grand Duet ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 6. | Six Études ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| | PUBLISHED IN 1853. | | |
| 1. | Europa, Galop de Concert (Third Edition) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. | Grand Marche Éroique, Solo ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| | Ditto " " Orchestra ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 3. | Consuelo, Mazurka ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 4. | Valse Styrienne ... ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| 5. | Ethiopien, Caprice ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 6. | Le Revoir, Romance ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 66, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 24. SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE third concert was less interesting than the second, although the performance, on the whole, was better. It was less interesting, because the programme contained so few of the compositions of the students; and we cannot repeat too often that the Academy concerts are chiefly valuable as a means of showing the public and the patrons of the institution what progress the students are making, both in composition and performance, under the system of instruction pursued within its walls. The selection was as follows:—

PART I.

Overture, (MS.) Ings.* Aria, "Ah dolce guidami," Miss Sadler, Donizetti. Aria, "Come innocente," Miss Atfield, Donizetti. Cavatina, "Deh von voler," Miss Ranoe, Donizetti. Ballad (MS.), "Not yet," Miss Hughes, Miss Hughes.* Concerto in C minor, Pianoforte, Miss Lyne, W. S. Bennett. Madrigal, "In going to my lonely bed," Edwards. 1650. Trio, "Night's lingering shades," Spohr. Introduction and variations, Violin, Master Isaac, De Beriot. Song, "Scenes of my youth," Miss Hillier, Benedict. Duet, "Now Moonlight Gems," Brinley Richards. Finale, "Lorely," Solos by Miss Spiller, Mendelssohn.

PART II.

Andante and Rondo, in B minor, Pianoforte, Mr. H. W. Ibbotson, Mendelssohn. Scena, "Si lo sento, Miss Williams (Faust), Spohr. Part Song (MS.), "Where are all the flowers?" Bennett Gilbert. Recit. and Aria, "Ah qual giorno," Miss Freeman, Rossini. Pedal Fugue, Messrs. O'Leary and Blakestone, S. Bach. Scena, "Assisa al pie," Miss Murie, Rossini. Finale, "Tu e ver" (La Clemenza di Tito), Mozart.

There was promise in both the student-essays, although the ballad of Miss Hughes (nicely sung, by the way, by the composer) was hardly the kind of thing to introduce in a public concert devoted to such an object. We are not aware under what master Mr. Ings has prosecuted his studies. Miss Hughes is a pupil of Signor Crivelli for singing. Misses Sadler, Attfield, and Ranoe (pupils of Signor Crivelli), each displayed a certain degree of talent; but we must confess that three pieces consecutively from Anna Bolena were two too many—away from the stage, its legitimate place.

Miss Lyne (King's scholar, and pupil of Mr. Cipriani Potter) merits the highest praise for her intelligent reading and spirited execution of Mr. Sterndale Bennett's very fine and very difficult Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra (No. 3). We might object to a little superfluous expression in the slow movement; but where there was so much of really good, we shall not be hypercritical. The madrigal of Edwards, "In going to my lonely bed," is not the best specimen which might have been selected of the English part-songs of two centuries ago: nor was it sung as well as could have been desired. It pleased the audience, however. The execution of Spohr's beautiful trio, (from Azor and Zemira) left much to be desired. The slow movement was the best; but in the finale none of the three ladies—Misses Spiller (pupil of Signor Crivelli) Bignell (Signor Negri) and Freeman (Signor Crivelli)—was quite up to the mark. Such good must, however, set a wholesome example, and should be assiduously studied.

* Students.

Master Isaac (pupil of Mr. Blagrove) may be pronounced a phenomenon, and we are not at all surprised at the sensation he created. Although a mere child (and only two months a student in the Academy), he played De Beriot's well known piece for the violin, like a master—with fine expression, neatness, and breadth of tone. There was nothing unhealthy in his style, and nothing in his execution that denoted the slightest inexperience. Master Isaacs was enthusiastically applauded, and well deserved the compliment. We shall expect great things of him.

The melodious ballad of Mr. Benedict (from The Gipsey's Warning) was sung with feeling by Miss Hillier (pupil of Mr. Cox); and the clever duet of Mr. Brinley Richards (Associate Honorary Member) was carefully rendered by Miss Williams, (Signor Crivelli), and Mr. Walter Bolton (Mr. Cox). The magnificent and deeply imaginative finale from Mendelssohn's unfinished opera of Lorely was, on the whole, very creditably done. The soprano solo part is beyond the powers of Miss Spiller at present, and the chorus and orchestra both left much to desire; but the lady must be praised for the zeal she demonstrated, and the general correctness of her singing, which was chiefly open to criticism for want of power. That however may come with time.

Mr. Walter Ibbotson (pupil of Mr. Sterndale Bennett), played the Andante and Rondo Brillante of Mendelssohn with a great deal of spirit; but he took the last movement too quick for his capability of execution. His conception was correct; but as he has not yet anything like mastered the mechanism of the instrument, he was unable to realize his idea, and the result, more than once, was a scramble The grand soprano air from Faust is too heavy a task at this time, for Miss Williams, and the "Ah qual giorno," (from Semiramide) one of Rossini's most ornate and difficult songs, is equally beyond the reach of Miss Freeman. Both young ladies, however, have good voices, and are improving. They should study such airs as these at home, as much as possible, but not venture to sing them in public until they are further advanced in their art. The pedal-fugue of Sebastian Bach was capitally played by Messrs. O'Leary (pupil of Mr. Sterndale Bennett), and Blakestone (pupil of Mr. Howell), on the pianoforte and double-bass; but as Bach never intended any of his organ pedal-fugues to be performed without a combination of instruments, and as the effect of the double-bass is decidedly bad, we could not participate in the absolute furore which it created among the audience.

"Who shall decide when doctors disagree?"

Mr. Bennett Gilbert's part-song is well written and pretty and was better sung than the madrigal. Miss Mudie (pupil of Sig. Crivelli) showed feeling in the beautiful romance from Otello, and the harp obbligato was extremely well played by Miss Vinning, (King's scholar, and pupil of Mr. J. B. Chatterton). The solo parts in the splendid finale from Mozart's Clemenza were carefully sung by Misses White (pupil of Sig. Garcia), Hillier, Bignell, and Freeman; Messrs. Castellani and George Dolby (pupils of Sig. Crivelli); but the ensemble of the orchestra and chorus was not what every one had a right to expect in a composition which has figured in the programmes of the Academy's concerts for more than twenty years.

Mr. Lucas conducted, and M. Sainton officiated as principal violin. The Hanover Square Rooms were well filled on the occasion, and the concert appeared to give general satisfaction.

Digitized by Google

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The seventh concert was given in the Hanover Square Rooms on Monday evening, and was one of the best attended of the season. The programme, which we subjoin, was extremely well selected, the vocal part forming an agreeable and effective contrast to the instrumental.

PART I.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Symphony, Letter Q. | ... | Haydn. |
| Song, "The Fisherman," | ... | H. Leslie. |
| Overture, "Il Barbiere," | ... | Rossini. |
| Part Songs "Abschied's Tafel," "Abendständchen," | ... | Mendelssohn. |

PART II.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Concert Overture, MS. No. 2 | ... | A. Mellon. |
| German Song, "Sie ist mein," "O sage mein Herz." | ... | E. Pauer. Mendelssohn. |
| Concerto Pianoforte, No. 2 in C. | ... | Mozart. |
| Part Songs "Frulingsnähen," "Das Kirchlein," | ... | C. Kreutzer. J. Becker. |
| March | ... | G. Fitzgerald. |

Conductor, Mr. G. A. Osborne.

The concerto of Mozart claims our first attention, from the brilliant and highly artistic manner in which it was performed by Mr. S. W. Waley, whose reading was as classical as his execution was correct. Great credit is due to this distinguished amateur for having chosen a composition so beautiful, and at the same time so very rarely played. It was a mistake, however, to place the concerto so late in the programme. It should have commenced the second part, since the strictest attention is required for a work so long and important. In future we hope that the proper place may be assigned to the solo performer, who is otherwise inevitably at a great disadvantage.

The Deutsche Männer-Chor, under the direction of Herr Ernst Pauer, their instructor, again delighted the audience with their excellent performance of the music assigned to them, and were enthusiastically and deservedly applauded. Madame Pauer must also be honorably mentioned for her charming artistic singing. Though really an amateur, Madame Pauer may lay claim to be considered an artist, since her attainments are considerable. Her second song was loudly encored, in answer to which she introduced an air by Dessaur. Mr. Weiss made a marked effect in Mr. H. Leslie's song of "The Fisherman," which exhibited both in the melody and the accompaniment the talent and musical feeling we have learned to expect from the composer of the oratorio of Immanuel. The three overtures were well played, and the concert was terminated by a dashing and extremely well instrumented march by Lord Gerald Fitz-Gerald. Mr. George Osborne conducted, with his accustomed ability.

The next concert is to take place on June 26th, and by the programme we perceive that Mr. Aguilar's new symphony, and a new overture by Mr. Gollmick, are to be performed. The Amateur Society does its best for native composers, and if no other good resulted from its institution, that of familiarising the public with the idea that we have in England men who can write, not only with earnest intention, but with knowledge and effect, should alone induce every lover of music to wish it success.

---

An Original.—The old Belgian violoncellist, Platel, under whom Servais, Batta, and Demunck, formed their style and founded their subsequent reputation, was a strange mixture of naïveté, carelessness, and whimsicality. During the time that he resided at Antwerp, the bailiffs came, one day, to seize his furniture. The artist happened to be playing the violoncello at the moment of their visit. As soon as he heard their object, he received them very politely, and ushered them into his bedroom. They immediately set about taking an inventory of his goods. While they were doing so, Platel, taking only his violoncello with him, left the room, double-locked the door upon the bailiffs, and quietly walked away, without troubling himself in the least about what became of his furniture.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

Two concerts have taken place since our last, both of which were attended by fashionable and overflowing audiences. The first was on Tuesday afternoon, the 6th inst., when the following was the selection:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quintet, in G. (No. 2. Op. 33.) | Spohr. |
| Notturno, D flat. Pianoforte solo | Dohler. |
| Quintet, in C. (Op. 29.) | Beethoven. |
| Fantasia ("Moïse"), Pianoforte | Thalberg. |

Executants:—Violins, MM. Molique and Ernst; Violas, MM. Hill and Goffrie; Violoncello, M. Van Gelder; Pianoforte, Master Arthur Napoleon.

The quintets are master-pieces of very opposite schools, and MM. Molique and Ernst, who led the first and second respectively, are masters in very opposite styles. Reader—start not; we are not going to make any comparison between the two great violinists. We leave that to Mr. Ella and his "Synopsis." For our own parts, we are perfectly satisfied to hear such noble examples of chamber-music, nobly executed as they were by MM. Ernst and Molique, or MM. Molique and Ernst (whichever you please), without asking ourselves the reason of our delight, or attempting to "secure," as Lord Byron says about Julia and Don Juan—

"The sum of our ('their') sensations to a second."

We have already described Molique's performance of Spohr's quintet as "incomparable" (when he played it last year); and we are anxious to say as much for Ernst, in that of Beethoven, which was equally incomparable in its way—a manifestation of true and original genius from one end to the other. The more we hear this admirable violinist, the more we feel inclined to repeat what we said of him on a former occasion—that he is "the most poetical of fiddlers." The other parts in the quintets were most efficiently sustained by Messrs. Hill, Goffrie, and Van Gelder.

About Master Arthur Napoleon, "the Portuguese prodigy"—as Mr. Ella, in a somewhat theatrical style, terms him in the programme—we regret that we cannot agree with the Director of the Musical Union, or the authorities he quotes. That this boy, who is said to be only ten years of age, has great natural talent, we have not the slightest doubt; but that the promise of his early youth bids fair to be nipped in the bud, if he be encouraged in the course he is at present allowed to pursue, we feel equally convinced. Since we have had the opportunity of hearing Master Napoleon in public, he has invariably played music which is calculated to destroy the taste of an adult, much more that of a mere child. Moreover, he does not play this music correctly; he misses notes out of number, scrambles through whole passages, and leaves a feeling of incompleteness and incoherency on the ear of the educated listener. If Mr. Ella really feels the interest he professes in Master Napoleon, he would do wisely and generously to place him with a master like M. Hallé, for two years at least, before again permitting him to appear in public. M. Hallé, we have little doubt, would take an interest in the boy, give him the scales and Cramer's studies to practise for a twelvemonth, and then set him down to one of the early sonatas of Mozart or Clementi. As matters stand, his attempts to execute such pieces as Thalberg's Moïse, etc., must be painful to those who acknowledge his promising qualities, and sincerely desire that he may become an ornament to his art, which can never be, unless he entirely changes his plan. If playing wrong notes constitutes a prodigy, then is the "Portuguese Prodigy" of Mr. Ella the most prodigious of all prodigies.

Seriously, when we read comparisons between Master Napoleon and the late Charles Filtsch—and, credat Judæus! even Mozart himself—we are inclined to think that Mr. Ella is laughing at us in his sleeve. The learned director asserts that "the extensive repertoire of little Arthur—of classical, brilliant, and most difficult morceaux—inclines us to believe, that in executive powers he is far the most wonderful child for his age that has appeared in our time." And yet Felix Mendelssohn appeared "in our time," who, at the age of Master Napoleon could play most of Bach's fugues and Beethoven's sonatas by memory. We shall be glad to know that the "Portuguese prodigy" can do as much; but, until we have the experience, judging from what we have been allowed to hear him play at the Musical Union, we must take leave to doubt it. Out of his "extensive répertoire of 'classical' morceaux," how is it that Mr. Ella has not ventured to regale his subscribers with one. Let us recommend Dussek's sonata, dedicated to Mrs. Chinnery, as a coup d'essai.

Digitized by Google

We are sorry to find Mr. Ella, who has directed the Musical Union with such judgment and success since its first institution, condescending to the "prodigy" and "miracle" system, in order to invest his programmes with an imaginary attraction. He stands in no need of such subterfuges. His concerts are interesting and instructive; he has educated his aristocratic public in the highest school of music, and deserves well of his art for that alone. He must be admonished, however, that many of such performances as that of Thalberg's fantasia, by Master Arthur Napoleon, on the 6th, would be likely to undo all the good that has been effected during a series of years. If the chamber-compositions of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Spohr, interpreted by artists of the first distinction, stand in need of such a stimulus, Mr. Ella had better leave them alone, and devote his programmes altogether to the modern-fantasia school, which we had hoped formed no part of the scheme of the Musical Union. The only excuse for such a piece of music as Thalberg's Moïse is the unerring perfection of its execution, wanting which, it is obtrusive and intolerable. At the same time, a clever boy, a genius perhaps—who knows?—is sacrificed at the shrine of a false idol. Though what we have said is for the good of the child, as well as for that of the institution, we should not have said it, but for the lengthy and preposterous essay which appeared in the "Synopsis" of the 13th, and which, while raising Master Napoleon to the skies, talks of the "slothfulness of intellect, the craven fears of self-committal, and the illogical references to former misjudgments, that exert their paralysing influence on the great majority even of the educated," who have failed to perceive, with Mr. Ella, that there can be any reasonable comparison at the present time between "the Portuguese Prodigy" and MOZART!

The programme of the fifth concert, on Tuesday last, was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet, in D - - - - - - - - - | Mozart. |
| Trio concertante, piano, violin, and violoncello, in E minor, Op. 119 - - - - - - - - | Spohr. |
| Quartet, in A, No. 5, Op. 18 - - - - - | Beethoven. |
| Solos, pianoforte. | |

Executants—1st violin, M. Ernst; 2nd violin, M. Goffrie; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Signor Piatti; pianist, Herr Hallé.

Mozart's ingenious and beautiful quartet was charmingly played by M. Ernst and his companions, and equally good was the young and fresh and charming work of Beethoven. A later quartet of the latter, however, would have made a stronger and more interesting contrast. M. Hallé's performance of the difficult pianoforte part in Spohr's first trio was masterly and spirited. Spohr's trios seem to be getting into vogue—a fact which should be consoling to our pianists, seeing how few available compositions of this especial class they have at disposal. The audience liked it, too. M. Hallé gave some solos at the end of the concert—which, though a quiet one, was unexceptionable—with his accustomed success.

---

LORTZING.—Lortzing's grave is marked by a simple stone, on which are engraved the date of his birth: 23rd October, 1803, that of his death, 21st January, 1851, and the following lines:—

"Sein Lied war deutsch, und deutsch sein Leid,
Sein Leben Kampf mit Noth und Neid:
Das Leid flieht diesen Friedensort,
Der Kampf ist aus—Sein Lied tönt fort!"

("His lays were German—German, his hard fate;
His life a struggle with grim want and hate—
But here reigns peace—his struggle is now past,
While deathless for all time his lays shall last!")

Both the tomb-stone and inscription are the offering of Herr Philip Düringer, régisseur of the Imperial Theatre, Vienna.

ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.

THE first concert for the season of this praiseworthy society took place on Monday afternoon, at Willis's Rooms, in presence of a select audience. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips, who were assisted by an efficient semi-chorus, composed as follows:—Sopranos—Miss Phillips, Mrs. Barnby, Miss Byers, and Mrs. Gouldsmith; Contraltos—Miss H. Phillips, Miss Cummings, Mrs. Beale, and Mrs. Grundy; Tenors—Messrs. M. Smith, Cummings, and Foster; Basses—Messrs. H. Barnby, Beale, Frost, Simmons, and Day.

The object of the Glee and Madrigal Union is to preserve from oblivion the masterpieces of our English school of vocal part songs—madrigals, glees, rounds, and catches—which have been too much placed in the back-ground, to give place to the modern German school of part-songs, which, on the whole, as the performances of the Cologne Choral Union amply testified, is neither so vigorous, so learned, nor so varied. We approve of this object, and shall do our best to support it. The following was the programme of the first concert:—

PART I.—Madrigal, "Flora now calleth forth each flower," S. Smith; Glee, "Discord," S. Webbe; Glee, "Blest pair of sirens," S. Smith; Glee, "The hunt is up," J. L. Hatton; Glee, "Where art thou, beam of light?" Sir H. R. Bishop; Glee and Chorus, "Hand in hand with fairy grace," Dr. Cooke.

PART II.—"All creatures now are merry minded," Benet; Glee, "Upon the poplar bough," Paxton; Glee, "When winds breathe soft," Webbe; Catch, "Would you know my Celia's charms?" S. Webbe; Glee, "The midges' dance," W. Knyvett; Madrigal, "In the merry spring," Ravenscroft.

Between the parts, Mr. J. L. Hatton, who presided at the pianoforte, performed, in a musician-like manner, the air with variations from Handel's Suites des Pieces in E major, familiarly known as the Harmonious Blacksmith.

Among the madrigals, we were most charmed with J. Benet's "All creatures now are merry minded," which is as pretty and fanciful as it is ingenious—one of the best, in short, of the many that were written in honour of "Good Queen Bess," under the romantic nickname of "Oriana." Mr. J. L. Hatton's glee, "The hunt is up" (founded upon an incident in the diary of Sir Thomas More's daughter,) is remarkably spirited and well written, and stood its ground successfully against the works of the older writers. On the whole, among the glees, it divided the favour of the audience with Webbe's beautiful "When winds breathe soft," and the animated glee and chorus of Dr. Cooke.

The execution, both of soloists and chorus, was irreproachable. There are to be three more concerts, with the interval of a week between each.

---

MDLLE. MARIE CRUVELLI, the contralto, sister of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli, has arrived in town for the season. Proposals have, we understand, been made to her for the Royal Italian Opera, to which establishment she would be a valuable acquisition. She has a beautiful contralto voice, and is both a good musician and an artistic singer.

ALBONI.—We read, in an Italian paper, that this celebrated contralto has refused an engagement to go to Rio Janeiro for ten months, in spite of an offer of two hundred thousand francs (£8,000), all expenses paid for herself and three other persons, a clear benefit, and her salary to date from the time of her starting.

M. EMILE PRUDENTS' LA CHASSE.—An introduction, containing one new effect, has been composed for this popular morceaux, by M. Prudent, and will be performed by the author at Mr. Jarrett's benefit this evening, at Drury-Lane Theatre. Sixteen performers on the horn have been engaged to give effect to the orchestral accompaniments.

SIG. GIOVANNI LANDI, the tenor, has signed an engagement for Venice for next spring. He then proceeds to Padua, and will sing at Genoa during the carnival of 1855.

SIG. NAPOLEONE ROSSI has been re-engaged for three years at the Italian Opera, in Paris.

Digitized by Google

Mrs. John Macfarren gave her last matinée of pianoforte and vocal music on Wednesday, at the New Beethoven Rooms, Queen Anne-street. The instrumental talent was first-rate, comprising Herr Ernst (violin), Mr. Lazarus (clarinet), Mr. A. Nicholson (oboe), Mr. C. Harper (horn), Mr. W. H. Holmes and Mrs. John Macfarren (pianoforte). The vocalists were Miss Agnes Büry, Miss Hughes, Mad. and Sig. F. Lablache. The programme was admirable, as, indeed, Mrs. John Macfarren's programmes generally are. The capital pieces were Mendelssohn's Allegro Brillante in A, Op. 92 (posthumous works, No. 21), for two performers on the pianoforte; Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 12, No. 3, for pianoforte and violin; and the same composer's quintet in E flat, Op. 16, for pianoforte, clarinet, oboe, horn, and bassoon. Besides taking part in the above morceaux, Mrs. John Macfarren performed individually Döhler's fantasia on Guillaume Tell, Chopin's Nocturne in E flat, "Les Murmures de la Seine," and Mayer's Etude de Concert, "La Fontaine." The fair pianist particularly distinguished herself in the sonata and quintet of Beethoven. In the rondo allegro molto of the former, her performance was brilliant and effective (by the way, how exquisitely beautiful Herr Ernst's tone was in the adagio con molto expressione!) and the andante cantabile of the latter pleased immensely, the pianoforte telling with great effect, especially in a chromatic scale and shake towards the end of the movement. Mrs. John Macfarren executed the two pleasing bagatelles of Chopin and Mayer with the right feeling and precision. Mdlle. Agnes Büry sang Mendelssohn's "Greeting" and "Spring Song," Mad. and Sig. F. Lablache sang the duet from Il Barbiere, "Dunque io Son," and Gnecco's buffo duet, "O guardate, che figura!" and Mad. F. Lablache introduced a new and pleasing ballad by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, entitled "Effie." Ernst played his beautiful "Elègie" in his finest and most pathetic manner. Mr. Walter Macfarren accompanied the vocal music with his accustomed talent.

Miss Dolby and Mr. Lindsay Sloper gave their annual morning concert, on Friday, the 9th instant, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The Orchestral Union, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, was engaged, and the concert, on the whole, was one of the most attractive of the season. The vocalists, besides Miss Dolby, were Madame Persiani, Miss Amy Dolby, and Signor Belletti. An apology was made for Mr. Sims Reeves, who was absent on account of indisposition. Herr Ernst played twice on the violin. The Orchestral Union, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, executed Mendelssohn's overture to Melusine, Auber's Zanetta, and Weber's Preciosa—all three to perfection. Mr. Lindsay Sloper performed Sterndale Bennett's splendid Concerto, in F minor, No. 4, and Chopin's very original Andante Spianato and Polonaise, with orchestral accompaniments. The Concerto was played by Mr. Lindsay Sloper with that perfect neatness which is the characteristic of his style, and produced a sensible impression among the audience, which was principally composed of ladies. Nevertheless, there was no lack of applause, the comparatively few gentlemen present making amends in their zeal and energy for want of numerical force. Chopin's Polonaise, too, was admirably played, and loudly applauded. Madame Persiani is still the queen of florid singers, as she abundantly proved on Friday evening. She sang the romance from Robert le Diable, "Vanne disse al figlio mio" ("Va, dit-elle")—which, by the way, is not florid at all; the aria, "Prendi per me," from L'Elisir d'Amore; and took part in the popular quartet from Rigoletto, and the duet—with Miss Amy Dolby—"Sull' aria," from Le Nozze di Figaro. The romance from Robert was charmingly given, and the aria from L'Elisir d'Amore was a display of execution, such as is rarely heard now-a-days on any stage or in any concert room. Miss Dolby sang the scena ed aria, "O memory, cease to grieve me," from Mr. Benedict's well known opera, The Brides of Venice—Mr. Benedict conducting the orchestra for the occasion; H. Leslie's new ballad, "Oh! let me sing to thee;" the "Lady and the Nightingale" of Mr. Lindsay Sloper; and the contralto part in the quartet from Rigoletto. Miss Dolby was in fine voice, and sang with equal facility and expression. Herr Ernst produced an immense effect in his two pieces—the Allegro Pathétique of his own composition—one of the most difficult, and at the same time most interesting morceaux ever written for the violin—and his own fantasia on the Airs Hongrois. Signor Belletti, among other things, sang the grand air from Jessonda, "Di Militari Onori," and Malatesta's comic air from Don Pasquale.

Mrs. Anderson's Concert.—The annual concert of Mrs. Anderson, pianist to Her Majesty the Queen and the Royal Family, took place in the Hanover-square Rooms, instead of, as usual, at the Royal Italian Opera. The chief point of interest in the programme was the performance of the lady herself, who, owing to an accident, has not, for some considerable time, appeared in public, and did not come forward last season, even at her own concert. Mrs. Anderson, who for a great many years has held a highly respectable rank both as a public performer and a private instructor, was greeted with the utmost warmth on appearing in the orchestra, and her performance of the pianoforte part in Beethoven's quintet in E flat, in which she was ably supported by MM. Barret, Williams, Baumann, and Puzzi, shewed that her accident had in no way injured her capabilities as a pianist. She was loudly applauded at the end. Another and a very admirable performance was that of Mrs. F. B. Jewson, who played Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante in B minor (beginning with the accompanied andante in the major) with the greatest intelligence and the most correct and fluent execution. Mrs. Jewson, though among the youngest, is already one of the most promising pianists of the day. A duo-concertante, by Thalberg and De Beriot, was played with great spirit on the pianoforte and violin by Mr. W. G. Cusins and M. Sainton, who also played in admirable style his own vivacious Tarantella. A great variety of popular vocal morceaux were sung by Mesdames Clara Novello, Nissen Salomon, Agnes Büry, Sedlatzek, Castellan, and Rudersdorff, Signors Gardoni and Belletti, Herren Pecz and Formes, Miss Louisa Pyne, and a Mr. Dawson. Signor Piatti also played a violoncello fantasia of his own. The band, selected from that of the Royal Italian Opera, performed the overture to Egmont, and the "Wedding March" of Mendelssohn, under the direction of Mr. Costa.

Mdlle. Annie de Lara, the young lady with the extraordinary voice, of whom we have had occasion to speak more than once in this journal, gave her first Annual Concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday evening last. Judging from the list of fashionables present, and the crowded state of the rooms, Mdlle. Annie de Lara must be regarded in high quarters, and gifted with that most enviable, and difficult to be obtained of all possessions, a large circle of friends. When we single out the names of Her Grace the Duchess of Argyle and Mr. Alfred Tennyson from the catalogue of visitors, the reader will comprehend the aristocratic and literary worth of the audience. Mdlle. Annie de Lara provided a goodly array of lady vocalists as co-efficients:—Mdlles. Rita Favanti, Cesarini, Messent, Brougham (sisters), Blanche Tudor, Eliza Valentine, and Mrs. Arthur Stone. The names of the gentlemen were not so sounding.—Messrs. Wrighton, Alfred Pierre, Allan Irving, Charles Cotton, Frank Bodda, M. Villot, and Sig. Onorati. The instrumentalists were—Mdlle. St. Marc (pianoforte), Mr. F. Chatterton (harp), Mr. Viotti Collins (violin), Mr. G. Collins (violoncello), and Mr. Bertioli (concertina). There were four conductors—Signor Pillotti, Herr Meyer Lutz, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, and Mr. Maurice Davies. It was a very long concert, so long, that the audience began to disappear at the commencement of the second part, thereby losing Mdlle. Annie de Lara's two best efforts, "La ci darem," and "Gin a body." Had the concert been shorter, the "fashionables" might have been tempted to remain. In the first part, Mdlle Annie de Lara sang the grand scena from Der Freischütz, "Softly sighs," and joined the clever and promising Mdlle. Cesarini in a duet by Gabussi. Acknowledging Mdlle. Annie de Lara's very original and peculiar vocal qualifications, we think it hardly right to pass comments on one so very young, and who has just entered on her career as a public singer. Excellence in singing was never yet attained by a mere child; and "phenomenons" are confined to instrumentalists. Let Miss Annie de Lara continue to study, and she may effect much with her voice, which is a rare one. She has youth and undoubted talent, and the field of success lies green before her. There were only three encores on Tuesday night, Mdlle. St. Marc, in Prudent's fantasia for the pianoforte, "Le Réveil des Fées;" Mr. Viotti Collins, in a violin solo; and Mr. F. Bodda, in "Largo al Factotum;" but everything Mdlle. de Lara sang was applauded.

Opera at the Surrey.—M. Halévy's grand opera, La Juive, is announced for performance next week at the Surrey theatre. Miss Sophie Lowe, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Mr. Elliot Galer, and Mr. Henri Drayton, are the principal singers.

Digitized by Google

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli has made her re-appearance, at the Grand Opera, as Julia, in La Vestale. She was warmly welcomed. La Juive is still in rehearsal for the début of Mdlle. Donati, a young French lady, with an Italian name. The persons connected with the theatre speak highly of her, but such reports are not always to be relied on. We are promised for next winter a new work by Sig. Verdi, who is now in the country, a few leagues from Paris, engaged in giving the finishing touch to his score. The new three-act comic opera, entitled La Fiancée du Diable, the words by the indefatigable M. Scribe, and the music by M. Victor Massé, has been produced with success at the Opéra-Comique. The execution, although not first-rate, was, on the whole, satisfactory. Mdlle. Boulard acquitted herself creditably as Catherine Bazu, and Mdlle. Lemercier made a seductive coquette, rejoicing in the name of Gilette. M. Ste. Foy was admirable in the part of the old miser Pistoïa, while MM. Puget, Bussine, and Couderc obtained their share of applause as Andiol, Mateo, and the Marquis de Langeais. The music is rather noisy at times, and too full of reminiscences, but otherwise pleasing.

The anniversary of Corneille's birth was celebrated last week at the Théâtre Français, on which occasion the celebrated author's Horace was given. Cinna was to have been played, but the bill was afterwards changed. Mdlle. Rachel was magnificent in the part of Camille, especially in the fourth act. After the tragedy, the great tragédienne recited M. T. de Banville's ode, entitled La Muse heroïque, which contains some lines full of feeling. The same event was also celebrated at the Odéon, by a little scene in verse, called La Muse de Corneille, which was warmly applauded. It was played by M. Rey and Madame Fernand. A one-act piece in verse, Le dernier Crispin, from the pen of M. Charles Lafont, author of the well-known Chef-d'œuvre Inconnu, has been produced with success. It was well acted by MM. Kime, Saint-Germain, Mdlles. Bérangère and Grangé.—The school of Spanish dancing is now flourishing at two theatres, the Gymnase and the Palais-Royal, being represented at the former by the Senora Perea Nena and the Senor Antonio Ruis, in a little comédie-vaudeville, by Don Jose Hernandez, entitled La Comédie au Château, and, at the latter, by the Senorita Vargas, in a vaudeville called Espagnalos y Boyardinos, by MM. Labiche and Marc Michel. The management of the Variétés continues as fertile as ever in novelties, having just added a fresh one, En trois Visites, by M. Bourdois, to its répertoire, and announced another in the form of a continuation of La Question d'Orient, for Saturday last. The new theatre, Les Folies Concertantes, under the direction of M. Hervé, is doing pretty well. Three new pantomimes, Le Joujou Electrique, Les Rivaux Intrépides, and Pierrot au Château, have been favourably received.

There is some talk of founding, at Bordeaux, a school of singing and declamation, the plans for which have been sent in to the municipal council by M. Cuvreau. The Corps Législatif has passed the vote of supply destined for the Ministère d'Etat, and comprising the subventions for the theatres, the Conservatory, and other institutions connected with the fine arts. The total receipts of the theatres, balls, and other exhibitions, during the past month, amounted to 1,077,490 francs. The separate items were as follows:—

| | Francs. |
|---|---|
| Imperial Theatres, subventionnés | 317,796 |
| Theatres of the second class | 615,179 |
| Concerts, balls, spectacles, and cafés-concerts | 90,605 |
| Various other exhibitions | 53,910 |
| | 1,077,490 |
| The receipts for April amounted to | 1,182,383 |
| Making a difference between the months of April and May, of | 104,893 |

In this diminution, the concerts, balls, etc., figure for 44,919 francs, and the theatres enjoying a subvention for 30,210 francs.

M. Ducroquet's new organ in the church of St. Eustache has been tried by several organists, among whom I may mention M. Lemmens, who came on purpose from Brussels, where he is organist to the King of the Belgians; M. Cavallo, organist at the church of St. Vincent-de-Paul; M. Bazile, and M. Franck.

M. Meyerbeer has at last left Paris for Berlin.

ROME.—On the 26th of May, the last act of Monti's new opera seria, Bianca Derossi, was played at the Teatro Argentino. Judging from the success obtained at this trial, we have no doubt that the whole opera will soon be produced. The scene takes place in a subterraneous passage, amidst tombs and fragments of ruins, the stage is lighted up by a few lamps, presenting to the eye a spectacle both gloomy and monotonous. It is not easy to judge of the action of a piece on being thus suddenly introduced to the climax without any preparation, nor can we give an opinion on the development of the characters. We are therefore obliged to judge of the pieces separately, and without any connecting link with the previous exposition, dropping the question of art altogether. This act begins with a chorus of men, a sort of funeral dirge, over the body of some defunct person, which went somewhat heavily owing to the time being taken too slowly. The chorus is followed by a prayer, sung by a woman in mourning weeds, the melody of which is plaintive and expressive. Madame de Giuli was warmly applauded, and the composer called for. Next follows a duet between the baritone and soprano, which was also well received, and in which Madame de Giuli and Cresci were encored; the opera terminates by a rondo, which brought the curtain down with great applause, the Maestro and singers being recalled.

ANCONA.—Three representations have fully established the success of Verdi's new opera, Giovanna d'Arco, which is described as one of his best works. The principal parts were played by Emilia Scotta, Carlo Negrini, and Crivelli. Madame Scotta created a great sensation as the French heroine, both by her singing and acting. She was recalled unanimously after each piece, and in the cavatina was greeted with several rounds of applause. This lady is considered as one of the most promising lyrical actresses of Italy and second only to Madame Frezzolini. We are delighted to hear it, but our doubts about this future star are cruelly put to the test when we read the following opinion on Sig. Negrini, who was heard, judged, and sentenced two seasons ago at Covent Garden: "Negrini is the most perfect Carlo that can be imagined; he excited the wonder and delight of the audience by the fullness of his tone, the richness of his voice, and still more by his inimitable accent, his energy, and the perfection of his acting." Hélas! if the Latin proverb, Ab uno disce omnes, be true, we must considerably abate from the superlatives bestowed on Madame Emilia Scotta. The decorations, scenery, and dresses in Verdi's opera are magnificent.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent).—At the Imperial Opera House, Verdi's I Masnadieri has been given with success, the principal parts by Mad. Medori, Herren Mirate, Debassini, Laura, and Pasi. This is my whole budget of news for the week. I question whether you will think it worth postage.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent).—Mad. Köster has taken her leave in the character of Fidelio. In spite of the fine weather, the house was crowded, and the audience testified their approbation by frequently applauding and calling her on during the representation, and at its conclusion. Fräulein Trietsch played Marcelline, Herr Mantius, Florestan, and Herr Zschiesche, Rocco.—Mad. Herrmann-Czillag made her second and last appearance as Fides in the Prophète. She was much applauded, especially in the cathedral scene, the duet with Bertha, and the trio in the last act. Fräulein Ney has appeared, for the first time in this city, as Norma, and fully justified the expectations of her talent which report had previously raised. The theatre was very well attended.

ST. PETERSBURGH.—A new song has been adapted to the national melody of Alexis Lvoff, and is much sung at present by the people and soldiery, as expressing the feelings and duties of the Russians. The following is a prose translation of this work of genius:—"Military Song.—Only he is worthy to live who does not fear death. The orthodox Russian warrior attacks the foe without stopping to count them. Whether you are Frenchmen, Englishmen, or simple Turks, come on! Infidels, we challenge you to combat. You are thirsting for the blood of the Faithful. God will chastise you through our means. Protectors of the heathens, may everlasting shame and confusion light upon you.—For the Czar and Russia we are ready to die. For the Czar and Russia will we spit you upon our bayonets. Courage is born in us; we do not fear death in the fight. The brave are pleasing to God, and find their reward in Heaven."

Digitized by Google

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—Herr L'Arronge has completed his operatic company for the theatres, in this town and Düsseldorf. The chorus consists of thirty-two persons. In July, Fräulein Johanna Wagner will fulfil a short "starring" engagement, and be succeeded, in August, by Herr Theodore Formes.

ERFURT.—Soller's Musikverein, under the direction of Herr J. Golde, effected wonders during the last winter season, and affords a convincing proof what may be done by proper attention to the orchestra and chorus, which constitute the quintessence of an association of this description. The works performed during the above-mentioned period were—Beethoven's Sinfonia Pastorale; Dr. Spohr's Double Symphony (for two orchestras); Haydn's Military Symphony; Franz Schubert's overture to Rosamunde; Herr Wagner's overture to Tannhäuser; Halévy's overture to the Val d'Andorre; Handel's oratorio of Joshua; Markull's oratorio, Das Gedächtniss der Entschlafenden (new); a hymn and chorus by Mendelssohn, and some choruses from Tannhäuser.

HAMBURGH.—Mozart's Titus has been admirably given. Fräulein Jenny Ney was excellent as Vitellia. This lady has been offered four hundred florins a-night for a short engagement at the Karnthnerthortheater, but has refused. She likewise played Fidelio, and took her leave of the public here as Valentine, in the Huguenots.—Fräulein Liebhart selected the character of Isabella, in Robert der Teufel, for her last appearance. She was greatly applauded.—Mad. Hermann-Czillag is shortly expected, and will open in the part of Fides.

STRASBURG.—There has not been much doing in the way of music since the closing of the theatre, which is undergoing a complete renovation, both inside and out. The estimated expense is about 40,000 francs, and the time requisite for the repairs from four to five months. There is a very brilliant future both for music and the drama in this city. By the will of M. Apffel, conceived in the following terms: "I leave and bequeath to the city of Strasburg, as a free gift for the advancement of dramatic and musical art in that city, the whole of my fortune, under the name of the dotation Apffel, etc.," the interest of above two millions of francs, which were to be allowed to accumulate for a period of eight years from the testator's death, will shortly be applied to the purposes above-mentioned. Independently of this, a sum of 80,000 francs has been voted by the town-council, by whom, also, a special school for the maintenance and instruction of the members of the chorus has been founded. Among the celebrities who have visited this city during the last month or two, have been MM. Ernst, Vieuxtemps, Johann Becker (from Mannheim), and Louis Lacombe, from Paris.

ROTTERDAM.—The committee of the grand Musical Festival, to be given by Die Gesellschaft der Beförderung der Tonkunst, the second week in July, have invited the following celebrities as honorary guests: Dr. Spohr (Cassel); Herr Schyder von Wartensee (Frankfort); Herren Schilling and Lindpaintner (Stuttgart); Herr Marschner (Hanover); Herr Hauptmann (Leipsic); M. Meyerbeer (Berlin); and Dr. Liszt (Weimar).

COLOGNE.—We are happy to announce the safe return of the "Männer Gesang-Verein" to Cologne. At Königsdorf, the next station to Cologne, they were met by a large party of their friends, who had brought with them a cask of wine, and then and there, with Rhenish wine, they inaugurated Her Majesty's handsome present.

NAPLES.—Petrella's opera, Elena di Tolosa, was produced on the 3rd inst., with Madame De Roissi, Pancani, and Giorgi Pacini. We were mistaken last week in announcing that the baritone would be Walter. We shall give further details of the success of the opera next week.

LEIPSIC.—A great number of "stars" have lately appeared here. Among them, Mad. Schnueiber-Kirchberger and Herr Staudigl are the most celebrated. The well-known basso has already appeared as Bertram, Sarastro, and Caspar.—The pianist, Herr F. von Kolb, and the violinist, Herr Otto von Königslöw, are here.

MEXICO.—Madame Steffanone, Signors Salvi, Rovere, Marini, and Rosi, have been playing at the Teatro Oriente. The opera announced for their début was I Puritani, but it was altered, owing to the indisposition of the lady, and Don Pasquale substituted. The business has not been great, on account of the rivality of the Teatro Imperiale Sant' Anna, at which Madame Sontag, who came out in the Sonnambula, is drawing crowded houses every night.

BRESLAU.—Herr Young, from the Stadttheater, Pesth, selected the part of Edgardo, in Lucia di Lammermoor, for his second appearance. He was favourably received, and well supported by Fräulein Geisthardt as Lucia.

DANZIG.—The brothers Wiemawsky have been playing with their usual success. Fräulein Johanna Wagner has appeared in the operas of I Montecchi e Capuletti, Lucrezia Borgia, and Le Prophète.

HANOVER.—Mad. Sophie Förster, in the most obliging manner, during Mad. Caradori's recent visit, gave up the first part in Mozart's Davidde Penitente to the last-mentioned lady, in consequence of the scarcity of principal singers, taking herself the second part. To make up for this, two airs of Händel were assigned to Mad. Förster, and in the oratorio of Israel she sang the first part.

PRAGUE.—Herr Lukes, from Vienna, has been engaged as first tenor, and selected the part of the Duke, in Rigoletto, for his first appearance.

MUNICH.—The terms on which Fraülein Schwarzbach has been engaged, are 5000 florins annual salary, including her Spielhonorar (feux), and also the providing her own wardrobe. She is to be allowed six weeks' holidays every year.

ROUEN.—A mass, by M. Kervoitte, has been performed at Rouen, M. Alexis Dupont singing the solos.

BASLE.—This season, the Gesangverein, under the direction of Herr Reiter, have performed Haydn's Seasons in a satisfactory manner. M Prudent, the pianist (now in London), also gave concerts here.

MODENA.—The summer season commenced on the 28th ult., with Mose in Egitto, interpreted by the Signore Teresa Brambilla, Marilta Armunde, and the Signori Galvani (tenor), Corsi (barytone), and Didot (basso profondo). The execution in general was good; the principal applause was for the duet between the tenor and the baritone, and the finale of the third act.

FERRARA.—At the Teatro Comunale, the new opera La Gismonda, of Antonio Mezzolani, (libretto by Dr. F. Barbi Cinti), has been represented with Signora Salvini Donatelli, the tenor Stefani, and the basso Baraldi. This work did not obtain great "honours" for its composer, although he was warmly applauded and recalled. Verdi's Trovatore will be the third opera of the season.

STUTTGART.—Fräulein Garrigues has appeared in Die Jüdin, and I Montecchi e Capuletti.

BRESCIA.—At the Teatro Grande, Roberto il Diavolo, has been represented, with Signora Gambardella (Alice), the tenor Ghislanzoni (Roberto), and the basso profondo, Nerini (Beltrame). The voice of the last-named artist is well adapted for this part, and he obtained enthusiastic applause.

CREMONA.—The first new opera, La Donna Bianca d'Avenello, of the young Maestro Cesare Gallieri, pupil of the I. R. Conservatorio di Musica, Milano, has been produced here with great success. This, his first operatic work, is full of great promise, and shows that he must have studied zealously and well.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—In perusing, as is my wont, the columns of your cleverly edited journal, I was somewhat struck with the very ingenious though exaggerated statements of a correspondent signing himself "W. C. DALE," on the subject of Organists' salaries.

Now, although agreeing with Mr. Dale that organists, as a general rule, are not underpaid in proportion to their work, I cannot allow that gentleman to assert that an organist in receipt of 50 guineas per annum is actually paid at the rate of £1200. Your correspondent has erred in calculating BY HOURS. He should have said that an organist works but one day in six (not counting Sunday, as being a general holiday to the masses) and that a salary of 50 guineas per annum for one day's work out of six is, in point of fact, equal to 300 guineas—no bad pay now-a-days for a young man in any situation or employment. I think this view of the case is nearer the truth than Mr. Dale's.

Your obedient servant and constant reader,

17, Throgmorton Street, ARCHIBALD MORRIS.
25 May, 1854.

Digitized by Google

THE MUSIC AT THE OPENING OF THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Is there a musician in England who could, if required, properly conduct the execution of the "Hallelujah" Chorus, the Old Hundreth Psalm, and "God save the Queen," by an orchestra of a thousand performers, at the opening of the Crystal Palace? If there be so talented an individual in this country, is it not a national shame and disgrace, that for this peculiarly national undertaking, a foreigner should be selected as musical conductor?

Is there any other nation in Europe that would adopt such a course under similar circumstances? No. Never would it have been imagined to appoint a foreigner—no matter what his qualifications—to direct English performers, in English music, at the inauguration of a building so gloriously calculated in every respect to give the world a large idea of the power, wealth, science, and enterprise of Englishmen. How long will our countrymen be content to assert their superiority only in the workshops or in the tented-field, and yield the artistic supremacy to Germany, Italy, or France, according to the caprice of the hour?

When will our rich and influential countrymen, who have it in their power so often materially to advance the cause of English music and English musicians, be sufficiently patriotic to exclude foreigners from those posts of honour and emolument which it should be the pride and boast of Englishmen worthily to fill?

Foreign nations will never respect our musical talents—will never believe in us at all as a musical people—if we quietly submit to every act which insinuates our incapacity. The united musicians of our land ought to protest against this violation of their rights at the Crystal Palace. Surely, sir, it would be no very difficult task to convince the directors that there really are English musicians at hand who can conduct a performance of the National Anthem, and the Old Hundreth Psalm, without the aid of a foreigner. I enclose my card, and am, sir,

Leeds, June 7th, 1854. AN ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR—It appears to me, the manager of the Sacred Harmonic Society has bowled out the conductor and amateur singers of the New Philharmonic Society, in about the same way as the members of the London Sacred Harmonic Society were served on the opening of the Exhibition, in 1851, when the conductor, Mr. Surman, proposed to furnish the Chorus upon the conditions, that the professional members of the Society be paid for their services, and that the amateurs would assist.

The peculiar circumstance, I believe, that induced the Royal Commissioners to decline the services of the New Philharmonic Society, was that the manager of the Sacred Harmonic Society agreed to expend a certain sum, to be allowed to have the job; and a regular job it was, on the present occasion, to pay amateur choristers, from the provinces, 30s. and £2 each, as a Train Fare; when the services of professional choristers, residing in London, might have been obtained for rehearsal and performance, at 15s. each.

I am, Sir,

Yours respectfully,

Tuesday, June 13th, 1854. A PROFESSIONAL CHORISTER.

GILBERT NOT MENDELSSOHN.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR—Will you have the kindness to correct an error in the last publication of your journal, wherein you mention (speaking of a concert given by Mr. Alfred Gilbert), a four-part song as being the composition of Mendelssohn, when, in fact, it is from the pen of

Sir,

Your obliged servant,

13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. BENNETT GILBERT.

THE BROTHERS HOLMES.—These talented young violinists have received two most flattering testimonials from Dr. Spohr and Herr Lindpaintner, expressing a high opinion of their talents, and stating the great pleasure these two masters experienced at hearing them perform on several occasions during their recent stay in London.

MR. CLEMENT WHITE.

THE friends of this highly respected artist will be pleased to learn that he is not idle in his new home, at Sydney, in South Australia, but that probably by this time he is giving a series of vocal entertainments in that city. In a Sydney journal, The Empire bearing date Monday, March 20, 1854, the following announcement is inserted, the perusal of which will be gratifying to those who desire to receive authentic information on the subject.

"MECHANICS' SCHOOL OF ARTS.

"On TUESDAY EVENING next, March 21st, at Eight o'clock, in the above Hall,

MR. CLEMENT WHITE, late of the Theatres Royal Drury Lane and Covent Garden, London, will give a VOCAL ENTERTAINMENT, entitled Recollections of England, Scotland, and Ireland; or, 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

"PROGRAMME.

"Part First.—Song, 'Lord Donald,' Clement White; Song, 'The Bloom is on the Rye,' Sir H. R. Bishop; Song, 'Annie Laurie,' Scotch; Song, 'Draw the Sword, Scotland,' Scotch; Song, 'Kathleen O'More,' Irish; Song, 'Kitty Creagh,' S. Lover.

"Part Second—Songs for Australia.—Song, 'The Australian Lover,' Clement White; Song, 'Down by the Yarra Yarra!' Clement White; National Song, 'Australia!' Clement White; Song, 'Since the Weary Day' (adapted by) Clement White; Song, 'Far, Far upon the Sea,' (adapted by) Clement White.

"Tickets (price Two Shillings; Reserved Seats, Three Shillings) together with Programmes, may be had of Messrs. H. Marsh and Co., W. J. Johnson, Buist, Woolcott and Clarke; of Mr. White, 5, Crown-street, Woolloomoolo; and of Mr. Mansfield, Secretary to the Institution."

Wishing success to Mr. Clement White in his undertaking, we trust to be enabled shortly to offer our readers more particular details about his entertainments, and his general progress on the other side of the globe.

WHITSUNTIDE AT AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—THE NIEDER-RHEINISCHER MUSIK-FEST.

(From a Correspondent.)

WE arrived at the birthplace of Charlemagne on Friday, June 2, in time to attend some of the rehearsals—the last four with full band and chorus being thrown open to the public at a small charge, a hint, we think, festival directors in England might profit by, as on each occasion the house was crammed.

The Fest commenced on Sunday Evening with Israel in Egypt, preceded by Gluck's overture to Iphigenia in Aulis, which, being very Handelian in style, made a most suitable introduction to the oratorio. As far as concerned the band and chorus, which amounted to nearly 500 performers, we imagine, so perfect a performance of this most difficult masterpiece of the great master had hitherto never been attained. Nearly three-fourths of the chorus were amateurs resident in Aix-la-Chapelle. Great credit is due to Herr C. von Turanyi, by whom, for the last six months, they have been regularly drilled. Here's a lesson for our "Harmonic Societies."

When Israel has been properly rehearsed, but not till then, may we hope to have it as well performed in England. We were much pleased with the singing of Madame Findorff, of Crefeld. She gave the aria, "Thou shalt bring them in," to perfection. Her style is pure, and her voice at times forcibly reminded us of Miss Dolby. Herren Pischek and Büssel gained an encore in the duet, "The Lord is a Man of War," an event as rare in Germany, as it is absurdly common in England.

The second concert commenced with Lindpaintner's overture to Genueserin, and the finale to the first act of his Vampyr, both fine specimens of classical operatic writing. Then came Beethoven's Symphony in A major, No. 7, of which we can only say, if perfection is to be found in human nature, we think we had it here, both in the music and its performance. The concert terminated with Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, and Mozart's Davidde Penitente. A further hearing of this last magnificent work quite confirmed the opinion given of it in a late number of the Musical World. In this and the Vampyr Madame Caradori sustained her part in her usual artistic manner, and fully realized the expectations of the Aacheners, who had heard so much of her performances in London.

Digitized by Google

Concert No. 3, after the overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, Herr C. von Turanyi played Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major, and showed, by his performance, that he was quite justified in attempting so difficult a work.

M. Vieuxtemps' concerto in D minor proved a most agreeable treat. It is a very fine composition, consisting of an Introduzione, Andante Religioso, Scherzo, and Allegro Marziale. The movements are well worked out, and the whole admirably scored. It was played by the composer, as we suppose few others can play it; and was quite sufficient to show that M. Vieuxtemps is a perfect master of his instrument, without introducing any of the mere fiddling, with which he afterwards favoured us in Paganini's La Streghe. Madame Caradori pleased much in Beethoven's "Ah perfido," and in an aria of Mercadante. Ditto Madame Findorff in an aria of ditto. We must not forget to make very honourable mention of Herr Pischek, who charmed us even more than when we heard him some years since in London. Herr Lindpaintner and M. Vieuxtemps received liberal ovations of Fest-Lieder, and bouquets from the ladies of the Choir. Besides the concerts we had numerous fashionable réunions, and the Fest concluded with a grand ball, to which the performers in the concerts were invited.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE between MR. SURMAN and DR. WYLDE, on the subject of the music in the Crystal Palace in Hyde Park, on the last day of the Great Exhibition of 1851, has not sufficient interest at the present time to warrant us in inserting it. We have published the letter of "CHORISTER."

SIG. CARLO MINASI'S "Specification" will be noticed in our next.

The QUARTET ASSOCIATION, HERR NAUMANN'S New Oratorio, the SOCIETY OF FEMALE MUSICIANS, and other entertainments, will be noticed next week.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 17TH, 1854.

THE opening of the new Crystal Palace at Sydenham, on Saturday the 10th inst., will never be forgotten by those who were lucky enough to be present. It is not in the province of a musical paper, however, to describe a ceremony which, though of the highest consequence to the whole world, had no exclusive reference to music and its professors. We leave that to the great journals, whose columns have been filled with records of the event, and essays upon its moral and political importance. Our business is with one especial department, and we have a few observations to make upon the manner in which that was represented at the Crystal Palace.

The whole management of the musical part of the ceremony was vested in the hands of the Sacred Harmonic Society, whose committee acted in strict obedience to Mr. Costa. How much was expected, how much was promised, and how little was done, are now matters of history. The number of executants was supposed to be something under 1700, vocalists and instrumentalists. Whether the "1700" were of the same musical substantiability as the "800" of Mr. Surman and the "700" of Mr. Costa, at Exeter hall, however, we shall not pretend to say. Suffice it they made an imposing and formidable appearance in the orchestra erected for the occasion (by some eminent architect, "under the direction of Mr. Costa"), in the middle transept. Her Majesty sat on a dais, where she had a full-length view of the conductor, and was in a capital place to enjoy the effect of the music, and to be seen and admired by the privileged few who possessed the advantage of reserved places, the peculiar construction of which prevented the "40,000" outside from beholding either their Queen, or getting a glimpse at any part of the ceremony. This was the "order of the day." It was a solemn inauguration of a mighty epoch in the annals of the world, and was only witnessed by a few;—a great public ceremony which the great public were not allowed to see. If the "40,000" could only have had a peep at Mr. Costa, they would at least have had something to talk about. In the ranks of the chorus, Lablache, and a host from the Italian and German operas, occupied conspicuous places. No end of amateurs from the provinces who profess to be singers or players, and no end of amateurs both provincial and metropolitan who profess nothing of the kind, were stationed in the orchestra. Some of the directors of the Philharmonic Society (the old Philharmonic—Mr. Costa does not "recognise" the new Philharmonic, any more than he "recognises" the music of Sterndale Bennett) were among the chorus, for what purpose, and through what interest, we are unable to say. All we have to urge on this head is the somewhat important fact, that those amateurs who—no matter through what influence—took part, or presumed to take part, in the chorus, and those persons who were there without doing active service, entailed a loss of two guineas each on the company of the Crystal Palace; since, but for the position accorded them among the vocalists and instrumentalists, they must have purchased season tickets, in order to be present on the grand occasion. How many such were "privileged," we leave to the committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society, who monopolised the job, to answer.

After all that had been said and done, in anticipation, of what was the programme ultimately composed? Here it is:—

"The National Anthem—solos by Mdme. Clara Novello.
The 100th Psalm.
The 'Hallelujah' chorus.
The National Anthem—solos by Mdme. Clara Novello."

That was all. And how were these pieces executed, which were considered so difficult that the committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society were compelled to engage an Italian conductor to direct them? With one exception—the magnificent singing of Clara Novello, an Englishwoman, whose clear and powerful soprano resounded through the Palace, and filled it to the extremities with delicious sounds, which reverberated again and again, until the ears of the "40,000" were so ravished, that they forgot they could see nothing, and every heart was bursting with loyalty and patriotism—with this one exception, it was wholly unworthy of the occasion. The Hundredth Psalm, as more than one informed us, who had assisted at both ceremonies, was better sung at the Dublin Exhibition, last year. The "Hallelujah," the sublimest of all hymns of exultation and thanksgiving, was taken so slow, that in some parts it might very well have served for a dirge. Moreover, the new brass band of foreigners, conducted by Herr Schallehn, a foreigner, was seldom in time, and always out of tune with the choir; and the parts for all sorts of brass instruments, added to the score by some bold and uncompromising hand, helped rather to mystify than augment the effect of Handel's tremendous pæan, which, had an English musician been appointed conductor, would have been left alone in its glory. In one place, we thought, the brass band came in a bar too soon; but, of course, that must have been an error of apprehension, or a fault of hearing. Let it pass for as much and no more.

Digitized by Google

Such was the effect of the "1,700" vocalists and instrumentalists, organised by "the greatest musical society," and marshalled by "the greatest musical conductor" throughout the length and width of Europe, with the object of illustrating, by a musical performance on an unprecedented scale, one of the grandest and most auspicious events in the history of the world. The National Anthem was prodigious—simple, impressive, and sublime, as the National Anthem must be on every solemn occasion where the pulse of a nation beats in response to those words of loyalty, devotion, and love of country in the person of its highest representative, the Sovereign. But then, there was Clara Novello—that high and exquisite, that thrilling, piercing, long-sustained B flat, one note, itself a melody no lark or nightingale could match, is still ringing in our ear, "the trumpet of a prophecy" of peace and love and plenty to the world! —there was Clara Novello, with the throat of a bird, the voice of an angel, and the enthusiasm of a patriot. And then the "40,000" beyond the barriers, some with rough and honest, some with sweet and touching, others with as good and powerful and well intoned voices as any of the "1,700" set before Her Majesty, echoed and re-echoed the heart-moving strains, till "God save the Queen" was as the one universal cry of a mighty people, declaring its freedom, its honour, its greatness, its power, its large heart that yearns to the world, and its love for the gracious and illustrious lady whose mild and affectionate sway is at once its happiness and its appeal.

The policemen themselves, against all admitted etiquette, took off their hats. It was too much for them. They are human, like the ministers and Mr. Costa; and they could not rest unmoved. But what means a great contemporary, who, describing this incident so worthy of remembrance, asserts that it was an unconscious "compliment to Madame Novello and Mr. Costa?" Did Mr. Costa compose the National Anthem? Did Mr. Costa sing the National Anthem?

We believe there is not one nation upon the earth except the English nation, that, at such a moment, would have been at a loss for a native musician to direct the performance of the National Anthem, the Hundredth Psalm, and the "Hallelujah" chorus. It is deplorable to be made aware—by the joint decision of the Crystal Palace Company and the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society—of our gross deficiency in this respect, which made it absolutely imperative to engage an Italian. Where was Sir George Smart? Surely Sir George—pitying the destitute condition of his compatriots and fellow-musicians—would have consented to resume the bâton, which he wielded so long and so successfully at our festivals and other musical performances, on such a day, in such a presence, and for such an event. We might then have had the "Hallelujah" in the proper time, without a new-fangled brass band, and without Herr Schallehn.

---

Where is the money to come from? Without money it is no use talking. Find your money, and begin. Money can lease, or buy, or build a theatre; money can set it a-going; money can keep it on its legs; in short, money can do anything.

We are "a nation of shop-keepers." The stigma is, unhappily, too well founded to excite anger. We are "a nation of shop-keepers," and as "a nation of shop-keepers" we must look at the question of a National Opera. If we do not, we examine it with other eyes than our own, and the conclusion we arrive at helps us to nothing. This view of the matter, however, by no means induces despair. On the contrary, we are for continuing the agitation in every possible quarter, and by every possible means. If the government inclines in the end, so much the better, if not, so much the worse; but whether or not, it very little affects the real question. For our own parts we have no hope of any assistance or encouragement from the State, which persists in regarding all public amusements not as necessities of home policy, but as speculations of private individuals. The State does not consider itself in any manner concerned in the interests of private individuals. The State allowed the National Drama to die of exhaustion, without holding out a helping hand; and yet the national drama is represented by Shakspere and a dazzling array of great names that have made our stage literature the richest and noblest in the world. The National Opera, unfortunately, is represented with no such distinction. Purcell, Arne, and Bishop —these are our traditions; and, as far as the stage is concerned, the present influence of their works is insignificant. What right, therefore, have we to ask the State to do for the National Opera what the State neglected to do for the national drama?—for Purcell, Arne, and Bishop, what was not done for Shakspere, Congreve, and Sheridan?

Agitate, agitate, agitate! Talk continually, and everywhere. Endeavour to prove that a National Opera is a public want, that the speculation would pay, and amidst "a nation of shop-keepers" it is odd if some responsible persons do not come forward with money, and plenty of it. We must confess, after reading attentively the correspondence with which we have been lately deluged, and especially a letter signed "Lover of Music," which is too long to publish, that we cannot see what the arguments have to do with the subject. It seems to us of little consequence, at this step of the discussion, how many fiddlers and how many singers are to constitute the troop. Get your theatre—or rather, catch your speculators, and then discuss such matters in detail. At present they are impertinent to the question. We must also enter a protest against the idea of some of our correspondents, that the National Opera, when it comes into existence, is to be a theatre for the essays of beginners. This would be a sad mistake. The public of London are too knowing to pay for a series of experiments. We do not mean that no first works should be tried; but we cannot possibly agree that every young composer who has a manuscript opera in his portfolio should consider himself aggrieved if it be not forthwith accepted by our National Opera. Our National Opera would soon be bankrupt, if such a policy were adopted. No; all success depends upon the fortune of war. The notion of an individual having any positive claim upon a theatre, beyond that derived from a well-earned reputation, is preposterous. Reputations are obtained in all sorts of manners. Everyone has his throw, and for him who is blessed by the stars the dice turn up a favourable number. If each composer who had a work completed were led to suppose that he possessed an absolute claim upon the National Opera, the direction would be saddled with at least a hundred in a season.

Our idea of a National Opera is the same as the French idea. The Grand Opéra and the Opéra Comique—these are National Operas. They are national, because it is understood that the French language shall be the medium of interpretation, not that French composers and French executants alone shall be engaged. The love of music has spread far too widely and rapidly to admit of any such narrow ground of action. In England the failure of the Society of British Musicians branded the system as a mistake, founded upon egotism and petty selfishness. Those who dread competition should keep indoors. This is the age of competition; competition stalks the streets, and the principle of free trade has been established irrevocably. A National English Opera, therefore, means an Opera with the English language as the medium of interpretation, for which original works shall be composed by the musicians of Europe, and executed by the artists of Europe, the best that can be secured, according to the means of the establishment.

Digitized by Google

Our musicians have long been falling into the error of the protectionists. Their cry has been "Save us; we are ruined by the foreigners." To speak advisedly, this is all "fudge." If the "native" have no better argument, he had better hold his tongue. Why should the native musician be protected any more than the native greengrocer? It is the public who should be protected against the inflictions of mediocrity. A nice thing, indeed, to have a National Opera from which Mendelssohn, had he lived, would have been excluded, on the grounds that he was a foreigner; or Malibran, for the same reason. There are very few Mendelssohns, and very few Malibrans; certainly none in Europe now, much less in England; and this is a strong reason why we should welcome them with avidity wherever we can find them. A National Opera should be an example, not a seminary; a point to look forward to as the goal, not a place for the unfledged to try their wings. The best artists and the best music should be heard there, while the young and inexperienced should go to listen and improve. We would not give a farthing for any other kind of national opera than one to which merit alone should be the passport of safe conduct. Imagine the London public, blasé and satiated, patronising a theatre in which the staple entertainment is to be a series of undigested works, performed by a company of mediocre artists, whose only badge of distinction is having been born in England! The notion is ridiculous—in 1854 especially. The Crystal Palace has towered over all such prejudice and bigotry. The Crystal Palace has fixed for ever and ever the principle of free trade—to oppose which now argues unmanliness or imbecility.

English musicians—composers, singers, players—take a better and a wiser view of the question. Work hard, support each other, speak the truth, abhor cliques, agitate, and something will turn up. If you imagine that the public will pay to see an opera because it is composed by a Briton, or to hear a singer because he was born in these realms, instead of because the opera is good, and the singer talented, you will be out in your reckoning. Such a speculation will never answer. Common sense, liberality, free trade, and the march of intellect are all against it. Compete with the foreigner in talent, and beat him if you can. It is no use making faces, and saying "I am an Englishman." The public, to be amused, does not care a straw for your nationality. Moreover, recollect that it is to the foreigner we owe the present advanced condition of our musical taste. Before Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Rossini, Auber, Spohr, and Mendelssohn were familiar to this country, the Siege of Belgrade, the Haunted Tower, and the Cabinet, were boldly entitled operas, while now they would simply be announced as "plays interspersed with songs." Owing so much to the foreigners, having learned so much from them, that we are now capable not only to understand, but to criticise, do not let us arraign them as enemies, do not let us kick down the ladder up which we have climbed. The fact of musical talent existing largely in England, none acquainted with the matter can deny. It is our duty to make the best of it, which can only be effected by labour, courage, and perseverance. The cry against the foreigner is simply calculated to raise an echo in derision.

---

VIVIER.—This eminent artist has already become the vogue in our fashionable and aristocratic circles, where his playing has produced the greatest effect. On Monday night, he performed at a brilliant réunion at the residence of Miss Wranghom, in Arlington-street. Mr. Benedict presided, and Mad. Bosio, Signors Gardoni and Ciabatta sang. M. Vivier introduced, among other things, a nocturne of his own composition, which was as much admired for its own intrinsic beauty as for the excellence of the playing. On Wednesday evening, at another grand soirée, given by Mrs. Frere May, at her residence in Grosvenor-square, when Mr. Benedict again directed, and Mad. Viardot, Mad. Bosio, Signors Mario, Gardoni, Belletti, and Lablache appeared, besides a solo, M. Vivier played the obbligato horn accompaniment to his exquisite romance, "La Plainte," which Mad. Viardot sang to perfection. Signor Mario, we understand, is also about to take "La Plainte" under his powerful protection—whereof the composer is not likely to complain.

---

REVIEWS.

"BELISARIO"—Grand duet for the pianoforte—by ADOLPH GOLLMICK. "MINERVA"—Grand valse—Ditto. "FAREWELL"—for the pianoforte—Ditto. "EUROPA"—Galop de Concert—Ditto. "CHANSON A BOIRE"—Ditto.—Boosey and Sons.

As a composer of light and elegant music for the drawing-room, the author of these pieces holds a distinguished rank among contemporary musicians. Herr Gollmick is a good pianist, and writes with a thorough knowledge of the instrument. He is never common-place, and even in his least ambitious efforts there is always an evident feeling of refinement, which shows itself in various ways, and while it often leads him into a graceful distribution of his ideas, prevents him from falling into the vulgar path, which so many composers of morceaux de salon find it hard, if not impossible to avoid. None of the pieces before us are difficult; yet all of them are showy and effective, and while each has its individual character, each contains some pretty and striking thought, some novel passage, and some nice instance of harmony which betrays the musician of taste.

"Belisario" is a brilliant piece for four hands, consisting of a short introduction, a theme with three variations, and a vigorous march for coda. The second variation, in D flat, is particularly effective. Whether the two themes are from Donizetti's Belisario we are unable to say, not being familiarly acquainted with that opera. Their origin is not indicated in the title of the duet. They are both good.

"Minerva" is a dashing and energetic waltz, in the key of E flat, also for two performers. The first subject is rhythmical and well adapted for dancing, although the piece is rather a danse de concert, like Weber's Invitation à la valse, than anything else. The second subject, in D flat, consists simply of a scale of three and four octaves, alternately, introduced with excellent effect. An episode, beginning in G flat, and modulating back to the original key, is graceful and pretty.

The "Farewell" is a very pleasing andante, in the style of a song without words, with a short introduction and a brilliant coda. For connoisseurs, this morceau, which is in the key of E major, is likely to have more attractions than the others.

"Europa" is an animated galop in E flat, with a florid and effective episode in the subdominant, easy to play and agreeable to listen to.

So far as what is termed "character" is concerned, the "Chanson à Boire" (also in E flat) has more chance of enlisting the popular ear, and acquiring general favour, than any of its companions. The second motive, in A flat, is charming and well developed. The whole is easy and fluent, and admirably suited to players of moderate capacity, who prefer something new and fresh to the eternal fantasias, and airs with variations, under which the shelves of music-publishers have been groaning for the last quarter of a century.

Digitized by Google

Altogether we may compliment Herr Gollmick on these pieces, which, without any appearance of pretence, are graceful and pleasant—as good things of their kind, indeed, as need be sought for.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Saturday the Prophète was repeated. The house was by no means crowded at the commencement, owing to the opening of the Crystal Palace; but before the end of the first act the subscribers pretty well filled the boxes, so that there was an elegant, if not an "overflowing" audience. The performance suffered from the inability af Mdlle. Marai to sing, owing to a sudden and severe attack of cold. With the best intentions, she appeared in the first act, and endeavoured to join Mad. Viardot in the duet "Della Mosa;" but her voice was powerless, and she wisely refrained from any further exertion. The scene preceding the coronation, in the third act, was omitted; and the last act was curtailed of the duet and trio in the dungeon. Notwithstanding this serious drawback, however, the opera passed off with the greatest éclat, and was received throughout with enthusiasm.

Madame Viardot has certainly derived benefit from her long repose. Her voice is more even in tone, better in quality, and more at command than when she last appeared at Covent Garden. This was particularly evident in the extremely difficult bravura song, which Fides sings in the prison scene of the last act, which was given by Madame Viardot with a power and energy we have seldom heard her exceed. The andante, too, which precedes the bravura, when Fides laments the degradation of her son, was extremely earnest and pathetic. The whole performance of Madame Viardot, indeed, was in her best style, and produced a sensible effect upon the audience.

Signor Tamberlik, on this occasion, surpassed himself in the character of the Prophet, and acted and sang so magnificently, that even the most exclusive admirers of Sig. Mario, his gifted predecessor in the part, must have felt perfectly satisfied. The fact is, that Sig. Tamberlik has, so to say, grown into the character of Jean of Leyden; and it is now one of his most finished assumptions. The grand air and chorus, "Re del cielo, e de beati," and the drinking song, "Beviam, beviam," were both delivered with uncommon force, and with an ease and composure that enhanced their effect. The last, which, like "Corriamo" ("Suivez-moi"), in Guillaume Tell, invariably detains the whole audience to the end of the opera, was enthusiastically redemanded. No exertion can tire Sig. Tamberlik, or enfeeble his voice, and he repeated the air with increased vigour and effect.

On Monday—a subscription night, in place of September 5th—Lucrezia Borgia was given for the second time. Grisi was quite as great as on the Friday previous, and Sig. Mario, though a little cautious at the commencement of the opera (no bad judge by the way), was more transcendent than ever in the last scene. The acting both of Grisi and Mario in their absorbing situation could not have been excelled. Signor Ronconi was a worthy compeer of the "incomparable pair," and made some new and striking points in Duke Alfonso, which is, on the whole, one of the subtlest, and most masterly performances of this great artist.

On Tuesday, the Prophète was repeated for the third time; and on Thursday, in place of the Huguenots which had been announced—not Lucrezia Borgia, which was advertised instead—but the second and third acts of the Prophète, followed by the last act of the Barbiere, with Signor Luchesi as Almaviva, were presented. This time Grisi was ill, an event which happens so seldom that the audience submitted very gracefully to the change. This weather, so changeable, capricious, and seldom pleasant, is a thorough plague to foreigners, and especially to singers, who are as tender as chickens, and as shrinking as the sensitive plant.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

Mozart's comic opera—or "opera semi-seria," as it is half-seriously termed in some of the printed scores—Die Entführung aus dem Serail, or Belmonte und Constanze, as it was named when first produced—or Il Ratto dal Seraglio, alias Il Seraglio, alias Belmonte e Constanza, as it is variously denominated in the Italian—or, Der Serail, as it is entitled in the books of the theatre, upon what authority we cannot say—was produced on Wednesday evening, by the German company, at Drury Lane, with decided and well-merited success. Though seldom produced in England, Die Entführung is frequently performed in Germany, where it is highly esteemed. In 1827, an English version, under the title of The Seraglio, was brought out at Covent Garden, under the direction of M. Kramer, with a translation of the book by Mr. Dimond. The music, however, and the piece, were so altered, and so many additions and retrenchments made, that the opera was no longer Mozart's. The Seraglio was but coldly received by the public, and, after a few representations, laid aside.

Die Entführung aus dem Serail was composed at the request of Joseph II., Emperor of Austria, and was produced at Vienna, July 12th, 1782, two years after Idomeneo. The Emperor was desirous of establishing German opera on the same footing as Italian, which was then all the rage in Vienna; and he hoped to accomplish his object with the assistance of Mozart, whose musical fame at the time was making itself known throughout Germany. Die Entführung is the first German Opera worthy of the name which has been handed down to us, the musical pieces which preceded it in the native tongue being merely comediettas, with music interspersed, something in the style of English ballad-operas. The drama on which the libretto of Die Entführung was founded was itself one of these comediettas, with some airs and incidental music interspersed. Mozart gave the libretto—which was sent him by the Emperor—to Herr Stephani, a German dramatic and lyric poet, and the poet and musician together constructed upon it the present version of Die Entführung aus dem Serail.

The story has very little interest. Constanze (Mdme. Rudersdorff), a young Spanish lady, on her voyage to Sicily to be married to Belmonte (Herr Pecz), is taken by an Algerine corsair, sold to a Turkish Pasha (Herr Hölzel), and conveyed to his seraglio, in company with her maid Blonde (Mdlle. Agnes Büry), an English soubrette, and Pedrillo (Herr Castelli), the servant of Belmonte. The Pasha becomes desperately in love with his new purchase, and would fain make her the queen of his harem. He woos her, however, with gallantry, in spite of Constanze's declaration that her heart is unalterably devoted to another. At the commencement of the opera, Belmonte, who has discovered where Constanze is imprisoned, gains an interview with Pedrillo, his old servant. Having won the Pasha's favour, on account of some little skill he possesses in gardening, Pedrillo enjoys a greater amount of liberty than generally falls to the lot of slaves. The master and servant determine to run off with Constanze and Blonde, and escape to Spain in a vessel which Belmonte has engaged, and which is lying off the coast in readiness to receive them. This plan, however, transpires through the instrumentality of Osmin (Herr Formes), a suspicious, overbearing, and impertinent old steward, in love with Blonde, who treats him with the greatest contempt. The Pasha, informed of their attempt to elude him, is at first highly exasperated, and threatens to have the lovers strangled. His generosity, nevertheless, finally overcomes his desire for revenge, and he gives the prisoners their freedom, to the great mortification of Osmin, who would have executed Belmonte and Pedrillo, and retained Constanze and Blonde as inmates of the Seraglio.

Digitized by Google

It is easy to understand the difficulty of making a good interesting opera out of such flimsy materials. Mozart did his best, however, to conceal the poverty of the groundwork by the richness and beauty of the superstructure; but he can hardly be said to have entirely succeeded, or we should not to this day see Il Seraglio more neglected even than Cosi fan Tutti. The music of Il Seraglio is exquisite throughout, though not precisely of that ad captandum quality which strikes the uninitiated audience at a first hearing. Its beauties, therefore, are at first caviare to the multitude. The songs are in strong contrast to those of Figaro and Don Giovanni, being much more florid, elaborate, and lengthy. The airs given to Constanze resemble, in some respects, those of the Queen of Night in Die Zauberflöte, and are nearly as exacting to the voice and written as high. A bravura song in Act II., "Martern aller Arte," ranges up to D in alt, which the singer has to take several times in very difficult passages. The music of Blonde is more graceful and simple, and the heroine and the soubrette are opposed with that consummate skill for which Mozart is remarkable in his operas, where the individualization of character is always a prominent feature. One of the freshest and most charming songs in the opera is the air for Blonde, in A major, at the beginningof the second act, "Durch Zärtlichkeit und Schmeicheln," which was charmingly sung by Mdlle. Agnes Büry and loudly encored. The music, in short, of Constanze, is heroic, and that of Blonde alternately tender and lively, as they should be; and the two characters may be regarded as the forerunners of Donna Anna and Zerlina, in which the genius of Mozart, some years later, accomplished its greatest triumph. The music of Osmin is famous, graphic, humorous, and strongly coloured, with perhaps more of the vis comica than in that of any of the personages in Figaro—always excepting Antonio, the gardener, whose passages of triplets in the first finale are as irresistibly comic as anything in the buffo style. A deliciously quaint song, old-fashioned and half plaintive, "Wer ein Liebchen hat gefunden," is one of the raciest bits in the opera. It was admirably sung by Herr Formes, and the first verse encored. The concerted pieces re constructed with the greatest ingenuity and dramatic power. The quartet, which constitutes the finale to Act II., "Ach, Belmonte! ach, mein Leben!" and the vigorous chorus in the first finale, "Singt dem grossen Bassa Lieder," are instances among others. The finale to the third act contains one of the most heavenly melodies which even Mozart ever composed, and the frequency with which it is reiterated, with little or no modification, suggests that the composer himself must have been enamoured of it.

The singers were all up to the mark, all perfect, and all excellent—each in his peculiar and individual style. The cast was altered a few days before the first performance, in consequence of the indisposition of Herr Reichardt. This was a serious loss to the musical effect. Herr Reichardt would have sung the music of Belmonte charmingly, and Herr Pecz, the new tenor, would have been better suited in that of Pedrillo. Making all necessary allowance, however, both Herr Pecz and Herr Castelli were entitled to praise, since both were careful, painstaking, and correct.

The Osmin of Herr Formes was a masterpiece in its way. The last scene, nevertheless, was, we thought, a misconception, since Herr Formes made it comic instead of serious. Osmin really desires to have Belmonte and Pedrillo strangled; but Herr Formes makes him enjoy the punishment like Doctor Bartolo the apprehension of Count Almaviva, in the Barbiere, when "la forza" arrives. But for this, the performance of Herr Formes would have been irreproachable. His singing was in every respect admirable; and the drunken scene was inimitably acted, and keenly appreciated by the audience, who testified their delight by repeated shouts of laughter and applause.

Mdlle. Agnes Büry was perfect in the character of Blonde. A more winning and insinuating soubrette could hardly be imagined. The singing of this clever lady was finished, artistic, and spirited, and Mozart's music was done ample justice to whenever she had a share in it. Mdlle. Agnes Büry is a real artist, careful and conscientious, never exaggerated, and always welcome to the audience. Mad. Rudersdorff, who has the most difficult music in the opera to execute, sang with ability, but occasionally lessened the effect she would otherwise have produced by her slow and measured emphasis, and a style smacking too much of pre-calculation. Constanze, however, is incomparably the part most favourable to her talent in which she has yet appeared at Drury Lane. She was excellent in the quartet in the second act; and in the duet with Belmonte, preceding the last finale, "Welch Geschick, O Qual der Seele," sang with great energy and feeling. Had the two bravura airs, in G minor, and C, taken half the time they would have been twice as effective. Herr Hölzel, who had next to nothing to sing, as the Pasha, made up for that by the excellence of his acting.

The scenery was appropriate and good, the dresses were costly, and the mise-en-scène was unexceptionable. It is to be hoped that the opera will have a run, that Mozart's fine music may have a chance of being made familiar to the public, too long accustomed to lighter and less worthy compositions.

OPÉRA-COMIQUE—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

The second opera produced for Mad. Marie Cabel was M. Louis Clapisson's La Promise, which was first represented at the Théâtre-Lyrique, Paris, last March. The opera met with a favourable reception on Monday night. It is a pleasing and unpretending composition; and is altogether a work of more merit than M. Adolph Adam's Le Bijou Perdu. The original cast of La Promise was the same as now at the St. James's. The libretto, by MM. de Leuven and Brunswick, although rather extravagant in plot, has some good musical situations, and is smartly written. The story turns upon a young girl, Marie (Mad. Cabel), who has promised her father on his death-bed to marry an old corsair. Marie loves another and a younger, and would fain get rid of her ancient, intended. This the latter gives her an opportunity of doing through his extreme jealousy; and Marie, by a silly contrivance, leads him to believe she has compromised her good name, whereupon, to save her from exposure, the corsair resigns her to her lover. The above is a mere outline, but enough to show of what materials the book is constructed.

Mad. Marie Cabel was the life and soul of the piece. Her acting was full of piquancy and naïveté, and her singing expressive and charming, to say nothing of the marvels of florid vocalisation for which it was distinguished. We were inclined to believe that Mad. Cabel's forte lay entirely in florid music, until we heard her on Monday night in the romance, "Il était une fillette," a plain and simple romance, yet plaintive and melodious, which she gave with so much taste and feeling, so much purity of voice, and in so delightfully unaffected a manner, as to make it irresistible. The romance was enthusiastically encored, and Mdme. Cabel repeated it with increased effect. In a drinking song, or brindisi, "Allons, saisissez votre verre," in the second act, Mdme. Cabel exhibited her talent in the florid style with extraordinary results, all her wonderful mastery of ornament and fioriture, being turned to good effect by the composer. This, too, produced a "furore," and was unanimously encored. In other respects, Mdme. Cabel had less to sing, and less opportunities for vocal displays in La Promise than in Le Bijou Perdu. La Promise, however, was far more successful than the other, because, without half so much pretence, it is the work of a more accomplished musician, and, with less effort, it is much more agreeable and satisfactory.

Digitized by Google

Mdme. Cabel was, for the most part, well supported. M. Junca, who played Giromon, the old corsair, has a good bass voice, and knows how to use it effectively. His method of singing has less than usual of the French school. He acted well, too; and rendered the jealous old corsair a bonhomme of the most agreeable—albeit of the roughest. M. Colson is an amusing farceur. He has no pretensions as a singer, but he is really a capital comic actor. The character of Theodore, which he supported, is that of a pleasant mountebank—half fool, half knave, and all fat, or coxcomb—and tends much to enliven the piece. M. Colson enjoys a well-deserved reputation at the Théâtre Lyrique, and is more original and vivacious—if not more pretentious—than many an actor boasting a higher position on the French stage. M. Pierre Laurent, as the sailor lover of Marie, was highly respectable, both as an actor and a singer. His appearance, however, does not promise much in the Young Meadows line, and his voice is hardly soft and tender enough for a despairing lover.

The artists worked well together, as French artists generally do, and the ensemble was excellent. Every morceau went smoothly, and there was hardly an error on the part of the singers from first to last. We wish we could say as much for the orchestra, which was well made up of "deputies" on the first night, all of whom were by no means so efficient as Mr. Lovell Phillips, who officiated in the absence of Mr. Hausmann. We are anxious to hear Madame Cabel in one of Auber's operas. Le Domino Noir and La Sirène are both announced, but we fear, before we reach that haven, we shall have to wade through one or two more operas of M. Adolph Adam, whose works, for the most part, the management ought to know by this time, or should be taught to know, are not in consonance with English taste and feeling, which have a stronger bias towards Auber, Boïeldieu, Herold, and even M. Thomas, who are all endowed more or less with an instinct for true melody, of which M. Adam has not a spark. When we hear one of Auber's exquisite airs sung by Madame Cabel, we shall be better enabled to appreciate her captivating and quite original talent.

M. Adolph Adam's Le Roi des Halles, is announced for Monday night.

---

Signor Bazzini, the violinist, gave a morning concert yesterday week in Willis's Rooms. The vocal performers were Miss Pyne, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mad. Caradori, Mad. Amedei, Signors Gardoni, Bettini, Belletti, and Ciabatta, and M. Jules Lefort—the instrumental, M. Charles Hallé, and Signor Piatti. Signor Bazzini, besides performing in Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, with M. Hallé and Signor Piatti, executed a fantasia on airs from Beatrice di Tenda; Marche Funèbre of Chopin, for violin and piano; Caprice de bravoure et Quatuor des Puritains, for violin solo, of his own composition, and La Ronde des Lutins, also composed by himself. Sig. Bazzini's style is eccentric, and his music singular, but his mechanical powers are prodigious. The fantasia, the Marche Funèbre and the Caprice were brilliantly played, and immensely applauded. The pianoforte part in Mendelssohn's trio was admirably rendered by M. Hallé. Among the singers, Sig. Gardoni distinguished himself most, by his expression and vocalisation, in the romance, "Pensier d'amore," which was loudly encored. Miss Louisa Pyne was hardly in force, and Mad. Caradori was out of sorts. Indeed the influenza—which generally prevails in this country about midsummer—is no more sparing of vocalists than of any other class. Most of our singers have been more or less effected by this seasonable, or unseasonable ailment. M. Hallé performed Thalberg's Lucia with his usual great command of the instrument; and Sig. Piatti played a violoncello solo as none but himself can play. Sig. Belletti sang the bolero, which he has made tolerably hacknied by this time, of Bergson; and Mad. Amedei a Canzone by Stradella. Various other morceaux were given, with the names of which it is unnecessary to trouble the reader. The room was not very full. The conductors were, Signor Schira, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, Sigismund Lehmeyer, and Sig. Li Calsi.

DRAMATIC.

Lyceum.—The reappearance of Madame Vestris, after an absence of many months, was a great event at the Lyceum theatre, and filled the house on Thursday night with a brilliant and fashionable audience. Madame Vestris had been prevented from performing by serious indisposition—so serious, indeed, that it was at one time feared she would never be able to resume her managerial duties, much less her duties as an actress. The loss of this highly talented artist to the establishment would have been incalculable.

The piece in which Madame Vestris returned to the scene of her triumphs, was a translation of the French drama, La Joie fait Peur, which, some few weeks back, at the St. James's Theatre, performed by the company from the Théâtre Français, attracted all London, chiefly from the inimitable acting of Madame Allan and M. Regnier. The translation is almost literal, and bears the title of Sunshine Through the Clouds. Madame Vestris plays the part of Madame Allan; Miss F. Hughes that of Mademoiselle Luther; Miss M. Oliver that of Mademoiselle Fix; Mr. Frank Matthews that of M. Regnier. The two gentlemen who, on Thursday, supported the characters of the son and the friend, are not worth contrasting with their predecessors.

Madame Vestris acted most admirably in the earlier scenes of the piece. Her grief was finely assumed, and her appearance betokened the long affliction which is supported by no hope. She moved about in a dull, listless manner, and her very voice seemed to sound like an echo from the grave. But she did not carry out the idea so well commenced. The moment she has reason to believe her son lives, when her mind is tortured by conflicting emotions, the power of the artist failed her, and the spectator in vain looked for that passion and display of feeling so absolutely necessary in the situation. The cause is plain—the part in the last scene of the drama is not in Madame Vestris' line, and encroaches on the domain of tragedy. It is the first time, unless our memory betrays us, that we have seen this popular actress in any serious character; and, taking this into consideration, notwithstanding the objections above stated, we must pronounce the performance on Thursday night a genuine triumph.

We have little to say of the other personages. Mr. Frank Matthews understood the character of the old major-domo after his own fashion, which was not at all after the fashion of M. Regnier. Nevertheless, the impersonation was not without its merits and its excellence; and, at all events, it greatly amused and satisfied the audience, who laughed infinitely at the antics and extravagances of the old domestic.

Miss F. Hughes displayed a fund of animal spirits in the part of the daughter, which led us to suppose she had taken a leaf from the book of Mademoiselle Luther. Miss M. Oliver, who is always pleasing in anything she undertakes, was extremely earnest, sensible, and engaging in the small part of the son's betrothed.

The piece was entirely successful, and Madame Vestris, who was loudly called for at the end, appeared before the curtain, and was received in the most flattering manner by the whole audience.

Strand.—The first appearance of Miss Fitzpatrick since her return from America, has filled the theatre during the week to overflowing. The fair artist received a cordial welcome. Her performance of Constance, in the Love Chase, displays the additional excellences resulting from two years' experience since she left England. In the scene of the quarrel with her lover, in the fourth act, she has scarcely a superior, save in the inimitable original, Mrs. Nisbett. In the early scenes, her bursts of laughter would be more effective were they less frequent. At the fall of the curtain, the audience testified their satisfaction by a vociferous recall, when some bouquets were thrown on the stage. Mr. O'Farrell (an importation from Dublin), made a capital Wildrake and was much applauded, and Miss C. Wharton delivered the dialogue of Lydia in a graceful and pleasing manner.

Digitized by Google

SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—Despite the tempestuous weather the gardens are filled every night. Among other popular vocalists, Miss Ransford has been engaged. Miss Ransford combines, with her other recommendations, those attractions to the public eye, which never fail to aid the claims of fair aspirants to popular favour.

A PIANO-MORTAR.

(From Le Ménéstrel.)

AT the moment when war was declared in the East, General Franz Liszt felt the necessity of exchanging his Erard for a piece of artillery. In consequence, a formidable engine of war from the arsenal of M. Alexandre, will shortly be forwarded from Paris to the celebrated pianist.

This monster-machine was tried last week by M. Daussoigne-Méhul, in the Salle-Herz, in the presence of one or two judges experienced in such matters.

The mouth of the engine displays three keyboards, one above the other; the first emits the sound of one of Erard's pianos; the second that of an organ-melodium, and the third the deepest and most powerful notes of the regular church-organ.

These component parts of the instrument, whether employed alone, or combined, produce a powerful effect.

M. Daussoigne-Méhul executed a fantasia on motives from Der Freischütz, an étude of Goria, and several other morceaux, calculated to show off the capabilities of the Piano-Mortar, especially a tender motif-champêtre, in which the sound of the musette blends with that of the bugle.

Notwithstanding the pacific purposes to which M. Daussoigne-Méhul applied the warlike instrument, the audience were perfectly satisfied. What will they say when this immense piece of artillery, with its heavy carriage and long range, is in the hands of General Franz Liszt?

In a few days, the Piano-Mortar will have reached its destination. The intentions of the celebrated Hungarian virtuoso are not yet known, but great uneasiness has already been excited in Sebastopol.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

TO-DAY.—Herr Hildebrand-Romberg, Soirée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Half-past two o'clock.——Orchestral Union's Concert, Hanover-square Rooms. Half-past Three o'clock.

MONDAY.—Philharmonic Society's Concert, Hanover-square Rooms.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Quarter-past Three o'clock.——The Brothers Holmes' Concert, Hanover-square Rooms. Eight o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—Miss Arabella Goddard's Grand Concert, Hanover-square Rooms. Eight o'clock.

THURSDAY.—Sig. G. Regondi's Concert, Hanover-square Rooms. Two o'clock.

FRIDAY.—M. Jules Benedict's Grand Annual Concert, Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.——Mr. F. A. Bodda, Soirée Musicale, 2, Nottingham Terrace.——Mdlle. L. Christine, Soirée Musicale, Eaton-square.

SATURDAY.—Mdlle. Clauss, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms. Three o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MR. JOHN THOMAS has the honour of announcing that his MORNING CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Tuesday, the 4th of July, to commence at Two o'clock. Mr. John Thomas will, upon this occasion, perform Parish Alvar's last Grand Fantasia, as well as some of his own latest compositions, including a Duett for Two Harps, with Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Full particulars will be shortly announced.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Mdlle. CLAUSS has the honour to announce her GRAND CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Saturday, June 24. Mdlle. Clauss will perform Beethoven's Solo Sonata in B flat, Op. 22; Handel's Suite de Pièces, with fugue, in E minor, a selection of pieces by Chopin, Weber, &c., and in Mendelssohn's Quartet in B minor, Op. 3, with stringed instruments. She will be assisted by several distinguished vocalists and instrumentalists. For further particulars apply to Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, 201, Regent Street.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARLS AND COUNTESS OF CLARENDON.—Miss Ellen Williams' Concert will take place on Friday Evening, at the Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Anne-street. Vocalists—Mesdames Bockholtz Falconi, Taccani Tasca, Vestvali, Freeman, Birch, Eliza Birch, Williams, and Nissen Saloman; Messrs. Jules Le Fort, and Allan Irving. Instrumentalists: Messrs. Salaman, Paque, John Thomas, Deichman, Paggi, and Regondi. Conductor, Mr. Lucas. Tickets, 7s. and 10s. 6d. each, at the principal music-sellers.

MUSICAL UNION.—SIXTH MATINÉE, Willis's Rooms, June 20th, and Ernst's last performance this season. Quartet, E minor, Op. 44, Mendelssohn, (by desire); Quartet, G minor, Pianoforte, &c., Mozart; Quartet in C, No. 9, Op. 59. Beethoven. Solos, Pianoforte. Executants—Ernst, Goffrie, Hill, Piatti, and Mdlle. Clauss. On the Director's Matinée, June 27th, extra seats will be provided, and all visitors' tickets must be paid for at the door. Vieuxtemps, and other Eminent Artists, will perform. Single admission to be had of Cramer and Co., Regent-street; Ollivier and Chappell, Bond-street. Doors open at three. J. Ella, Director.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA will perform at SIGNOR REGONDI'S CONCERT, on Thursday, June 22.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD begs to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, June 21st, when she will perform Beethoven's Concerto in G major, Mendelssohn's Serenade, and a selection of solo pieces; assisted by the members of the Orchestral Union, who will perform Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "Die Waldenymphe," and Aguilar's Overture, "Alpheus." Vocalists—Miss Dolby and Mr. Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr. Alfred Mellon. Tickets, 7s.; reserved seats, half-a-guinea each; to be had of the principal music-sellers; and Miss Goddard, 47, Welbeck-street, where a plan of the room may be seen.

MDLLE. SIONA LEVY.—Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's.—Mr. Mitchell respectfully announces that Mdlle. Siona Levy, whose declamation of French Tragedy and Literature has excited so much admiration throughout France, and very recently in Germany, is engaged for DEUX SEANCES LITTÉRAIRES et MUSICALES, which will take place at the above rooms, on Wednesday Evening, June 21, and Wednesday Morning, June 28. Herr Ernst, Herr Blumenthal, and Herr Adolph Terschak (Professor of the Flute, from Vienna), will execute the instrumental performances. Single tickets (reserved), 10s. 6d.; family tickets (for three), 21s.; admission, 5s.; which may be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

HANOVER-SQUARE CONCERT ROOMS.—Signor GIULIO REGONDI begs to announce that his ORCHESTRAL CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday, June 22, 1854, to commence at Two o'clock precisely. Vocalists—Mesdames Taccani Tasca, Ferrari, F. Lablache, and Miss Dolby; Signori Marras, Ferrari, and F. Lablache. Pianoforte, Madame De Fauche, Signori Li Calsi, and A. Montuoro; Harp, Herr Oberthur; Concertina, Signor Giulio Regondi; Accompanyist, Mr. Aguilar; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall; Conductor, Mr. F. Mori. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; to be had of the principal music-sellers. Reserved seats, 15s. each; to be had only of Signor Giulio Regondi, 56, Albany-street, Regent's-park; and Messrs. Wheatstone, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

Digitized by Google

THE BROTHERS HOLMES will give an EVENING CONCERT, on Tuesday, June 20th, at the Hanover Square Rooms. Vocalists, Misses Messent, U. Barclay, Madlle. Mouat, the Misses Coles; Mr. Perren, Signor Nappi. Instrumentalists, Mdlle. St. Marc, M. Silas, M. Vogel, Herr Romberg. Violin, The Brothers Holmes. Conductors, Herren Rummel, Gollmick, and Mr. Gilbert. Tickets, 5s. and 7s.; Reserved, 10s. 6d.; to be had of The Brothers Holmes, 52, Frith-street, Soho, and the principal music-sellers.

MADLLE. LOUISE CHRISTINE has the honour to announce that her First Soirée Musicale will take place on Friday, June 23rd, at her residence, Eaton-square, under the immediate patronage of Her Grace the Duchess of Wellington, the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, the Marchioness of Camden, the Marchioness of Drogheda, the Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley, the Lady Louisa Douglas Pennant, the Countess of Elgin and Kincardine, the Countess Dowager of Essex, the Countess of Dunraven, the Lady Cecilia Des Vaux, the Lady Mary Christopher, Lady Robert Grosvenor, Lady Wharncliffe, Lady Wetherell Warneford, Lady Flower, Lady Gore Booth, Lady Dillon, Mrs. Dudley Percival, Mrs. Arbuthnot Emerson, Mrs. Sampson Goldsmid, Mrs. L. Samson. Vocalists—Madlle. Norie, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Madame F. Lablache, Madame Weiss; Mr. Allan Irving, Mr. Weiss, Signor F. Lablache, Grand Pianoforte, Miss Arabella Goddard; Harp, Madlle. Louise Christine; Clarionet, Mr. Lazarus. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Tickets, One Guinea; and the Programmes, which are now ready, to be obtained only at Andrews, Bond-street; Cramer and Beale, Regent-street; and Jullien and Co., Regent-street.

SOCIÉTÉ NÉERLANDAISE POUR L'ENCOURAGEMENT DE L'ART MUSICAL.—25me Anniversaire. GRAND FESTIVAL MUSICAL A ROTTERDAM, Jeudi le 13, Vendredi le 14, et Samedi le 15 Juillet 1854, dans la Grande Salle au Nieuwewerk. Programme: JEUDI le 13 Juillet, à 7 heures du soir—Ouverture (Composé pour cette occasion) de W. Hutschenruyter, Membre de Mérite de la Société. (Sous la direction du Compositeur.) "Isrnël en Egypte," Oratorio de G. F. Händel. VENDREDI le 14 Juillet, à 7 heures du soir—"Les Saisons," Oratorio de J. Haydn. SAMEDI le 15 Juillet, à midi—"Le 145e Pseaume," de Joh. J. H. Verhulst, Membre de Mérite de la Société. Grand Concert. (Dont le programme sera annoncé plus tard.) "La 9me Symphonie," avec Choeurs, de L. Van Beethoven. Les Solos seront chantés par—Mdlle. Jenny Ney, première Chanteuse de la Cour et du Théâtre de Dresde (Soprano); Madame S. Offermans Van Hove, de la Haye (Soprano); Mdlle. C. H. Dolby, de Londres (Contr' Alto); Mr. G. Roger, de l'Académie Impériale de Musique à Paris (Ténor); Mr. J. B. Pischek, du Théâtre Royal de Stuttgard (Baryton); Mr. Carl Formes, du Théâtre de Londres (Basso). Directeur—Mr. Joh. J. H. Verhulst. Les Choeurs en l'Orchestre formeront un ensemble d'environ 900 Exécutans. Les Répétitions Générales auront lieu le Lundi 10, Mardi 11, et Mercredi 12 Juillet. Le festival sera terminé par un Grand Feu d'Artifice, le Samedi 15 Juillet, à 10 heures du soir. Les détails des Répétitions et des Festivités, qui aurant lieu pendant la semaine, seront annoncés plus tard. Prix des Billets d'Entreé pour les 3 Concerts de Jeudi, Vendredi, et Samedi, f12.50. Les personnes qui voudront s'en procurer sont priées de s'Adresser par lettres affranchies au Magasin de Musique de Mr. W. C. de Vletter, à Rotterdam, et d'ajouter à leur demande le montant des Billets. LE COMITÉ.

MISS LASCELLES beg respectfully to inform her Friends and Pupils, that she has removed to 28, York Buildings, New-road, Regent's park.

TO CONCERTINA PLAYERS.—Signor Carlo Minasi begs to notify to his friends and the public generally that he has just patented his improvements in the manufacture of the above popular instrument, which will be found to give a volume of sound and freedom of touch hitherto unattained. Signor Minasi will be happy to show these instruments to any person who will favour him with a call at his residence, No. 16, Brecknock-place, Camden-road, where he gives lessons on the Concertina. Piano and Singing on moderate terms.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

W. RYALLS' (Professor of Singing) Pianoforte Repository, Hamilton-street, Birkenhead. Pianofortes on hire and taken in exchange.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

ROMAN VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, HARP, AND GUITAR STRINGS. J. HART, of 14, Princes-street, Soho, begs to inform the Amateurs and Professors of the above Instruments, that, in consequence of the great demand he has had for his celebrated Roman Strings, he has made arrangements with his string-makers in Rome, to send a fresh consignment every two months, when he hopes for a continuance of that liberal support he has so long enjoyed J. H. has the largest collection of Cremona and other Instruments in England, ranging in price from 1 guinea to 400 guineas. Instruments repaired in the best manner, and taken in exchange. Stewart's celebrated Violin-holder, and all articles appertaining to the above instruments. JOHN HART, 14, Princes-street, Soho.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

MADAME MORTIER DE FONTAINE and SIGNOR BOTTURA have the honour of announcing to their Pupils and Friends that their ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place on Saturday, 24th June, 1854, at Half-past One o'clock precisely, at the Réunion des Arts, 76, Harley-street, Cavendish-square. Vocalists—Miss Louisa Pyne, Madame Mortier De Fontaine, and Madame Ferrari; Signor Gardoni, Signor Flavio, Signor Covas, Signor Belletti, Signor Burdini, Signor Bottura, and Signor Ferrari. Violin, Signor Bazzini; Flute, Signor Briccialdi; Violoncello, Mons. Paque; Pianoforte, Signor Arthur Napoleon. Accompanyists—Signor Pilotti and Herr Wilhelm Ganz. Single Ticket, 15s.; Double Tickets, One Guinea; may be had exclusively at Madame Mortier's residence, 48, Great Marylebone-street, Cavendish-square.

THE Successful Results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the Human Hair, and is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other preparations for the Hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey—strengthens weak hair—cleanses it from Scurf and Dandriff—and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of the Beard, Whiskers, Eyebrows, and Mustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. —Caution!—On the wrapper of each Bottle are the words, "Rowland's Macassar Oil," in two lines.—Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

PATENT CONCERTINA,—WHEATSTONE & CO. find it necessary to state that the original PATENT for the INVENTION, as well as a subsequent one for improvements, was GRANTED only to them. They, therefore, caution the public against those persons who assume to be patentees, and who only use this subterfuge to sell inferior Concertinas at twice their real value. All Concertinas manufactured by the above firm bear their label, and may be had new (double action, with 48 keys,) from five guineas; or ditto, single action, three guineas. An extensive assortment for exportation.—20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

MARION'S RESILIENT BODICE and CORSALETTO DI MEDICI. They combine firmness with elasticity, fit closely, fasten easily in front, retain the original symmetry of their adjustment, and are judiciously adapted to every varying condition of the female form. Ladies in health, convalescents, and invalids wear them, with equal satisfaction; and, having experienced the comforts and advantages they ensure, will not return to the ordinary Stays and their attendant evils. PATENTED IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND AUSTRIA. Enlarged Prospectus, with Illustrations, (details of Prices from 14s.; children's, 3s.), explicit Directions for Self-measurement, &c., on receipt of Two Stamps for Postage. All Country Orders sent (without extra charge) carriage paid or post free. Mesdames Marion and Maitland, Patentees and Sole Manufacturers, 54, Connaught-terrace, Hyde-park, London.

"We think few who have seen it will be disposed to disagree with us when we assert that it is infinitely superior to anything of the kind yet introduced for the same purpose, and, in point of style and workmanship, it is alike unexceptionable."—Editorial notice in Le Follet, the leading Journal of Fashion.

NEW SONG.—"AH! WHY SO SAD?"—Poetry and Music by J. Thorne Harris. Published by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

THE BALTIC GALOP, by Albert Wagner, is now ready, with a splendid Portrait of Sir C. NAPIER, by a Distinguished Artist, price 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

FRA DIAVOLO.—A cheap edition for Pianoforte, complete and correct. Price 5s., paper cover, and 6s., green cloth, gilt. "La Fille du Régiment" is nearly ready, in the same form. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Signor Orsini's Cabaletta, T'AMO, introduced by Madlle. Crespi, with great success, in the Opera of L'Elisir d'Amore. Wood and Co., Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen; and Campbell, Ransford and Co., 53, New Bond-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 1s. 6d., by post 2s., an Anthem, "By the Streams of Babylon" (Wrth afonydd Babilon), by William Owen Tremadoc. Originally composed on the Welsh version of the 137th Psalm. The English words by the Rev. Richard Parry, Ffestiniog. Organ or Pianoforte Accompaniment by Dr. S. S. Wesley. London: J. A. Novello, 69, Dean-street, Soho. May be had also from the author.

LA DONNA E MOBILE.—For Harp. By J. B. Chatterton. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S VILIKIN'S WALTZ, illustrated by Brandard, price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S LEONORA WALTZ, Illustrated, price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELLE FRANÇAISE WALTZ, beautifully illustrated in colours, price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE QUADRILLE. Performed at Buckingham Palace. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

VERDI'S IL TROVATORE, price 21s. The complete Opera for Voice and Pianoforte, unabridged. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

VERDI'S RIGOLETTO.—French Edition, complete, for Voice and Pianoforte. Price 12s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW HARP MUSIC.—"La Belle Nuit," and "La Berceuse," deux Morceaux Originalles, par Oberthür. Price 3s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

GUNGL'S PETERHOFF WALTZES, price 3s. Gungl's Immortellen Waltzes, price 3s. Gungl's L'Orage Galop, price 2s. 6d. Gungl's Veilcken and Geburtstag Polkas, price 2s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

CHANSON EROTIQUE, pour le Piano, par Jules, Egghard, Op. 19. Price 2s. LA HARPE ÉOLIENNE, Rêverie pour la Piano, par W. Krüger, Op. 25. Price 3s.—The manner in which these two pieces have introduced themselves and been received in musical circles has stamped them as the gems of the season.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

NAE PIER (Napier). An historical song, written, composed, and dedicated to Britain's Brave Tars, by L. Lindley. Price 2s.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

SONG OF SPRING (Frühlingalied). Dedicated to, and sung by, Mdlle. Agnes Büry. Composed by Carl Reinecke. Price 2s.—Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ETOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

Also, MEYERBEER'S MARCHE DE FLAMBEAUX, Solo, 3s.; and the same, arranged as a Duet by Woolff, 5s.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent Street, and 167, North Street, Brighton.

A NEW WALTZ on NATIONAL MELODIES.—On Tuesday next, will be published, "THE STARS of the WEST WALTZES," by Montagne, on Melodies of the Allied Nations, with a magnificent illustration in colours of two figures, representing the beauties of England and France, by J. Brandard. Price 4s. This Waltz commences with the popular melody of "Home, Sweet Home," which is followed by a number of English, Scotch, and French subjects. In order to give it immediate popularity, the band parts will be published simultaneously with the Pianoforte copy, price 5s. On the occasion of Her Majesty's next State Ball, the "Stars of the West" will be performed. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 33.—No. 25. SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(*From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)

(Continued from page 389.)

CHAPTER XVIII.

(1788-1789.)

On his return home, Mozart employed himself in composing new chefs-d'œuvre and altering old ones. The Baron von Swieten† a friend of his, and, like himself an enthusiastic admirer of Händel, often spoke to him, with regret, of the oblivion into which that master had been allowed to fall in Germany. Both, however, acknowledged that the great progress made by instrumental music in the last fifty years contributed in no small degree to render Händel old fashioned. They were also obliged to confess that the forms of his melodies and the character of his airs were far behind the modern taste. If, therefore, the initiated, like themselves, could not help thinking Händel's cantilenas somewhat long and flat, the laity were certainly to be pardoned for pronouncing them monotonous. The music-loving Baron and Mozart set about reflecting whether there was no means of endowing Händel with fresh youth, without injury to the grandeur and majestic simplicity which distinguished his oratorios and cantatas; both, however, felt convinced that this was utterly impossible with his operas. Mozart undertook the difficult task, at the urgent entreaty of the Baron, and, within three years, revised and added to the scores of Acis and Galatea (a serenade), the Messiah, and Alexander's Feast. A consideration of these works, so modified, will find a place in the analytical part of our book.

Among other original compositions, dating from the year 1788, are the symphony in G minor, and that in C major with the fugue,‡ the most beautiful works of the kind which Mozart has bequeathed us.

In the spring of 1789, Mozart once again experienced his old hankering for travel, and that, too, all the more strongly, since he was influenced not only by the lovely season of the year, but also by important financial considerations. One of his pupils, Prince Lichnowsky, offered him his society and his carriage as far as Berlin. On their road were Leipsic and Dresden, two cities which Mozart had not yet visited. Of what happened in Dresden we know nothing; but one whom Mozart often met in Leipsic has preserved certain details relating to the composer's sojourn in the latter city. We need not have a better authority, since the contemporary in question is the late Hofrath (Privy Councillor) Rochlitz, who died at Leipsic in the year 1842; a critic of profound reading and good taste, and founder of the Leipsiger Musikalische Zeitung, which he edited up to the year 1819. Mozart had scarcely arrived, when all the musical notabilities of the city came to bid him welcome, at the same time expressing their desire to hear him in public. A concert was accordingly announced, and Rochlitz, who had been one of the first to visit the celebrated traveller and make his acquaintance, was present at the rehearsal. A few days previously, Mozart had complained, in very strong terms, that the performers always "mulled" ("verhunzen") his works, by taking the tempo too quick. "They think by this to render the composition fiery and impetuous; a pretty idea! if the fire and impetuosity are not already in the work, all their hurry-skurry will certainly not make up for the deficiency." His criticism was directed more especially against Italian singers. "They hurry along," he said, "quaver or flourish, because they do not study and cannot sustain a note." Rochlitz remarked, however, that, at the rehearsal, Mozart took the tempo of the first allegro of a symphony very quick. Scarcely were twenty bars played, before the orchestra got behind hand, and could not keep up with the conductor. Mozart called out "Stop!" told the musicians what their fault was, exclaimed "Ancora!" and began again as quickly as before. He did all in his power to keep them up to the same tempo, once stamping so forcibly to mark the time, that one of his shoebuckles snapt. He laughed at the mishap, again called out "Ancora!" and again commenced, for the third time, in the same tempo. The musicians got out of temper with the pale little man, who bothered them in this fashion. They exerted themselves, however, and the allegro went very well. Mozart took all the rest of the symphony in rather more moderate time. He now desired to put the members of the orchestra in good humour, without however losing the effect of his exertions. He praised the accompaniment, adding, "Gentlemen, you are so sure that it is unnecessary for me to rehearse my concertos, as the parts are correctly written out; and you play correctly and so do I. What need is there of anything else?" The musicians, who had first been exposed to the blasts of Boreas, but afterwards, like the traveller in the fable, cheered by the rays of Phœbus, had now a double incentive to exert themselves. "They accompanied," says Rochlitz, "the extremely difficult and intricate concerto, although without rehearsal, quite correctly, and played with a feeling of respect for Mozart, and also with the greatest delicacy, which arose from the partiality they entertained for him." After the rehearsal, Mozart turned to some connoisseurs and said: "You must not be astonished at my conduct. I was not actuated by caprice. I saw that most of the musicians were men advanced in years. There would have been no end to their lagging behind, had I not excited and enraged

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

† Librarian in the Imperial Library at Vienna, and author of the text of Haydn's Creation.

‡ The Jupiter.—Trans.

Digitized by Google

them. They did their very best out of spite." This stratagem, as original as it was genial, proves that Mozart, ordinarily so simple and absent, could become a close observer, make his calculations as a psychologist and manage his fellow men, directly the interest of his art, the only interest he rightly understood, was at stake.

The pieces played by Mozart before the Leipsic public were all his own composition, and mostly unpublished. In order to put an end to the then ordinary practice of robbing him of the fruits of his labours by the secret copying of his unpublished concert pieces, Mozart used to play, when travelling, from a mere pianoforte arrangement, containing only a figured bass, over which the principal ideas alone were noted down, and the various figures and passages merely indicated; so much was he enabled to rely upon his memory and also upon his inspiration. In this manner did he perform at Leipsic two concertos, a fantasia, variations, and several other pieces, which he had composed some years previously. On the evening of the concert, the marks of approbation showered on him were very numerous, but the receipts scarcely covered the expenses. Every one who knew him received a ticket, but the number of connoisseurs at the paying office was very small. Mozart played, however, in a room only half full, all and even more than was announced in the bills, for those who had come in free. The idea of making those present, however few, atone for the wrong committed by those who did not come, was quite foreign to his disposition. His small audience, composed for the most part of professionals or amateurs understood him, and did full justice to his efforts; and this was all that was required to put him in a good humour.

At the request of his friends—the recipients of the tickets probably—Mozart played upon the organ in St. Thomas's Church. The old and worthy Doles, a pupil of Sebastian Bach, had received, after his former master, the appointment of Cantor (teacher of music and singing) in the celebrated St. Thomas's school. Mozart's playing produced upon him an effect which it is difficult to describe. "I thought," said he, "that Bach had risen from the dead." Doles took the liveliest interest in the man whose mighty talent rivalled, for the first time in forty years,* the glorious recollections by which he had hitherto sworn. The gratitude of the old man for so great a pleasure caused him to reflect how he might best make Mozart a suitable return. At last he thought he had hit upon a good plan. At that period, copies of Bach's works were rarely to be met with. Mozart himself, who had, all his life, made them the object of his especial study, appears only to have been acquainted with the fugues and preludes for the organ and pianoforte, but not with the vocal compositions of the patriarch of German song. Doles, therefore, made his pupils sing to Mozart the motet with double chorus, "Singet dem Hern ein neues Lied," without telling him whose it was. Immediately he heard the first one or two bars our hero started; and, after a few more, exclaimed, "What is that?" while his whole soul appeared to be in his ears. When the motet was concluded, he said with a face beaming with delight, "That is a composition from which a man may learn something." He was told that there were copies of all Bach's motets in St. Thomas's School, where they were looked upon as holy relics. "That is right; that is proper," he exclaimed; "I should like to see them." As there were no full scores of the motets, he had the separate parts shown him. It would have gladdened the heart of any quiet observer to see how Mozart sat down, with the parts he could not hold in his hand disposed on his knees and the chairs around him, never rising from his place until he had read through all of the Bach manuscripts. He obtained a copy, which he greatly prized, and, if I am not very much mistaken, those who are acquainted with Bach's compositions and Mozart's Requiem, especially the grand fugue, "Christe Eleison," cannot fail to observe traces of our hero's study, esteem, and entire appreciation of the spirit of the old contrapuntist.

Mozart determined to make a short trip to Dresden, and then return to Leipsic.

"On the evening before his departure he supped with Doles, and was in high spirits. As he was about to leave, Doles could no longer repress his sorrow, and addressed him as follows:—

"'Who knows whether we shall ever see you again? Give us a line written by your hand.'

"Mozart, who was pretty indifferent concerning receptions and leave-takings, laughed at this piece of sentiment, and wanted to go to bed instead of writing. At last, however, he said:—

"'Very well, papa; give me a sheet of paper.'

"This was immediately brought, and Mozart, having torn it in two, sat down and wrote for five or six minutes. He then gave the father one half and the son* the other.† On the first piece of paper he had written a canon for three voices in semitones, without words. It was very good, but exceedingly melancholy. On the second piece of paper he had written another canon for three voices, also without words but in quavers. We sang it, and found it both excellent and comical. We now remarked, with great pleasure, that both could be sung together, thus forming a single composition for six voices.

"'Now for the words,' said Mozart.

"He then wrote under the first: 'Lebet wohl, wir seh'n uns wieder'—('Farewell, we shall meet again'); and under the second: 'Heult noch gar wie alte Weiber'—('Howl away, like a pack of old women'). The two canons were then sung through again, and it is impossible to describe what a laughable, and, at the same time, deeply touching, or, in other words, elevated-comic effect it produced upon the company, and, if I am not mistaken, upon the composer himself, since exclaiming, in a somewhat wild tone, 'Adieu, children,' he hastily left the room."

The fact of any one's working out, after a hearty supper, and in five or six minutes, such a musical problem as a canon for six voices, and adding to this, of itself a sufficiently intricate, operation, the æsthetical and far more difficult one of infusing both laughter and tears into the same harmonies, would exceed belief, if our confidence in Mozart had not been rendered unshakeable by former not less wonderful and equally well-authenticated proofs of his powers.

Mozart kept the promise he had in some sort made in the canon, by soon returning to his friends in Leipsic. He passed all his time, during his stay, in Doles's house, when the whole family always gathered round him. One day, the conversation happened to turn upon some living composer, and a discussion arose concerning the merit of a musician who gave evident marks of talent for the composition of comic operas, but held an appointment, somewhere or other, as a composer of sacred music.‡ Old Doles, who advocated, rather more than was just and right, a theatrical

* Bach died in 1750.

* Doles' son, without a doubt.

† Some persons afterwards wanted to make out that this fugue was a study after Händel. We shall see, in a subsequent portion of our work, how much truth there was in the assertion.

‡ Rochlitz does not give the name of this composer. I believe, however, that it was Naumann.

Digitized by Google

style in works intended for the Church, very warmly espoused the cause of the composer in question against Mozart's usual, "It is all worth nothing."

"'I will lay a bet that you have not heard many of his works,' said Doles.

"'You would win your bet,' replied Mozart. 'It is not necessary, however, that I should know much of him: such a one can do nothing of this kind well. He has no ideas in him. Sir, I would that Heaven had placed me in a church, and at the head of such an orchestra, that is all!'*

"'Very well, you shall, this very day, have a mass of his, which will reconcile you with him.'

Mozart took the mass, which he brought back the following morning.

"'Well, what do you think of it,' asked Doles.

"'It is all very hearable, only not in a church,' was Mozart's answer. 'You must excuse me, but I have substituted another text as far as the 'Credo.' The effect will be better. I cannot allow anyone to read it beforehand, but we will try it immediately.'

So saying, he sat down at the piano, and distributed the four singing parts. His friends were obliged to do all he asked, and therefore began, while he accompanied. Never was there a more comical execution of a mass. The principal personages were father Doles with the alto part, which he sang admirably, shaking his head all the time at the profanation, and Mozart, whose fingers were, at every moment, fully occupied by the passages for trumpets and kettle-drums, constantly repeating, with the most unbounded merriment.

"Well, is not the effect better, eh?"

To complete the picture, let the reader imagine the preposterous and yet excellently adapted words, such, for instance, as: "Hol's der Geier, das geht flink!" ("Devil take it, that goes well!) to the brilliant allegro of the "Kyrie Eleison," and "Das is gestohlen Gut, ihr Herren nehmt's nicht übel!" ("This is stolen property, excuse me for saying so, gentlemen!") at the end of the fugue, "Cum sancto spiritu in gloria Dei patris."

One effect of his excitability was to render him capricious, and, not unfrequently, liable to pass, in his feelings, from one extreme to the other. After giving vent for some time to his merriment, in the manner described, and speaking, as he was often accustomed to do, in so-called doggrel verse, he walked up to the window, played the piano upon the window cushions, another custom of his, by the way, and became entirely lost in thought, merely making the most indifferent replies, almost without being conscious of so doing, to the questions addressed to him. The conversation on the subject of sacred music now became more general and animated.

"'What an unspeakable pity it is, said some one, 'that so many great musicians, especially those of former times, should have had to suffer the same fate as the old painters—I mean that they should have been under the necessity of lavishing their great powers upon subjects for the church, which are not only unfruitful, but absolutely kill the mind.'

Mozart turned round in quite a different and melancholy mood, and said something to the following effect, if he did not use the exact words:

"'That is another instance of vulgar artistic gossip. You enlightened protestants, as you style yourselves, may possibly have some truth in your heads, when you have got your religion there—that, however, is a thing I cannot positively assert. But things re different with us. You have not the slightest appreciation of all that is conveyed in the words: 'Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi, O dona nobis pacem.' But when one has been initiated like myself, from my earliest infancy, into the mysteries of our sacred religion, when, not knowing what to do with his dark thoughts, which however struggle to force themselves a passage, he attends, in the full fervour of his heart, divine service, without being conscious of what he wants; when he goes away, lighter and more elevated, without exactly knowing why; when he esteems those happy, who, kneeling down at the moving 'Agnus Dei,' receive the sacrament, and hears, as they do so, the soft strains of the music speaking, from the hearts of the worshippers, 'Benedictus, qui venit,' etc.—that is quite a different thing. Well—all this is lost in every-day life; but—at least in my case—let a man only resolve to set these words, which he has heard a thousand times before, to music, and all the thoughts I have mentioned return, present themselves to him, and move his soul."

Mozart then proceeded to describe one or two scenes of this description out of his earliest childhood, an age when religious impressions blend so inseparably with the virgin purity of the heart, which they fill with a delicious charm. He dwelt with considerable interest on his recollection of the time when the Empress Maria Theresa commissioned him, then a boy of fourteen, to compose the "Te Deum" for the inauguration of a hospital or some similar institution, and conduct it himself, at the head of the whole Imperial Chapel. "What were my feelings! what were my feelings!" he repeated several times running. "All this will never return," he continued, "we jog on in our empty every-day life"—he then became very bitter, drank a great deal of strong wine, and did not utter a single sensible word afterwards.

This whole story of Herr Rochlitz struck me as so interesting, even to its most trivial details, and so rich in matter, enabling the author of a philosophical biography of Mozart to arrive at the most important conclusions, that I would willingly have purchased each phrase for its weight in gold, had I not been able to obtain the entire account at a moderate price.

Our traveller could not boast of having been successful in a pecuniary point of view at Leipsic, but his kind heart remained unchanged in spite of this. Just as he was about to leave the city, an old, stammering pianoforte tuner, to whom our hero owed a trifling account, entered his room.

"'Well, what do you want, my old friend?' inquired Mozart.

"'M-a-a-y it p-l-ea-se y-ou-ou—your Imperial Majesty, I me-me—mean his Im-pe-pe-perial Majesty's Ca-ca-ca-pellmeister, I, I, I have been here on sev-sev-ral o-o-o-oc-casions, and as ti-ti-ti—times are hard, I don't think a tha-tha-thaler too much.'

"'A thaler!' replied Mozart, 'it shall never be said that so worthy a man came to me for merely a thaler. Here!' speaking thus he pressed two or three ducats into the hand of the astonished old man.

"'You—you—your Majesty, n-o-o—no, I mean'—stuttered out the tuner, when he was interrupted by Mozart, who exclaimed:

"'Good bye, old friend, good bye;' and jumping into his carriage, drove off."

I cannot name my authority for this anecdote, but it is in perfect keeping with Mozart's character. There is one particular, however, which requires explanation. I allude to the title of Capellmeister, by which the stammering pianoforte tuner addressed our hero. As we have seen, Mozart held no official appointment, but, by a decree issued in the year 1787, he had been named chamber composer to his Imperial Majesty. It is true that this was merely an honorary title, but a yearly salary of 800 ducats was annexed to it. The Court never gave him any commission, which he would have been compelled to execute, in consequence of his

* Mozart alluded, probably, to the orchestra at Dresden, whence he had just come.

Digitized by Google

title. He used, therefore, to say, when speaking of his salary:

"It is far too much for what I do, but far too little for what I am capable of doing!"

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Saturday, Rigoletto was given instead of I Puritani, which was to have been given instead of Les Huguenots, postponed for reasons not stated. Rigoletto was, no doubt, as agreeable to the subscribers as I Puritani, and certainly more agreeable to Sig. Ronconi, whose Rigoletto is one of his most splendid, and whose Riccardo is one of his least effective, performances.

Don Giovanni was repeated on Tuesday, for the fourth time, with Mad. Viardot as Donna Anna, a part which she has already played at the Royal Italian Opera. The general performance of Mozart's chef-d'œuvre was not by any means first-rate, and is certainly not entitled to a white chalk in the calendar.

Lucrezia Borgia, on Thursday, with the second act of Il Barbiere, attracted an immense audience. It was announced as Mad. Grisi's last appearance in her most famous part, and during the week there was a great rush to secure places. On Wednesday, we hear, as much as three guineas was offered for a stall, and not a single seat in any part of the house could be obtained. Mad. Grisi had entirely recovered from the indisposition which prevented her appearing on Thursday in last week, and was as magnificent as ever in Lucrezia.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

Il Seraglio was performed for the fourth time on Wednesday. Mozart's charming opera appears to grow nightly into favour with the audiences of Drury Lane. This is not to be wondered at. The general execution improves with each repetition, and the singers, as they become more intimately acquainted with their parts, appear to much greater advantage.

Sonnambula and Lucrezia Borgia still hold their places in the bills, and still continue to attract.

Last night the Huguenots was given for the first time, and in the German language. The cast was as follows:—Queen Marguerite, Mad. Rudersdorff; Valentino, Mad. Caradori; Urban, Mad. Janda (a contralto of much reputation from Prague); St. Bris, Sig. Gregorio; Nevers, Herr Pasqué; Raoul, Herr Reichardt, and Marcel, Herr Formes. We must defer particulars until next week.

DRAMATIC.

St. James's Theatre—Opera Lyrique.—What a pity it was that this company did not start with something better than M. Adam's opera! Their success would not have been for an instant doubtful. This was evident from the enthusiasm displayed on Wednesday last by the production of Donizetti's charming opéra comique, La Fille du Régiment. We have seldom seen an audience so delighted. Mad. Marie Cabel achieved a perfect triumph, and well deserved it, and was literally covered with bouquets. It would be useless to be critical when our satisfaction is so complete; suffice it, therefore, that Mad. Marie Cabel is as charming and spirited a Marie as can possibly be imagined, and that the part suits her to perfection. She looks it and plays it equally well. She was encored in all her songs, and recalled after each act. A more decided success we never witnessed. The part of Sulpice was exceedingly well played by M. Grignan, and M. Carré displayed much tact in that of Tonio. The Marquise and Duchesse were also well filled by Mad. and Madlle. Vade. Her Majesty and Prince Albert were present. The house was crowded in every part. A word must be suffice to say the Le Roi des Halles, another three-act opera of M. Adolphe Adam, was played on Saturday night, with Madlle. Girard as the heroine, to empty benches. The music made no impression, and the opera is not likely to be repeated.

Strand Theatre.—What do your laudatores temporis acti, who complain of the fall of the drama and the decline of public taste, say to the ancestral wisdom that produced and fostered into popularity such a play as The Soldier's Daughter? Tradition, to be sure, tells us that the piece owed its original success to the inimitable Mrs. Jordan, and it is certain that the prestige of time alone keeps the comedy on the stage. Miss Fitzpatrick possesses all that youth, aided by a graceful exterior and becoming toilet, can do to impart interest to the vivacity of the Widow Cheerly. Her bursts of merriment, however, as we observed last week, are somewhat too frequent. Her performance of Mrs Stillington in the Morning Call, which followed, was full of point and pungency, although here, too, a little more deliberation and repose of manner would have been desirable. Mr. Belford made an excellent Sir Edward Ardent.

Sadler's Wells.—Mr. Davenport and Miss Fanny Vining have this week concluded a successful engagement. The Islingtonians have also been much amused with the quaint fun and grotesque humour of Mr. R. W. Pelham, whose nigger-isms should be seen to be properly appreciated. Mr. Wright, who is engaged for one week, commencing on Monday, will terminate the summer season.

FOREIGN.

Paris.—(From our own Correspondent.)—At the Grand Opéra, Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli has been playing in La Vestale and Les Huguenots, since I last wrote to you. As usual, she was immensely applauded. It is stated by La France Musicale, I know not on what authority, that Mdlle. Cruvelli leaves again for London on the 1st of July. After a tour in England she will return by the 1st of October, and immediately begin studying her part in the new grand five-act opera of MM. Scribe and Verdi. It is not yet decided whether the Grand Opéra is to be shut or kept open during the months of July and August. The rehearsals of M. Gounod's Nonne Sanglante are, however, being pursued with great activity, in order, if possible, to avoid the necessity of closing the theatre. M. Roger, the tenor, has cancelled his engagement. He is now in Germany. Mad. Tedesco, too, seems likely to leave us. Her engagement expires on the 25th of this month, and has not yet been renewed. Report says that the lady has had the most fabulous offers, for next season, from the management of the Opera House at St. Petersburgh. "There is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The programme of the Opéra Comique is still the same, and will, in all probability, remain so for a lengthened period—L'Etoile du Nord and La Fiancée du Diable forming the attraction on alternate nights. Rehearsals are going on, however, for the new opera of the Prince de la Moscowa, as well for that of M. Duprato.—The troupe of the Théâtre-Lyrique being in London, M. Séveste has taken advantage of the theatre being closed to introduce some decided improvements.

M. Plouvier's new piece, Un Songe d'une Nuit d'Hiver, has been very successful at the Théâtre-Français. It was exceedingly well played by Mdlles. Auguste Brohan, Favart, MM. Maillart, and Got. M. J. Offenbach has composed the incidental music for it.—A short time since, as Mdlle. Rachel was about to go on the stage as Adrienne Lecouvreur, she received some alarming intelligence concerning her sister Rebecca, who is now at Eaux-Bonnes, in consequence of which the great tragédienne immediately set out for that place with her mother and Mdlle. Lia Félix. Another play was, of course, substituted.—The stock of novelties at the Variétés seems inexhaustible. Since my last, we have had three new pieces there: O, le Meilleur des Pères, by MM. Decourcelles and Adenis, Panadier et Dromadara en Orient, by M. J. Moinaux, and L'Ondine et le Pêcheur, by M. de Lussan; all of which were favourably received.—At the Porte-Saint-Martin, M. Paul Meurice's drama of Schamyl is in active rehearsal.

I am sorry to inform you that M. Georges Bousquet has succumbed to a long and painful illness. He was well known as the author of Tabain, and had a new three-act opera ready for the Théâtre-Lyrique at the moment of his decease. He was the musical critic for the French paper, called L'Illustration, and at one time chef-d'orchestre at the Italiens. M. Bousquet was buried on Saturday, at Saint-Vincent-de-Paul. In the musical part of the funeral ceremony the orchestra was conducted by M. Tilmant, and the chorus was under the direction of M. Batiste. MM. Lefébure-Wély and Cavallo officiated at the organ.

Digitized by Google

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—At the Imperial Opera-house, Donizetti's opera, Don Pasquale, has been repeated, having been given for the first time this season on the occasion of Herr Scalese's benefit. It was creditably supported by Herren Debassini, Scalese, Naudin, and Mad. Medori. Donizetti composed this work expressly for the Italian opera in Paris, where it was first produced, on the 3rd of January, 1843, with Signors Mario, Tamburini, Lablache, and Mad. Grisi. It was played for the first time here on the 14th of May of the same year, with Signors Salvi, Rovere, Ronconi, and Mad Tadolini; and, since that time, has always been a great favourite with the public. A ballet, Das Goldene Pferd, (The Golden Horse) has been produced for the first time, but is not likely to become popular, being a dull affair, and owing the little success it did achieve to the dancing of Mesdames Maywood, Levasseur, Lanner, and Herren Borri and Croce. M. Meyerbeer's new opera L'Étoile du Nord, or, as we here call it, Der Nordstern, will shortly be brought out with great magnificence. The composer will himself direct the rehearsals and the first few representations. Fräulein Geisthardt and Herr Campe, both from Breslau, are engaged.

There has been nothing in the way of concerts, since I last wrote. Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt and her husband have gone to the baths of Ischl, where they think of passing the summer. The "Nightingale" has again determined to retire from public life—for some time, at least. Herr Leopold von Meyer has received a brilliant offer from America: 60,000 dollars for one year, exclusive of travelling and all other expenses. For this, he is required to play only two pieces a night.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Fräulein Ney has appeared as Donna Anna in Don Juan. She was very successful, and much applauded, both for her singing and acting. Mad. Böttcher was Elvira; Mad. Herrenburger, Zerline; Herr Krause, Leporello; and Herr Salomon, Don Juan. Two days subsequently, Fräulein Ney was again warmly welcomed by the public. On this occasion she sustained the principal part in Die Vestalin. Herr Taubert composed an overture for the festival held in Kroll's establishment, to celebrate the Silver Wedding of his Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia. It was well executed by Kroll's orchestra, under the direction of the composer. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Prussia, the Princess Bertha, and the Princes Friedrich Wilhelm and Adalbert were present. They were enthusiastically cheered, the excitement in a great degree being doubtless caused by the present state of feeling as to political events.—M. Meyerbeer has returned, after a long absence in Paris.

MILAN, June 17.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Since my last, we have had no operatic novelties. Nevertheless the theatres have not been inactive, or rather the impresarii, as we now have no less than three dramatic companies (two Italian and one French), a circus, and several other species of minor entertainments, exerting themselves energetically, during this their harvest time, when the opera is silent. But since these performances have nothing exactly to do with music, I shall not give you a detailed account of them. The theatre Santa-Radegonda has been taken by a company of artists, and will be re-opened in the coming week. The New Figaro of Ricci will be the first opera produced. This composer has been engaged by the new directors of the royal theatres in this city, to write an opera buffa, to be represented in the ensuing spring. The Carcano, which is at present occupied by the equestrian company, will be re-opened in a short time with a series of operas. The first will be Verdi's Macbeth; the second, it is expected, a new opera by Rieschi.

IBID.—Another correspondent writes:—"Nothing new at the Canobbiana, with the exception of a concert for the benefit of the Pio Instituto Teatrale, a fund for decayed musicians, at which Signors Boghetti and Heller, and Sig. Maynio, sang several pieces.—It is said that the Carcano will shortly re-open.—The blind children of both sexes of San Marco executed several pieces of sacred music with extraordinary precision last week; the exhibition was highly interesting, as both the singers and instrumentalists were blind. The music was led by Signor Bianchi, and it certainly was a most curious and affecting sight to witness the performance of these poor children."

VENICE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—At the Teatro Gallo San-Benedetto, Hamlet, the new opera of A. Zanardini has been tolerably well received; there were several calls for the "Maestro," who has shown himself possessed of some talent, in the double capacity of poet and composer, having also written the libretto. The opera was interpreted by the prime donne Morselli and Spezia, the tenor Landi, and Coletti.—At the Teatro San-Samuele, the Domino Nero of Lauro Rossi has been represented for the first time in this city, and pleased immensely. The characters were sustained by the prima donna, Lorenzetti; the tenor, Dei; the bass, Rigo; and the buffo, Penso. The "honours" were for the prima donna, although the other artists were also deservedly applauded.

TRIESTE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—At the Teatro Mauroner, the first representation of Verdi's Ernani took place on the 9th current: Elvira, Campana-Casili; Ernani, Ferdinando Banti; Carlo V., D'Ettore; Silva, Nerini. The execution on the first evening was not satisfactory, principally on account of the indisposition of the tenor. On the second performance, there was a decided improvement, and the artists were applauded and recalled. Poliuto is fixed for the third opera.—At the Teatro Grande, the blind performer on the mandoline, Giovanni Vailati, from Crema, has given a series of concerts in this theatre, in which he has created a furore. He played two pieces upon themes from Bellini, arranged by Sig. Rota, one of which was played upon one string. He also gave the fantasia on Norma, which obtained for him several recalls to the proscenium. It is reported that he intends to make an artistical tour in Germany.

MARSEILLES.—The opera company have presented their director with a gold and silver crown, and a scarf of white silk, fringed with gold, bearing the following inscription:—L'Orchestre du grand Théâtre de Marseille à son Chef. Mad. Charton, our charming and intelligent prima donna, leaves immediately for Rio Janeiro. She receives one hundred thousand francs for ten months, with a house in town, and a villa in the country.

PADUA.—The season of the annual fair in this city was opened on the 11th current with the Medea of Pacini, interpreted by Signora Alaimo and Mr. Charles Braham, Signori Guicciardi, Sottovia, and Tefaldi. The execution, wholly considered, was not quite so good on the first evening as was anticipated. The first "honours" were for the barytone Guicciardi, and the tenor Charles Braham, both of whom were applauded and re-called. On the following evening a great improvement was manifested by the other artists, and the applause became general. The ballet La Figlia del Bandito was favourably received, but was found rather tedious on account of its length.

FLORENCE.—On the 8th instant, a new opera seria, entitled Rogiero, by a young composer of the name of Cosentino, was produced at the Teatro Alfieri. The success was doubtful on the first night of performance, but on the second and subsequent nights, the execution being much more perfect, the applause predominated, and the young maestro was recalled several times. There seems to be very little novelty in the melodies, but they are well arranged and pleasing. The instrumentation is also said to be satisfactory.

ROME.—Both the Valle and the Metastasio have been obliged to close for want of a public. All the theatres are in a miserable condition, and it is expected that others will imitate the example of the two above-mentioned.

NAPLES.—In spite of the success of the new opera, Elena di Tolosa, at the Reali, and that of Mercadante's Gli Orazi e Curiazi at the Teatro Nuovo, both houses are rapidly falling off, and, as speculations, are likely to be ruinous to the respective managers. We may mention that the unfortunate Villani has somewhat recovered from his cold, and is now, to a certain extent, endured by the public.

GENOA.—The Carlo Felice is crowded nightly to hear Verdi's Il Trovatore, and the applause is divided between the composer and the artistes, Signore Penco and Biscottini Fiorio, Signor Carrion, Angiolini and Della Santa. The execution of the opera is said to be perfect.

Digitized by Google

RAVENNA.—At the Teatro Communale, Lucrezia Borgia, with the prima donna, Marcellina Lotti; the tenor, Pardini; and the barytone, Benoict, was received with little favour on the first evening; but, on the second and third representations, the artists evidently gained ground in the estimation of the audience, and the applause became general. On the evening of the 8th current, Ernani was given, for the benefit of Signora Lotti, with brilliant success.

MODENA.—The second opera has been Il Barbiere, with Signora Brambilla, and Signors Galvani, Corsi, Scheggi, and Didot. The opera was enthusiastically received, and the artists met with the warmest approbation of the public.

CREMONA.—A new Requiem, composed by Ruggero Manna, was sung on the occasion of the funeral of the Count Carlo Crotti. This work has been highly eulogized. The new opera, Bianca d'Avenello, by Cesare Gallieri, continues to hold the favour of the public. The composer is a pupil of Professor Massucato.

NEVERS.—M. and Mad. Meillet (from the Théâtre Lyrique) have been well received in Bonsoir Voisin and Luc et Lucette. They will shortly proceed to Vichy.

LEGHORN.—Verdi's Luisa Miller has been very successful, the principal parts being played by Signora Molinari, and Signors Setoff and Amodio, who are nightly received with high favour, more particularly the baritone Amodio, who is always encored in the air, "Andrem raminghi e poveri."

BOLOGNA.—The theatre will open for a few nights with the company now at Reggio, consisting of Signora Boccabadati, and Signors Bocardé and Fiore. Il Trovatore is announced.

STUTTGART.—Fräulein Garrigues has appeared as Recla, Romeo, Lucrezia Borgia, and Donna Anna. On the whole, she was tolerably successful, although her performance of Lucrezia Borgia was anything but great. M. Adolphe Adam's Giralda is in rehearsal.

WEIMAR.—Robert der Teufel has been given in a very effective manner, with Herr Liebert as Robert, and Mad. von Milde as Isabella. Herr Koch, from Posen, appeared as Bertram.

HANOVER.—Lortzing's Undine has been repeated. There is a report current that Fräulein Sophie Förster intends leaving the concert-room for the purpose of devoting herself altogether to dramatic music. She has been offered some highly advantageous engagements.

LEIPSIC.—Herr Mitterwurzer, from the Theatre Royal, Dresden, has concluded his short engagement. The impression he produced was a favourable one. Mad. Shreiber-Kirchberger, also, has been tolerably successful. Steger, from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, appeared on the 13th inst., as Edgardo, in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor. The critics speak in high terms of his voice, but are far from satisfied with his method.

HOMBURG.—M. Vieuxtemps gave a concert, in which he was greatly applauded, previous to leaving for the festival at Aix-la-Chapelle.

DRESDEN.—Fräulein La Grua has appeared as Fidelio. Herr Tischatscheck is expected back very shortly.

SITTEN.—The second grand Swiss Musikfest will be held here. Herr Wagner will direct the general music, and Herr Methfessel, director in Bern, the oratorios.

HALLE.—The Liedertafel performed Das Weltgericht, on the 17th inst., for the benefit of the late Frederich Schneider's family.

---

NEW YORK.—(From our own Correspondent, June 12th.)—New York is full of life and bustle. The greatest excitement prevails here in consequence of the Grand Musical Congress, announced to be held at the Crystal Palace, on Thursday next, the 15th instant. The reason stated by the directors in their prospectus for the holding this monster festival is—

"That there never having been at any period so many talented musical artists assembled at once in America, this seems to be the most propitious occasion for putting in execution the great design of uniting in one gigantic ensemble the élite of the instrumental celebrities of Europe with those of America, in addition to the great choral societies of the several large cities of the United States."

To preside over so vast a body it need hardly be said that no individual was better fitted than M. Jullien, who has all his life been accustomed to direct great masses. Accordingly, M. Jullien was selected as director of the music. "M. Jullien," says the prospectus—

"To whom the French Government assigned the task of directing the first grand Congrès Musical, given at the gardens of the Tuileries Paris, on the 1st of May, 1857, and whose renown and ability in the tion of great musical masses stands unrivalled in England, and in fact throughout Europe, having been prevailed upon to delay his departure for London and Paris—(with that of the eminent solo performers comprised in his orchestra)—the directors have been fortunate enough to avail themselves of his valuable co-operation in the direction of this vast Musical Réunion."

The undertaking has been met with readiness and enthusiasm from all quarters, and there is little doubt that the performance will be the most extraordinary that ever occurred in this country. An orchestra has been erected capable of holding upwards of fifteen hundred performers, among whom are already engaged:—

The Germania Society, the Philharmonic Society of Philadelphia, Dodworth's full band, the United States military band, the Italian Opera orchestra, M. Jullien's full concert orchestra, and many orchestral artists and amateurs from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and New York; also the following choral societies—The Harmonic Society and the Normal Musical Institute, under the direction of Messrs. Mason, Bradbury, and Boot, of New York; delegations from the Handel and Haydn Society, the Musical Education Society, and the Mendelssohn Society, of Boston; the Musical choir, of Hartford; the Bridgeport Musical Society, of Bridgeport, Conn.; the Choral Societies, Germania Mænnerchor Glee Club, Eintracht Glee Club, Young Mænnerchor Glee Club, Academy Glee Club, Liedertafel Glee Club, Sængerbund Glee Club, and Arbeiter Bund Glee Club, of Philadelphia; the Harmonic Society and Sængerbund Glee Club, of Baltimore; the Italian Opera Chorus, of New York; also, members of the several church choirs of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Brooklyn, Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick, Trenton, Albany, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Providence, Hartford, New Haven, Bridgeport, &c. The principal artists already engaged include M. Drouet, Paul Julien, Mad. Wallace, Mad. Wallace Bouchelle, Miss Maria S. Brainard, Mdlle. Henriette Behrend, Miss E. Hawley, Miss C. Mallory, Mr. John Camoenz, Sig. Pasquale Rondinella, Mr. Allan Dodworth, Herr Kœnig, M. Lavigne, Mr. John A. Kyle, M. Wuille, M. Colinet, Mr. Holt, Mr. Aptommas, M. Siede, M. Duhem, Mr. Samuel Hughes, Herr Sonnemberg, Herr Frederick Mollenhauer, M. De Prinz, Herr Stenebruggen, Herr Lutgen. The leaders comprise Mr. H. Hill, Herr Kreutzer, Herr E. Mollenhauer, and Mr. G. F. Bristow. The conductors are—Herr Bergmann, M. Meignen, Mr. H. B. Dodworth, Mr. W. L. Bloomfield, and Mr. W. Vincent Wallace.

The programme will be selected from the sacred and classical chefs-d'œuvre of the great masters, and will include selections from—

Handel's Messiah, Haydn's Creation, Mozart's Requiem, Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream, Sebastian Bach's Crucifixion, Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, Spohr's Last Judgment, Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Rossini's Stabat Mater, Felicien David's Desert, Mendelssohn's Fugue in E minor, Meyerbeer's operas, Le Prophète and Les Huguenots, Rossini's Guillaume Tell and Mose in Egito, Wagner's Tannhauser, Hector Berlioz's Romeo e Guiletto; and, for the first time in America, Meyerbeer's incidental music to the tragedy of Struensee. For this occasion, the American composers, Mr. Wm. H. Fry and Mr. G. F. Bristow, will contribute some of their latest works; and M. Jullien has composed, as companion to The American Quadrille, a grand descriptive piece, entitled The Firemen's Quadrille.

The programme betrays the influence of M. Jullien in every particular. Should the packet sail in time, I will send you an account of the festival on Friday or Saturday. The departure of Jullien is looked forward to here with feelings of deep regret. No artist who has visited America ever made himself more popular.

---

THE MISSES MC. ALPINE'S Concert took place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Tuesday evening, the 6th instant, under distinguished patronage. The two sisters were aided in the vocal department by Mad. Amedei, Madlle Hermann, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Allen Irving, and Mr. Charles Cotton. Madlle Coulon (piano), Mr. F. Chatterton (harp), Herr Deichman (violin), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Mr. G. Case (concertina). The Misses McAlpine are intelligent vocalists, and sing together with very pleasing effect. They have both agreeable voices, and are making rapid progress in their profession. The concert was well attended, and afforded entire gratification to the audience.

Digitized by Google

Willis's Rooms.—On Wednesday evening Mdlle. Siona Lévy received her friends at the above rooms, and gave her first Séance Littéraire et Musicale. We have heard much of the talent of Mdlle. Lévy, and the spirituel Jules Janin had considerably predisposed us in her favour. In Paris she enjoys a very high reputation, and her success we consider to have been well merited in every respect. We have heard Mdlle. Lévy compared to Mdlle. Rachel, but we cannot conceive how such a comparison can stand for an instant, the two styles are so entirely different. Mdlle. Rachel is essentially dramatic, her effects are produced by the impressiveness of her diction, the energy of her action, and the calm dignity of her deportment. Mdlle. Lévy, on the contrary, although not wanting in energy or passion, appeals more to our softer feelings. She does not attempt to harrow the soul by the wildness of her action, or excite terror in our minds by developing to the utmost, or it may be, in the poetical sense, exaggerating the creations of the author; she rather exposes his intentions, jots down the salient passages and gives just sufficient relief to the more vigorous portions to draw due attention to their beauties. Mdlle. Lévy is young and is possessed of handsome and most intelligent features. She has great command of physiognomy, her speaking is pure and often elegant, her pronunciation perfection itself. Every word falls distinctly on the ear, and she possesses a contralto voice, full, melodious, rich in quality, and sonorous in tone. Her declamation is simple and unaffected.

Among the pieces recited by Mdlle. Lévy were Le songe d'Athalie, by Racine; Marie Stuart devant Elizabeth, an extract from Lebrun's adaptation of Schiller's tragedy of Marie Stuart; and a scene from Molière's comedy of the Misanthrope, in which Mdlle. Lévy spoke the two parts of Celimène and Arsinoë. Of the three pieces we preferred the first, as combining, in the happiest manner, the principal characteristics of the talent of Mdlle. Lévy. The introductory description was given in a clear and even voice, and not one word was lost; but when she entered into the dream itself, beginning "C'était pendant l'horreur d'une profonde nuit," she created a great sensation by the impressiveness of her delivery, and the reality which she threw into the different phases of the picture as she described them, the effect being considerably heightened by the play of her features, which were always natural, even in the most deep emotion. In the extract from Marie Stuart she was in turns calm, dignified, sarcastic and supplicating, and presented an admirable portrait of the unfortunate prisoner of Elizabeth. In Molière's scene the task was perhaps a more difficult one for Mdlle. Lévy, who had two parts to play of such opposite character, but she acquitted herself most admirably. Mdlle. Lévy was warmly applauded by a select audience who seemed to fully appreciate her talent. We trust that the laurels she has earned at this her first séance will be but the earnest of further success in London.

Mdlle. Lévy was assisted by Messrs. Ernst, Terschak and Blumenthal. M. Ernst played a sonata of Beethoven's for piano and violin with Mr. Blumenthal, with the energy, precision and expression for which he is highly distinguished; he also gave his Hungarian airs, which were, as usual, enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Blumenthal played an elegant Morceau de Salon of his own composition, which was also well received. Herr A. Terschak gave two solos on the flute. This was his first appearance in England, and he appeared to be a thorough master of the instrument. His tone is good, and his execution remarkable.

St. Martin's Hall.—The recent performance of Elijah (on Wednesday, the 14th inst.) brought Mr. Hullah's season of cheap concerts to a close. The performance of Mendelssohn's chef-d'œuvre, on the whole, was one of the best ever achieved by the Upper Singing School under Mr. Hullah's direction. The solo singers were Mesdames Enderssohn, Mrs. Weiss, Misses Dolby and Freeman, Messrs. Lockey, Montem Smith, H. Buckland, and Weiss. The season has been one of great prosperity, and the cheap oratorios have been more successful than was anticipated. Mr. Hullah deserves unqualified praise for the spirit and discretion which have characterised his management throughout. If he increases his band, and progresses as he has begun, St. Martin's Hall will make his fortune. Such a result will be gratifying to others no less than to Mr. Hullah, since it will have been the reward of industry and talent well directed.

Harmonic Union.—The members of this society gave their services on Wednesday evening, the 14th inst., in aid of the funds of the German Hospital, an institution which merits support so well that we regret the result was not more satisfactory. There was a very thin audience; and this was hardly to be wondered at, since a new work by an unknown composer, sustained by anything but a "gorgeous company" of singers, composed the entertainment. The oratorio of Herr Naumann, entitled Christ, the Messenger of Peace, is a long but by no means a great composition. The book is ill compiled, and nothing whatever is made out of the subject. The music is, for the great part, tame and monotonous, although well written, and instrumented with skill. Herr Emile Naumann is a young man, son of the Naumann, we believe, who in his day enjoyed a considerable reputation in Germany as a composer. We shall not, however, do Herr Emile the injustice to criticise his oratorio, after so very inefficient a performance. Two pieces were encored—a soprano air, "Fear not," and a contralto solo, "But God raised him up"—the first sung extremely well by Miss Stabbach, the last indifferently well by Mad. Vestvali. The other singers were Mad. Caradori, Herr Gregorio, Messrs. Kingsbury and Hamilton Braham. The chorus and orchestra were both unequal to their tasks. Herr Emile Naumann conducted, and was recalled upon the platform, at the end of the oratorio, by the few who remained to hear the last chorus, "Rise, shine forth;" but the majority of the audience had risen, and gone forth, long before.

Signor Giulio Regondi gave his Annual Morning Concert on Thursday last, at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square. The entertainment was much superior to the generality of benefit concerts, and the selection was such as to gratify the most exacting of musical amateurs. Signor Regondi has now brought his execution on the concertina to such perfection that it is probably impossible to go beyond him. He has attained such wonderful dexterity, his command over his instrument is so great, that it seems a mere plaything in his hands. But herein does not lie his greatest merit, since other players, with sufficient care and practice, might hope to arrive at similar mechanical excellence. That which raises Signor Regondi above other performers, is the sentiment and expression by which he assimilates his instrument to the human voice, and sings in a manner to rival the effects obtained by the greatest singers. The cantabile passages remind us, by their breadth of tone and deep feeling, of Rubini, or Paganini, or Ernst, in similar passages on the violin. We are glad, moreover, to find that Signor Regondi is now attempting to introduce the instrument, which may be called his own, into the orchestra, and he has been particularly fortunate in meeting with a profound musician, and a man of genius, like Herr Molique, to write for him. Although in Herr Molique's concerto in G, which was composed expressly for this occasion, and produced for the first time on Thursday, the concertina plays the first part, yet we consider that this trial proved the possibility of its being used with effect as an orchestral instrument. Herr Molique's concerto is a delightful composition, overflowing with genuine melody, and developing all the resources of the concertina. The cantabile is a perfect gem; the allegro sparkling and lively, with a motive which immediately catches the ear. The execution of this new and difficult work surpassed all that we had previously heard by Signor Regondi; the applause was universal, and equally due to the composer and executant. A unanimous encore was the consequence. The quick movement was repeated. A duetto concertante, on airs from Der Freischütz, was exceedingly well executed by Herr Oberthür and Signor Regondi. Mendelssohn's Symphony in C minor (No. 1), a very interesting work, though seldom introduced, was played with great precision by the London Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Frank Mori, with his accustomed tact. Instead of the intermezzo from the Ottello, which Mendelssohn abridged and scored for his symphony, twenty years ago, when it was first given by the Philharmonic Society, under his direction, the original scherzo was restored by Mr. Mori—for which he merits acknowledgment. Mr. Aguilar's MS. overture was played by the band, and received with much applause; and Weber's Oberon in the bargain. Miss Dolby obtained her usual success in Mozart's aria, "Addio," and Madame Taccani Tasca proved herself a perfect musician in the cavatina from Lucia. Madame and Signor F. Lablache sang "Dunque io son," from the Barbiere, with excellent taste; and Madame and Signor Ferrari were well received in Nicolai's duet, "O, thou beloved one." We must not omit to mention Madame de Fauché's clever performance of Mozart's concerto in D minor, for the pianoforte. A duetto concertante, on the Pilgrims' Chorus, from I Lombardi, by two Neapolitans, Signori Li Calsi and Montuoro, was well executed and applauded, as was Signor Marras in some air of his own composition. The room was crowded in every part.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.—We cannot make room for the letters of "M. M.," "DEPUTY ORGANIST," "FAIR PLAY," and "GREGORIAN." We find it necessary to repeat that no further letters on this subject can be inserted without the names of the writers; and that no letter on any subject whatever will be accepted, unless accompanied by name and address.

AN ENGLISH PROFESSOR.—The letter on Modern German Music, Recollections and Criticisms, is personal. Moreover, in any case, it would be much too long for our columns. The paper about Mdlle. CRUVELLI is equally objectionable, and for the same reasons.

CORNO INGLESE.—M. VIVIER has been in London for some time. He performed yesterday, at the concert of Mr. BENEDICT. The second and third questions we regret our inability to answer.

A POOR FIDDLER.—Our correspondent has guessed correctly. All the artists, vocal and instrumental, gave their services gratuitously. The system is ruinous to the profession.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 24TH, 1854.

NOT many of our readers are perhaps aware of the existence of the Rheinische Musik-Schule, in Cologne, an institution which, nevertheless, we think, deserves at least to be better known than it is.

In advancing the interests of a foreign establishment, we have no desire to uphold it as a rival to the Royal Academy of Music, but write in the hope that it may some day be our lot to chronicle the foundation of something of the kind at home. At a time when nearly all England is occupied either in the study of music as an art, or its pursuit as a recreation, it is a notorious fact that the majority of musicians in this country are foreigners. Why should this be? Are we not as capable of producing good musicians as other nations? We have had great poets, painters, and sculptors, why not great musicians? The truth is, that in England the expense of obtaining a thorough course of musical instruction is so large, that the greater number of those who devote themselves to the art must necessarily dispense with their instructors when they are but half educated, and are, consequently, not fairly entitled to call themselves professors. The institution of a few such schools as that of Cologne would go far to make things better, and the musical community at large would be greatly benefited. It would provide employment for a large number of professors; and, in the course of time, it is not unreasonable to hope, the public would be content to listen to the performances of their own countrymen, and would not have to pay such enormous sums for the transport of foreigners from every corner of Europe.

The Rheinische Musik-Schule was founded in 1850, and is under the able and intelligent direction of Herr Ferdinand Hiller. Its object is to provide musical students, of both sexes, with a thorough education in every branch of the art, under the superintendence of the best masters, and at as unprecedentedly small cost. The course of instruction in thus divided among the following professors:—Practical Composition, Analysis of Classical Works, Instrumentation, etc.—Herr Ferdinand Hiller (Director). Organ—F. Weber (Sub-director), the well-known conductor of the Kölner Männergesangverein. Pianoforte—Herren E. Franck, F. Breunung, and A. Ergman. Herr Franck is one of the best pianists in Germany, and, as well as Herr Breunung, a disciple of Mendelssohn. Violin—Herren F. Hartmann and M. Pixis. The former of these is highly esteemed for his skill as a quartett player. The latter is one of the noted family of artists who bear the name of Pixis. Harmony and Counterpoint—Herr F. Derckum. Singing—Herren C. Reinthaler and E. Kock. The former, besides his talents as a professor, is a composer of reputation. Declamation and Literature—Herr R. Benedix, the well-known dramatic author.

Instruction is also given on all kinds of wind instruments; and the institution possesses an organ, as well as an extensive library. The pupils have constant opportunities of taking part in concerted music, besides playing at sight, and from score. In addition to the instruction they obtain, they are allowed an entrée to the weekly meetings of several musical societies in the town, for the practice both of vocal and instrumental music, in whose performances and practice meetings they are at liberty to take a part, when sufficiently advanced. To all the concerts given in Cologne they are also accorded the privilege of a free admission.

Pupils are received in April and October in each year, and the yearly charge made for each is £13. It seems incredible that the institution can maintain itself at so small a charge; but the mystery is solved, when we are informed that its chief support is derived from the liberal contributions of the burghers of Cologne, who, with good reason, look upon music as essential to the well-being of the state. Lodgings for the pupils are provided by the directors in the houses of respectable families, with a guarantee that the yearly expenditure of each need not exceed £50, or, at the most, £60. Living is remarkably cheap in Cologne, and a closer acquaintance with it proves it to be not near such a "stinking" place as the poets, and especially Coleridge, have represented it.

We have been favoured with a prospectus of the Rheinische Musik-Schule, and have good authority for stating that the directors carry out the task they have undertaken with the utmost zeal and efficiency. Floreat Colonia!

MR. LAKE'S ORATORIO, "DANIEL."—This oratorio, recorded in this Journal as produced with great success at Exeter Hall, May, 1853, was performed, under the composer's direction, on the 15th ult., at St. Martin's Hall, with a powerful cast, consisting of Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Champion, Mr. Weiss, and Herr Formes. The oratorio, a rather short one, forming only one part of the concert, was again successful, and the March, with the subsequent chorus, "Hail, Darius," obstinately redemanded. Rossini's Stabat Mater formed Part I. The band was excellent. Mr. Lake conducted.

MADAME OURY, the renowned pianiste, will give a Matinée Musicale on Monday, the 10th proximo, at Lady Vassal Webster's residence, at Hampton. Gardoni and Louisa Pyne are announced to sing, and the fair bénéficiare will play several solos, including her new fantasia on Rigoletto. The morning will be further enlivened by the performance of M. Oury's celebrated German band, which will arrive from Brighton expressly for the occasion.

Digitized by Google

SOPHIE CRUVELLI IN "ROBERT LE DIABLE."

(From a Correspondent.)

(Translation.) Paris, June 22.

I HAVE just time to send you, according to promise, a few hurried lines about the revival of Robert le Diable, which took place last night, with great splendour and completeness, at the Grand Opéra, in presence of a brilliant and overflowing audience. A new triumph was achieved by this the first chef-d'œuvre of M. Meyerbeer—a chef-d'œuvre which laid the foundation of his celebrity in France, and I may add, indeed, in Europe.

The great "fact" of the evening, however, was the first appearance of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli in the interesting character of Alice, which she acted and sang to perfection. She was the very beau idéal of the part. Her first romance, "Va, dit-elle," in which Alice recounts to Robert the last bequest of his mother, sung with exquisite feeling and purity of intonation, established her success. The scene with Bertram and the demons in the cavern was superb. The lovely soprano voice of the young lady came out as pure and fresh as a nightingale's, in the reiterated exclamation, "Robert!—Robert!"—when Alice is seeking for her foster brother among the gloomy haunts of the spirits. She gave the beautiful air, "Quand je quittais la Normandie," with a simplicity and unaffected charm which I have never heard surpassed. This created a "furore," which was renewed after the duet with Bertram, and the unaccompanied trio with Robert and the same. In the latter, the C in alt, for the soprano voice, with which it terminates, was taken by Mdlle. Cruvelli with the fulness and resonance of a bell; it vibrated through the house (I can find no better expression), and was sustained with undiminished effect—"until the echoes of its melody had died away in silence," as one of our poets says somewhere about somebody. The acting of Mdlle. Sophie, at the approach of Bertram, was extremely natural and impressive. The fear of the timid peasant girl was conveyed with fine reality; and her rush to the cross for protection, when Bertram menaces her, was a dramatic point of picturesque and genuine beauty. Nothing could excel the ease and graceful composure of the attitude, which at the same time expressed, with striking power, the terror of Alice and the whole significance of the situation—so startling and so well contrived by M. Scribe, and so admirably painted by the illustrious composer of the Huguenots and the Prophète.

The histrionic and vocal triumph, however, of Mdlle. Sophie was decidedly the final trio, which I do not remember to have been better conceived, or better carried out, by any of our artists at the opera. (You know I never heard your Jenny Lind, who dreads Paris—perhaps hates it—as much as she loves and clings to England, notwithstanding that it was in Paris she got her first lessons from Manuel Garcia, brother of our Pauline-Fides, and son of Garcia-Garcia, or Giovanni Garcia, comme cela vous plaît.) In this trio, one of the grandest pieces of Meyerbeer, our beautiful and impetuous Alice surpassed her previous efforts. No wonder that such tender and passionate entreaties, such sisterly grief, such sublime despair, proved irresistible, and that the fiendish reasoning, the impious hypocrisy of Bertram, were impotent to prevail over the overpowering eloquence with which Sophie-Alice insisted on the holy influence of the paper she held in her white hands ("ses blanches mains"—sic), the last manifestation of the mother of—but for Alice, his guardian angel—the lost and unhappy Robert. Such a brief ("brevet") was never held by so sweet and fascinating a barrister (plaidant), since the Portia of your great Shakspere ("votre grand William,")

"Would grant the thirsty Jew no drop of blood."

The audience was taken by assault. Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli had sprung a mine that blew up the fortifications of granite in which its heart had been almost (but not quite) impenetrably hid; and our suspicious public ("notre public défiant") surrendered at discretion. Send her to your admirals, within gun-shot of Cronstadt and Sevastopol; let her chant with those thrilling tones the last appeal of Alice; and, if the Czar and his captains be not lashed to the mast, like Ulysses, they will not fail to throw their guns overboard, abandon their ships, and give themselves up, body and soul, to the spell and the song, the look ("regard") and the voice of this enchanting Circe from Westphalia.

Bref.—The success was incontestable, and the lucky Meyerbeer, whom the gods have blessed, will chuckle ("glousser")—pass the word—over a new bond of life and vigour for his already strong and immortal ("fort et immortel") masterpiece. For this as for other good things, he has to thank Sophie Cruvelli.—J. J.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S CONCERT.

THE annual concert of Miss Arabella Goddard was, as usual, an event of considerable interest to the lovers of the highest order of pianoforte playing. This young and remarkable artist has, in a short space of time, earned a name for herself which entitles her to rank by the side of the first pianists. She has won it, too, nobly, without sacrificing her art to that mere love of display which too often distinguishes the virtuosi of her age, and more especially of her sex. Miss Goddard has studied the works of the greatest masters with untiring zeal and assiduity, and though not yet nineteen, possesses an acquaintance with the finest music for the pianoforte, from the writings of Bach and Handel down to those of Weber and Mendelssohn, which few even of the most experienced and renowned pianoforte players can boast. Two or three years ago, before she had directed her attention to music of a higher and severer style, Miss Goddard, by her brilliant performances in public of the fantasias of Thalberg, Chopin, Döhler, Liszt, Prudent, De Meyer, etc., had proved herself a mistress of all the difficulties of the modern school of execution. She may, therefore, at the present time, be regarded as a thoroughly accomplished pianist, in the fullest acceptation of the term. She can play with equal ease and with equal intelligence the lessons, fugues, suites, etc. of Bach, Scarlatti, and Handel, the sonatas and other solo compositions of Mozart, Clementi, Dussek, Woelfl, Beethoven, Hummel, Weber, and Heller, the concertos, duets, trios, quartets, quintets, etc., of Mozart, Dussek, Moscheles, Hummel, Weber, Mendelssohn, and Sterndale Bennett, the fantasias and such like ad captandum pieces of the most celebrated writers, from Henri Herz to Emile Prudent, and the studies of all the eminent pianists who have devoted their talents to this useful branch of composition, from John Cramer, Steibelt, and Clementi, to Kessler, Chopin, Ferdinand Hiller, Liszt, and Sterndale Bennett. Such an extensive répertoire of pieces of various kinds, all of which Miss Goddard has at ready command, is almost without precedent, and in one so young, unprecedented. How she can play these things, it is unnecessary to insist on here, since those who have heard her can themselves testify to her ability; and luckily they are very many. Miss Goddard is already an ornament to her profession, and, if she goes on progressing and perfecting herself in the music of the great masters, which is the music of her predilection, this country has every chance of being possessed of an artist-executant second to none in Europe.

Digitized by Google

Miss Arabella Goddard's early studies were pursued under the direction of the late Kalkbrenner (the master also of Mad. Pleyel), whose plan of forming the hand and general system of elementary instruction were admirable and unrivalled, and to whose advice and tutelage must be attributed that singularly perfect mechanism for which her playing is distinguished. Later, she went through a course of instruction in the modern school of execution, under M. Thalberg, who taught her to play his own fantasias, and those of other masters, almost as well as himself. These advantages were not lost upon Miss Goddard. The rest is due entirely to herself. Having mastered all the mechanical difficulties of the instrument, and all the graces and elaborations of the modern bravura and "romantic" schools, she set to work, with no less ardour, on a task still more congenial to her taste, and studied the music of the great composers, ancient and modern, with an earnestness of purpose and an unremitting attention, which, in an incredibly short space of time, made her completely mistress of almost all the important compositions that have been written for her instrument, whether in conjunction with the orchestra or independent of it, with or without the accompaniments of other instruments —all the best music, in short, of the concert-room and of the chamber. For this invaluable acquisition to her accomplishments she is indebted wholly to her own commendable perseverance, and to an inherent love for her art, combined with a strong apprehension of the beautiful, which is one of the highest gifts of the Creator. To the great and good, the pure, unselfish, noble, and unadulterated music of the glorious and single-minded Kings of Harmony, Miss Arabella Goddard, it is true, came prepared with all the manual dexterity which was indispensable, in order to grasp and subdue the immense and original difficulties they must have presented to one who had been tutored in so opposite a school; and the extraordinary ease and rapidity with which she was enabled to conquer her new répertoire in all its variety and extent, to add sonata after sonata, concerto after concerto, fugue after fugue, not to individualise further, to her store of musical wealth, must, in a great degree, be attributed to this; and for this she can never be sufficiently grateful to her masters, Kalkbrenner and M. Thalberg; while they, on the other hand, would have reason to be proud of one who has put to such excellent and legitimate uses their early guidance and advice. But, beyond this, her own good sense and intelligence, an indomitable will, a power of concentrating her mind on one principal pursuit, and a secret determination to perfect her talent, do homage to her art, and earn an honourable name, have been the sole and exclusive means of helping Miss Goddard to the eminent position she now occupies; and for these and the qualities elsewhere enumerated, which, at the age of nineteen, have enabled her to rank with the first living professors of the instrument upon which she excels, she is only indebted to the source whence all such inestimable endowments spring. That she will prove they have not been unworthily bestowed is our entire conviction.

Miss Goddard may be said to have made her début before the English public as a classical pianist of the first pretensions about a year ago, when she played the great sonata of Beethoven, Op. 106, the largest, grandest, and most intricate composition of the master, at one of the concerts of the Quartet Association. The impression made on that occasion will not have been forgotten. Since then she has steadily advanced, and every one of her public performances have testified to the progress she is making in the higher and more intellectual attributes of an artist. She has risen rapidly in the estimation of the public, and while there is no one more gifted, it may be said, with equal truth, that no one is more generally popular. Her name is a sure attraction in a concert-room, and her performances never fail to satisfy expectation, and to prove that her attraction was legitimate. At her concert on Wednesday, which brought a crowded and brilliant audience to the Hanover Square Rooms, among whom were many of the most eminent pianists, foreign and native, resident in this country, the same good taste that has hitherto characterised Miss Goddard's programmes, was evinced in the selection, which was as follows:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Symphony (Jupiter) | Mozart. |
| Song—"Una furtiva lagrima" | Donizetti. |
| Concerto in G major—Pianoforte | Beethoven. |
| Song—"Addio" | Mozart. |
| Overture (Wood Nymphs) | W. S. Bennett. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Serenade—Pianoforte | Mendelssohn. |
| Aria—"Dalla sua pace" | Mozart. |
| Song—"Song of Night" | Mendelssohn. |
| Solos—"La Fontaine," Étude—Nocturne in F minor—"Perles d'écume," Fantaisie étude | Mayer, Chopin and Kullak. |
| Song—"Adelaida" | Beethoven. |
| Overture (Alpheus) | E. Aguilar. |

Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon.

The band was that of the Orchestral Union, which, under the intelligent direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, gave a highly effective performance of Mozart's splendid symphony. Equally good in its way was the romantic and beautiful overture, Die Waldnymphe, of Mr. Sterndale Bennett. The clever work of Mr. Aguilar had less chance of being appreciated, since it was placed at the end of the concert; it was, nevertheless, heard with interest by those who remained. The vocal music was excellent. The expressive "Addio," of Mozart, and the exquisite "Night" song of Mendelssohn, (his last composition!) were equally well sung by Miss Dolby. Herr Reichardt was quite at home in the first song of Don Ottavio, which Mario and Tamberlik cannot be persuaded to sing in Don Giovanni, and gave "Adelaida" with true feeling. In the latter he was accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Goddard. Mr. Miranda (a pupil, we are told, of Mr. Howard Glover), has a very pleasing tenor voice, and sang the plaintive air from L'Elisir d'Amore with much feeling. He was nervous, but the audience encouraged him by their applause.

The great attraction of the concert was of course the concert giver, who had set herself no easy task in Beethoven's most elaborate and difficult concerto, Mendelssohn's equally difficult serenade (Andante e Rondo Giojoso), and the three solo pieces, two of which are in the bravura style.

About the performance of the concerto we shall take leave to quote from our contemporary, the Daily News:—

"For her own performance, Miss Goddard selected, as the pièce de résistance, Beethoven's concerto in G. Of all Beethoven's concertos, this is, perhaps, the most difficult to produce an effect in. It abounds in difficult and awkward passages, and requires, perhaps, more than any other concerto, a species of abandon, and, as it were, spontaneous feeling in the player, which is but rarely met with. Moreover, Mendelssohn, by his wonderful performance of this work, some few years since, produced an impression which renders it difficult for those who heard him to be satisfied with any after-performance. To say that, notwithstanding all these difficulties, Miss Goddard's interpretation of the concerto was triumphantly successful is high praise, but not more so than is just. With her unlimited powers of execution and facile mechanism, the passage playing was, of course, perfect; but there was a higher merit than this in the calm appreciative intelligence which marked her reading throughout, and proved that Miss Goddard has made a decided advance as an intellectual player. Further progress in the mechanism of the art is impossible, as she has long since set all difficulties at defiance. The applause at the conclusion of the concerto was universal, and so continuous, that Miss Goddard had to re-appear in acknowledgment. The cadenzas played on this occasion were written expressly by Mr. G. A. Macfarren."

We agree with every word of the above, and have only to add that the cadenzas of Mr. Macfarren are as interesting and masterly as they are difficult. Of the two we prefer that in the first movement; although in the one composed for the finale the introduction of a reference to the slow movement is both a novel and a happy idea.

The execution of Mendelssohn's serenade (Andante e Rondo Giojoso) by Miss Goddard could not have been surpassed. The design of this is poetical, and its accomplishment perfect. The andante in B minor represents the lover's serenade to his mistress, the rondo in D major their joyous interview. The work is pure Mendelssohn—which is as good as saying pure gold. Miss Goddard threw over the first movement an air of plaintive and delicate sentiment, which expressed all that the composer could have thought; while, in the rondo, her execution was wonderfully sparkling, fluent, and correct. The arpeggios for both hands, which are combined with the second theme, in a manner so peculiarly Mendelssohn's, were taken with a rapidity and clearness that left not a note uncertain, amidst the incessant showers (so to say) through which the melody is carried; while the tune itself came out as simply, and with as much unstudied expression, as though the accompanying passages were quite as easy as, in truth, they are difficult and perplexing. A greater success could not have been achieved. Miss Goddard was recalled at the end both of the concerto and the serenade, and enthusiastically applauded by the whole audience.

The three lighter pieces were a boon for the ladies—something pretty after so much good music. The gentlemen, however, appeared quite as much pleased; and Kullak's Perles d'Ecume, played with remarkable animation and abandon, was redemanded in an uproar of applause. This was Miss Goddard's last performance, and terminated her share in a concert which has added one more laurel to her wreath of fame.

"ORGANISTS' SALARIES."

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—If you are not quite tired of "Organists' Salaries," perhaps you will not object to hear one more resolution of this discord suspended.

I have read the statements of Mr. W. C. Dale and Mr. A. Morris. I will not call them exaggerated, for I do not understand the phrase, and think that if a statement cannot be called true, it may as well be called false at once. I will not call them ingenious either, since there is nothing at all remarkable in a simple multiplication sum, but I must say that, when viewing the subject under discussion, if Mr. W. C. Dale had a beam in his eye, Mr. A. Morris certainly had a mote in his. If Mr. Dale was wrong in reckoning that an organist can work daily twenty-four hours, Mr. Morris is likewise wrong in going on the assumption that every day in the week is a Sunday, and that they may rest assured that £50 a-year is neither £1,200 nor £300.

I cannot imagine what can be the motives of these gentlemen in endeavouring to make organists appear so prosperous; but if they wish for a little healthy employment, I would suggest to them, instead of writing any more letters about us, to busy themselves in getting a good daily service established in every church in the kingdom, and in taking care that their obliged friends the organists suffer no loss, in the way of deductions of payment for their services, upon the taking of the increased quantity.

I am, Sir, your very obedient and obliged servant,

JOHN WILKES.

Broad-street, Leominster, June 20, 1854.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE eighth and last concert, which took place on Monday evening in the Hanover Square Rooms, was one of the best of the season, and one of the most numerously attended. The place was crowded to inconvenience. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia in A, No. 2 | Mendelssohn. |
| Scena, "Softly sighs," Mad. Clara Novello | Weber. |
| Concerto in E flat, Pianoforte, Herr Pauer | Beethoven. |
| Aria, "Sorgete," Signor Belletti | Rossini. |
| Overture, "Freischütz" | Weber. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sinfonia in C minor | Beethoven. |
| Duetto, "Cinque, dieci," Mad. Novello and Sig. Belletti | Mozart. |
| Overture, "Jessonda" | Spohr. |

Conductor, Mr. Costa.

We have nothing to add to the many things we have said about Mendelssohn's admirable symphony, which was never before so effectively played by the band of the Philharmonic. The precision and force throughout were unimpeachable. Even the Allegro Vivace was almost, if not quite, a Mendelssohnian vivace, and the Presto Saltarello almost, if not quite a Mendelssohnian presto. (The thirty members of the Orchestral Union, with their conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon, who play this symphony very often and very fast, are, we believe, for the most part in the ranks of the Philharmonic Orchestra.—Quid tum postea?) The andante con moto was almost, if not quite, a Mendelssohnian con moto, and the audience encored it enthusiastically. The same desire was loudly manifested for a repetition of the saltarello; but this was unheeded. And yet the symphony in A, composed expressly for the Philharmonic Society more than twenty years ago, was allowed—for how many seasons we do not care to recal—to be buried in the library until it was exhumed by the enthusiasm of a few professors, and restored to life by the patronising breath of Her Majesty the Queen, and His Royal Highness the Prince Consort.

Herr Pauer's performance of Beethoven's Grand Concerto, though too slow from first to last, was intelligent in the reading and masterly in the execution. He was warmly applauded. The overture of Weber was carefully played, but with the true Philharmonic energy—which, if toned down by a little delicacy and refinement, would be doubly refreshing. The C minor went, as the C minor rarely fails to go at the Philharmonic Concerts—with wonderful brilliancy and aplomb—but with such an abundance of overdone sforzandi, and "tremendous" accent, that we were fain more than once to ejaculate, with the Latin Grammar—"Jam satis!" The wind instruments were out of tune in the picturesque overture of Spohr; but the rest was all that could be desired.

The vocal music was well selected and well sung; Mad. Clara Novello in splendid voice, and Sig. Belletti as fluent as ever. The scena from Der Freischütz, so full of passion, was strikingly contrasted with the aria from Maometto Secondo, so full of notes; and the lovely duet from Figaro was as welcome as the primrose and the violet, when the skirts of departing winter may be seen, and—as Wordsworth sings—

> "The snow doth fare ill
> On the top of the bare hill"— which is barer rhyme than fares well in a good lyric.

We have no remark to make about the season just expired, except that the directors have been unusually indolent, the subscription unusually small, and the subscribers unusually dissatisfied—not without a good show of reason, it must be confessed. The Philharmonic Society must mend its ways, scatter its clique, reform its direction, and lower its prices; or, like the cattle in the same bucolic of Wordsworth, they will be found, sometime hence—

> ——————— "grazing,
> Their heads never raising,
> Forty feeding like one"— munching the bitter cud of disappointment. There are forty members (including Mr. Costa and Mr. Sterndale Bennett), and sixty associates. Let the sixty admonish the forty, or the forty unbosom themselves to the sixty—or the hundred assemble together, and, after a show of hands pro. and con. about the music of Mr. Sterndale Bennett (which is played everywhere except at the Philharmonic, of which he is a member), disperse quickly, and reconsider the state of the funds, the march of events, the signs of the times, the chances of the war, and the probability of their being much longer able to conduct themselves, and be conducted, as heretofore. Verbum sat.

Digitized by Google

MR. BENEDICT'S ANNUAL CONCERT.

The first Morning Concert which has taken place for more than a year at the Royal Italian Opera was given by Mr. Benedict yesterday. The entire vocal force of the establishment, chorus and band included, were employed, and Mr. Benedict himself officiated as conductor.

We remember on no former occasion, even when morning concerts were in greatest vogue at the Royal Italian Opera, seeing the theatre so full. Every seat was occupied, numbers were standing in the pit and lobbies, and many too glad to sit down on the stairs leading to different parts of the house. The announcement of Mr. Benedict's concert creates a stir every year among the fashionables in London; and this year, more than ever, the excitement to be present was general, since Mad. Grisi was to sing for the last time but one in a concert in London.

The programme was divided into two parts; Part I. being a miscellaneous selection, and Part II. being devoted to Rossini's Stabat Mater. The first part opened with the overture to Euryanthe, which, under Mr. Benedict's admirable guidance, went as well as ever we heard it go. Among other things, Mdlle. Marai sang "Luce di quest' anima;" Mad. Bosio, "Batti, batti;" Mad. Clara Novello, "Dove Sono;" Mad. Viardot the rondo finale to Cenerentola (encored); Signors Ronconi and Lablache the comic duet, "Se fiato in corpo avete," from Il Matrimonio Segreto; Signors Tamberlik and Fortini the grand duet from Masaniello, "O santo ardor di Patria;" Sig. Mario, "Com' é gentil," (encored); and Mad. Grisi and Sig. Mario the duettino, "Fornani a dir che m'ami," from Don Pasquale. Among the instrumental performances was Sebastian Bach's concerto for three pianos—executed with the utmost effect by Messrs. Benedict, Charles Hallé, and Lindsay Sloper. This was played last season at Mr. Benedict's concert in the Hanover-square Rooms, by Miss Arabella Goddard, Mr. Benedict, and Herr Ferdinand Hiller. It is always effective, and was remarkably so on the present occasion. A concertante, for two violins and orchestral accompaniments, the composition of Sig. Bazzini, was performed by Herr Ernst and the author. Anything more lengthy, tedious, and uninteresting we have rarely heard. The finest playing could not succeed in making it effective, or acceptable to an audience.

The selection of Mr. Benedict's works was interesting and varied. It began with the brilliant and animated overture to his MS. opera, The Minnesinger, which was capitally played by the band. A recitative and scena from the Brides of Venice (the second opera of Mr. Benedict, produced at Drury Lane Theatre), well sung by Miss Dolby, were greatly admired. The sparkling "Morning Song" of Barry Cornwall, which Mr. Benedict has set so happily to music, sung with great spirit by Miss L. Pyne, was encored; and the same compliment was bestowed upon a pretty and florid duet, founded on Styrian melodies—"Siam nati su queste montagne" (in the Styrian dialect), which was executed with remarkable fluency by Mdlle. Bosio and Signor Belletti. The most striking feature of the Benedict selection, however, was the clever and effective concertino, in E flat, for pianoforte and orchestra, which was played to perfection by Miss Arabella Goddard, and accompanied in first-rate style by the band. Miss Goddard was cordially received, and, at the end of the performance, applauded with enthusiasm. The only fault of the selection from Mr. Benedict's compositions was its brevity.

Another "feature" of the concert was M. Vivier's plaintive and beautiful romance, "Une plainte," which Mad. Viardot sang with touching expression. The horn obbligato part, which gives so peculiar and charming a colour to the whole, was played by M. Vivier himself, who appeared for the first time this season. His tone is as mellow and powerful as ever, and his playing as remarkable for grace and expression. The pianoforte accompaniment to the romance was ably performed on the harp by Mr. Trust. The romance was quite appreciated by the audience, and warmly applauded.

The Stabat Mater of Rossini was performed entire: Mdlle. Albini, Miss Dolby, Mad. Bosio, Mad. Grisi, Mad. Viardot, Signors Mario, Luchesi, Belletti, and Lablache taking the solo parts. With such an ensemble, it need scarcely be said that the fullest justice was done to Rossini's very popular and very overestimated work. The "Swan of Pesaro" was not intended for the church, and is out of his element in the sacred style. The pieces which pleased most were "Cujus animam" (Sig. Mario), the duet, "Quis est homo" (Mad. Bosio and Mad. Viardot), "Videt suum," with chorus (Sig. Lablache), "Fac me verum" (Mad. Viardot), and "Inflammatus et accensus," with chorus (Mad. Grisi). Nevertheless, the whole was well done, and the audience were delighted.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

At the sixth concert, on Tuesday afternoon, Herr Ernst played for the last time—and not for the last time, we trust, showed himself alternately the most imaginative, fiery, grand, capricious, tender, impetuous, passionate, and expressive of all quartet-players. The selection was as follows:

Quartet, E minor (Op. 44), Mendelssohn. Quartet (G minor), Mozart. Quartet, No. 9 (Op. 59), Beethoven. Solos, Pianoforte, Mendelssohn and Chopin.

Executants.—1st Violin, Herr Ernst; 2nd Violin, M. Goffrie; Viola, Mr. Hill; Violoncello, Signor Piatti; Pianiste, Mdlle. Clauss.

In the quartets of Mendelssohn and Beethoven Ernst's playing was, in a word, incomparable. We cannot say which of the two we preferred. Perhaps we preferred both—or at least the one to which we were listening at the time we were listening to it. Ernst was admirably supported by Mr. Goffrie, Mr. Hill, and "the inimitable Piatti," who sang like a swan in the Andante of Mendelssohn, and played with mysterious impressiveness in the impressive and mysterious Andante con moto quasi Allegretto of Beethoven. The salient and irresistible features of the two performances were the indescribable scherzo of Mendelssohn, and the overpowering fugued finale of Beethoven; the first was marvellously delicate, sparkling, and velocitous; the last orchestral in its strength and largeness of effect. Never, moreover, did Mr. Hill lead off the "ticklish" passage for the viola with more neatness and precision; never was he answered by the successive instruments with more point and vigour. The whole of the two quartets, indeed, was irreproachable. The players were poets, Ernst the presiding spirit; the subject, the harmony of the spheres, was discussed with earnest and persuasive eloquence. Vale, Ernst!—adieu—"most poetical of fiddlers."

Mozart's lovely quartet for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—too seldom heard, its great merits considered—was a rare treat, with Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss at the pianoforte, and Ernst, Hill, and Piatti at the stringed instruments. Mdlle. Clauss seems to be created for this kind of music. Her charming touch, her warm yet unaffected expression, and the extreme chasteness and purity of her reading, could not have been displayed to greater advantage than in this fine, simple, and noble music, in which genius declares itself without effort, and beauty, though exquisitely clad, seems unadorned, to shine by its own unaided lustre. Great Mozart!—if ever man thought music, if ever man felt music, if ever man was music, it was himself! The solo pieces played by Mdlle. Clauss were one of the delicious Lieder ohne Worte of Mendelssohn (in E flat—with the little bell of B flat, which sounds like the summons to worship from some quiet village church), and Chopin's pretty impromptu in A flat, the first of which she gave with the truest sentiment, the latter with the spirit and vivacity which it requires. Both performances were greatly admired; although, we must confess, we liked the first the best—all to nothing.

Digitized by Google

For this delightful séance—which in consequence of the swarms of "fashionables" and "aristocrats," was to many rather a "standing" than a "sitting"—we owe our thanks to Mr. Ella. It was worth a thousand of the most prodigious prodigies of which Nature has been prodigal, or at which "Vacancy fancying itself Admiration" (Modern German Music — Recollections and Criticisms), ever exclaimed "Prodigious!"

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

The fourth concert, on Thursday afternoon (the 15th instant), brought a very full attendance to Willis's Rooms. The programme was interesting:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet in B flat, op. 122, No. 1 - - | J. C. Ellerton. |
| Melodies, Violin - - - - - | Molique. |
| Quintet in D minor, op. 130 - - - | Spohr. |
| Quartet No. 4, in C minor, op. 18 - - | Beethoven. |
| Caprice in E { Pianoforte } - - - | Mendelssohn. |
| Polonaise in A { Pianoforte } - - - | Chopin. |

The quartet of Mr. Ellerton is one of the most pleasing and one of the cleverest works of this industrious and intelligent amateur. It was played to perfection by M.M. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti, and much applauded. The movements which seemed to give most pleasure was the Passacaille—the "dainty Passacaille," as it is styled, by a "freakish" contemporary (ante—No. 1390). The charming "melodies" of Molique (No. 2, book 1—No. 1, book 3, and No. 6, book 4), were played with a delicacy, finesse, and esprit (to speak French) by M. Sainton and Charles Hallé, that must have more than satisfied the gifted composer, if he was present. Every violinist should possess himself of these delightful bagatelles.

Spohr's quintet in D minor, executed by M. Hallè, and the quartet of stringed instruments, with wonderful brilliancy and precision, is a work of great merit. On the whole we prefer it even to the early quintet in C minor, with the "wind" accompaniments. It was greatly applauded. As we have received a copy of the quintet for review, however, we shall at present refrain from further remark—premising that it is one of the most original and ingenious of the later compositions of Spohr. The fine quartet of Beethoven was as well executed as could possibly be desired; and the delicious caprice of Mendelssohn (one of the "Klingemann" set) was given in his most finished manner, by M. Hallé, who, however, with all his ability, could make no effect in the heavy and lumbering "polonaise" with which it was associated.

---

Miss Binckes' Second Soirée Musicale took place on Friday, the 16th (yesterday se'nnight), in the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street. Miss Binckes was assisted by Miss Messent and Mr. Frank Bodda as vocalists; and by Mr. R. Blagrove on the concertina. The concert, although there were but few artists, gave much satisfaction. The pieces most applauded were Miss Messent's two songs, "Lord of the Castle"—a pleasing song, composed by Mr. G. A. Osborne, and charmingly sung—and Mr. Linley's ballad, "Come out to me," which was unanimously encored, when "Coming thro' the rye" was substituted. Mr. Frank Bodda sang "Largo al Factotum," and was encored. He sang it first in Italian and afterwards in English. He also sang C. Glover's ballad, "Kitty Tyrrell." Mr. R. Blagrove played twice on the concertina with good taste and admirable execution. Miss Binckes exhibited her double talents as vocalist and pianist. She sang Macfarren's "Gone, he's gone," from the Sleeper Awakened (encored); Mr. T. M. Mudie's recitative and aria, "They err who tell us love can die" (encored); Mr. Aspull's "Forget me not;" and "Where the Bee sucks," also encored. In the instrumental line, Miss Binckes executed Mr. Macfarren's First Sonata, in E flat; Mr. Wallace's fantasia on airs from Maritana; a duet for pianoforte and concertina with Mr. Blagrove; Mr. Sterndale Bennett's musical sketch, The Fountain; and one of Mr. Cipriani Potter's Pezzi di Bravura. We prefer Miss Binckes' pianoforte playing to her singing, although her singing is by no means devoid of merit. She played excellently on the above occasion, and was warmly applauded, more especially in Mr. Wallace's fantasia and the musical sketch of Mr. Bennett, the latter of which was deservedly encored. Her most meritorious effort, nevertheless, was Mr. Macfarren's very difficult sonata, which is as interesting as it is difficult. Herr Wilhelm Ganz was the accompanist. The room was full.

A VISIT TO CARL MARIA VON WEBER, IN THE YEAR 1825.

There lived, some little time since, in one of the border towns of Saxony, a highly respectable and well-to-do tradesman, of the name of E——, very much respected and liked by musicians, both for his hospitality and the remarkable manner in which he played the violin. E—— entertained a feeling of sincere admiration for all artists who had distinguished themselves for any peculiar excellence; but Paganini and Weber were the stars to which he especially looked up with devotion. He knew the latter was a greater man than the former, but E—— was himself, as we have before said, a violinist, and the King of Fiddlers equalled, in his estimation, the composer of Der Freischütz.

He was never deterred from going to hear Weber's operas, by the length and inconvenience of the journey, at the time we are speaking of, between his native town and Dresden, where they used to be given. The only thing he regretted was, that he had never been able to procure a place in the theatre, whence he might catch a glimpse of Weber, and he had not been able to muster up courage sufficient to pay him a visit.

One day he came to Dresden, having heard that Euryanthe was to be played. Having previously obtained from the landlord of the hotel where he lodged, Weber's address, E—— set out, intending to walk past the house in the hope that he might, perhaps, see the great composer at the window. He stood patiently, one quarter of an hour after another, leaning against the opposite house, and gazing up at Weber's window. The sky became clouded, but our enthusiastic amateur did not notice it. Large drops began to fall, but he did not observe them. He was still standing, when Herr Schmiedel, the Kammer-Musicus, an intimate acquaintance of Weber's, happened to perceive E——, whom he knew very well. On inquiring what our friend was doing there in the rain, Schmiedel obtained a frank and sincere answer. Asking E—— to wait for him a minute or two, Schmiedel disappeared, returning very soon afterwards with a friendly invitation from Weber, to whom he described E——'s feeling of admiration, and who, moved by such real and flattering enthusiasm, was willing and anxious to see his devotee.

"On entering with a beating heart his room," says Herr E—— in his diary, "C. von Weber rose up from his writing-table, and advanced to meet me in the most friendly manner. I could not utter a syllable, but Weber very politely came to my assistance, by saying, with a smile:

"'I heard that you liked my music, and desired to see me. My adversaries would most certainly not allow themselves to be soaked to the skin for such an object, and, therefore, I cannot allow my admirers to do so.'

"'I know Der Freischütz and Preciosa by heart,' I replied, 'and as my family are all musical, we sing or play something out of those works almost every day; I am now in Dresden for the purpose of hearing Euryanthe, and I anticipate a very great treat.'

"'In that case,' replied Weber, 'I hope Euryanthe will please you as much as Der Freischütz, but you must not expect a second Der Freischütz, for Euryanthe is another kind of work, in which I have done my best to please the critics, who reproached me with having, in Der Freischütz, thought too much of the masses. I give you my word, I thought neither of the multitude nor of the connoisseurs, but merely of the story, which appealed so forcibly to my inward feelings. But such is the world, or—such are the critics, that they believe you are always actuated by some interested motive. When I wrote Der Freischütz I little dreamed that my music would take so rapid and firm a hold on the people.'

"I begged him to allow me to look at his hand-writing. He smiled, and gave me the score of Oberon, on the instrumentation of the second act of which he was then engaged.

"'That is for the English,' he continued. 'For them I have been obliged to return to my old method, and give them more frank and rhythmical melodies.'

"'Do you think the English capable of properly appreciating your music, respected master?' I inquired.

"'Most certainly,' he replied. 'A nation which for years has listened to Händel, whom they highly value, and perform Haydn

Digitized by Google

and Mozart continually, must, without a doubt, understand music. You will find nowhere finer national melodies than those of the English. My dear sir, I will inform you in confidence that the very many composers who have already pitied me for being obliged to write for the unmusical English, would all willingly have undertaken so flattering a commission. I lately replied to one of them in the following terms: "Why then do you rob this nation, which has the reputation of being so unmusical, of its national melody of God save the King!—a melody I wish I had composed myself.'"

"Mad. von Weber now entered, and I was presented to her. Schmiedel took his leave, and I was about to follow his example, when Weber exclaimed:

"'Stop, if you have nothing more important on hand. When a man makes a two days' journey merely to hear my music, he must remain and dine with me at least.'

"I accepted the invitation with pleasure. Weber played me some of the arias and elfin choruses out of Oberon, until Mad. von Weber summoned us to dinner.

"At table, the eldest boy, Max, was seated next to his father, who was very talkative and amiable, carrying the meat, filling the glasses, and heaping vegetables on the boy's plate; in fact, it was easy to perceive that he loved his family as much as they him. The wine let loose my tongue, and I told Weber that I had imagined him very different, and much prouder than he really was.

"'Pooh!' he answered, 'I am proud, but, Heaven knows, not conceited. I possess a heart, as I think every other person who also has one must be convinced by Der Freischütz. I know, however, that there are people who give out that I am proud, and it is true that I do look down upon all who approach me with ignorant arrogance. After the production of Der Freischütz, how they flocked round me with their advice, pointing how I might have done such and such a thing better. How the Capellmeister, too, wanted to cut out portions of my Euryanthe. I was perhaps rather haughty in my behaviour on the occasion, but I am always grateful to anyone who takes a sincere interest in me, and I never forget that all gifts come from above.'

"Soon after dinner, Weber was obliged to attend the church, it happening to be a festival; he then had to hurry off to the theatre and conduct his Euryanthe, in which Funk played the part of Eglantine so beautifully.

"I was obliged to leave Dresden the next day, but, before doing so, wrote a note to Weber, assuring him of my unbounded respect. I also sent him the most beautiful laurel tree that I could obtain from the court gardener, Herr Seidel, as a set-off against the theft of which I had been guilty at Weber's. I had purloined his pen, which I still preserve among the most valuable objects in my possession."

THE CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of Guildford was held at the White Hart Hotel, on Monday evening, when a deputation from the executive committee of the Conservative Land Society, consisting of Viscount Ingestre, Mr. R. N. Fowler, Mr. C. E. Lewis, Mr. G. Morgan, and Mr. Gruneisen attended to explain the mode of allotment of the Weybridge estate, West Surrey, and the general plan of the Society. The meeting was numerously attended, and amongst those present we observed Charles Evelyn, Esq., of Wotton, — Hart, Esq., etc. A letter from Mr. Evelyn, M.P., apologising for non-attendance, in consequence of parliamentary duties, was read. Viscount Ingestre presided, and after briefly touching on the important social, commercial, and political points and advantages of the movement, remarked, with respect to the Weybridge estate, that its proximity to the railway station, the easy communication with town, the pleasant neighbourhood, and the value of the land itself, were great attractions to persons desirous of becoming freeholders for that division of the county of Surrey. Mr. Fowler, in an excellent speech, dwelt on the general social advantages of the freehold land movement, and specially pointed out those connected with the Conservative Land Society. The freehold movement was one of the most important things in connection with the social improvements of the present day. It had hitherto been an evil that the possession of land had been inaccessible to the humbler classes, but this was obviated by the machinery of a freehold land society. By clubbing together and purchasing an estate at the wholesale price, a portion of land would be placed within the reach of every industrious man at the lowest possible cost. The first estate of this Society which had been allotted was at Ealing, and premiums of twenty guineas each had been obtained. On Putney, premiums of £150 had been obtained, or three hundred per cent. He was not so conversant with other societies, but should doubt whether any such profitable investment could be formed as that in which a person in a few months could gain three hundred per cent. Mr. Lewis, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Gruneisen, and other gentlemen subsequently addressed the meeting, and a considerable addition was made to the members of the Society.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

THIS DAY.—Madame Mortier de Fontaine and Sig. Bottura, Matinée Musicale, 76, Harley-street. Half-past One.——Mdlle. Clauss, Grand Morning Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Three o'clock.

MONDAY.—Madame Sala's Morning Concert, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street. Half-past Two.——Mr. and Mrs. John Roe's Annual Concert, Music Hall, Store-street. Eight o'clock.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Quarter-past Three.

WEDNESDAY.—Réunion des Arts, Soirée Musicale, 76, Harley-street.——Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Half-past Two.——Mrs. W. Hale's Concert, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street.

FRIDAY.—Sacred Harmonic Society, Exeter Hall, Griesbach's "Daniel," Half-past Seven.——Madame Cornet, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. Half-past Two.——Miss Susan Goddard, Soirée Musicale, 27, Queen Anne-street. Eight o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS BINCKES' THIRD SOIRÉE MUSICALE (Last of the Series) will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, on Wednesday, July 5. To commence at Eight o'clock. Tickets and Programmes may be had of Cramer and Co., Regent-street.

MADAME PERSIANI will sing Baron Celli's last Romance "Il delirio d'amore" at his Matinée Musicale, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Saturday the 1st of July next. To commence at two o'clock; applications for Tickets to be made at Messrs Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent Street; at Baron Celli's residence, 70, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square.

MR. W. STERNDALE BENNETT respectfully announces that his MORNING PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC, will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, July 3. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, the Misses Cole, and Signor Gardoni. Instrumentalists—M. Vieuxtemps, Signor Piatti, Mr. George Russell, and Mr. Sterndale Bennett.—15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

BLAGROVE'S CONCERT ROOM, MORTIMER STREET.—Mr. W. E. Evans of Cheltenham, begs to announce TWO MORNING and TWO EVENING RECITALS of CLASSICAL CHAMBER MUSIC, on Wednesday June the 28th, and Saturday July 1st, commencing at eight o'clock; and on Thursday June 29th, and Monday July 3rd, commencing at half-past three o'clock. For particulars see Programmes at the principal music shops, and at Mr. Blagrove's.

MISS URSULA BARCLAY begs to announce that her CONCERT will take place at Willis's Rooms on Friday evening June the 30th, when she will be assisted by the following artistes:—Miss Dolby, Miss Fanny Rowland, Mrs. Theodore Distin, Signor Ciabatta, Mr. H. C. Cooper, Mr. R. Blagrove, Mr. G. A. Osborne, Mr. A. Nicholson, Signor Nappi, Messrs Distin, and Herr Formes. Accompanyist, Mr. W. G. Cusins. Tickets 7s. each; to be had of the principal musicsellers, or of Miss Ursula Barclay, 44, Upper Charlotte Street, Fitzroy-square.

MRS. WILLIAM HALE (late MISS STEVENS), formerly Solo Pianiste at the Town Hall, Birmingham, has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND EVENING CONCERT at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, Oxford-street, on Wednesday, June 28 (her first appearance in London) under most distinguished patronage, when she will perform in Mendelssohn's Grand Trio in D minor, with select solo pieces. Mrs. Hale will be assisted by Signor Gardoni, and other artists of the highest eminence. For full particulars see Bills.

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall.—Conductor, Mr. Costa.—On Friday, June 30, will be performed, DANIEL, an Oratorio, composed by Mr. J. Henry Griesbach. Principal Vocal Performers at present engaged—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Poole, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes. The Band and Chorus will consist of 700 performers. Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d., at the Office, No. 6, in Exeter Hall.

NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen Anne Street.—Miss Susan Goddard begs to announce that she will give a SOIRÉE MUSICALE at the above Rooms on Friday next June 30th. When she will be assisted by the following eminent Artistes:—Mdlle. Sedlatzek, (from the Royal Opera Drury Lane) Miss Amy Dolby, and Miss Dolby. Herr Reichardt (from the Royal Opera Drury Lane.) Herr Hölzel, and Signor Cimino. Pianoforte, Miss Susan Goddard; Violin, Herr Deitmann; Violoncello, Herr Hausmann; Conductor, Mr. Benedict. Tickets to be had of all the principal Music-sellers, and of Miss Susan Goddard, 5, South Bank, Regent's Park.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MADAME CORNET has the honour to announce that her FIRST MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place at Willis's Rooms, on Friday, June 30th, 1854, to commence at Half-past Two o'clock, on which occasion she will be assisted by the following eminent artistes: Vocalists—Madame Caradori, Fraülein Holm, Fraülein Hermann, Fraülein Fanny Cornet, Fraülein Adele Cornet, and Fraülein Van Noordon (pupils of Madame Cornet), and Madame Cornet; Herr Reichardt, Herr Castelli, Herr Formes, and Herr Hubert Formes: Violin—Herr Ernst. Conductor, Mr. Grattann. Tickets, 7s. each; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; to be had at all the principal Music Warehouses; and of Madame Cornet, 115, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

MUSICAL UNION.—DIRECTORS' MATINÉE, Tuesday, June 27th, Willis's Rooms. Doors open at half-past Two, concert to begin at Three. Quartet, God preserve the Emperor—Haydn; Septet, D Minor, Op. 75, Pianoforte, &c.—Hummel; Solo, Violin, H. Vieuxtemps; Notturno, D Flat, Dohler, Master Arthur Napoleon; Septet, E Flat, Op. 20, Tema and Finale—Beethoven; Solos Pianoforte; Vocalist, M. Jules Lefort. Executants: Vieuxtemps, Goffrie, Hill, Van Gelder, Howell, Remusat, Barret, Lazarus, Baumann, Harper, and Charles Hallé (his last performance this season). Extra seats will be provided, and members are requested to procure tickets for visitors at Cramer & Co's.; Ollivier & Chappell's, to facilitate the entrée. Free admissions are suspended.—J. ELLA.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, Hanover Square.—Mr. JOHN THOMAS, has the honour to announce that he will give a MORNING CONCERT, at the above rooms, on Tuesday July 4th, 1854, on which occasion the following eminent Artistes will appear. Vocalists: Madlle Sedlatzek, Mrs. Arthur Stone, Miss Birch. Signor Gardoni, Mr. Harberte, Mr. Nappi, Mons. Jules Lefort, and Mr. Allan Irving. Instrumentalists: M. Sainton, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Signor Puzzi, Mons. Emile Prudent, and Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Mr. John Thomas will perform Alvars' last Grand Fantasia, as well as some of his own latest compositions; including a Duet for two Harps, with Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Conductor, Mr. Cipriani Potter. To commence at two o'clock precisely. Tickets 10s. 6d. to be had of Messrs. Cramer, Addison, Chappell, Ollivier, and Boosey; Reserved seats, 15s.; to be had only of Mr. John Thomas, 88, Great Portland-street.

HERR CLANSTHALL, the celebrated Tyrolean Singer, is engaged for the 28th instant to sing at the Concert Hall, Manchester, by the Committee of the Gentlemen's Concerts, after which, he will be open to further engagements.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Enderssohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

JOHN WEIPPERT'S ROYAL QUADRILLE BAND is under the immediate patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria; His Royal Highness Prince Albert; the Marchioness of Breadalbane; the Lady Elizabeth Pringle; the Lady Londesborough; the Lady Maclaine; the Lady Susan Reeve; Mrs. Bishop Culpeper, &c., &c. Apply only to Mr. John Wippert, 21, Soho-square.

TO CONCERTINA PLAYERS.—Signor Carlo Minasi begs to notify to his friends and the public generally that he has just patented his improvements in the manufacture of the above popular instrument, which will be found to give a volume of sound and freedom of touch hitherto unattained. Signor Minasi will be happy to show these instruments to any person who will favour him with a call at his residence, No. 16, Brecknock-place, Camden-road, where he gives lessons on the Concertina. Piano and Singing on moderate terms.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION, and SOFT AND FAIR HANDS AND ARMS, are fully realized and sustained by the use of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Preparation, which, by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels of the SKIN, promotes a healthy tone so essential to its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance. Freckles, tan, pimples, spots, discoloration, and other cutaneous visitations are eradicated by the KALYDOR, and give place to a radiant bloom and transparency of complexion.

During the heat and dust of summer, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

CAUTION.—The words ROWLANDS' KALYDOR are on the wrapper of each bottle, and their signature, A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, in red ink, at foot.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

BRIGHTON ESTATE, EAST SUSSEX.—THE CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY.—The allotment of the valuable Round Hill Park Estate (second portion) will take place at the offices, 33, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, on Wednesday, the 5th of July, between Eleven and Four o'clock. There are Seventy-four plots to be allotted, of which one is a £400 lot, one £100 ditto, one £75, fifty-eight £50 lots, and thirteen £37 10s. ditto. The present picturesque portion is situated on the Ditchling-road, and is admirably adapted for villa residences, commanding splendid views of the sea, the town, the racecourse, the Downs, and surrounding country. The Round Hill Park Estate is within the precincts of the town of Brighton, just beyond the Level on the way to Lewes, and has a considerable frontage on the high road. Plans of the estate, price 6d., or 10d. if sent by post, and prospectuses may be had of Charles Lewis Gruneisen, Secretary.

On Wednesday, the 28th of June, at Three o'clock, at the Seventh Quarterly General Meeting of the Members, in Freemason's Hall, Viscount Ranelagh in the chair, the Nineteenth Public Drawing will take place for One Hundred Rights of Choice, and Fifty shares will be added to the Book of Consolidated Rights by seniority.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

NEW SONG.—"AH! WHY SO SAD?"—Poetry and Music by J. Thorne Harris. Published by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.—The solo pieces played by this distinguished pianiste, at her Concert on Wednesday evening, were Mayer's étude 61, "La Fontaine" price 3s.; Chopin's Nocturne in F minor, 3s. 6d.; and Kullak's fantaisie étude, "Perles d'Ecume" 4s.; in which she was honoured by a double encore and recall. London: Copyrights, published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent Street.

EWER & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Mulder, Richard— | | |
| Rêverie sans l'ombrage ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Le Bal. Valse de Salon ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Les Gondoles. Tarentelle ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Les Vendanges. Mazurka ... ... .. | 2 | 0 |
| Fête sur la terrasse. Marche brillante ... | 2 | 0 |
| Promenade du matin. Pastorale ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Wagner, Richard— | | |
| March from Tannhäuser ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Terschak, Adolf. Nocturne ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Taell, Alfred. La danse des fées ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Krüger W. La Harpe Eolienne ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Egghard, Jules Chanson érotique ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Evers, Charles. La Coquette ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Langen, Mathilde— | | |
| Royal Prussian Galop, (as performed at Her Majesty' State Ball by Mr. Weippert's band) | 1 | 6 |
| For the Tenor— | | |
| Vieuxtemps H. Elegy, with Piano accompaniment ... | 4 | 0 |
| ——— the same, arranged by the composer for Violin or Violoncello (performed by Herr Romberg at his Concert) ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

London, Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford Street.

Will be ready shortly.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM. A sacred Cantata, composed by Charles Steggall, Mus. D., Professor at the Royal Academy of Music. Vocal score with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Price to subscribers, 10s. 6d. Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford Street.

LISZT'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS FOR THE PIANO.—Grande Paraphase de Concert (on "God Save the Queen.") 3s. Valse Impromptu, 3s. The same, easy edition, 1s. 6d. Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

New Part-Song appropriate to the present time.

THE BRITON'S ADDRESS to the NAVY: for Four Voices, with Additional Verses. The Words by Charles Dibdin. The Music by J. Tilleard. Price 6d. London: Novello, 69, Dean Street, Soho, and 24, Poultry.

THE BEAUTIES OF ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—Just published the STARS OF THE WEST WALTZES, by Montagne, with a magnificent illustration in colours, by J. Brandard, of two English and French Beauties. This waltz, founded on national melodies, is the most attractive set that has been produced for many years. Price 4s. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW GALOP.—A magnificent Portrait of Sir Charles NAPIER, embellishes the title page of "The Baltic Galop," by Albert Wagner, price 2s. 6d. Published by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE BULGARIAN POLKA, by Montagne, will be illustrated with one of Mr. Brandard's happiest figures and sketches in colours. It will be published on Tuesday next. Price 2s. 6d. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street, and all music-sellers.

FIRST CLASS PIANOFORTE MUSIC BY FIRST CLASS COMPOSERS.—Madame Oury's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Gollmick's Farewell, 4s. Charles Voss's Fantaisies on Sonnambula, Linda, and Rigoletto, 4s. each. Prudent's Le Lac, 4s. Kuth's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Benedict's Quartet in Rigoletto, 4s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS FOR AMATEURS.—Mozart's Quintet (the Rondo only) arranged by McMurdie, price 4s. Gollmick's Duet from Belisario, a very brilliant piece, 5s. Gollmick's Minerva, Valse de Concert, 4. Alvar's Greek Pirates' Chorus, 4s. Nordmann's La Donna e Mobile (Rigoletto) 4s. The above is a very choice selection. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED, price 1s. 6d., by post 2s., an Anthem, "By the Streams of Babylon" (Wrth afonydd Babilon), by William Owen Tremadoc. Originally composed on the Welsh version of the 137th Psalm. The English words by the Rev. Richard Parry, Ffestiniog. Organ or Pianoforte Accompaniment by Dr. S. S. Wesley. London: J. A. Novello, 69, Dean-street, Soho. May be had also from the author.

MEYERBEER.—"L'ETOILE DU NORD," the new opera by Meyerbeer, now being performed at Paris with unprecedented success, and various arrangements of the same for the Pianoforte are ready. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

Also, MEYERBEER'S MARCHE DE FLAMBEAUX, Solo, 3s.; and the same, arranged as a Duet by Woolff, 5s.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street, and 167, North-street, Brighton.

MR. JOHN THOMAS' NEW HARP COMPOSITIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Spring—Characterestic Morceau ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Summer ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Autumn ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| The Parting—Romance ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| The Tear ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu, my Native Country! ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu de Salzbourg ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Le Matin—Impromptu ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Le Soir ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Four Recreations, in 4 Nos. ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| First Concerto ... ... ... ... ... ... | 9 | 6 |
| Andantino of ditto (arranged as a Duet for Harp and Piano ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 26. SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)*

(Continued from page 420.)

Mozart arrived in Berlin exactly at the hour at which the opera used to begin; and, being informed that one of his works, Belmonte und Constanze, was to be presented, hurried off to the theatre without stopping to change his dress. He listened so attentively, that, in a few moments, he had forgotten all about him and began to think aloud. At one moment, he was highly delighted with the execution of some particular passage; presently, he was dissatisfied with the tempo; and soon afterwards the singers, male and female, indulged in too many flourishes to please him. At first Mozart expressed his satisfaction or displeasure by gestures only, or by a kind of suppressed growl; but at last he became overpowered by his musical enthusiasm. Unconsciously he forced himself nearer and nearer to the orchestra, elbowed his neighbours, whose pardon he forgot to beg, growled and hummed, to himself, the various melodies of the opera, which, in his own mind, he was conducting, muttering some strong expression, or openly giving vent in other ways to his dissatisfaction whenever a fault occurred. All eyes were attracted to the insignificant little man, in a shabby great coat, who permitted himself such liberties during the progress of the performance. Some of the audience laughed in his face, but others, whose enjoyment he disturbed, grew angry. At length there was a talk of ejecting the troublesome fellow who dared to make such a noise at one of Mozart's operas; but this was lost upon our hero, who saw and heard nothing but the singers. At last it came to Pedrillo's air: "Frisch zum Kampfe, frisch zum Streite," etc. Either the parts were incorrect, or the orchestra was to blame, since, at the words, "Nur ein feiger Tropf verzagt," the second violins invariably played D sharp instead of D natural. Mozart could contain himself no longer, but exclaimed with the whole force of his lungs, and in no very choice terms: "Verflucht, wollt Ihr D greifen?" ("Devil take you, will you play D?") Everyone looked round, while several members of the orchestra inquired who had addressed them thus unceremoniously. Some musicians who were present, however, recognised the man in the overcoat. The news of his presence spread like wildfire through the theatre, and was carried from the orchestra to the stage, where it excited great uneasiness. The lady charged with the part of Blonda declared she could not sing any more, alleging sudden indisposition as her excuse. When the musical director was informed of this, he could hit upon no other means of extricating himself from his dilemma, than by appealing to the creator of all this disturbance, who, by this time, had forced his way close up to him. In one moment, Mozart was behind the scenes, and, going up to the affrighted singer, addressed her in the following terms:—

"Madame, what is the meaning of all this nonsense? You have sung admirably—charmingly, and, that you may sing still better, I will teach you the part myself."

The compliment, combined with the promise, saved the lovers of music from the danger which had threatened them.

Next day, scarcely anything was talked of in Berlin but the incident which had nearly stopped the performance. "Mozart is here!" was in every one's mouth. He was presented at Court, and graciously received by the King, Frederick William II. This prince not only valued musicians highly and paid them well, but was himself, if not a profound judge of musical matters, at least a very intelligent amateur; and, if report be true, it depended upon Mozart alone to take advantage of the extraordinary interest he excited in his royal patron. Scarcely a day passed that he was not summonsed to the king's apartments, for the purpose of either playing solos or performing in quartets with some of the members of the Court chapel. Frederick William having expressed a wish to hear Mozart's opinion of this chapel, one of the best in Europe, our hero replied:—

"It contains the greatest assemblage of virtuosi in the world; and I have never heard such quartet playing anywhere else; but the gentlemen would be better if they were all together."

The king, delighted at such frankness, said, laughingly:

"Remain with me, and you will be able to make them do better. I will give you an annual salary of three thousand thalers." Three thousand thalers for a man who did not possess a certain income of more than eight hundred florins! Moreover, the king's words plainly implied that it was intended to give him the place of first Capellmeister. At last, then, Mozart had the prospect of an appointment worthy of his talents, and one for which he had struggled so long, and in vain. We can hardly comprehend how it was possible for him to reply, with emotion, to such an offer:

"Can I leave my good Emperor?"

The King, well acquainted with Mozart's position in Vienna, was, in his turn, moved at our hero's answer; but, after a pause, continued:

"Think the matter over; I will keep my word, even should you not come before the expiration of a year and a day."

Nevertheless, Mozart did not come.

Truth may sometimes appear improbable. What are we to think of this conversation? It is difficult to believe it true, but still more so to look upon it as a mere invention. Let us consider what Mozart, of his free choice retained, and what he sacrificed.

In Vienna, he was under the necessity of giving lessons and of working for the music publishers, and even for the

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

first comer, who might take it into his head to order a song or a waltz. In short, he was a mere drudge. In Berlin—instead of these miserable shifts to gain a livelihood, suitable enough for a mere trader in music, but not for an artist like Mozart—he might have obtained an honourable post, with a salary that, added to other sources of emolument, would at once have trebled his income. In Vienna, he was at the beck and call of every one, groaning over his servitude, and compelled to make up, with the hours he snatched from sleep, for the time spent during the day, in the most wretched manner, in order to gain his bread. In Berlin, he would have had no master but the King, his benefactor; no duties but such as would have been consonant to his high mission and his inclination; no commands but to write masterpieces, which he would have done of his own accord, without a commission from any one. In Vienna, his dramatic works were at the mercy of a restless cabal, which exercised unlimited influence over the material resources of the theatre—namely: the orchestra and the singers. In Berlin, a company of vocal and instrumental artists under his own direction ensured the most correct and brilliant execution of his works. In Vienna, public opinion, as he well knew, was divided about his merits, and those who gave the musical tone in society, being jealous of him, were all his enemies and calumniators. In Berlin, he would have wielded the sceptre himself, and, moreover, have given the tone to a public more enlightened, more reflective, and better able to appreciate him than that which preferred La Cosa rara to Don Juan. In a word, at Vienna, he was poor, dependent, degraded, persecuted, and misunderstood; while in Berlin, on the contrary, he would have been rich, powerful, free from any occupation unworthy of his genius, acknowledged, honoured, and protected against any cabal and any effort of Envy, should Envy have dared to raise a hand against him.

Under these circumstances, how could Mozart hesitate for a moment? To remain undecided between every possible hardship, on the one side, and a perfectly happy state of things, on the other, would argue him bereft of reason. That when it was proposed to him to leave the Emperor Joseph II., Mozart should have remembered with emotion the gracious words the latter had addressed him, was, with his soft and feeling heart, sufficiently natural; but was not this expression of grateful feeling in itself an adequate return for the condescension of a monarch, who merely retained him as a supernumerary in his chapel, and gave him alms in the shape of an insignificant title without any duties attached to it? The Emperor Joseph had assisted at the representation of Le Nozze di Figaro and Don Juan,* and testified his approbation; but the Italians, nevertheless, remained in possession of the most distinguished posts in a German city, where no place could be found for Mozart. Are we, then, to believe that, in the face of all this, Mozart replied by a "No" to the liberal king who would have given him compensation for the injustice he had so long suffered, and the obstinate malignity with which fate had pursued him? Is it credible that a poor musician, the father of a family, could thus have sacrificed his future reputation and the happiness of his children? And, if so, for what could he have made the sacrifice? Plainly, for nothing else than the pleasure of dining in the Prater, and being able to regulate his watch by the church-clock of St. Stephen's.

My readers, being reasonable beings, must assuredly arrive at the same conclusions as myself. But it is equally true, that neither my readers nor myself could have composed Don Juan, the overture to Die Zauberflöte, or the Requiem; and a man who could do all this, might, for that reason alone, come to other conclusions than we, and act as we should never think of acting. In the first place, it depended upon Mozart himself to make a great deal of money without even being appointed first Capellmeister to the King of Prussia. To effect this, he had only to go back to the days of his childhood and establish a manufactory for Italian opera in the taste of the age. Each piece would have taken him a week to compose, and the sale throughout Europe would have been enormous. His reputation would have kept pace with the increase of his prosperity, while the stock of genius, which he squandered away in so thoughtless a manner as rapidly to exhaust his vital energies, would have been left almost untouched. But to this Mozart would not condescend.* On the other hand, his attachment to a monarch, of whom he was not even a born subject, and who neglected to confer on him the marks of favour he so well deserved, would, in the eyes of any practical man, have been but a slight consideration, since, by leaving the emperor, our hero might have been a serious gainer both in honour and emolument. Thus I should reason myself; but, once again, Mozart was very far from being a practical man. He was personally attached to the Emperor Joseph, and loved him as a friend. Why then should he not make a pecuniary sacrifice for Joseph, as well as for any other of his friends, while he had a florin in his pocket? We must also bear in mind that if the Emperor gave him little, he took nothing from him, while the rest plundered him in the most pitiless and barefaced manner. Besides, who can say that the clock of St. Stephen's and the Prater did not exert a great amount of influence upon the resolution of one who understood so little of the practical part of life, and who might not feel so much at home in the atmosphere of a Lutheran town as in that of the Catholic city of Vienna. The manners and customs of the Viennese were better suited to Mozart, in more than one respect, than the military and scientific tone which predominated at Berlin. A more agreeable climate, a far more beautiful country, the good humoured inhabitants, and, more especially the Viennese women, so lively and pretty, not to speak of the gentle influence of habit, all, perhaps, helped to attach him to a place, where his most important interests suffered, it is true, but which so entirely suited his taste.

It remains for us to test a very important point, namely, the authority upon which rests the conversation between King Frederick William and Mozart—an authority that I, as a biographer, can neither reject nor unconditionally accept. The source whence we derive our information is Herr von Nissen, who speaks in the name of his wife, and relates as follows:

"The King subsequently related this conversation to several persons, and, among others, to Mozart's widow herself, when she came to Berlin after his death, and was substantially assisted by his former patron."

It is, therefore, Mozart's widow herself, who asserts that she heard from the King a fact which he had previously related to several others. We have no reason to doubt Mad. von Nissen's general love of truth, and, if we subsequently find her depart from it on one occasion, it is in a case where we all disagree with her, that is, when we have to conceal a wrong, of itself unimportant. On the present occasion, however, it was not Mad. von Nissen's interest to

* The Marriage of Figaro was Joseph the Second's favourite opera.

* This will afterwards be proved.

Digitized by Google

invent. On the contrary, the refusal of an appointment worth three thousand thalers a year, must have appeared to the mother of a family, on the verge of starvation, an act of downright madness. How could she, too, have dared to attribute to a monarch words which, had they been untrue, a thousand witnesses would have been ready to dispute! At Court, everything is known, since the walls have ears.

After relating the aforesaid conversation, the Danish biographer goes on to say that Mozart subsequently—let the reader particularly observe the "subsequently"—obtained an appointment, in the Imperial Chapel, which the Emperor bestowed upon him, probably to recompense him, according to the certain laws of dramatic justice, for his devotion. And what was this appointment? A place of eight hundred florins, with nothing to do. This statement is followed by a letter, in which Mozart mentions the appointment to his sister. The letter is dated August, 1787, and the conversation, which has detained us so long, occurred in 1789. It is a misfortune for a historian, in the most brilliant parts of his analysis, to find himself directly at variance with the simple truth.

Such being the case, all I have to do is to beg the reader to weigh the matter in his own mind, and decide himself what to think of this so often cited conversation.

CHAPTER XIX.

(1789-1791.)

For the period of about two years, of which we have now to speak, there is a great want of biographical materials, so that nearly all we can do is to give the dates of a few facts and of certain compositions.

On returning home from his trip, in June, 1789, Mozart immediately set to work on a violin quintet for the King of Prussia, as a return for the kind manner in which that monarch had received him. The work in question is the fine one in D major, with a concertante part for the violoncello (Op. 4, No. 10, Pleyel's edition). The other two from the same set—Nos. 11 and 12—were not composed till two years afterwards. The King, in return, sent him a snuff-box and one hundred Friedrichs d'or.

In the beginning of the year 1790, Mozart wrote his fifth dramatic work for the Italian theatre in Vienna: Così fan tutte, ossia la Scuola degli Amanti (So they do all, or the School for Lovers), a comic opera in two acts. We are not acquainted with any of the details concerning the early representations of Così fan tutte, from which it may be concluded, that the opera did not meet with a very high degree of favour from the Viennese amateurs.

If the French piece, on which the Nozze di Figaro was founded, could be reproached with being overcharged with wit, the text of Così fan tutte was so vapid and tiresome, that it would, perhaps, have been impossible to find a match for it in the whole catalogue of operatic libretti—a branch of literature in which the Italian language, as every one knows, is so extremely fertile. This circumstance was by no means fortunate. As, however, Mozart had succeeded in clothing the language of Figaro with so many musical beauties and such a world of feeling, he was also able, and, perhaps, with far greater ease, to introduce a vast amount of spirit into a farce, which, though destitute of sense, presented one or two lyrical situations, and a kind of comic element, much more easily expressed in music than anything in the comedy of Beaumarchais. All things considered, therefore, the book of Così fan tutte was worth as much as that of Figaro; though I do not intend by this that one of them had not more attractions for the composer than the other. Both, however, were forced upon him by two great powers: Figaro by the Emperor Joseph, and Così fan tutte by Necessity. The management of the Italian Theatre in Vienna imagined, no doubt, they had made a good selection, and Mozart's creditors most probably hastened to second them.

Never do Mozart's circumstances appear to have been in a worse condition than at the death of the Emperor Joseph II., which took place on the 20th February, 1790. Tormented for sums, Heaven knows how pitiful, and animated by a desire to pacify, or, at least, get out of the way of, his pitiless duns, Mozart went to Frankfort, where the electors had assembled to appoint another head to the empire. On the road from Frankfort to Munich, he was everywhere fêted and admired, but, according to his usual practice, he left every place with empty pockets. What I have here, with great trouble, condensed into a few words, is contained, more in substance than in words, in one or two rambling and unhappy letters which Mozart wrote during his journey, and in which there is hardly anything intelligible, except that he had no money, and must get some at any cost. From the autograph catalogue of Mozart's works,* which has been almost my only guide through the scarcity of information in this chapter, it is evident that he was once more at home about the end of the year 1790. There is nothing set down in the list for the months of September, October, and November, during which he was travelling; but the grand violin quintet in D major is inserted under the head of December. Its elder brothers, the quintets in C major and G minor, were produced in the year 1787, some months before Don Juan.

* Commenced in the year 1784, with a thematic list of the various works; continued to the 15th Nov., 1791, and published in 1805, by J. A. André, in Offenbach.

[To be continued.]

Mr. John Thomas had the honour of playing before the Queen yesterday evening one of the compositions of the late Parish Alvars.

Reunion des Arts.—On Wednesday a Soirée was given at the above locale, which was supported by Demoiselles Cornet, Miss Ursula Barclay, and Mr. Eustace, as vocalists; and Mad. Massart (pianoforte), M. Jacquard (violoncello), and Mr. T. H. Wright (Harp), as instrumentalists. Miss Ursula Barclay sang a new ballad called "The Blind Harper," by Mr. Wright, which was much admired. Mr. Wright gained considerable applause by his performance of a very effective solo, by Parish Alvars. M. Jacquard, one of the best violoncellists from the Continent, made a highly favourable impression, in one of the beautiful "Melodies" of Molique, which he plays to perfection. Mad. Massart, too, a pianist of great ability, well known in Parisian circles, distinguished herself by an intelligent and spirited performance of the first of Mendelssohn's grand duets for pianoforte and violoncello, in which she was ably assisted by M. Jacquard.

Madlle. Sophie Cruvelli.—The following anecdote has gone the round of the French, Italian, German, American, and English papers. We do not believe a word of it:—"Madlle. Cruvelli, who has an honest, simple-hearted waiting maid, gave her a ticket to the Opera, to witness the representation of 'The Huguenots.' The prima donna obtained an unusually brilliant success. On her return she asked her maid what she thought of the performance, 'Well, I don't think you had very good luck!' 'How so?' 'Why, the audience seemed to be dissatisfied, for they made you do three or four songs all over again!'"

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first performance of the Huguenots, on Saturday, attracted one of the most numerous audiences of the season. The Queen and Prince Albert were present. As early as mid-day on Saturday there was not a box, stall, or seat to be obtained. The Huguenots is always greatly attractive for a certain number of nights every year, but, this year, the fact that Madame Grisi was to appear only three times in Valentine—one of her most splendid impersonations—made every body anxious to secure the earliest opportunity of seeing her.

The cast differed in two respects from last season:—M. Zelger replaced Herr Formes in Marcel, and Mdlle. Marai, Madame Castellan in Marguerite. Although M. Zelger possesses neither the dramatic vigour nor the powerful voice of his predecessor, he is an excellent artist, and thoroughly acquainted with the music. M. Zelger was the original Marcel when the Huguenots was first brought out at Drury Lane, in 1846, by the Belgian company, and has played the part frequently. His performance of the old Protestant on Saturday night was striking and faithful, and his singing admirable. The "Piff, paff" was given with great power, and a portamento not always found in bass voices; while in the famous duet in the scene of the Pré-aux-Clercs, Valentine could hardly have found a more efficient coadjutor.

Mdlle. Marai displays great talent in everything she undertakes. Her voice is not strong, but her energy makes amends for want of power; and she sings with so much earnestness, and enters into her part with such determination and abandonment, that she pleases more than many who have been more liberally endowed by nature. Mdlle. Marai has studied to good purpose, and has effected all that was possible with the means at her command. She has in a very short time established herself as a great favourite with the English public. On Saturday her performance of the Queen of Navarre was entirely successful. Meyerbeer's brilliant music was executed with perfect ease and fluency, and the few passages of energy in the finale to the second act were given with great force. The part of Marguerite, if longer than that of Bertha in Le Prophète, is not so arduous, and Mdlle. Marai had fewer opportunities of exhibiting her qualities as a vocal artist. Her singing, however, was quite satisfactory, and no one could find fault with her acting, which was always natural and unaffected.

So much for the novelties: of the performance of Mad. Grisi and Sig. Mario it might be sufficient to say that they were as magnificent as ever. Sig. Mario surprised us by his singing in the trying septet for male voices in the Pré-aux-Clercs scene, in which he displayed as much power as ever, taking the B natural in his chest voice with unexpected ease. The great tenor up to the present moment seems to have been husbanding his resources, in order to sustain the fame of his Raoul. Certainly the part requires more stamina than all the Italian characters in which Sig. Mario has appeared this year put together. By his exquisite voice, his incomparable phrasing, the grace of his style, his pathos, passion, and the terrible earnestness of his acting, Sig. Mario delighted the audience as of old. He was in splendid voice, and exerted himself to the utmost. Mad. Grisi appears to be always the same. She sang gloriously on Saturday, as well indeed as we have heard her sing for many years. Why should this superb artist quit the stage, when she has barely entered into the autumn of her powers, and has exhibited, as yet, no signs of decline? Can we afford to lose her? Should not a petition be signed by all her admirers in England, entreating her to remain yet one year more upon the stage? A petition with the names attached of all the admirers of Giulietta Grisi, would "———— reach

From Inverness to Bognor's Beach."

But we shall have time enough to grieve when she really bids us farewell at the end of the season; and must not anticipate regret. Enough that the performance of Valentine on Saturday night was transcendent, and that Mad. Grisi created the highest enthusiasm throughout, more especially in the grand duet at the termination of the fourth act, when she was recalled with Sig. Mario, and the stage almost covered with bouquets.

The general performance was excellent. Mdlle. Nantier Didiée must be, in the character of Urbain, highly praised for her clever and correct singing of "Nobil Signor," and the aria "No, no, no!" written expressly for Mdlle. Alboni. Signors Tagliafico and Polonini were as good in Nevers and St. Bris, as they invariably are; Signor Stigelli gave the "Rataplan" couplets as the Huguenot soldier with remarkable energy. The band and chorus were good—always excepting, of course, the quarrels of the Catholics and Huguenots, which was as imperfect as ever. The performance, however, was on the whole, one of the best ever given at the Royal Italian Opera.

On Monday, an extra night was given, included in the subscription; Guillaume Tell was announced, but Sig. Ronconi having been taken ill, the Prophète was substituted. The performance was first-rate, but the theatre was not full. On Tuesday, the Huguenots was repeated. The house was crowded, and the performance magnificent.

On Thursday, Donizetti's Don Pasquale was given for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera, and with a cast that must have recommended the performance to the operatic visitor from mere association of ideas alone. It is more than ten years since this chef-d'œuvre of Italian Opera buffa was first produced at the Théâtre Italien in Paris. It was composed expressly for Mad. Grisi and Signori Mario, Tamburini, and Lablache, and obtained an immense success. Don Pasquale is, perhaps, more intimately identified with the name of Sig. Mario than even with that of Sig. Lablache himself, as it was in the character of Ernesto that the great tenor achieved his first renown in Paris and London. Indeed, the "Com' è gentil" alone is never sung in public or private without directly recalling the name of "Mario"—a proof how thoroughly popular he has made himself in the part. How familiar Sig. Lablache had rendered the character of the Don it is unnecessary to say. The part has never been attempted on the Italian stage in England by any other artist—a tacit concession that Don Pasquale has but one true representative. When Donizetti first saw Mad. Grisi as Rosina in the Barbiere, he determined to write a comic part for her, so deeply was he impressed with her genuine comic powers; and, indeed, so thoroughly did he and the librettist adapt themselves to her talents, that Norina has been as good as a sealed volume to all other artistes since. We have seen many attempt the character of Norina—among whom some celebrities—but we never saw one succeed like Mad. Grisi.

The performance of Don Pasquale, on Thursday night, was worthy of the best days of Her Majesty's Theatre. More finished or more exhilarating comic acting could hardly be witnessed at the best French theatres; while the singing was such as could not be equalled on any stage in the world. The music of Don Pasquale is not so difficult for the voice as that of L'Elisir d'Amore; but it requires more finesse, more refinement, and greater elevation of style. Mad. Grisi's Norina must stand among her finest and most vividly realised conceptions. In its way it is as true as Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, or Ninetta. The great artist acted and sang on Thursday night as in her best days, when her Norina took the town by storm, and Don Pasquale was the opera "in vogue."

Digitized by Google

The Don Pasquale of Sig. Lablache is inapproachable, irresistible, indescribable. It is the incarnation of mirth, simplicity, and folly; and constitutes a glorious companion to Doctor Bartolo, another transcendent portrait of the immense basso. To do justice to Sig. Lablache's acting and singing in Don Pasquale is hardly possible for the critic, criticise he never so wisely. Nor is it necessary, since everybody has seen the performance, or heard of its merits and peculiarities. Perhaps on no former occasion did Sig. Lablache obtain more applause, or was his performance better relished. The audience were in ecstacies throughout. The famous "gag" with the letter and the chain, in the second act, was as perfectly managed as ever, and the whole performance as prodigious.

Sig. Ronconi's Malatesta was a masterly impersonation, full of whim and quiet mirthfulness, but never betraying the slightest tendency to exaggeration or coarseness. Sig. Tamburini himself, the original representative of the part, could not have blended the humorous and the gentlemanly with greater art and nicety of discrimination.

The opera passed off with the greatest éclat, and created a regular furore. There were four encores—the quartet, "Son tradito, colpestato;" the last movement of the duet between Don Pasquale and Malatesta, in the third act; the serenade, "Com' è gentil;" and the duettino, "Tornami a dir che m'ami," between Ernesto and Norina. The four performers were recalled at the end of every act.

Don Pasquale is announced for repetition to-night. It is likely to prove one of the most attractive of the "farewell performances" of Grisi.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The Huguenots, the most successful opera hitherto presented by the Drury Lane Company, has been played four times since Friday—yesterday week—and every night with increasing success.

The entire strength of the company is included in the cast, if we except Mdlle. Agnes Büry, to whom we think it was unwise not to have entrusted the part of Marguerite of Valois, although Mad. Rudersdorff sings the music with great cleverness. Mdlle. Agnes Büry has more facility than Mad. Rudersdorff, and would, moreover, look the part better. However, Mad. Rudersdorff pleases very much in Marguerite, in spite of her elaborate carefulness, and her invariable habit of dragging the "tempi."

Mad. Caradori, in Valentine, was at times out of her element, and sometimes in her element. She was most effective in the energetic passages of the music, and in the finale to the second act, exhibited surprising force and vigour. The great duet with Marcel, in the scene of the Pré-aux-Clercs, was also sung with power and feeling, and elicited frequent bursts of applause. The more tender emotions, however, are not so congenial to Mad. Caradori. The duet with Raoul after the conspiration scene, although displaying much earnestness and intensity, was deficient in softness and delicacy, and many of the well-known points were robbed of their effect.

Mdlle. Janda, the new contralto, is a mezzo-soprano. She enjoys a high reputation in Prague, which we hope to see her confirm in London. She played Urbain, the page, with a certain ease, and sang the music as if she was quite familiar with it.

Herr Formes was as powerful and dramatic as ever in Marcel—one of his finest parts. He was encored in the "Piff-paff" song, which he gave with immense vigour, and brought into play all the salient points of the character with an instinctive appreciation of its ruggedness and dogged fidelity.

Herr Reichardt pleased us exceedingly by his admirable singing in Raoul, and his general performance of this, one of the most arduous and trying of tenor parts, was worthy of high praise. The opening romanza, which generally passes unnoticed, was sung with such genuine taste, that it was unanimously encored. Herr Reichardt found no difficulty in taking in his chest voice the high notes reaching to B in alt, in the famous septet of the third act. In the duet with Valentine, after hearing the conspirators arrange the particulars of the massacre, he sang and acted with passion and tenderness, and showed himself familiar with all the stage points and effects of this great scene.

The band and chorus have been carefully trained in the music, and the ballets are got up tastefully. Most of the dresses are new, and the scenery has been expressly painted for the occasion. The performance on the first night was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and the recalls were as numerous as the applause was vehement.

DRAMATIC.

Olympic Theatre.—We were once acquainted with a lieutenant in the navy, an Irishman, who, when he was in doubt as to whether he should do a thing or not, made a point invariably of tossing up a piece of money, and abiding by the "head" or "tail" for the negative or affirmative. This eccentric mode of settling all hesitation in the pursuits of life is doubtless as old as tossing itself; but it has never, hitherto, as far as we know, furnished grounds for a dramatic sketch. A comedietta produced on Thursday night, for the first time, at the Olympic Theatre, bears the title of Heads or Tails. It is a mere bagatelle, being entirely independent of story, but is written with spirit and humour. A young gentleman called Harald Dyecaster (Mr. Wigan) having gone through various vicissitudes of life, all brought about by the decision of the toss, is driven for shelter from a shower of rain into the house of his uncle Wrangleworth (Mr. Emery), without knowing the relationship of the owner, and meets an old school-fellow, Christopher Quaile (Mr. Robson), who has just arrived, after three years' consideration, to propose for Wrangleworth's daughter. Wrangleworth has had a long lawsuit with Dyecaster's father, and is wroth against the whole race of Dyecasters. When, however, the young scion of the family declares who he is, old Wrangleworth's anger waxes less warm, and, in the end taking a great fancy to him, he proposes to his nephew to marry his daughter, and gives him half an hour to think over the proposition and decide. Dyecaster, as he believes, has never seen his cousin, and entertaining a penchant for a lady whom he has met at a ball a short time previously, hesitates as to whether he should accept his uncle's offer or not. Too gallant to pursue his invariable plan of tossing, when a lady is concerned, he writes two letters, one accepting his cousin, the other refusing her, and is about to toss up which he shall send to his uncle, when the toss is interrupted by the entrance of the maid-servant of the establishment, by whom he sends both letters to Wrangleworth, with directions to deliver to him whichever she pleases, and bring back the other. After sending the letters, Dyecaster sees his cousin, and recognises in her the lady who has made so deep an impression on his heart at the ball. He now fears that his letter of refusal my reach his uncle's hands, which fear proves too true when the girl returns with the letter in which he had accepted his cousin. Dyecaster in despair hands the epistle to Miss Wrangleworth, when the old gentleman enters in high dudgeon that the offer of his daughter should be rejected. He holds Dycaster's letter of refusal in his hand, and, upon his daughter demanding the cause of his displeasure, gives it her to read. She instantly changes the letter for that given her by Dyecaster, and declares she can see no cause therein for her father's anger. Wrangleworth is persuaded that he has read the letter wrong, and the lovers are made happy.

It will be seen by the above sketch that the part played by

Digitized by Google

Mr. Robson is entirely subsidiary, and that the real personages of the comedietta are Dyecaster and Wrangleworth. All Mr. Robson could do with Christopher Quaile was to make him sneeze artistically, and speak through his lose after the ma*ller* of o*le* who rece*l*tly caught a viole*l* cold i*l* his head. Mr. Robson's sneezings and his inarticulations created roars of laughter; but the part is quite beneath him, and we are rather surprised he should condescend to play it. Wrangleworth is the best character in the piece, and Mr. Emery performed it admirably. Mr. Robson, however, took his revenge in Hush Money, the piece following, in which he has a part well suited to him, Jaspar Touchwood, and which he plays with surprising force and humour. No one should miss seeing Mr. Robson in Hush Money.

After the fall of the curtain in Heads or Tails, all the actors had to appear to a general summons, and, the author having been called for, Mr. Wigan came forward, and announced the piece to be from the pen of Mr. Palgrave Simpson.

SURREY.—We have to apologize to the fair lessee of this theatre, and to our readers, for having omitted (from an inadvertency not worth explaining) to notice the production of Halévy's opera of The Jewess (La Juive), which took place on Wednesday week. The omission is of the less importance, however, as the opera is not likely to obtain the reputation in this country which it enjoys with our neighbours. To originality, the work has not the slightest claim, nor has the writer made the best use of his models, Auber and the modern Italians. If our opinion on a first hearing be correct, this will not be the first time that unmusical England has, with perfect justice, ignored the claims of continental writers of extensive popularity. The best things in the opera are the opening chorus, some parts of the finale to the first act, and the first song of the Princess (Miss Isaacs), "I've heard that you possess." Some of the dance music also is graceful. There were no encores; for the recall of Mr. Flexmore and Mdlle. Auriol in the grotesque pas-de-deux was due to the dancers. A second hearing may induce us to modify the opinion we have hazarded, but we have small hope of the work. The greatest credit is due to Miss Romer for giving the opera a trial with the English public; for this is, we believe, its first introduction on this side the channel. The ample resources of the theatre have been brought into requisition, aided by additions to the orchestra, and every exertion made to give the work a fair trial. The vocalists were efficient. Miss Isaacs, for whom the music was too high, was very loudly applauded in the aforesaid song; and in her duets with Miss Lowe, both ladies made us regret that they had not some better materials to work on than thirds and sixths. Miss Lowe, in her picturesque costume of the Jewess, made the best of her pretty countenance and graceful form. Mr. Henry Drayton's acting as the old Jew, took the audience by surprise; the last two scenes (allowing for a little mannerism) were exceedingly forcible and impressive.

SADLER'S WELLS.—A one-act comedy by Mr. Howard Paul, called A Lucky Hit, has been produced at this house with considerable success. The plot grows out of a blow given at a fête at Mousseaux, in the time of Louis XIV.—which blow is bestowed by a Chevalier Vilbrac, and received by a gay, dashing marchioness, the very pink of widows of the period. Out of this incident arise a series of well-arranged situations, which are developed with great skill. The dialogue is smart and telling, and of that florid style which the romance of the period demands. Altogether, A Lucky Hit achieved a well-merited success.

---

MISS ELLEN WILLIAMS' FIRST CONCERT was given on Friday evening, the 23rd, in the new Beethoven Rooms. The concert was under the immediate patronage of the Earl and Countess of Clarendon. Miss Ellen Williams was assisted by the following artists:—vocalists—Mesdames Bochkoltz-Falconi, Vestvali, Birch, E. Birch, Taccani Tasca, Freeman, Nissen Saloman, M. Jules Lefort, and Mr. Allan Irving; instrumentalists—Mr. Charles Salaman (pianoforte), Mr. John Thomas (harp), Signor Giulio Regondi (concertina), Signor Paggi (oboe), Herr Deickmann (violin), and M. Paque (violoncello.) Mr. Lucas conducted. Miss Ellen Williams is one of the most promising students of the Royal Academy of Music, and is, we believe, a pupil of Signor Cruvelli. She has a very pleasing soprano voice, and sings with expression and taste.

FOREIGN MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 29.

WRITS OF ERROR.

THE House sat this morning to receive the opinions of the judges on a writ of error which was argued at their Lordships' bar in the month of February last.

The Peers present were—the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, Lord St. Leonard's, and another noble Lord.

The learned judges in attendance were—the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Maule, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Justice Williams, and Mr. Justice Crompton.

COPYRIGHT OF FOREIGN WORKS IN ENGLAND.

JEFFERYS (PLAINTIFF IN ERROR) V. BOOSEY (DEFENDANT IN ERROR).

This writ of error was brought upon the unanimous judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, reversing a judgment of the Court of Exchequer. The question that was raised was as to the right of the assignee of a foreign author to copyright in a work first published in this country by such assignee; and a further objection was raised by the defendant in the court below, that there had been no valid assignment to the then plaintiff. The parties were the well-known musical publishers, and the action in the Court of Exchequer was an action on the case for pirating a musical composition, entitled "A Cavatina from the Opera of La Sonnambula, by Bellini." The now plaintiff in error, Charles Jefferys, of Soho-square, was the defendant below. The declaration was in the common form, and alleged that the musical composition aforesaid had been first published in England within 28 years before the action was brought; that the plaintiff, the now defendant in error, was and is the proprietor thereof, and that such copyright was subsisting at the time when the piracy complained of was committed; that the defendant, the now plaintiff in error, wrongfully and without the consent of the plaintiff, the now defendant in error, reprinted and sold such musical composition. To this declaration Jefferys pleaded—firstly, that Boosey was not the proprietor of the copyright in the declaration mentioned; and, secondly, that there was not at the time of the alleged piracy a subsisting copyright in the said composition. Issue having been joined on these pleas, the action came on to be tried before the present Lord Chancellor, then Mr. Baron Rolfe, at the sittings in Hilary Term, 1850. In proof of the above issue, evidence was given on the trial on behalf of Boosey, that the opera of La Sonnambula, of which the composition in question was a portion, was composed at Milan, in Lombardy, in the month of February, 1831, by Signor Vincenzo Bellini, an alien, then domiciled and residing at Milan; that the said Vincenzo Bellini was, by the law of Milan, entitled to the copyright in the opera and musical composition, and to assign the same at the time he assigned it; that on the 19th of February, 1831, by an instrument in writing, signed and executed according to the law of Milan, the said Vincenzo Bellini assigned the said copyright in the said opera to one Giovanni Ricordi, also an alien, and then domiciled and resident at Milan; and that such copyright, and the right of assigning it, according to the law of Milan, became vested in Giovanni Ricordi; that the said Giovanni Ricordi, on the 9th of June, 1831, in England (but being then an alien, and domiciled and resident out of the British dominions), duly signed, sealed, and executed an indenture between himself and the plaintiff, the defendant in error, by which he assigned the copyright of the opera of La Sonnambula for publication in Great Britain and Ireland; that Boosey was a native-born British subject, resident in England, and that he published the opera of Sonnambula in London on the 10th of June, 1831. There had been no prior publication of the opera, or of the musical composition in question, either in the British or in any other country; that on the 10th of June, 1831, he made the usual entry at Stationers'-hall in respect of the opera, and then deposited copies in the British Museum and other institutions, as by law required; and on the 13th of May, 1844, he made a further entry at Stationers'-hall, under the 5th and 6th

Digitized by Google

Victoria, c. 45. On this evidence the learned judge before whom the action was tried, directed the jury that the evidence was not sufficient to entitle Boosey to a verdict on both or either of the issues, and that they ought to find for Jefferys, and the jury found a verdict accordingly for the then defendant. A bill of exceptions was tendered to the ruling of the learned judge, and a writ of error was brought in the Exchequer Chamber, which was argued after Easter Term, 1851, when the Court held that the direction of the learned judge was erroneous, and that there ought to be a new trial. The present writ of error was then brought, as against that judgment.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, at the termination of the arguments, submitted the following questions for the consideration and opinion of the learned judges—namely,

"Firstly,—Vincenzo Bellini, an alien, living at Milan, was possessed of a literary work, in which, according to the laws of Milan, he had a certain copyright, the nature and extent of which did not appear, and he, on the 19th of February, 1831, by an instrument in writing of that same date, not executed in the presence of or attested by two witnesses, assigned his copyright to Giovanni Ricordi, which assignment was valid by the laws of Milan. Giovanni Ricordi came to this country, and, on the 9th of June, 1831, by a deed executed in the presence of, and attested by two witnesses, for a valuable consideration, assigned his copyright to the defendant in error, his heirs, etc., but only for publication in this country. The plaintiff in error, without any license from the defendant in error, published the said literary work. Under these circumstances, did such a publication give a right of action to the defendant in error?

"Secondly,—If the assignment by Bellini to Ricordi had been made by a deed attested by two witnesses, would that have made any and what difference?

"Thirdly.—If Bellini, instead of making an assignment to Ricordi while he was living at Milan, had made the assignment to the defendant in error at Milan, in the same manner as he did to Ricordi, would it have made any and what difference?

"Fourthly.—If the work had been printed and published at Milan before the assignment to the defendant in error, would it have made any and what difference?

"Fifthly.—If the work had been printed and published at Milan after the assignment to the defendant in error, but before publication in this country, would it have made any and what difference?

"Lastly.—If the assignment had not been limited to publication in this country, would it have made any and what difference?"

Lord Chief Justice JERVIS, having consulted the other judges, asked for time to consider these questions.

This morning, the learned judges having been summoned to assist their Lordships in hearing the arguments in another writ of error, took the opportunity of delivering their opinion seriatim.

Mr. Justice CROMPTON, Mr. Justice WILLIAMS, Mr. Justice ERLE, Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN, Mr. Justice MAULE, and Mr. Justice COLERIDGE expressed the opinion that the publication in this country by Jefferys, the plaintiff in error, gave the defendant in error, Boosey, a right of action against him, inasmuch as that the assignment of the copyright and property therein was a complete and valid assignment.

Lord Chief Justice JERVIS, the CHIEF BARON, Mr. Baron PARKE, and Mr. Baron ALDERSON intimated a contrary opinion.

The LORD CHANCELLOR having, on behalf of their Lordships, offered thanks to the learned judges for the consideration of and the opinions they had delivered upon the questions submitted to them, moved that the further consideration of the case by their Lordships' House be postponed.

Further consideration adjourned accordingly.

---

HERR ROSENHAIN had the honour, yesterday, of playing some of his compositions at Buckingham Palace, by command of Her Majesty.

ISCHL.—Mad. Jenny Lind Goldschmidt and her husband are stopping here.

REVIEWS.

"ELEGIE"—for alto, violin, or violoncello, with accompaniment for the pianoforte. By H. Vieuxtemps, Op. 30. Ewer & Co.

LIKE all that M. Vieuxtemps composes, this Elégie is full of musical feeling and remarkable for ingenuity. We prefer it on the alto, the instrument for which, we presume, it was originally intended. Our tenor players would do well to possess themselves of it, since it is equally good as a study of style and as an exercise for mechanical practice. The opening theme, in F minor, is very expressive; and the episode in A flat affords a grateful relief to its more gloomy and passionate character. After a reference to the first subject, the Elégie—which is short, and not so very difficult as is usual with the music of the illustrious Belgian violinist—terminates with a coda in the bravura style, which is quite as elegant as it is brilliant.

---

"NOCTURNE," for the Pianoforte. By Adolf Terschak. Ewer and Co.

To play this graceful little piece correctly demands a good command of arpeggios with the left hand. It is a song without words, in E major, unpretending, and not strikingly original, but so well written as to be generally acceptable. We believe the composer is eminent as a flautist.

---

"MOOSROESLEIN WALZER" ("MOSS ROSE WALTZES"), for the Pianoforte. W. A. Lucker. Ewer and Co.

A SET of waltzes in the regular Viennese style, and abounding in the Viennese chique—fit for the Sperl, where the "exquisite modulation of the triple tempo full to the utmost fulness, yet not heavy, round and equal, yet still with a slight propelling," so much entranced the author of Modern Music, Recollections, and Criticisms, who, among recent discoveries, has found out that Mr. Sterndale Bennett cannot play the pianoforte, and that Mr. Macfarren's cadenzas are "crude and uncouth excrescences," and who, no longer "freakish," falls savagely, with his critical tomahawk, upon everything that comes in his way, except Dr. Liszt, Mr. Hallé, Julius Regondi, Mad. Viardot Garcia, and other pets of his "personal pseudo reverence, in reality covert vanity." There is nothing very formidably new in any one of the Moss Rose Waltzes; but they are all tuneful, gay, and good to dance to. In the absence of "the great Strauss," what more can be expected?

---

"KŒNIGL.-PREUSSISCHER GALOPP." By Mathilde Langen. Ewer and Co.

As the Royal "Prussian Galop" is the composition of a lady, gallantry forbids us to say more than it is very simple.

---

SERENADE—"THE NIGHT DANCERS"—Composed and arranged for the Pianoforte by D. Pegler. Addison, Cramer, Leader and Cocks.

THIS serenade, composed for and performed by Her Majesty's private band at Windsor Castle, is creditable to the talent of Mr. Pegler, one of our most esteemed provincial professors. It is in E flat, something in the Pastoral style—short, pretty, effectively arranged for the pianoforte, and very easy to play.

---

"THE BALTIC GALOP"—Albert Wagner. Boosey and Sons.

MR. WAGNER has succeeded in writing a lively and well-marked galop, without copying others, and without a touch of vulgarity or commonplace about it. Both subjects are striking—the second, or trio (in E flat), especially so. The name of the galop, moreover, and the portrait of the gallant Napier on the title-page, invest it with a particular attraction at the present moment.

---

"REMINISCENCES DE L'ETOILE DU NORD"—pour le Piano. P. de Vos. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

M. DE VOS, well known as a popular manufacturer of drawing-room music, has taken the light and airy barcarole, and the beautiful prayer, from Meyerbeer's new and successful comic opera, and hashed them up into an agreeable and not ineffective olla podrida—or, to use the set term, Fantaisie Brillante. Except in the motivi of Meyerbeer, however, it would be in vain to seek for an idea in any one of the eleven pages of which it is composed. M. de Vos, like many others, writes "to order," and "for a consideration." May his shadow never be less!

Digitized by Google

"Les Gondoles"—Tarentelle. By Richard Mulder.—"Le Bal"—Valse de Salon. Ditto. Ewer and Co.

These short pieces—danses de salon—form Nos. 2 and 3 of a set, entitled Les Loisirs de la Châtelaine. The Châtelaine might, we think, employ her hours of leisure to better purpose than in playing them, since there is very little in them to commend. The Tarantella, in A minor, is spirited and well written for the pianoforte, but as "old as the hills," if not older. The valse, in C major, is flowing and rhythmical, but stale—stale—stale! It seems impossible to find a new thought for dancing music now-a-days. When shall we have another Mozart to compose waltzes as well as symphonies?

Married.—On the 22nd inst., at the parish church of Hare, by the Rev. Walter Kelly, Herr Wilhelm Kuhe, of Prague, to Jessie, youngest daughter of the late William Morris, Esq., late of Streatham, Surrey.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, July 1st, 1854.

With the amount of reason we possess, we cannot at all get at the logic of the international copyright question. To ordinary apprehensions, it would seem as simple as an axiom, but to chief justices of the law this is evidently not the case. All the arguments of all the legal authorities in the world, however, must fail to knock down the theory that the work of a man's brain is his own property, and that he has a moral and indisputable right to do what he likes with it. He that possesses land and beeves would be very much astonished if you were to tell him that his land and beeves are not his own absolute and undivided property. If an Englishman sells a horse to a Frenchman, and the Frenchmen takes it to France, is that a reason why other Frenchman who have a fancy for horses should lay claim to it in common with the purchaser?

The land and beeves of a poet, novelist, or composer, are the products of his intellect—his poem, his romance, or his opera, is his horse; and he has as much a right to dispose of it, how, when, where, and to whom he pleases, as the landholder his ox, or the gentleman his horse. It is monstrous that a law should be even supposed to exist, which robs the poor man of intellect of his sole means of gaining an existence. The question between the traders is one for them to consider; we merely take up the gauntlet for the producer. If a publisher gives a composer so much for a work, and, when he has paid the money and taken away the manuscript, finds that he has no real property in it, simply because the author is an alien, and he, the purchaser, a native-born subject of the country in which he lives, he will buy no more, and thus save himself from further loss. The sufferer, then, is the man of genius, who lives by his wits, and who is likely to find himself reduced to a bare subsistence—and that, because some obscure and inexplicable relic of barbarous legislation, in phraseology impossible to comprehend, declares that he has no right in his own works anywhere except on the spot where he may chance to have fixed his residence. A man must live somewhere, even though he be a musician; and must be born somewhere, even though he be a poet; and must be the subject of some state, even though he write novels. It is therefore very hard to be told that what everyone acknowledges to be his, and no one else's, in Paris or Milan, should belong to any and everybody in London or New York. On what plea can it be maintained, that to rob a jeweller or a horse-dealer is a punishable act, while to rob a composer or a man of letters is nothing of the sort, but, on the contrary, perhaps something very clever and commendable. It really exhausts patience to discuss so very self-evident a proposition.

The miserable sophistry of those who wish to impress on the minds of our English composers that it would be an advantage to have no international copyright, is scarcely worth an argument. The "proof of the pudding is in the eating." If music-sellers can get manuscripts for nothing from abroad, they would be absolute idiots to pay for them at home. We all know what an endless stock of "popular" music of all kinds is incessantly accumulating on the continent, and how easy it would be, in the absence of international copyright, for a hundred adventurers, without a penny of capital, or a farthing's worth of principle, to set up as music-sellers, and supply London and the provinces, at the risk of little or nothing but their own reputations as conscientious tradesmen. Things are bad enough as they are, and English composers of all kinds are already deep enough in the mire. The "ceremonies" of securing foreign copyrights are already so minute and punctilious, and the pains and expense of maintaining them, when infringed upon, so immense, that every facility is given to the musical pirate, to depredate and fatten on the goods of others. If there be no law of international copyright, there should, at least, to carry out the principle, be a law forbidding the republication of foreign works altogether, and sanctioning only their importation. The producers would then not be cheated of their rights, nor the honest publishers mulcted of their just profits. The advertisement of M. Meyerbeer—which for some weeks appeared in our columns—wherein the celebrated composer asserts his claim to the offspring of his own unassisted genius, and his right of disposing of it as seems to him best, is almost calculated to raise a smile. Ought it, under any circumstances whatever, to be incumbent on such a man, to insist in the public papers upon the fact, that what is his is his, and that having, for a consideration, transferred his right to another, that other becomes the sole and unquestionable proprietor? The question lies in a nutshell, and the resolution is as plain as that two and two make four.

Wandsworth.—Mr. Pollard delivered his second Lecture on Music here on Tuesday evening, and was aided by Mrs. Weiss, Mrs. Henry Barnby, Mr. Warren, and some amateurs. Among the illustrations, an Anthem of Purcell's was curious as a specimen of his early works. There was a selection from Rossini's Stabat Mater. Mr. Pollard's definition of the master's style, "Italian melody engrafted on the rich and ever-varying resources of German harmony," is good, but strictly true of the writer's latter works only. Mrs. Henry Barnby, who made her first appearance a year or two ago as Miss Warman, is a pupil of Sir George Smart. She has a nice soprano voice of considerable power, and gave a pure and delicate reading of Haydn's song, "With verdure clad." She is very young, but only wants the ease and self-possession which experience will give, to become an acquisition to the long and honourable list of our native singers of ballad music. Mrs. Weiss's delivery of Haydn's canzonet, "My Mother bids me," would have been perfect had she taken it a thought slower. There are few more impassioned interpreters of the simplicity of Haydn than this lady. The song was vociferously applauded and loudly encored. Mr. Hernbush, a violinist, received much applause in a solo. The attendance was moderate. The third and last lecture will take place on Tuesday next.

Digitized by Google

MDLLE. CLAUSS'S CONCERT.

THE morning concert of Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss, which took place on Saturday, at Willis's Rooms, in presence of a very numerous and fashionable audience, was one of the most interesting of the season. The following was the selection of pieces performed by the young and gifted artist:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet—B minor | Mendelssohn. |
| Suite de Pièces—E minor, Pianoforte | Handel. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sonate—B flat, Op. 22, Pianoforte | Beethoven. |
| Morceaux—Pianoforte { Nocturne, F sharp | Chopin. |
| Morceaux—Pianoforte { Grande Fantaisie, Lucia | Liszt. |

In Mendelssohn's work, one of the finest and most difficult of the master (although a very early composition), Mdlle. Clauss was supported by Herr Ernst (violin), Mr. Hill (viola), and Sig. Piatti (violoncello), so that the "quartet" was in all respects irreproachable. The performance was admirable, and the well-sustained rapidity with which the allegro, scherzo, and finale were taken, demonstrated the remarkable advance which Mdlle. Clauss has made, of late, in the mechanism of her art.

The suite in E minor is one of the best from the Suites de Pièces of Handel, and begins with the grandest and most elaborate of the five fugues contained in the second book. Mdlle. Clauss, not injudiciously, placed the fugue, which is the most brilliant morceau in the set, last instead of first, and omitted the sarabande. Her playing of the allemands and courante was in the pure legato style which best befits the music; the quaint gigue was quaintly read, and the fugue performed with extraordinary decision, point, and fluency.

Beethoven's fascinating sonata could hardly have been interpreted with more poetical feeling or more correct and easy execution. Every movement was given in the proper time, and with a thorough appreciation of its character; and the adagio, one of the loveliest ever composed, even by Beethoven, was as perfect in expression as the rondo allegretto was flowing, tasteful, and unaffected. That Mdlle. Clauss played Chopin's sentimental nocturne as well as could be wished, it is almost superfluous to add; but in Liszt's preposterous fantasia she fairly surprised the audience by the power and manual dexterity she exhibited. Her performances were listened to with equal pleasure and attention, and she was several times recalled to the platform. Handel's fugue was redemanded; but the compliment was modestly declined by the young artist.

A selection of vocal pieces by Miss Louisa Pyne (who sang the pretty song from Mr. Frank Mori's Fridolin, "So good, so mild"), Mad. Amedei (who highly distinguished herself in Mozart's "Addio"), and M. Jules Lefort (who was much applauded in Herr Blumenthal's popular romance, "Pour ma mère"), agreeably filled up the intervals between the performances of Mdlle. Clauss. Mr. Frank Mori was the accompanyist at the piano.

---

Mrs. William Hale (formerly Miss Stevens, of Birmingham), made her first appearance before a London audience on the 28th instant, at her concert which was held in the Philharmonic Rooms. Mrs. Hale performed in a pianoforte trio and a duet by Mendelssohn; besides playing two solos by Thalberg and Prudent. She gained much applause by her effective rendering of the difficult fantasia on "Lucia" by the last-named composer. Mrs. Hale was assisted by Miss Dolby, Signor Gardoni, and other artists of equal note. The concert was very attractive, and appeared to give satisfaction to all present.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The eighth and last concert of the eighth season took place on Monday night, before a fashionable audience, in the Hanover Square Rooms, when the following selection was presented:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Symphony in D | E. Aguilar. |
| Cradle Song | S. W. Waley. |
| Violin Solo (Lucrezia Borgia) | Sainton. |
| Song, "The Lord of the Castle" | G. A. Osborne. |
| Overture (Don Juan) | Mozart. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, MS. | Gollmick. |
| Allegretto (Symphony in A) | Beethoven. |
| Song | Henry Leslie. |
| Overture (Zampa) | Hérold. |

Conductor, Mr. Osborne.

Mr. Aguilar's very clever symphony, which was criticised in the notice of his concert, was hardly so well played as might have been anticipated from the great improvement the amateurs have been making of late. But then there was the Prophète at Covent Garden, and some of the best professional members of the band were compelled to send substitutes. The charming Andante in B minor, and the Allegro alla minuetto were much better played than the other movements. The pizzicato passage, in the trio, came out well, and at the end the fiddles were not, strange to say, a bit more out of tune than before they began it.

Mr. Waley's "Cradle Song," (well sung by Mrs. Weiss), although a little in the manner of Mendelssohn's "On Song's bright pinions," is quite a little "gem," as the term goes; and the pianoforte accompaniment, which is elaborate and ingenious, was played to perfection by the composer. Of M. Sainton's effective fantasia there is nothing to add to the praise that has been bestowed upon it on other occasions. It was played with great care and effect by Mr. D'Egville. Mr. Osborne's dramatic song, or rather scene, was sung with excellent effect by Miss Lascelles; and Mozart's overture to Don Juan, with Winter's coda (composed in order to suit it for a concert-room, in violation, we think, of all good taste) was played so well by the band as to make up for the deficiencies in Mr. Aguilar's symphony.

The new overture of Mr. Gollmick was also ably executed, and was heard with the greatest satisfaction. It is a work of decided merit, unambitious in form, and brilliant rather than profound, but written with great clearness and extremely well instrumented for the orchestra. Mr. Gollmick will, we hope, pursue his studies in this direction. The allegretto in A minor from Beethoven's 7th symthony would have been better for a little more delicacy in the fugued part. The rest was well done; the amateurs are familiar with it, which says much in their favour. Mr. Leslie's song, "Love springs from gentleness"—a spirited air in the bolero style—was sung with taste by Miss Ransford, and much admired. The overture to Zampa was played with the energy and decision invariably exhibited by the amateurs in the orchestral music of the French operatic school. Mr. Osborne conducted with his accustomed zeal and talent.

Next week we shall give a short résumé of the season, which has been, in most respects, highly creditable to the Amateur Musical Society.

---

MUSICAL TESTIMONIAL.—A very gratifying testimonial of public esteem has recently been presented to Mr. J. Baptiste Calkin, by the Warden and students of St. Columba's College, in Ireland, upon Mr. Calkin being about to take up his residence in London, after holding the offices of organist, choir-master, and precentor in the above college for seven years. The gift is an elegantly-ornamented bâton, of bog-elm, manufactured by Mr. West, of Dame-street, Dublin. The lower ornament represents the ferule of an ancient Irish crosier. The staff is decorated with harps, and a large one at the top; those instruments being such as were used by the Irish bards of olden time. Round the top is engraved the music of the opening of an anthem ("It is a good thing to give thanks," 92nd Psalm), composed by Mr. Calkin, for the College choir, at the request of the Warden. The bâton is enclosed in a black case of bog-oak, bearing a silver inscription-plate.

Digitized by Google

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

The seventh concert came off on Thursday. The following was the programme:—

Quartet No. 2, in G, Alfred Mellon. Andante and Scherzo (quartet), Op. 81, Mendelssohn. Sonata No. 15, in B flat, Pianoforte and Violin, Mozart. Quartet No. 13, B minor, Op. 45, No. 2, Spohr. Caprice, F sharp minor, Pianoforte, Mendelssohn.

Executants—Messrs. Sainton and Cooper (violin), Mr. Hill (tenor), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Miss Arabella Goddard (pianoforte.)

This was a good programme, and the directors must be complimented for their spirit in giving the compositions of native musicians. Their selection on the present occasion was a happy one. The quartet of Mr. Alfred Mellon is exceedingly clever, well written, and effective, and produced a highly favourable impression. Its performance by MM. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti, was irreproachable.

The Andante and Scherzo of Mendelssohn are supposed to be fragments of a quartet—the two middle movements—the first and last being wanting. They are from a collection of four pieces originally published together, shortly after Mendelssohn's death. Mr. Macfarren, in his analytic prospectus, gives it as his opinion, that it is likely each piece was in itself a completed composition. Be this the case or not, both the andante and scherzo are imbued with the spirit of the master, and are worthy of his genius. "These pieces," says Mr. Macfarren, "may be taken as evidence of the spontaneous character of Mendelssohn's genius, as proof that he wrote because ideas pressed upon him for expression, not because he had always a purpose to fulfil, and studied for the means to carry it out." They were perfectly executed.

The characteristics of Mozart's sonata (the one composed at Vienna for the famous lady-violinist, Mad. Strinassachi), are tenderness and grace. It was executed to perfection by Miss Arabella Goddard and Mr. Cooper, and more applause bestowed upon it than is generally given at these and similar morning réunions. The andante in E flat was played by Miss Goddard with faultless expression. It was simple, unaffected, and thoroughly Mozartean.

Spohr's quartet, one of his best, is well known to all lovers of chamber music, and was interesting from first to last. It was played superbly.

Perhaps in the range of pianoforte compositions none can be found more difficult than the Caprice in F sharp minor, which exacts the greatest mechanical powers from the performer, and an unusual amount of physical force and stamina. The Caprice is sixteen pages in length, and is marked prestissimo without as much as half a bar of repose in any part of it. It is seldom indeed that any pianist has the boldness to attempt it in public, and it is accordingly very seldom heard in the concert room. The performance by Miss Goddard was listened to with equal curiosity and interest, and the young pianist came through the ordeal triumphantly. Miss Goddard took the time perhaps even faster than the composer himself dreamed of; but sustained it to the last, and with undeviating point, decision, and clearness.

THE QUEEN'S BALL.

For the information of our terpsichorean subscribers, we subjoin a list of the dance music performed at Her Majesty's Ball on Tuesday, by the joint bands of Messrs. Laurent and John Weippert.

Quadrilles.—Partant pour la Syrie, Laurent; Bon Vivant, Lamotte; Les Dames aux Camelias, Rivière; Russell, Browne; Fille du Marbre, Bousquet; L'Etoile du Nord, Musard; Breadalbane (M.S.), Bosisio; Glasgow, Wellington Guernsey.

Valses.—Leonora, Laurent; Bruit du Soir, Strauss; Vilikins, Laurent; Lille, Strauss; Blooming of the Roses, Labitzky; Gondoles de la Tames, Bosisio; Solon Spruche, Strauss; Stars of the West, Montagne; Georgette, D'Albert.

Polkas.—L'Etoile du Nord, Laurent; Fille du Marbre, Schubert; Fête Cocotte, Wallerstein; Sultan, D'Albert; Guerrière, Wallerstein; Bulgarian, Montagne.

Galops.—Star of the North, Browne; Koeniglich-Preussischer, Langen.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.

The third concert, on Saturday, the 17th ult., was very well attended, and the orchestral performances were as interesting as usual. The selection was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (Isles of Fingal) - - - - | Mendelssohn. |
| Concerto, Pianoforte, Op. 73 - - - | Beethoven. |
| Symphony, in E flat - - - - | Mozart. |
| New Fantasia, Trombone - - - - | Rex. |
| Overture (The Regicide) - - - - | C. Lucas. |

Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon.

Mendelssohn's overture—the gloomiest, the most magnificent, and the most imaginative of his compositions in that style, was played with remarkable spirit. The "strings" were severely tested in the coda, which is very difficult; but they came out well from the ordeal. Nevertheless, half-a-dozen or so more would not have been found amiss. Mozart's melodious and perfect symphony was not wisely placed in the programme. After the long, elaborate, and superb concerto of Beethoven in the same key, a work which, though of such rare beauty, is of so tranquil and unpretending a character, could not but lose much of its effect. The concerto was very well played by Mr. Cusins, who goes on improving, and has, we believe, abandoned the violin as a solo instrument, to devote himself to the pianoforte and composition. The symphony, too, was admirably executed, although we have heard still more satisfactory performances by the members of the Orchestral Union.

If we are to judge Mr. Rex by his fantasia, we should be hardly inclined to exclaim Vivat Rex!—while, on the other hand, Mr. Winterbottom's playing was so good, his execution so remarkable, that we have no objection whatever to say Vivat Winterbottom! We suppose, however, that a good solo for display, and good music in the bargain, are incompatible. We wish some one would prove the contrary. The clever and well-instrumented overture by Mr. Lucas (to a MS. opera, we believe) is already known to the public. It was performed in first-rate style.

---

The Conservative Land Society.—At the seventh quarterly meeting of the members, held in Freemasons' Hall, on the 28th of June, the report of the Executive Committee was read and unanimously approved. The cash receipts for the present quarter were £18,056 8s., being an increase of £654 12s. 7d. on the corresponding quarter of 1853. The total cash receipts for the Midsummer quarter were £116,165 18s. 4d., and the total amount of withdrawals to the same date only amounting to £1,955 18s. 1d., the balance left is £114,210 0s. 3d. The uncompleted shares taken are 8,803, and the completed or paid up in full 1,063, making a total to the 24th of June of 9,866 shares. There have been 3,114 shares placed on the order of rights, of which 1,388 were drawn, 1,040 completed, and 686 by seniority. Deducting 1,193 rights exercised on estates, the total rights on the register are now 1,923. The last number by seniority being 1,088 is a remarkable proof of the excellent working of the system adopted by the Committee in the registry of rights. The report records the election of Viscount Ingestre as a member of the Board, and of the Right Honourable R. A. Christopher, M.P., as one of the four trustees in place of the late Mr. Alderman Thompson. Active steps have been taken to secure the registration of allottees, who are entitled to the freehold franchise. The taking of 209 plots of the value of £25,000, on the St. Margaret's Estate, is cited as one of the extraordinary facts in the annals of freehold land societies. The Royal Naval Female School, it is announced is in negociation for the St. Margaret's mansion and a portion of the unallotted land, this excellent institution having appealed to public support to raise the necessary funds, for which patriotic purpose Her Majesty will contribute 100 guineas. The allotment of the second portion of the Brighton Estate on the 5th of July, and of the Tottenham Green Estate on the 19th of July, was announced, and satisfactory returns of the progress of the roads, drains and building operations on the Putney, Ealing, Forest-hill, Enfield, Wood-green, Leeds, and Reading Estates, were supplied. The chairman, Viscount Ranelagh, announced that an important purchase was in contemplation for the Society, and the meeting was addressed by Viscount Ingestre, H. S. Patteson Esq., of Norwich, Henry Pownall Dodworth, H. E. Canney Esq., W. Sangster Esq., &c.

Digitized by Google

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It is now definitively settled that the Grand Opéra is to close on the 1st July for six weeks. The France Musicale says that Mdlle. Cruvelli will start for London on the same day, and, after singing during the month of July at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, proceed on a tour in the provinces, with a troupe formed by Mr. Beale. The latter part of the statement is true, but I cannot vouch for the former. The rehearsals of La Nonne Sanglante continue. M. Gounod has added a new air for Mdlle. Wertheimber, who was not satisfied with her part.—At the Opéra Comique, the first representation of M. Duprato's new one-act opera is promised for Friday, the 30th. La Fiancée du Diable is still favourably received. M. Perrin has renewed the engagement of Mdlle. Caroline Duprez. The one-act opera by M. Duprez, Jeliotte, first played at the composer's private theatre, in the Rue Turgot, has been accepted by the management of the Opéra Comique, and will, according to report, be put in rehearsal after the production of the opera written by the Prince de la Moscowa.

In virtue of an Imperial decree, the theatres of Paris non-subventionnés, the theatres of the departments, and the dramatic censorship, have been taken from the direction of the Minister of the Interior and placed under that of the Minister of State. The engagement of Mad. Ugalde at the Grand Opéra expired on the 25th inst. Certain Paris papers have announced that this lady had signed an engagement for three months with the management of the theatre at Marseilles. This is a mistake. There has been no question of a regular engagement at all, but simply of a number of representations, to be fixed by Mad. Ugalde herself, who, however, has not yet signed, in spite of the advantageous terms which have been offered her.—M. Edouard Batiste, professor at the Imperial Conservatory of Music, and organist of the church of St. Nicolas-des-Champs, has been appointed organist at St. Eustache.—The Société-Sainte-Cécile held, last week, its yearly general meeting. After the reading of the report, which confirmed the fresh progress made by the society, the meeting proceeded to re-elect its committee and a conductor, in the place of M. Seghers, who has resigned. M. Barbereau, formerly chef-d'orchestre at the Italian Opera, was unanimously appointed to the vacant post. M. Wekerlin will continue to direct the vocal department.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Donizetti's opera, Der Liebestrank (L'Elisir d'Amore) has been given for the benefit of Mad. Borghi-Mamo, who played Adine, but was not very successful, as the part is by no means suited to her. As much may be said of Herr Naudin in Nemorino. Herr Scalese was Dulcamara, and Herr Everardi, the Serjeant. Herr Eckert conducted. On the whole, the performance was anything but satisfactory. It is expected that the season of German opera will commence with Boïeldieu's Weisse Frau (La Dame Blanche).—Herr Beck, the bass, has returned from Brunn, after concluding his engagement at the theatre there.—Norma is announced at the Imperial Opera-house for the benefit of Fräulein Demeric, who will play Adalgisa, and Linda di Chamouni for the benefit of Herr Ferri.—Some of the Viennese papers have stated that Herr Merelli intended to engage Sophie Cruvelli for the next season of Italian opera. There is, however, no truth in the report, since Mdlle. Cruvelli is engaged for next season in Paris, and, what is more, the management of the Grand Opéra has even paid her a large extra sum to give up two months of the congé to which she is entitled.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The only subject of importance at the Royal Opera-House, is the continued success of Fräulein Ney. She appeared on Wednesday, the 29th inst., as Frau Fluth (Mrs. Ford), in Nicolai's Lustige Weiber von Windsor, and this evening she concludes her engagement by a repetition of Norma. The season will shortly be brought to a close with Masaniello, and the theatre will remain shut until the 24th of August. A concert of sacred music was given on Wednesday, by Hennig's Gesangverein, in St. Peter's church, for the benefit of the poor and sick of the Sophien-Parochie. The programme comprised solos, by various members of the Royal Opera-House and Domchor; choruses from the works of ancient and modern composers; and pieces for the organ and bassoon. A performance took place on the festival of Corpus Christi, in the St. Hedwigs Kirche, consisting of the Huldigungsmesse, composed by the Hohenzollern Kammer-Musiker, Herr Wichtl, who received, in consequence, from His Majesty the King of Prussia, the order of the Red Eagle. The composer himself conducted. The singers included Mad. Herrenburger, Herr Zschieske, &c., with some of the members of the Royal Chapel.

On the 13th of June, at seven o'clock A.M., the same hour at which her husband died, Lortzing's widow breathed her last. She was formerly on the stage, but, for some time past, had retired, and devoted herself entirely to the memory of her deceased husband and the care of her children.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—The season commenced with Flotow's Martha, which was favourably received.—The manuscript works left by the late Schneider, Hofkapellmeister at Dessau, comprise one hundred and fifty-two compositions, including thirteen oratorios, eleven masses, forty-seven psalms, seven operas, five Festspiels (pieces for festivals), eight overtures, seven symphonies, etc.

COLOGNE.—The members of the Männergesangverein returned on the 6th from England. They were welcomed by their friends at a place called Königsdorf, several miles from Cologne. The proceeds of the twenty-three concerts given by them in the space of twenty-nine days amount to 45,000 thalers, of which 8,000 are devoted to the building fund of the Cathedral.—Herr Ferdinand Hiller is engaged on a new comic opera, the libretto of which is by Herr Roderich Benedix.

DRESDEN.—Herr Tichatscheck has returned from his tour, and re-opened here as Max, in Der Freischütz.—Fräulein La Grua has given satisfaction as Valentine, in the Huguenots.

HAMBURGH.—M. Roger, the French tenor, has been very successful. He appeared first as Eleazar, in the Jewess. Every place in the house was taken.—After playing Fides, in La Prophète, twice, Mad. Hermann-Czillag has appeared as Romeo, in I Montecchi e Capuletti.—Mad. Cornet, the well-known teacher of singing, has left for London, with her daughter and her pupils, Herr H. Formes and Fräulein Holm.—Herr Kücken is staying here. He has received the gold medal for Arts and Sciences, with ribbon, from His Majesty the King of Hanover.

CELLE.—The Singverein has lately given two concerts, under the direction of Herr Stolze. At the first, they performed Friedrich Schneider's Weltgericht, and, at the second, assisted by several of the Kammermusiker, from Hanover, Mendelssohn's trio, No. 2, in C minor, Op. 66, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; Mozart's quartet in C major, the Introduction, laughing chorus, and trio with double chorus, from Der Freischütz, and A. Romberg's music to Das Lied der Glocke.

MANNHEIM.—Fräulein Wildauer, from Vienna, has appeared here as Marie, in the Regimentstochter, Suzanna, in Figaro's Hochzeit, in the fourth act of Robert der Teufel, as the Princess, and, finally, as Nandl, in Ein Versprechen hinterm Heerd. She was successful in all of the above characters, especially the last.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—The members of Rühl's Gesangverein have performed Sebastian Bach's Passion, according to the Gospel of St. John.—The theatre was so badly attended during the "starring" engagement of Herr Steger, that the well-known tenor left without playing the number of times previously agreed on.

MUNICH.—Benvenuto Cellini, of Hector Berlioz, is to be produced here this summer, under the direction of the composer. L'Etoile du Nord will shortly be brought out, with Fräulein Schwarzbach as Catherine.

BOLOGNA.—Verdi's Il Trovatore continues to draw crowded houses. The company consists of Mesdames Vives and Boccabadati, Signori Boucardè, Fiori, and Ghini.

DESSAU.—Among a host of other musicians, candidates for the vacant post of Kapellmeister here, we find Herr Kalliwoda.

DARMSTADT.—Herr Ander has been singing in Martha, Stradella, and Lucia di Lammermoor.

Digitized by Google

MODENA.—Rossini's Barbiere di Seviglia has been played several times with extraordinary success. The company is good, and the opera carefully got up. Madlle. Brambilla is applauded every night in the lesson scene: she introduces an air from Mercadanti's Eleonora. The other singers are Mad. Berti and Signori Corsi, Galvani, Scheggi, and Didot. Verdi's Rigoletto is in rehearsal.

FLORENCE.—The new opera, Rogiero, by Sig. Cosentino, at the Teatro Alfieri, improves in spite of the libretto, which is very indifferent. Sig. Fraschini (the "tenore della maledizione" of Mr. Lumley), has been enaged for the Royal theatre of Turin, to sing during the carnival of 1855-6. Madlle. Brambilla has signed an engagement for the Pergola at Florence, during the Carnival of 1854-5.

NAPLES.—At the Teatro Reale, the new opera, Elena di Tolosa, is played every night; at the Nuovo theatre, Verdi's Il Trovatore alternates with Mercadante's Gli Orazi e Curiazi. Both houses are badly attended, partly on account of the great heat, and partly the inefficiency of the companies. At the San Carlo, Il Corsaro, one of Verdi's early operas, is in rehearsal; the parts have been allotted to Signore De Roissi and Carrozi, and Signori Pancani and Walter. At the Teatro Nuovo, a new opera is in rehearsal, entitled Annella di Porta Capuana, the music by Fioravanti; the poetry by Arienzo.

VENICE.—The new opera, Amleto, the words and music by A. Zanardini, continues to draw good houses, and is more liked on each successive representation. The composer is a very young man, and, as a first attempt, his Amleto may be considered promising. The opening chorus is effective; the largo of the duet, for the soprano and tenor. between Mad. Morselli and Sig. Landi, the duet for soprano and basso, by Mad. Spezzia and Sig. Coletti, are nightly much applauded. The libretto is rather dull. The composer was repeatedly called for on the first night.

---

MEXICO.—We have already informed our readers that there are at present two first-rate companies here: that of Madame Sontag and that of Madame Steffanone, both of whom have their respective partisans, and divide the musical amateurs into two antagonistic camps, recalling the war carried on between the supporters of the two Italian Operas in London. Mad. Sontag's company comprises the following names: Mesdames Sontag and Fiorentini, Signori Pozzolini (tenor), Badiale (baritono), Rocco (primo buffo), Barili (basso), musical director, Sig. Bottesini. The members of the rival company are almost all old acquaintances: Prima donna, Mad. Steffanone; tenor, Sig. Salvi; baritono, Sig. Beneventano; basso profundo, Sig. Marini; buffo, Sig. Rovere; musical director, Sig. Nicolsi.

---

SYDNEY.—The Sydney Empire, dated March the 22nd, thus speaks of Mr. Clement White's new entertainment, given in that city:—"We had much pleasure last evening in welcoming an old London favourite, Mr. Clement White, late of the Theatres Royal, Drury Lane and Covent Garden, who made his first public appearance before a Sydney audience, at the School of Arts, Pitt-street. Old play-goers will remember Mr. White as a dramatic singer of great taste and power, and he has also long enjoyed a high reputation in musical circles, as a composer of several popular melodies and operettas. His performance last evening shows that neither his vocal powers, nor his taste and purity as a composer, have at all suffered by time or transplanting. His execution of the favorite old Scotch air, 'Annie Laurie,' was exquisite, and the old Irish melody, 'Kathleen O'More,' was given with deep and touching pathos. Lover's well known serio-comic song of 'Kitty Creagh,' was rapturously encored. Mr. White also gave some compositions of his own, one of which, a bravura song, 'Lord Donald,' bids fair to be very popular. We are very glad to see this gentleman among us, and look upon his performance last evening, as the prelude of much enjoyment to lovers of music, as it has revived in us many old associations of the English opera, of which Mr. White has long been a distinguished ornament, and we trust that an equally successful career awaits him in the country of his adoption."

The Sydney Morning Herald, of March 23rd, also alludes to Mr. Clement White's entertainment:—"Mr. White's thorough mastery of ballad-singing was apparent, and some of the touches were exquisite. We cordially recommend the lovers of national songs to attend Mr. White's next entertainment. His reputation as a composer and a member of the corps musical of Old Drury and Covent Garden ought to ensure him the support of discriminating amateurs."

---

STUTTGART.—Fräulein Garrigues has been well received as Lenore in Fidelio. Herr Steger, from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, is also here.—Herr Kücken has completed a new opera, which will be produced at this theatre.—Herr Meyerbeer's Nordstern (L'Etoile du Nord) is to be given on the 27th of September next, in honour of His Majesty's birthday.

---

BRADFORD—(From a Correspondent).—Two performances were given in St. George's Hall, by the Cologne Choral Union, on Monday and Tuesday, the 29th and 30th ult. Great efforts were made throughout the county to render the concerts fashionable and popular, and to secure an overflowing audience, but on neither occasion was the noble hall full—on Tuesday, especially, the attendance was thin. The cost of the two concerts was about £500—the receipts much under that sum, so that the directors of the hall, who risked the speculation at the suggestion of the enterprising mayor, S. Smith, Esq., will not gain much by their spirited endeavours. The performances of the vocalists more than realized the expectations formed of them; in fact, accustomed as the West Riding people are to fine choral singing, the perfection which our German friends exhibited astonished the audience, and I need not add that encores were the order of the evening. M. Charles Hallé was also engaged, and performed in a brilliant and effective style several morceaux by Liszt, Mendelssohn, Chopin, etc., on Monday, and, on Tuesday, Beethoven's lovely sonata in A flat. He was enthusiastically applauded, and more than once encored. We sincerely hope these admirable choral performances will have some influence on the part-singing of our West Riding vocalists, who, generally speaking, though possessing most of the qualifications necessary to form efficient executants, are but too well satisfied with moderate results, and prefer stopping half way, instead of going straight to the goal of perfection. Let it be borne in mind that the part-music given by the Cologne Choir, is pretty much the same as several societies in Yorkshire have cultivated with laudable application. The Leeds Madrigal and Motet Society, especially, has bestowed a great deal of attention upon this class of composition, and we should be doing injustice to that society if we withheld our acknowledgment of the skill they have attained in part-singing. But in the Germans we remark a singleness of purpose, an abnegation of self, a sympathy with the conductor's bâton, that produce a richness, grandeur, depth, and intensity, which we honestly admit we cannot aspire to. No doubt the fact that the Germans ignore the ear-piercing squeak of the un-manly alto voice, and contrive to find high tenors for the part we assign to the counter-tenor, has much to do with the purity and power of tone we recognize in them. Why cannot we also cultivate a natural instead of an artificial voice for this purpose? If the Germans can thus, with rare disinterestedness, devote themselves to their art, applying the proceeds derived from the enthusiastic recognition of their skill to philanthropic purposes, why should not our musical friends of Yorkshire emulate them in musical excellence, as we know they do in sterling benevolence. We have voices as rich in tone, as wide in compass, as commanding in power, especially the basses; we have hearts as warm, and we possess in our native glee, madrigal, and part-music, a more diversified selection than the German school can furnish. Then let us only will to excel in the performance of those master-pieces of vocal harmony, and we may not despair of gaining a position as honourable as the Cologne Choir has won for itself. Surely the encouragement so justly given to "strangers in the land," would not be withheld, under these circumstances, from those who are "native and to the manner born."

Digitized by Google

THE OLD HUNDREDTH PSALM.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Will you allow me to call the notice of your numerous readers to the manner in which the Old Hundredth Psalm is usually sung at the present day. My remarks are briefly these:—

1st.—That the Psalm is not usually sung as it was composed.

2nd.—That it is spoilt by the change.

And Lastly.—That it would therefore be of great benefit to our Church music were the original form universally re-adopted.

The Psalm is not usually sung as it was composed. This will be immediately seen by comparing the two versions. The following is as it is generally heard—as I had the pleasure of singing in it at the anniversary meeting of the children in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 1st inst., and also at the ceremony of opening the Crystal Palace on the 10th:

In this edition, it will be observed that there is no difference between the length of any of the notes, all being minims. Now, for the original version, as left by Dowland—it may be found in most old Prayer-books, and is as follows:

Now it is obvious that in this the first, and three last notes in each division are intended (being semibreves) to be sung exactly twice the length of the other ones (being minims), and it is by the ordinary custom of making all the notes of equal length that the beautiful effect of the whole is spoilt. Another reason why it is so spoilt is this, all the notes being of equal length, it is obliged to be taken in very slow time, so slow, in fact, that either the whole congregation, being unable to sing slow enough, gets a bar or two in advance of the organ, or various individuals, in order to fill up the time, indulge in sundry appogiaturæ, turns, twists, and other nameless ornaments, by which, I think, it will be granted the Psalm is spoiled. Now, as such ornamentation is impossible in the old version, as it can be taken in much faster time, which gives great additional grandeur as well as spirit to the whole, surely it would be of great benefit to our Church music were the original form universally re-adopted.

Begging to apologise for troubling you with these remarks, which I should not have done but that I am convinced that the general revival of this magnificent tune, in its original form, would be cordially welcomed by all lovers of English Psalmody.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

A MEMBER OF THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY,

June 16th, 1854.

---

BRESLAU.—The veteran tenor, Herr Tichatscheck, has appeared in Masaniello, The Jewess, and the Prophète. The theatre has been, for the most part, only moderately well filled. Herr Young, from Pesth, has been more favourably received.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

THIS DAY.—Mr. W. E. Evans, Pianoforte Recital, Blagrove's Rooms, Eight o'clock.

MONDAY.—W. S. Bennett, Performance of Classical Pianoforte Music, Hanover-square Rooms, Three o'clock.——English Glee and Madrigal Union Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, Three o'clock.

TUESDAY.—Musical Union, Matinée Musicale, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, Quarter-past Three.——Mr. John Thomas, Grand Concert, Hanover-square Rooms, Two o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—W. H. Holmes, Performance of Pianoforte Music, Hanover-square Rooms, Two o'clock.——Herr Carl Deichman's Concert, Hanover-square Rooms, Eight o'clock.——Miss Binckes' third and last Soirée Musicale, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, Eight o'clock.

THURSDAY.—Herr Rosenhain, Matinée Musicale, Hanover-square Rooms, Three o'clock.

FRIDAY.—Warwick-street School, Grand Concert for the benefit of, Hanover-square Rooms, Two o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

W. H. HOLMES'S THIRD PIANOFORTE CONCERT, Hanover-square Rooms, Wednesday Morning, July 5th, at Two o'clock. Tickets, all reserved, 10s. 6d.; to be had of W. H. Holmes, 36, Beaumont-street, Marylebone.

MISS BINCKES' THIRD SOIRÉE MUSICALE (Last of the Series) will take place at the Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street, on Wednesday next, July 5. To commence at Eight o'clock. Tickets and Programmes may be had of Messrs. Cramer and Co., Regent-street, and of Miss Binckes, 4, Cornbury-place, Old Kent-road.

MADAME PERSIANI will sing Baron Celli's last Romance "Il delirio d'amore" at his Matinée Musicale, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Monday, the 3rd of July next. To commence at two o'clock; applications for Tickets to be made at Messrs. Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent Street; at Baron Celli's residence, 70, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square.

ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC.—The FOURTH CONCERT for the EXHIBITION of the STUDENTS will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Saturday Morning next, July 8th, to commence at Two o'clock. Single tickets, 5s.; Family tickets (to admit Four), 16s.; to be had at the principal Music-sellers, and at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square.

MR. W. STERNDALE BENNETT respectfully announces that his MORNING PERFORMANCE of CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday, July 3. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, the Misses Cole, and Signor Gardoni. Instrumentalists—M. Vieuxtemps, Signor Piatti, Mr. George Russell, and Mr. Sterndale Bennett.—15, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square.

MADLLE. VERNETTI PARAVALLI, from the Theatres of Milan, Venise, and Turin, has the honour to announce that her First Annual Grand Concert will take place on Wednesday, July 19th, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the most distinguished patronage, and assisted by eminent artists; amongst whom, Madlle. Annie de Lara. Reserved seats, 10s.; Tickets, 7s.; Orchestra, 5s. Further particulars will be duly announced. To be had at R. W. Ollivier's, 19, Old Bond-street; Cramer, Beale and Co's., Regent-street; Leader and Cocks', New Bond-street; and at Madlle. Paravalli's 6, York-street, Portman-square.

HERR JACQUES ROSENHAIN'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on Thursday Morning, July 6th, 1854, to commence at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Madlle. Bochkoltz Falconi (from the Ducal Court and Theatre of Coburg Gotha), Madame Nissen-Saloman, Herr Reichardt, and Mons. Jules Lefort. Instrumentalists—Pianoforte, Herr Rosenhain; Violin, Signor Bazzini; Violoncello, Mons. Jacquard. A selection of M. Rosenhain's compositions will be performed on this occasion. Conductors, Mr. Aguilar and Mr. Charles Salaman. Tickets, 15s., and 10s. 6d. each; to be had of Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street, and at the principal Music-sellers.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL UNION.—EIGHTH and LAST MATINÉE, Tuesday, July 4th, Willis's Rooms. Doors open at Three. Quartet, in G, No. 81 (Pleyel Ed.), Haydn; Duet, in A, Piano and Violoncello, Op. 69, Beethoven; Quartet, in D, No. 3, Op. 44, Mendelssohn; Solo, Pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss; Solo, Violin, Arpèges (by special desire), with Violoncello and Pianoforte accompaniment, M. Vieuxtemps—his last performance in England this season. Executants—Vieuxtemps, Goffrie, Hill, and Piatti; Pianiste, Mdlle. Clauss. Single admissions to be had of Cramer and Co., Regent-street; Chappell and Ollivier, Bond-street. Members are requested to pay subscriptions yet due, without delay. J. ELLA, Director.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, Hanover Square.—Mr JOHN THOMAS has the honour to announce that he will give a MORNING CONCERT, at the above rooms, on Tuesday July 4th, 1854, on which occasion the following eminent Artistes will appear. Vocalists: Madlle Sedlatzek, Mrs. Arthur Stone, Miss Birch, Mdlle. Anna Bockholts Falconi, Signor Gardoni, Mr. Herberte, Mr. Nappi, Mons. Jules Lefort, and Mr. Allan Irving. Instrumentalists: M. Sainton, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Signor Puzzi, Mons. Emile Prudent, and Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Mr. John Thomas will perform Alvars' last Grand Fantasia, as well as some of his own latest compositions; including a Duet for two Harps, with Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton. Conductors, Mr. Cipriani Potter and Mr. Salaman. To commence at two o'clock precisely. Tickets 10s. 6d. to be had of Messrs. Cramer, Addison, Chappell, Ollivier, and Boosey; Reserved seats, 15s.; to be had only of Mr. John Thomas, 88, Great Portland-street.

ORIENTAL AND TURKISH MUSEUM, Hyde-park-corner.—The public are respectively informed that, early in July next, there will be opened, at St. George's Gallery, Hyde-park-corner, Knightsbridge, an Oriental Museum, or a Grand Exhibition of Turkish Curiosities, consisting of the richest and most varied costumes, both ancient and modern, displayed on wax figures, life size, executed in the finest style, and illustrative of not only the abolished institution of the far-famed Janissaries, the renowned militia of the Turkish empire, with their ancient uniform and armour, but also of the various modes of the Osmanlis of the present day. The figures are highly characterised, and the materials of the costumes selected from the richest Oriental fabrics with the strictest adaptation to the habits and castes of the people which they are designed to represent. No expense or labour has been spared to render this exhibition worthy of the attention and patronage of the British public, and we have been assured by persons of the greatest distinction that a more accurate and satisfactory impression of the true Oriental taste and style, both of former times as well of the present day, may be obtained by an hour passed in this Museum, than is usually gained by many miles of travel. The most implicit truthfulness has been maintained in all the arrangements; and many items even which would be curious to the native inhabitants of Stamboul are here given to the world in all their primitive originality. The gorgeous costumes of bygone days, the days of the turbaned and robed Osmanli, remembered only in the past, are now revived and displayed in all their natural and exquisite beauty. Apart from all intrinsic merit, it is hoped that the great sympathy now felt by the British public for the Turkish nation will ensure the success of this most interesting and truly unique Turkish Exhibition.

The undersigned being the sole managers of this Oriental Museum, all matters relating to the Exhibition will be transacted by them, and all communications must be addressed to them conjointly.

C. OSCANYAN, S. AZNAVOUR, } Managers.

June 10, 1854.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Endersohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

SOUND AND WHITE TEETH are not only indispensably requisite to a pleasing exterior in both sexes, but they are peculiarly appreciated through life as highly conducive to health and longevity. Among the various preparations offered for the purpose, ROWLANDS' ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE, stands unrivalled in its capability of embellishing, purifying, and preserving the teeth to the latest period of life. Prepared from Oriental Herbs with unusual care, transmitted to this country at great expense, this unique compound will be found to eradicate all tartar and concretions, and impart a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface, remove spots of incipient decay, render the gums firm and red, fix the teeth firmly in their sockets, and from its aromatic influence impart sweetness and purity to the breath.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' ODONTO" are on the Label, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government Stamp affixed on each box.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

MARION'S RESILIENT BODICE and CORSALETTO DI MEDICI. They combine firmness with elasticity, fit closely, fasten easily in front, retain the original symmetry of their adjustment, and are judiciously adapted to every varying condition of the female form. Ladies in health, convalescents, and invalids wear them, with equal satisfaction; and, having experienced the comforts and advantages they ensure, will not return to the ordinary Stays and their attendant evils. PATENTED IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND AUSTRIA. Enlarged Prospectus, with Illustrations, (details of Prices from 14s.; children's, 3s.), explicit Directions for Self-measurement, &c., on receipt of Two Stamps for Postage. All Country Orders sent (without extra charge) carriage paid or post free. Mesdames Marion and Maitland, Patentees and Sole Manufacturers, 54, Connaught-terrace, Hyde-park, London.

"We think few who have seen it will be disposed to disagree with us when we assert that it is infinitely superior to anything of the kind yet introduced for the same purpose, and, in point of style and workmanship, it is alike unexceptionable."—Editorial notice in Le Follet, the leading Journal of Fashion.

THE CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY.—At the Nineteenth Public Drawing at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Wednesday, June 28th, 1854, the following Rights of Choice were drawn:—

Nos. 3607, 7976, 5796, 5797, 5798 (grouped), 5167, 8343, 8344, 8345 (grouped), 1889, 2783, 3972, 9420, 2396, 2397 (grouped), 5757, 9843, 4083, 4084, 4085 (grouped), 7498, 9069, 9316, 7380, 8521, 3611, 8877, 7439, 1467, 7709, 5212, 5503, 7569, 7022, 7024, 8871, 8220, 8221, 7095, 7561, 6479, 6480 (grouped), 5106, 4471, 1184, 5181, 6084, 7377, 5642, 2718, 1300, 4754, 2618, 7381, 7382 (grouped), 7515, 5428, 8185, 8186, 8187 (grouped), 8467, 6285, 9117, 4764, 5269, 5270 (grouped), 8012, 9756, 9193, 7252, 7253, 7254 (grouped), 4087, 3737, 3738 (grouped), 8424, 7482, 8337, 8339 (grouped), 2586, 2960, 2948, 2293, 8727, 7840, 6685, 1023, and 4796.

The following shares were also drawn, but the holders thereof being in arrear lose the benefit of this drawing:—

Nos. 6057, 3155, 5050, 7895, 8683, 3153, 4137, 7935, 7936, 7937 (grouped), and 8684.

The following Shares will be placed on the Order of Rights by Seniority if not in arrear:—

Nos. 864, 882, 964, 965, 966, 969, 970, 974, 975, 978, 979, 983, 985, 986, 988, 989, 990, 991, 993, 996, 997, 1001, 1004, 1005, 1018, 1019, 1020, 1021, 1022, 1025, 1026, 1057, 1060, 1061, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1068, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1074, 1075, 1082, 1083, 1087, 1088, and 1089.

The Twentieth Public Drawing is fixed for Saturday, August the 12th, at the offices, 33, Norfolk-street, Strand, at twelve o'clock.

CHARLES LEWIS GRUNEISEN, Secretary.

Digitized by Google

Monthly Sale of Pictures and Drawings, by Modern Artists, the originality of which will be guaranteed to the purchasers.

MR. GEO. ROBINSON respectfully notifies that his next SALE will take place at his Rooms, 21, Old Bond-street, on Thursday, July 6, at One precisely, and will include specimens by the undermentioned Artists:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Andrews | Cooper | Morland | Stuart |
| Anthony | Duval | Morris | Stark |
| Bromley | Gunn | Morten | Vickers |
| Burgess | Herring | Niemann | Vincent |
| Calderon | Holland | Nibbs | Walmesley |
| Chapman | Jones | Pearsall | Ward, R. A. |
| Chester | Knight | Sherlock | Woolmer, |
| Compton | Mearns | Skillett | and others. |

May be viewed two days prior, and Catalogues had.

HARMONIUMS. — CAUTION. — George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

TO CONCERTINA PLAYERS.—Signor Carlo Minasi begs to notify to his friends and the public generally that he has just patented his improvements in the manufacture of the above popular instrument, which will be found to give a volume of sound and freedom of touch hitherto unattained. Signor Minasi will be happy to show these instruments to any person who will favour him with a call at his residence, No. 16, Brecknock-place, Camden-road, where he gives lessons on the Concertina. Piano and Singing on moderate terms.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. — Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. — Militia Regiments or parties joining Bands, and in want of Instruments, Music, or a Band Master, are invited to apply to Messrs. BOOSEY AND SONS, 28, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers, and Music Publishers to her Majesty's Army and the Hon. E. I. C.'s Service. The high character of their Instruments and Journals for Reed and Brass Bands are acknowledged throughout the Army.—A Register kept of the most experienced Band Masters.

DEDICATED by Permission to Her Majesty the Queen. —Mrs. JOSEPH KIRKMAN'S NEW SYSTEM OF HARMONY is now ready, price 15s. the complete set (or each part may be had separately); comprising the Model Scale, Harmonical Circle, and the Practical Analysis, with a Dictionary of all the Intervals, showing at one view their harmonical qualities; also an Exercise Book, in which the exercises are all prepared to be filled up by the pupil, which, when completed, will form a valuable compilation of all the essential harmonies in music. The diagrams illustrate the progress of harmony at one view. The study of the intervals is much simplified by means of a sliding representation of the pianoforte key-board, shewing at a glance their semitonic division and denomination; also, by a newly invented sliding model, is distinctly seen the manner in which chords are inverted, with their signature, root, and resolution. This system is well adapted for those who wish to obtain proficiency in playing the pianoforte; for while the exercises are illustrative of harmony and modulation, they are at the same time excellent for practice on that instrument. One week's attentive study of this perspicuous diagram will do away with the necessity of months of arduous and thankless labour. This system is well adapted to class teaching. The Publishers beg to direct particular attention to this novel system, the simplification of which subdues all difficulties, and systematically arranges the progressive paths, proving that the science of harmony is adapted to the capacity of all who will give moderate application to its attainment. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MILITARY BANDS—REED AND BRASS.

C. BOOSE'S MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS, in submitting to the Army and the Musical Public a few of the latest improvements in the above CELEBRATED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, beg to return their sincere thanks for the patronage so liberally bestowed on their establishment; and to assure those who have not hitherto honoured them with their commands, that their undeviating principle of business is to manufacture instruments of the very best description only. By this means, Boosey and Sons trust to ensure the permanent patronage of their friends. A fair and moderate price is fixed on every Instrument. CLARIONETS.—Either of Cocoa-wood or Grenadille, with 13 German Silver Keys; of Box-wood, with 13 Brass ditto; or of German Silver, with 13 Keys of the same metal. The whole of these comprise every new improvement. FLUTES AND PICCOLOS.—In the usual keys, for Amateurs or Military purposes, either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with German Silver or Brass Keys, and every new improvement. FIFES (Boosé's Improved).—Either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with 4 German Silver or Brass Keys. BASSOONS.—The new French Model, of Maple-wood, with 16 Brass, or German Silver Keys. BOOSÉ'S UNRIVALLED CORNET-A-PISTONS.—The great success that has attended the introduction of Boosé's new patent Cornet, and the many flattering testimonials the beauty of the model and the exceeding richness of its tone have called forth, have induced the manufacturers to extend the improvements still further, and they have now the pleasure of announcing, that they have succeeded in adjusting to the same model, the Rotary Cylinder Action. By means of this beautiful and light action, the most rapid passages can be executed with marvellous quickness and dexterity. Price, with Valves, 7 Guineas, with the new Rotary Cylinder Action, 9 Guineas. Either instrument strongly Electro-plated (equal to Silver), 2 Guineas extra. CORNETTO SOPRANO, in D or E flat (for Brass Band); VALVE TRUMPETS, Althorns (Barytone), with Three Valves in B Flat, E Flat, or F. EUPHONIONS (Bass), in B Flat or C, with Four Valves. BOMBARDONS (Bass) in E Flat, or F, with Four Valves. All these Instruments can be had either with Valves or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Althorns are made on two models—either with Bell up or forward. The Euphonion is a new Valve Instrument, infinitely superior to, and rapidly superseding the Ophicleide. FRENCH HORNS either with Three Valves, or on an entirely new model, with the Rotary Cylinder Action. These Horns, Boosey & Sons can with confidence recommend as superior to any yet supplied to the Profession. Better cannot be made.—TROMBONES, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. In the usual Keys, either with Slides, Valves, or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Valve Trombone may be had either with the Bell up or forward.—THE NEW ROTARY CYLINDER ACTION. With this action, which is exceedingly light, the most rapid passage may be executed with marvellous dexterity and quickness. It is, further, more simple and much stronger than any patent actions that have hitherto been made.—VALVE, OR FIELD BUGLE, in B flat or C. By a simple contrivance, the valves of this instrument may be detached at pleasure, and placed in a small leather case, and the instrument remains an ordinary Field Bugle.—OPHICLEIDES, in B flat or C, with 10 or 11 Keys. Cavalry Trumpets, Turkish Crescents, Triangles, Military Tambourines, Drum Heads, Reeds, Music Stands, Music Paper, and every requisite for a Reed, Brass, or String Band.—DRUMS (BASS), Boosé's Improved, of Brass. The advantages in these over Wooden Drums, are, an infinitely superior tone and great durability, without any increase in weight. Boosey & Sons have received the most flattering testimonials from the many Regiments they have supplied with these Drums, both at home and abroad. Tenor and Side Drums, also of Brass.—BASS DRUM STICKS. Boosey & Sons have succeeded in manufacturing a Drum Stick of an entirely New Material, which requires no covering, and will last for TEN OR TWENTY YEARS, and thus a remedy is provided for the constant expense of recovering Drum Sticks. The Regimental Facings, and other colours, being tastefully introduced, render this Drum Stick an exceedingly handsome appendage to the Drum.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street, Musical Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to the Army.

NEW GALOP.—A magnificent Portrait of Sir Charles NAPIER, embellishes the title page of "The Baltic Galop," by Albert Wagner, price 2s. 6d. Published by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

NEW SONG.—"AH! WHY SO SAD?"—Poetry and Music by J. Thorne Harris. Published by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

STARS OF THE WEST WALTZES, by G. Montagne, with a magnificent illustration in colours, by J. Brandard. Price 4s. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

SERENADE.—"The Night Dancers," as performed before the Queen, by Her Majesty's private band, at Windsor Castle, composed and arranged for the pianoforte, price 3s., by D. Pegler, London, to be had of Addison and Co., Cramer and Co., and Leader and Cock.

NEW MUSIC for CORNOPEAN.—BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for CORNET and PIANO, arranged by STANTON JONES, &c. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

FIRST CLASS PIANOFORTE MUSIC BY FIRST CLASS COMPOSERS.—Madame Oury's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Gollmick's Farewell, 4s. Charles Voss's Fantaisies on Sonnambula, Linda, and Rigoletto, 4s. each. Prudent's Le Lac, 4s. Kuth's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Benedict's Quartet in Rigoletto, 4s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS FOR AMATEURS.—Mozart's Quintet (the Rondo only) arranged by McMurdie, price 4s. Gollmick's Duet from Belisario, a very brilliant piece, 5s. Gollmick's Minerva, Valse de Concert, 4s. Alvar's Greek Pirates' Chorus, 4s. Nordmann's La Donna e Mobile (Rigoletto) 4s. The above is a very choice selection. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.—The solo pieces played by this distinguished pianiste, at her Concert on Wednesday evening, were Mayer's étude 61, "La Fontaine," price 3s.; Chopin's Nocturne in F minor, 3s. 6d.; and Kullak's fantaisie étude, "Perles d'Ecume," 4s; in which she was honoured by a double encore and recall. London: Copyrights, published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

MR. JOHN THOMAS' NEW HARP COMPOSITIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Spring—Characteristic Morceau ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Summer ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Autumn ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| The Parting—Romance ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| The Tear ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu, my Native Country! ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu de Salzbourg ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Le Matin—Impromptu ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Le Soir ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Four Recreations, in 4 Nos. ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| First Concerto ... ... ... ... ... ... | 9 | 6 |
| Andantino of ditto (arranged as a Duet for Harp and Piano) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.

THE BULGARIAN POLKA, by G. Montagne, illustrated in colours, by J. Brandard. Price 2s. 6d. This is the best Polka that has appeared since the dance was invented. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

SIGNOR GORDIGIANI'S NEW SONGS.—The favourite Romances are—Il nome di mia Madre, 1s. 6d.; O, Giovinetta, 2s.; Vorrei morir (sung by Mario), 2s.; La Giambella, 1s. 6d.; O miel pensier, 1s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW MUSIC for CONCERTINA.—BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for CONCERTINA and PIANO, arranged by G. Regondi. Now ready, Verdi's Rigoletto, in Three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, Three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, Three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, Six Nos., 3s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

ADOLPH GOLLMICK.—New Pianoforte Music, by Herr Adolph Gollmick.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Minerva Valse de Concert ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Chanson à Boire ... ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Farewell ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| German Volkslied ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Belisario Duet ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Minerva Valse Duet ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

Extract from "THE MUSICAL WORLD."

"As a composer of light and elegant music for the drawing-room, the author of these pieces holds a distinguished rank among contemporary musicians. Herr Gollmick is a good pianist, and writes with a thorough knowledge of the instrument. He is never common-place, and even in his least ambitious efforts there is always an evident feeling of refinement, which shows itself in various ways, and while it often leads him into a graceful distribution of his ideas, prevents him from falling into the vulgar path, which so many composers of morceaux de salon find it hard, if not impossible to avoid. None of the pieces before us are difficult; yet all of them are showy and effective, and while each has its individual character, each contains some pretty and striking thought, some novel passage, and some nice instance of harmony which betrays the musician of taste.

"'Belisario' is a brilliant piece for four hands, consisting of a short introduction, a theme with three variations, and a vigorous march for coda. The second variation, in D flat, is particularly effective. Whether the two themes are from Donizetti's Belisario we are unable to say, not being familiarly acquainted with that opera. Their origin is not indicated in the title of the duet. They are both good.

"'Minerva' is a dashing and energetic waltz, in the key of E flat, also for two performers. The first subject is rhythmical and well adapted for dancing, although the piece is rather a dans de concert, like Weber's Invitation à la valse, than anything else. The second subject, in D flat, consists simply of a scale of three and four octaves, alternately, introduced with excellent effect. An episode, beginning in G flat, and modulating back to the original key, is graceful and pretty.

"The 'Farewell' is a very pleasing andante, in the style of a song without words, with a short introduction and a brilliant coda. For connoisseurs, this morceau, which is in the key of E major, is likely to have more attractions than the others.

"'Europa' is an animated galop in E flat, with a florid and effective episode in the subdominant, easy to play and agreeable to listen to.

"So far as what is termed 'character' is concerned, the 'Chanson à Boire' (also in E flat) has more chance of enlisting the popular ear, and acquiring general favour, than any of its companions. The second motive, in A flat, is charming and well developed. The whole is easy and fluent, and admirably suited to players of moderate capacity, who prefer something new and fresh to the eternal fantasias, and airs with variations, under which the shelves of music-publishers have been groaning for the last quarter of a century.

"Altogether we may compliment Herr Gollmick on these pieces, which, without any appearance of pretence, are graceful and pleasant—as good things of their kind, indeed, as need be sought for."

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 27. SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

THE GRAND MUSICAL CONGRESS AT NEW YORK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, JUNE 16, 1854.

For one whole week have the inhabitants of the Empire City forgotten the "Nebraska iniquity," the chances of the Fillibusteros on Cuba, the price of cotton, and the approach of the cholera. The spell which lulled them to such unwonted slumber was the Musical Congress at the Crystal Palace; the Wizard to whose influence they submitted—the immortal Jullien. And thus it chanced:—

America is a great country, and no mistake—that's a fact. England had her Crystal Palace, and with it an unprecedented success. Why should not New York do likewise? The palace was built, Lord Ellesmere sent from England as Commissioner, the World invited to attend, and American expectation on tiptoe. But, alack for human expectations and unfortunate shareholders! The speculation, both artistically and as regards the dollars, proved a failure. It did not pay, and the shares fell from 140 dollars to 18.

The Palace itself is three miles from the city. The road is dusty and badly paved. The citizens are fond of home, or prefer the more exhilarating pleasures of the "bar." For these or equally good reasons they stayed away; and the Palace was as empty as the pockets of the shareholders.

In this dilemma they sought for one who could retrieve their fortunes, whom they might elect their President, and arm with the powers of a dictator, and who would wile the dollars from the pockets of the public. With one voice they demanded Barnum; for "if there be a man in this city who can do it, he is the man." Phineas T. Barnum consented, and the shareholders having agreed to allow him a per-centage on the receipts, he forthwith entered on his duties.

Finding his public dull and apathetic, seeing the thermometer at 89 in the shade, and dreading the approach of the cholera, no time could be lost. And lo! that Providence which had always befriended him, again took him by the hand.

M. Jullien was giving his farewell concerts at New York. He had completed a most successful tour of the United States, and, with his wife, was about to leave for England. Could he be induced to stay? Would he undertake, at the Crystal Palace, something unheard of in the American Musical World? If he consented, success was certain; for when did Jullien, with his untiring energy, conceive a project and fail in its accomplishment? An interview was had, an arrangement completed, and a Musical Congress planned on the same day; and one week afterwards 1500 performers and choristers from different parts of the United States were marshalled under Jullien's bâton.

A colossal amphitheatre rose from the eastern side of the rotunda, and towered high into the nave, extending on either side into the galleries. Enormous as were its dimensions, this hardly sufficed to contain the band and choristers. The concert commenced at seven last night, but three hours previously the whole city was in motion, and upwards of 27,000 actually paid for admission. No such crowd was present at the opening of the building, or on any other occasion. Punctually at seven M. Jullien appeared in the orchestra, and was received with deafening cheers. He waved his bâton, and the concert commenced. The programme has already appeared in your journal.

As regards the solos in the first part, criticism would be both idle and useless. The mere presence of the immense mass which crowded the building would have prevented their being heard to advantage; but when, in addition to the inert weight which bore down the singers' voices, they had to struggle against the shuffling noise made by many thousand pairs of feet, their audience became very select, being confined to those filling the first three or four rows of the reserved seats.

But the "Hallelujah" chorus came out in all its magnificence. The chorus had been drilled to perfection, and as the masses of sound went rolling through the building, filling every nook and cranny, the genius of Handel was felt in all its majesty, and an effect was produced upon the audience greater than any I ever witnessed. It was encored unanimously. A similar honour awaited the chorus of "Worthy is the Lamb," but Jullien wisely refused to comply with it.

The second part opened most brilliantly. The overture to William Tell was given with great spirit, and the last movement unanimously re-demanded. The audience were enchanted, and an enthusiast having called for three cheers for Jullien, they were given with a force which made the roof ring again. M. Drouet seemed to play his brilliant variations to the entire satisfaction of the limited number who heard him, whereof I was not one. That great "Reformer" Wagner's overture to Tannhäuser came next; but the success of Wagner here is on a par with that which he has achieved in England, and music in a state of chaos seems to excite in the Anglo-Saxon mind neither admiration nor wonder.

The solo by Paul Julien was played with neatness and precision, and full justice was done to the graceful minuetto from Mr. Bristow's symphony. Haydn's glorious chorus, "The heavens are telling," was excellently well given, and a duo for the two pianofortes, on themes from L'Eclair, by Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Wallace, was quite inaudible.

And now the disappearance of the choristers and the arrangements for reception of two military bands give earnest note of preparation. The event to which all had looked forward, was about to come off:—The "Firemen's Quadrille," composed expressly for this congress, and to most of the audience the great feature of the evening. I can add nothing to the description in the programme.

The first figure is played by the orchestra. In the second a military band is heard at a distance. It comes nearer and nearer until Dodworth's full band, in all the glory of white and red uniform, march in at the top of the orchestra and take their places. Figure 3 is played by another military band, who perform the same evolutions as Dodworth's. The fourth opens with a description of night. The city is hushed in silence. Suddenly the alarm bell is heard—shouts of "fire" issue from a hundred mouths blowing lustily through speaking trumpets—red and white lights shown behind the glass complete the illusion; and, to crown all, as the orchestral tumult rises to its height, a fire-engine is busily worked behind the stage. The effect was so complete that many of the audience took fright, and were only quieted by a few words from Barnum. The quadrille closed with "Hail Columbia" and "Yankee doodle," the whole audience standing and shouting for Jullien.

Digitized by Google

Jullien came forward and was obliged to make a speech, which he did in a few and effective English sentences, thanking the audience for their reception, and stating that his success in America was among the brightest spots in his musical career.

It was now near midnight, and Part 3 was soon hurried over, the audience getting home afterwards as best they could. Thus ended the first Musical Congress in America—a great fact, and likely to be attended with good results. Our taste for music here is not more advanced than it was in England when Jullien first began his concerts. Here, as there, the great public were unused to a high order of music, and relished it not. But in the few months that Jullien has been here he has worked wonders, and by bringing them to listen to "Firemens'" Quadrilles, he has insinuated symphony and concerto, causing a gradual but certain reform in the public taste.

Four thousand reserved seats were let at prices varying from eight-and-sixpence to seventeen shillings; and upwards of twenty-three thousand paid two shillings each. The audience were good-tempered and forbearing throughout the evening, and not the slightest accident occurred to mar the pleasure of the scene. All honour then to Jullien! who has done so much to create a taste for music in the masses. England can fairly claim him as her own, but should he ever forsake her nursing bosom, he has made for himself another home in this western world.

---

Mr. Albert Smith has had the honour of receiving a magnificent diamond pin from Her Majesty, as a mark of the gratification Her Majesty derived from her visit to his Mont Blanc entertainment last week. Colonel Phipps, in transmitting this royal gift to Mr. Smith, stated that he had the Queen's commands to assure him that Her Majesty had been seldom more amused and pleased than on the occasion in question.

Miss Binckes' third and last soirée of the series was crowded. Each performance seems to have increased in attraction, and as a pianiste and vocalist combined, she has fairly won a position in the musical world. Her singing has given great satisfaction; but it was in her pianoforte playing that her artistical merits were most powerfully developed. The sonatas of Beethoven, Weber, and Macfarren, and her performance of the ultra-romantic school (ausser-romnatiches) have served to display the variety as well as the soundness of her talent. We hear that Miss Binckes has accepted a liberal engagement at Berlin for three months. Miss Katharine Smith, though suffering from extreme timidity, sang with great delicacy "La rose d'Alpe," and a ballad, "Ellen and Patrick," which was encored. Mr. Cotton's English songs were more admired than his Italian. Mr. F. Chatterton's performances on the harp were in the popular style; the first was encored. The "Coronation March" was played with great spirit by Miss Binckes and himself. Messrs. Aspull and Ganz conducted.

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)*

(Continued from page 435.)

CHAPTER IX.

1791.

We have now reached the second half of the eventful year 1791, the last of Mozart's life, and in which he displayed a more than human fertility and wealth of inspiration, which, as developed in the Zauberflöte, Titus, and the Requiem, would have sufficed to complete and glorify the entire artistic life, however long, of any other musician. Fortunately there is here no lack of materials. We shall immediately proceed to give a historical account of the three above-mentioned masterpieces, which crown the life of Mozart, and encircle his grave with an eternal halo.

At the time of which we treat, there resided in Vienna a great original of the name of Schikaneder, a theatrical manager, actor, author, both in prose and verse, libretto-manufacturer, scene-painter, and, very frequently, composer, in the bargain, to the tragico-comico-lyrico-dancing company of which he was director. Schikaneder was a man inexhaustible in resources of every description, and distinguished himself in and out of the theatre by the efforts of his genius. Nevertheless, he was not to be relied on, either in business or in the choice of his dramatic combinations, although otherwise, to use a common expression, "a good fellow." I forgot to mention that this disciple of all the Muses, this universal genius, was also a singer, and that his voice, according to the testimony of musical amateurs of the period, was something half-way between the creaking of a weathercock and that of a kitchen-jack. In spite of his rare talent, Dame Fortune treated him in the same way as he himself was sometimes in the habit of treating others. The blind goddess deceived him in such a manner, that, one day, he found his exchequer completely empty. There seemed to be no alternative for him but to shut up his establishment and pay his debts—which there was every probability of his liquidating by a term of imprisonment. Our manager, indeed, was, to all appearance, fairly ruined. Not quite, however. He was a poet, and one, moreover, who understood how to guide events beyond the limits of the stage quite as easily as the incidents of his dramatic pieces. He resolved then that the catastrophe which threatened him should be followed by a striking dénoûment, which should place him in a better position than he ever occupied before, and make him—Schikaneder!—immortal. But, in order to effect this, it was necessary to obtain the assistance of an intimate and entirely devoted friend. This was no obstacle to Schikaneder, the Pylades of all the Orestes at whose houses there was anything to be had in the shape of eating or drinking. For many years, he had always been able to find both at Mozart's. Having studied our hero's character thoroughly, he was thoroughly acquainted with it. Schikaneder felt certain he was saved, and fancied he already saw the public once more flocking to his theatre, and covering him with marks of approbation, so that in a state of half intoxication he cherished the idea of eventually bequeathing his name to posterity. He proceeded to Mozart, described in a suitable strain of pathos his desperate position, and summed up by declaring that he reposed his last hopes in the good nature of our hero.

---

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

"How can I help you?" enquired Mozart.

"Write me an opera," answered Schikaneder, "to suit exactly the taste of the Viennese public. You can satisfy connoisseurs, and do credit to your own reputation if you choose; but your principal care must be to please the vulgar taste of all classes. I will give you a libretto, provide scenery, etc., etc., just as they are liked at present."

"Very good; I will undertake the task," said Mozart.

"How much shall I pay you for it?" asked Schikaneder.

"You have nothing to give," said our hero. "But never mind; we will arrange the matter in such a way that you shall be benefited, while I shall not lose all chance of profit. I give you sole and whole possession of my score; give me, in return, what you like, but on the express condition that you are responsible that the music shall not be copied. If the opera creates a sensation, I will sell it to other managers, and that shall be my recompense."

The reader may easily imagine with what joy, and what asseverations that he would most religiously adhere to such generous terms, the embarrassed manager accepted the bargain. Mozart set at once about his task, working day and night. He even carried his complaisance so far as to remodel several pieces, which did not please his very capricious critic. It is true there was no alternative, for our hero had cause to fear, in case of refusal, that Schikaneder, in conformity to a vile practice of his, would spoil the opera by lengthening it out with pieces of his own style. Die Zauberflöte was received with unparalleled applause, which kept continually increasing, and was soon afterwards re-echoed in other cities, for, in a very short time, the opera was produced in many theatres out of the Austrian dominions, although not one manager applied to Mozart for the score! A work—which procured a considerable sum for almost every one who gained his living by music in Germany, including even the most insignificant copyist—brought its composer nothing, or next to nothing! And what did Mozart, on hearing of the trick his Pylades had played him?

"Der Lump!" (the mean scamp!) he exclaimed, and the next day, Schikaneder sat down as usual at his table.

I presume there is not one of my readers unacquainted with the history of the Requiem. It has been related with a thousand variations, published in a thousand books, and has caused the name of Mozart to become familiar to a great many persons, too serious and too much engaged in important matters, to trouble their heads about music, but who, nevertheless, are ready enough to read or listen to wonderful tales as they sit by their warm fire-side. The man in the black cloak, his three solemn appearances, the last of which corresponded with the date of Mozart's death; the nature of his errand; the impenetrable mystery, which defied all subsequent attempts to unfathom it—all combined to make a sort of legend, which attained a degree of notoriety and belief, that, during forty years, seemed beyond the reach of refutation. Truth, however, never grows old, and a biographer of the present day, instead of narrating a ghost story, so much in keeping with the taste of the age, is obliged to wade through a labyrinth of petty, prosaic circumstances, in which he stumbles, at every instant, over doubt, uncertainty, contradiction, malice, and falsehood. The mysterious messenger has, alas! been dragged into the light, but like the phantoms he so much resembles, which become invisible at the first streak of dawn, disappeared before the searching investigations of Herr Gottfried Weber.

The celebrated controversy, to which I have just alluded, concerning the authenticity and origin of the Requiem, has occupied the attention of a great number of musical littérateurs and dilettanti, since 1826. Many of my readers have, doubtless, heard of the great trial, without, perhaps, having had the opportunity of becoming intimately acquainted with its details. It will be my duty to instruct them, in order that the points discussed in the trial, but unfortunately not decided, may, from this time forth, become an integral part of Mozart's biography. I shall, therefore, collect them in a separate chapter, which I shall introduce in the form of an appendix at the end of my first volume. But I must warn my readers in advance that it will constitute the most tiresome chapter to peruse, just as, beyond comparison, it has been the most difficult and troublesome to compile.

As far as I know, there has, up to the present time, been no testimony or proof to refute the first account of the origin of the Requiem, as related by Mozart's widow, except the miraculous part, contained in the book written under her direction, of which she was herself, in all probability, the primary source. Adopting her account as the most authentic, if not in all, at least in the chief, particulars, we will take it—rejecting what is doubtful, or evidently opposed to truth—as our guide to the end of this volume, without reference to the appendix.

Mozart was still working at Die Zauberflöte, when he received an anonymous letter, containing an order for the composition of a requiem, and inquiring on what terms and in what time he could undertake to complete it. As he never took the most unimportant step without consulting his wife, he showed her the strange commission, expressing, at the same time, his desire to try his powers for once in this branch of the art, a desire which he felt the stronger, since the more elevated and pathetic style of sacred music had always been his favourite study. His wife advised him to accept the commission, and Mozart, in consequence, wrote to his unknown customer, stating that he would compose the requiem for a specified sum. He added that he could not name the period at which the work would be completed, but expressed a wish to be informed where he should send it when finished. After the lapse of a short time, the delegate again made his appearance, not only bringing the money, but the promise of a considerable surplus on delivery of the score, Mozart having been so moderate in his demand. Our hero was told, however, to give himself no trouble in finding out his customer, since all his efforts would assuredly be useless.

Meanwhile, Mozart received and accepted from the inhabitants of Prague the honourable and advantageous offer of composing, for the coronation of the Emperor Leopold, a serious opera, to be entitled, La Clemenza di Tito.

Just as he was getting into the travelling carriage, however, the unknown messenger presented himself once more, like a ghost, and, pulling our hero's wife by the skirt of her gown, inquired—"How about the requiem at present?"

Mozart excused himself by alleging the necessity of his making the journey, and his inability to inform his mysterious patron of the fact. He added, however, that "The requiem should be the first thing he would work at on his return, provided the unknown would consent to wait so long." With this explanation the messenger seemed perfectly satisfied.

The preceding is, word for word, Frau von Nissen's account of the origin of the requiem. It is very simple, and quite natural, although somewhat laconic; and, as we have already remarked, Herr G. Weber has not been able to invalidate it, with all the testimony he had collected and compared. On the contrary, the evidence of the most important witnesses only affords fresh grounds for believing it.

Mozart, whose health was much impaired, even when he began Schikaneder's opera, arrived at Prague very ill, from the superhuman exertions demanded by his work, which he did not discontinue even while travelling. La Clemenza di Tito progressed as he journeyed along, so that eighteen days, after his arrival, sufficed for its completion.

Digitized by Google

Mozart's friends remarked, with uneasiness, the dullness of his eyes, and the expression of suffering which was visible in all his features, but they were far from supposing his illness would be attended with the sad results which followed. Our hero did not remain at home, but was seen working, making visits, and conducting rehearsals, as if he had no cause for complaint. He scarcely told any one that he wanted a doctor, and spent his evenings, for the most part, playing billiards in a neighbouring coffee-house. Of this game he was passionately fond. On one occasion, as he was engaged in it with all the attention one bestows on a favourite amusement, he was heard to hum to himself, several times, a kind of melody to the words: "Hum, Hum, Hum!" When it was his opponent's turn to play, Mozart took a small piece of paper out of his pocket, cast a hasty glance over it, and continued his game, again humming the monosyllable as before-mentioned. After repeating this for two or three consecutive days, he suddenly said to his friends: "Now, come and listen." To what? To the magnificent quintet in the first act of Die Zauberflöte, which he had composed while playing at billiards, and which really begins with: "Hum, hum," Papageno being rendered speechless by the padlock on his mouth. Mozart was then immersed up to his eyes in his Titus; the same musical brain was busy at the same moment with the coquettish phrases of the three ladies and the pathetic notes of Vitellia, with the comic babbling of the man-bird, and the shriek of horror and despair which the Romans utter at the sight of the burning capital and their beloved prince struck by the murderer's steel. These two productions, namely, the finale to Titus, and the quintet in the Zauberflöte, form two utterly opposite extremes in dramatic music; each picture presents an example of the highest and most inimitable perfection—and yet Mozart was only mortal! Why, however, did he render his work, of itself sufficiently difficult, still more laborious? Was it that he felt the necessity for using greater diligence? From the unusual emotion he displayed, and which he could not conceal, on taking leave of his friends in Prague, we are almost justified in thinking so. He shed tears on an occasion which he generally treated so lightly.

La Clemenza di Tito, as a novelty, did not please very highly. The impression it produced was effaced by the festivities and balls in celebration of the Coronation. Music ceases to exist the instant that, instead of being everything to an audience, it only figures as an obbligato addition to amusements of another kind. In such cases, I prefer the worst, or, if the reader likes it better, the most trivial, productions of the art, since these are, at least, in their proper place, and the listless ear gains by not giving much attention.

(To be continued.)

---

MADAME MORTIER DE FONTAINE gave her Annual Morning Concert at the Réunion des Arts, on the 24th of June. The rooms were densely crowded. Mad. de Fontaine was assisted by the following artists:—Miss Louisa Pyne, Mad. Ferrari, Signori Gardoni, Flavio, Belletti, Bottura, Burdini, Arthur Napoléon, Paqué, and Bazzini. Madame Mortier sang the contralto air, "Oh! quante lagrime," from La Donna del Lago; joined in the quartetto from Rigoletto, and in a duet from Il Trovatore, with Gardoni, in all of which she was deservedly applauded. Signor Pilotti and Herr Wilhelm Gans were the accompanyists.

ROBERT SCHUMANN'S MUSICAL LIFE MAXIMS.

(From the German.)

(Continued from page 52.)

XXXVI. A great deal is to be learnt from singers, male and female, but you must not take all they say for truth.

XXXVII. There are people living even beyond the mountains. Be modest; for, as yet, you have not discovered or invented anything which others have not discovered or invented before you. Even if you had, you should look upon it as a gift from above that you must share with others.

XXXVIII. The best means of curing yourself of presumption and vanity is, to study the history of music, and, at the same time, listen frequently to the masterpieces of the various epochs of the art.

XXXIX. Thibaut's treatise, Ueber Reinheit der Tonkunst, is an excellent book on music. Read it frequently when you are older.

XL. If you happen to hear the organ as you are passing a church, go in and listen. If you are fortunate enough to obtain a seat in the organ loft yourself, try your little fingers, and give way to your feelings of wondering admiration at the omnipotence of music.

XLI. Neglect no opportunity of practising upon the organ. No other instrument exacts such speedy vengeance for anything incorrect or slovenly, either in composition or execution.

XLII. Sing diligently in chorus, especially tenor parts; this will make you musical.

XLIII. What, however, is the meaning of being musical? You are not musical if you laboriously play through a piece, with your eyes anxiously fixed upon the notes; you are not musical, if (for instance, when any one turns over two leaves at once), you remain stuck fast and are unable to proceed. But you are musical, if, on playing a new piece, you can pretty well guess what is coming, and if, on playing a familiar one, you know it by memory. In one word, if you possess music, not only in your fingers, but in your head and heart.

XLIV. Can anyone become musical? My dear child, the most important requisites, a good ear, and a quick power of comprehension, are given us, like all other things, from above. But our natural disposition may be educated and improved. The way to become musical is not to shut yourself up, like a hermit, for days together, pursuing a course of mechanical study, but by actual and varied intercourse with musicians, especially with members of the chorus and orchestra.

XLV. Obtain as soon as possible a clear idea of the compass of the human voice, in its four principal branches: listen attentively to it in choruses, and endeavour to discover in what intervals its greatest strength consists, and in what others it can be employed with tenderness and softness.

XLVI. Listen diligently to national songs; they are mines of melody, and enable you to see into the characters of different nations.

XLVII. Take an early opportunity of exercising yourself in the old keys. Many treasures of the past will otherwise be lost to you.

XLVIII. Pay particular and early attention to the tone and characteristics of the various instruments. Endeavour to impress their peculiar and characterising shades of sound on your ear.

XLIX. Never neglect hearing good operas.

L. Entertain a great respect for what is Old, but meet what is New with a warm heart. Do not be prejudiced against a name which is unknown to you.

LI. Do not judge a composition after hearing it only once. That which pleases you at first is not always the best. Good composers require to be studied. There is much which you will not clearly understand before attaining a very advanced age.

LII. When judging compositions, make a difference between such as belong to art, and such as are merely intended for the amusement of dilettanti. Be answerable for the first, and do not grow indignant at the last.

LIII. "Melody" is the war-cry of dilettanti, and certainly music without melody is not music. But understand well what dilettanti mean by the term: the only compositions thus named by them are such as are easily caught up and possess a pleasing rhythm. But there is melody of a different description, and wherever you open the works of Bach, Mozart, or Beethoven, it comes before you in a thousand different ways; it is to be hoped that you will soon become tired of the poverty-stricken sameness of Italian operas.

LIV. If you try to compose little melodies on the piano and succeed, you have reason to be pleased; but if they come of themselves, when you are not at the piano, congratulate yourself still more, for the inward feeling for music is making itself heard in your heart. The fingers must do what the head desires, and not vice versâ.

LV. When you begin to compose, compose everything in your head.

Digitized by Google

Until you have, in this manner, completed a piece, do not try it on the instrument. If music does not proceed from the inward soul, but is simply felt, it will produce exactly the same effect upon others.

LVI. If heaven has blessed you with a lively imagination, you will often sit alone for hours as if chained to your piano, endeavouring to give vent to your inmost thoughts in harmony, and the less clear the realms of harmony are to you, the more mysteriously will you be drawn within the magic circle. Such hours as these are the happiest of our youth. Take care, however, not to deliver yourself up too often to a talent that causes you to waste both time and strength on shadows. You can only obtain the power of form, and the capability of expressing your ideas lucidly, by reducing them to writing. Write, therefore, more than you improvise.

LVII. Obtain an early knowledge of conducting. Observe good conductors frequently; and even conduct, in your own mind, at the same time. This will make your ideas clear.

LXVIII. Look about you diligently in life, and also in other arts and sciences besides music.

LIX. The laws of morality are also those of music.

LX. By industry and perseverance you will continue to improve.

LXI. Out of a pound of iron, which costs only a few pence, several thousand watch springs, of the value of hundreds of pounds sterling, may be formed. Turn to good account the pound you have received from God.

LXII. Nothing worth mentioning can be done in art without enthusiasm.

LXIII. Art is not given us to amass riches. Continue to become greater and greater, as an artist; everything else will come of itself.

LXIV. The spirit of a thing is never completely clear before its form is evident.

LXV. Perhaps genius alone can understand genius.

LXVI. Some one once said that a perfect musician should be capable of seeing a complicated orchestral composition, after hearing it only once, as if it were written in an actual score before his eyes. This is the highest pitch to which we can possibly conceive the art to be brought.

LXVII. There is no end to learning.

DRAMATIC.

LYCEUM.—A new one-act drama, entitled The Gentleman Opposite, was produced on Tuesday evening with unequivocal success. The plot is complicated, and would require more space than we can afford to describe at length. A young widow is about to marry an elderly gentleman, to get rid of a law-suit. She is ready, however, to break her engagement at the earliest opportunity; and, fancying a young lawyer, who lives opposite, has sent her a love-letter, requests an interview on matters of business. The love-letter was intended for the lady's maid and not the lady, and the lady, who believes the lawyer to be the writer, is astonished at finding him an extremely timid person. The real writer of the letter—a sweetheart of the maid—overhears the widow reading the epistle and declaring her love for the author; whereupon, like another Malvolio, he turns his affections on the mistress, and makes preparations to marry her. All this, of course, is unknown to the widow, who still believes the young lawyer to be the real adorer, till, in the end, an explanation is brought about by the appearance of the servant-girl's sweetheart, who enters in his nuptial suit and claims the widow's hand.

The acting was very good. Mr. Charles Mathews personated the modest lawyer admirably. Mrs. Frank Matthews acted the saucy maid to the life; and Miss Talbot was easy and natural in the part of the widow. Mr. Basil Baker made up grotesquely as the disagreeable betrothed, and Mr. Swan, by his imitation of Buckstone, was sufficiently amusing.

The performances of the evening were for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Matthews.

Last night Madame Vestris took her annual benefit, when the theatre closed for the season.

STRAND.—Miss Fitzpatrick concluded her brief engagement on Wednesday, when she appeared in Lady Teazle, for her benefit. Although we do not think the part will rank among her best efforts, it has been carefully studied, and exhibits less mannerism than usual. Her penitential speech to Sir Peter in the famous discovery scene, displayed more talent for serious declamation than we had given Miss Fitzpatrick credit for, and her attitude at the fall of the screen was at once graceful and appropriate.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

ON Saturday, Don Pasquale was repeated, and attracted a larger attendance than on the Thursday. The performance was again received with enthusiasm, and the four principals—Grisi, Mario, Ronconi, and Lablache—were recalled after the last act.

An extra night was given on Monday, when Madame Grisi appeared for the last time in Norma. At the end of the opera she was called for twice, and both times cheered for several minutes. The public, however, still clings to the hope that Mad. Grisi will appear once more at least in the grandest of all her assumptions.

After Norma, Gnecco's once favourite, but now deservedly neglected, opera buffa, La Prova d'un Opera Seria, was produced for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera, with a strong cast, embracing the names of Mad. Viardot, and Signori Stigelli, Ronconi, and Lablache. Three or four years back, the well-known duet from this work, "Oh, guardate che Figura," used frequently to be sung by Mad. Viardot and Signor Tamburini with immense effect, but no other part of the music was ever given. La Prova d'un Opera Seria was popular with the subscribers of Her Majesty's Theatre, chiefly, no doubt, because Signor Lablache had an excellent opportunity of displaying his unrivalled comic powers. The performance on Monday night excited roars of laughter—all to be attributed to the acting of Signors Lablache and Ronconi; but the music made no impression. Even the duet, "Oh, guardate che Figura," which was wont to excite a furore, fell flat. Signor Lablache amusingly caricatured rather than imitated Mad. Viardot, and we missed the extraordinary fioriture of Signor Tamburini, and the interminable shake which used to make so quaint an effect. Mad. Viardot, too, does not appear to so much advantage as we have seen her. She acted with surprising buoyancy, but the music hardly suits her. Sig. Ronconi was more grotesque and eccentric than ever, as the poet, and amused the audience vastly with his humorous bye-play, when he had nothing whatever to do. He had not much set down for him, indeed; but he became his own author, and made an irresistible sketch out of nothing.

Mad. Viardot introduced the rondo finale from Mr. Balfe's Maid of Artois, which was a fine display of execution, and loudly applauded. Except the duet between the composer and poet, in which Lablache and Ronconi were equally inimitable, the scene in which the latter distributes the parts of the overture to the orchestra was the best of the performance. The gigantic basso made gigantic fun, and brought the piece to a merry conclusion. At the fall of the curtain, however, the audience appeared to draw breath as if relieved from a weight, and there was no demonstration of enthusiasm in favour of Gnecco's La Prova d'un Opera Seria.

On Tuesday, I Puritani was repeated, and introduced Signor Bartolini in Riccardo. Sig. Bartolini appeared two years ago at the Royal Italian Opera, and then made but little impression. He has, however, very much improved since, both in voice and style, and will be an acquisition to the company.

On Thursday, the Huguenots was given. The performance calls for no remark.

To-night Mad. Viardot is to appear as Desdemona in Otello, and Sig. Lablache appears, for the first time at Covent Garden, in his famous part of Elmiro.

MR. NICHOLSON, of Leicester, has been in town during the past week, making engagements for his series of autumn and winter oratorios and concerts, in the Midland Counties.

Digitized by Google

OPERA COMIQUE.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On Saturday last the company of the Théâtre Lyrique gave Auber's charming opera, La Sirène, for the first time in England in the French language. We are happy in having to record that both the singing and acting were in the highest degree satisfactory, and that the opera met with unquestionable success.

Having thrown overboard the small fry of French composers, and taken to Auber, we have no doubt that the company will regain the ground which they had lost, and obtain in the long run their well merited share of public patronage. The book of La Sirène, though ingenious, lively, and amusing, is hardly equal to many others of M. Scribe's which we could mention; there is, nevertheless, a certain amount of interest in the story, and the situations are cleverly arranged. As La Sirène was performed some six or seven years ago in an English dress, with Mdlle. Nau in the principal part, under the direction of Mr. Maddox, at the Princess's Theatre, we do not feel called upon to give any farther account of the plot than to state that Zerlina (Mad. Marie Cabel) is made to serve the purposes of her brother, Scopetto (M. Sujol), a half brigand, half smuggler, by singing in the mountains under the cover of night—a sort of land-mermaid—in order to draw off the attention of the soldiers and preventive-service men from his illegal operations. This Scopetto, in the course of his adventures, becomes master of some papers belonging to the Duke of Popoli (M. Leroy), who has been despatched by his king to Sicily to rid the country of the famous Marco Tempesta, alias Scopetto. These papers prove the legitimacy of Scipion (M. Legrand,) a young officer of the navy, who is in love with Zerlina, and who, through the machinations of the gallant smuggler, is restored to his title and estates as the real Duke of Popoli, and marries the smuggler's sister—a satisfactory arrangement to all the parties, no doubt, with the exception of the imaginary duke.

The music of La Sirène is in Auber's best style, elegant and sparkling, abounding in melody, rich in orchestral effects, and piquant and charming combinations.

The performance, on the whole, was the best we have seen by this company. Mad. Marie Cabel's admirable talent was never exhibited to more consummate advantage, nor has she ever created a more favourable impression since her first appearance before a London public. On several occasions she raised the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. Her acting was natural and graceful, and her singing, always remarkably brilliant and finished, was at times full of the deepest sentiment and expression. The romance of the second act, "De nos jeunes années," was simply and beautifully sung; and, in the rondo, "Voyez-vous là-bas," she executed the florid passages with wonderful facility and precision. The part of Scopetto, originally played by Roger, in Paris, was allotted to M. Sujol, who is a good actor, and a very clever singer. The other tenor (Scipion) was M. Legrand, who acquitted himself most creditably. M. Leroy was rather exaggerated and at times obtrusive in the part of the Duc de Popoli; but at the same time he was extremely zealous and kept the audience in good humour.

The opera was generally well got up, and everything went off in the most satisfactory manner. The audience were evidently delighted; and we are persuaded that the same success will continue to attend the efforts of the management, provided they follow in the same track, and give as much of Auber's music and as little of that of his imitators as possible. The house was well attended. The Domino Noir and Les Diamants de la Couronne are announced for next week. Every one is longing to see Marie Cabel in these masterpieces of French comic opera.

---

MR. AND MRS. JOHN ROE'S CONCERT took place in Store Street on Monday week. Among the engagements were Mr. and Mrs. Lockey, the Misses Brougham, and Miss Eyles. Mrs. John Roe sang Guglielmi's "Gratias agimus," and the bagatelle "My wife's a bonny wee thing" in which she was encored. Mr. Roe played a solo on the organ, and Miss Roe a fantasia on the pianoforte. A serenade, composed and sung by Mr. E. L. Hime, obtained an encore. The room was crowded.

RAVENNA.—A new opera will shortly be produced, entitled Ricciarda di Vilburgo, the book by Signor Rossi, the music by Signor Triccoli.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Grand Opéra has closed its doors for two months. During the recess some salutary reforms will be effected. The following is an abstract of the report, published in the Constitutionnel, of the committee appointed to examine the financial affairs of the establishment, and is supposed to be the basis of the Imperial decree:—

"The commission reports that the financial state of the Opera demands prompt and efficacious measures to prevent the dissolution of the concern, now reduced to bankruptcy. The commission, however, does not throw the odium of this state of things on any one in particular. The report remarks that the Opéra is a very expensive institution, as proved by history. Various experiments were tried in the reign of Louis XVI. with regard to the management of the Opéra, but without success, the civic régime (i. e. the Parisian municipality) being saddled at one time with a debt of 200,000 livres, and 112,000 livres of life pensions. It is estimated that this management lost, in the course of ten years, as much as 3,992,752f., or, on the average, 362,977f. per annum. Yet, during this period, it was on the stage of the Grand Opéra that Gluck and Piccini achieved their grandest triumphs. The great Napoleon clearly saw that the immense expenses of the Opéra could only be met by a state subvention, which he at first fixed at 50,000f. per month, and ultimately increased to 720,000f. The Government of the Restoration adopted the bases of this system, as it could not improve upon them. To this excellent arrangement, the lyrical art was indebted for its progress after the times of Gluck and Mozart. The French Opéra was the means of bringing out the operas of Spontini, of introducing Rossini's Guillaume Tell, and concluding an agreement with M. Meyerbeer for his Robert le Diable, etc. The events of July, 1830, were disastrous to the fortunes of the Opéra. The subvention was reduced by 40,000f., and at present it only amounts to 620,000f. The opera was deprived of many of its exclusive privileges, and abandoned to private speculators. The success of Robert le Diable retarded the decline of the Opéra for a few years, but in 1840 a deficit was then declared, and that deficit has increased every year more and more. The commission accordingly recommended that the 'Opéra' be placed under the management of the civil list, and that its debts be paid by the State. They also strongly suggest the propriety of reviving the works of the great masters of the ancient French opera, not only as an interesting subject of comparison, but for the preservation of the eternal rules of good taste."

The new opera, Les Trouvatelles, music by M. Duprato, and libretto by MM. Michel Carré and the late Jules Lorrin, has at length been produced at the Opéra Comique, and favourably received. M. Duprato, who obtained the grand prize of Rome, in 1848, has every reason to be satisfied with his début as a dramatic composer. The principal parts were sustained by MM. Riquier Delaunay, Ponchard, Mad. Félix and Mdlle. Decroix.—The Vaudeville is closed for two months. The management has been taken out of the hands of M. Thibaudeau. There are already several candidates on the list for the vacant throne.—At the Palais-Royal, Mdlle. Céline Mantaland and the Spanish dances continue the attraction.—M. Paul Meurice's drama of Schamyl has been very successful at the Ambigu Comique.

M. Jules Seveste, director of the Théâtre Lyrique, died suddenly last week, of apoplexy.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Bellini's Norma has been given for the benefit of Mad. Medori, who played the principal part. Fräulein Demeric undertook the part of Adalgisa. The house was well-attended, and the bénéficiaire received with the highest approbation. Rossini's Otello has been revived, the characters being sustained by Herren, Debassini, Bettini, Pasi, and Mad. Bendazzi.

The Philharmonische Conzerte, formerly so celebrated, are about to be revived under the direction of Herr Eckert. Mad. Herrenburg-Tuckzek arrived here some days since. She will shortly proceed to Ischl, for the benefit of her health, but, previous to her departure, will sing the soprano solos in Haydn's Mass in C major, and Mozart's "Benedictus" in the Dominikanerkirche. Herr Otto Bach, the composer, and Herr Karl Binder, capellmeister in Vienna, have been elected honorary members of the Mozarteum in Salzburg.

CARLSRUHE.—The following artists will shortly appear at the opera: Herr Ander, Mad. Löwe-Herzberg, and Fräulein Garrigues.

Digitized by Google

ROME.—Since our last we have had three benefits at the Torre Argentina. The first was that of the tenor Pietro Soderini, when Norma was given. The second was that of the tenor Massimiliani, who chose Verdi's I Masnadieri; and the third, that of Mad. de Giuli. The house was crowded in every corner, to hear this favourite singer in Norma, and an act of Maria de Rohan. At the end, Mad. de Giuli was recalled, and the stage covered with flowers.

GENOA.—Bellini's Il Pirata has been brought out at the Carlo Felice with doubtful success, in a great measure owing to the execution, which was wretched, with the exception of the tenor Carrion, who sang parts of the music well, although his intonation was not always correct in some of the mezza-voce passages. Bellini's operas do not seem to suit young Italy. The singers must either shout at the top of their voices, or else it is said they cannot sing at all. Signora Penco was quite as much out of her element as Carrion. Signor Della Santa, the baritone, succeeded better, and was encored in his air. The choruses were slovenly, and the orchestra bad. At his benefit, Sig. Carrion sang the duet from Mose with the baritone Sig. Romanelli, and was much applauded. He also sang the duet from Poliuto (I Martiri) with Mad. Penco.—The Teatro Apollo will be opened in a few days, with an opera seria.

MILAN, July 1.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On the 23rd ult. Signor G. Rabboni, the flautist, gave a vocal and instrumental concert, in the Sala del Ridotto della Scala, in which Signore Locatelli-Zanetti and Dionilla-Santolini, the tenor Scotti, and Signori Fasanotti, Deacon, Sangalli, and Bianchi, assisted. The last-mentioned is a pupil in the institution for the blind. Amongst the pieces most applauded was the overture to Struensée, of Meyerbeer, executed upon two pianos (!!) by Signori Fasanotti, Deacon, Sangalli, and Bianchi.

On the 24th ult. the theatre Radegonda was re-opened with Il Nuovo Figaro of Luigi Ricci, which had not been performed here for seven years. Although there is some pretty music in this opera, the general impression is monotonous. The libretto is not good. The singers were the prima donna A. Fumagalli; the tenor, Sarti; the barytone, Sabbatini; and the buffo, Favretti. Signora Fumagalli completed her studies in the I. R. Conservatorio about two years ago. Her voice is one of the thinnest, and her style certainly not of the best. As an actress she has almost everything to acquire. The tenor, Sarti, has a good voice, the effect of which is almost destroyed by his method of singing, which is disagreeably nasal! The barytone, Sabbatini, has a voice of rather a low register, with some good notes, and sings with taste. The voice of the buffo, Favretti, is neither strong nor of good quality, but he shows tact in its management, combined with stage experience, and considerable intelligence.

The re-opening of the Carcano has been postponed until towards the middle of the current month. Another correspondent writes:—"The Carcano, which has been closed more than a month, will shortly re-open its doors to the public; the first opera will be Verdi's Macbeth, which will be followed by a new opera by Signor Rieschi.")

DRESDEN.—Fräulein La Grua, from the Imperial Opera-House, Vienna, continues her successes. Besides Fidelio, she has already played Alice, Donna Anna, and Valentine, and, before returning to Vienna, will appear as Agatha and Susanne.

ROTTERDAM.—The following is the programme decided on for the Grand Musical Festival on the 13th, 14th, and 15th of July: First day—an overture, by Hutschenruyter, and Israel in Egypt, by Händel. Second day—Haydn's Seasons. Third day—Herr Verhulst's music to the 145th Psalm, a grand concerto for violin, composed and executed by M. Vieuxtemps, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Herr Verhulst will conduct. The solos will be sung by Mesdames Jenny Ney, Offermann's von Hove, Dolby, Herren Roger, Pischeck, and Carl Formes. The chorus and orchestra will consist of 900 persons. Among the invited guests is Mr. Sterndale Bennett, from London, one of the judges of the Great Musical Society of Holland. Mr. Bennett has accepted the invitation.

MANNHEIM.—Fräulein Wildauer (from Vienna) has produced a favourable impression as Marie in Die Regiments-tochter.

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent). Fräulein Ney (from Dresden) has concluded her engagement, which has given so much satisfaction that there is every probability of her revisiting us at no very distant period. The opera season closed with Masaniello, Herr Theodore Formes playing the Neapolitan fisherman, and Fräulein Marie Taglioni, Fenella. The recess will last two months. The theatre, however, will remain open for the performance of small pieces and ballet, more especially for the convenience of foreigners and strangers, great numbers of whom pass through Berlin during the summer months.

BRESLAU.—Herr Young has taken leave of the public as Raoul in Les Huguenots. Fräulein Johanna Wagner is starring here at present.

POSEN.—The brothers Wieniawski (violinist and pianist), have given eight concerts with great success.

HAMBURGH.—M. Roger (from Paris) selected Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor for his second part, and was as successful as usual. Fra Diavolo will shortly be revived.

MODENA.—Rigoletto was the third opera produced (on the 17th ult.)—Gilda, Teresa Brambilla; Duca, Galvani; Rigoletto, Corsi; Sparafucile, Didot. Almost every piece was applauded, the aria of the prima donna, the second duet with the barytone, the romanza of the tenor, and the quartet more especially.

BOLOGNA.—At the Teatro del Corso, Verdi's Trovatore has been represented several times with success, both as regards the music and the execution. The cast included Signora Boccabadati (Adzucena); De Gianni (Vives); the tenor, Boucardo; the barytone, Fiori; and the basso profundo, Ghini. The miserere, and the adagio of the duet between the soprano and the barytone have been encored every evening.

TRIESTE.—At the Teatro Mauroner, Poliuto was produced on the 17th ult., thus cast: Paolina, Signora Winter (débutante, and daughter of the celebrated tenor); Poliuto, Remorini; Callistene, Nerini; Severo, Edward Winter (brother of the prima donna). The execution was on the whole praiseworthy. On the 24th ult. Don Pasquale was represented by the Signora Lorenzetti-Gruntner; the tenor, Remorini; the barytone, Giacomelli; and the buffo, V. Galli. The execution gave general satisfaction. The first honours were for the prima donna and the buffo.

FORLI.—The theatre was opened for the season of the Fair with Verdi's Attila. Odabella, Signora Arrigotti; Foresto, Luigi Stefani; Attila, Panzini; and the barytone, Coliva. The opera gave great satisfaction, and the artists obtained much applause and many recalls.

TRENTO.—Il Barbiere di Siviglia has been represented with the contralto, Gaetanina Brambilla; the tenor, Danieli; the barytone, Altini; the buffo, Soares; and the basso profondo, Dolcibene. The prima donna merited and obtained the warmest applause. The other artists were also well received.—The Trovatore of Verdi was brought out on the 21st ult. Leonora, A. Cortesi Crippa; Adzucena, G. Brambilla; Manrico, Antonio Agresti; the Count of Luna, Guiseppe Altini; Ferrando, Dolcibene. The music and artists pleased immensely. The success of the subsequent representations has been extraordinary.

FLORENCE.—At the Teatro Nuovo, a new opera, Matilde dei Galigari, (both the libretto and music by anonymous authors) has been produced at this theatre, and received with approbation. Some curiosity has been excited respecting the composer and the poet. The former was honoured with a call after the chorus in the introduction; but the Maestro Incognito did not disclose himself! The libretto is unworthy of the music. The opera was well executed by Signora Fioretti, the tenor, Giuglinithe; barytone, Mazzanti, and Benedetti.

PADUA.—Verdi's Trovatore was the second opera of the season, executed by the prima donna, Signora Alagino; the contralto, Josephine Lemaire; the tenor, Landi; the barytone, Guicciardi; and the basso, Sottovia. The opera was well received, and the artists were equally successful. Donisetti's Don Sebastiano will be the next novelty.

M. LIMNANDER, the composer, will shortly pay a visit to Belgium, for the purpose of superintending the performance of a Te Deum for full orchestra, which the Belgian government commissioned him to compose for the national festivals.

NEW YORK.—The following artists are already engaged by Mr. Maretzek for the Italian Opera this coming season in New York:—Prime Donne, Gaetanini Brambilla (from Milan), Antonietta Ortolani (from Venice), and Rosa Marra (from Milan). Contralto, Guissipinna Martine d'Orney (from Vienna). Tenore, Giacomo Galvani (from Milan), Neri Baraldi, and Domenico Mazzoleni. Baritone, Francesco Graziani (from Paris), and Giovanni Andrazi (from Vienna). Bassi, Ignazio Marini, and Polinare Ortolani.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

AN ORGANIST.—No object would be attained by the publication of our correspondent's letter. The appointment is one of very small consequence to the art of music, and in that does not differ from the majority of such appointments, which are obtained rather by interest than by merit. Not by any means that we pretend to deny the very distinguished merits of Sir Henry Bishop. Far from it.

BLANCHE.—MR. WADDEL.

NOTICE.

IN our next number will appear a sketch of Mr. BRAHAM'S life, with a consideration of his talents and influence as a singer.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 8TH, 1854.

THE general meeting of the members and associates of the (old) Philharmonic Society has taken place, and the directors for next season have been appointed. The result will no doubt gratify subscribers, since, from the new government, a spirited line of policy may be counted on.

It is a matter for general congratulation that so old and staunch a servant of the Philharmonic Society as Mr. George Frederick Anderson should have been re-elected. The name of this enterprising and patriotic musician stands (as usual) at the head of the poll:—"Mr. Anderson—20." It is comfortable to reflect upon this (annual) fact. The society without Mr. Anderson would be no society at all. He alone has been the means of keeping it on its (last) legs, by ensuring the attendance of Her Majesty the Queen as an annual visitor, and perpetuating the (mild) sway of Mr. Costa, as conductor. "Mr. Anderson—20;" the "item" can hardly be recorded too often. "Mr. Anderson—20," for the twentieth time, "20," or something near it.

Next to Mr. Anderson, who has twenty votes, and stands at the head of the poll, we find (to our great astonishment) M. Sainton, of Her Majesty's private band. Mr. Anderson conducts her Majesty's private band, and M. Sainton plays first fiddle. Thus there will be "unanimity" of opinion between two at least of the seven directors. It is comfortable to reflect upon this (occasional) fact, since, unless the other five directors be contumacious directors, directors with opinions of their own, to which they are wedded, Mr. Anderson and M. Sainton will have it all their own way, and things must perforce go on smoothly and in order. M. Sainton stands second on the list—next to the Head of the poll—with eighteen votes, only two less than Mr. Anderson. In 1853, M. Sainton was also a director. This was the year when the "Sterndale Bennett" controversy occurred, which was well nigh turning everything topsy-turvy in the world of music. What part M. Sainton took in that affair did not transpire, since the seven directors (including Mr. Bennett), always "unanimous," were "unanimously" silent on the point. Nevertheless in 1854 M. Sainton was not re-elected. How was this? Did M. Sainton act in the "Sterndale Bennett" controversy in a manner counter to the wishes of his elector? And if so, why is he elected this year with eighteen votes—only two less than the Head of the poll? Has he promised to be a "better boy" for the future?

Two violins stand first. Next comes a violoncello—Mr. Lucas, with 14 votes—an excellent musician, but not exactly an enthusiast, not atrabilious, or choleric, by any means—rather dogged and phlegmatic. Mr. Lucas, it may be presumed, is the musical director of the seven. His department is to decide between the merits of the overtures to Zampa and Ruy Blas, and to select from among the symphonies of Schumann those which are best fitted for the delight and instruction of the subscribers. Mr. Lucas is a musician, and his appointment is therefore a comfortable fact. There is no mickery in that—as the author of Modern German Music, Recollections and Criticisms, might say, in a "scrannel" ἐπιφώνημα.

The rest of our task is micrographical. It is to discern and point out to our readers the remaining four members of the direction. Mr. Clinton (flute) has 14 votes; Mr. M'Murdie (organist, and composer of glees) 12; Mr. Card (flute) 10; and Mr. Williams (clarionet) 9. Where is the micrometer?

From the above it may be reckoned on that Mr. Costa will again accept the post of director of directors, and conductor; and that the 43rd season of the (old) Philharmonic Society, like the 42nd, will pass over without a single work of a native composer being introduced in any one of the eight concerts—unless, perhaps, Mr. Sterndale Bennett may be induced to write a septet for two violins, two flutes, clarionet, organ, and violoncello, to be performed by the directors at the first concert, under the superintendance of Mr. Costa, which would not only prove a great attraction, but set him right with the society, its ministers, and the Czar of all the Orchestras. Mr. Bennett had 4 white balls, and was at the bottom of the list. He, therefore, owes some gratitude to those who were adventurous enough to vote for him. Let him pay them off in a septet.

Other incidents took place at the general meeting, which may be recorded, simply as matters of history. Mr. George Osborne (composer, pianist, and conductor of the Amateur Society) was unanimously elected a member; while Mr. Duggan (composer of the operas of Pierre and Léonie) was black balled, his proposer (Mr. Lindsay Sloper) and seconder (Mr. Benedict both being absent. This was hard upon Mr. Duggan (composer of the operas of Pierre and Léonie). Mr. Bannister, of the Royal Academy, (composer of Symphonies à la Haydn) was elected an associate. Mr. E. Schulz, Mr. W. H. Holmes, and Mr. Cipriani Potter, severally declined to serve as directors—in case, by any unforseen combination of circumstances, they should happen to be elected.

The three new members of the direction, then, are—M. Sainton (18), Mr. Card (10), and Mr. Williams (9). These replace Mr. J. B. Chatterton, Mr. H. Griesbach, and Mr. E. Schulz, who were directors last year—probably contumacious directors, directors with opinions of their own, to which they were wedded (probably, we say). The present list, in extenso, stands thus:—

CONDUCTOR, MR. COSTA.

MR. ANDERSON.

| | |
|---|---|
| (M. Sainton). | (Mr. Lucas). |
| (Mr. Clinton). | (Mr. M'Murdie). |
| (Mr. Card). | (Mr. Williams). |

MR. ANDERSON.

CONDUCTOR, MR. COSTA.

Wishing long life, prosperity, and, above all, "unanimity," to the directors as a government, and to the (old) Philharmonic Society as a body corporate, we take leave of them until next year, when we trust their shadows may not be less. Meanwhile, Punch and Diogenes will be on the alert.

Digitized by Google

Report speaks of a meeting of the Committee and the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music having recently taken place, at which matters of the highest importance were discussed. It appears that the funds are by no means in a flourishing condition, and that the last summing up showed a serious deficit. Many plans were proposed to remedy the evil, but all of them either rejected or postponed for further consideration.

Of course, the Professors were requested to help the Committee out of the mess; but the Professors, who are already pecuniary losers by their attendance at the Academy, were anything but eager to make further sacrifices. On the other hand, the Committee enjoy a charter, and the Professors can do nothing without them. In this respect, therefore, the Professors are in a cleft stick.

There is a talk of moving from Tenterden-street, the lease having expired. Brompton and Bayswater have both been hinted at as the future locale. The students, however, will find it difficult to give their concerts so far from the "West End," and Professors, moreover, will not like to travel to Brompton to give lessons at a sacrifice of time as well as "terms."

A Professor suggested that the whole body of Professors should be annual subscribers; but this was set aside at once. Another Professor had drawn up a plan, by means of which the Academy would be sure to pay. The plan was found ingenious, but was not found acceptable; and the Professor was at a discount for his pains.

One of the committee, an M.P., half pledged himself to ask Government for a house—rent-free. We should like to know on what grounds; and we should be glad to hear what would be said to such a proposition. What has the Royal Academy of Music done, what is it doing, and what is it likely to do, to deserve the gift of a house from Parliament; and now, especially, that in-door pupils—whose maintenance is too expensive—are (it is said) no longer to be taken? They manage these things better at Cologne.

---

Alboni.—This illustrious and renowned cantatrice has been in London for some days. Is she going to sing? No one knows. If she sings, where? No one knows. How long will she remain? No one knows. Why has she come? No one knows; although everybody was enchanted to see her, on Monday night, in her box at the Royal Italian Opera, during the performance of Norma and La Prova d'un Opera Seria, laughing at the humour of Lablache and the quaint conceits of Ronconi, and applauding Mad. Pauline Viardot Garcia in the rondo finale from Balfe's Maid of Artois, which Alboni used to sing herself (and how she sang it!) at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the last scene of Don Pasquale. It would be a coup de maître if, after the "last farewell" of Grisi, Mr. Gye could make arrangements to "wind up" the brilliant season of 1854 with a few operas in which the "bright particular star" should be the greatly gifted and universally popular Alboni—Marietta Alboni, never to be forgotten by the Covent-Gardenites—who is looking in better health and spirits, and more provokingly handsome than at any former period, when she divided the madness of the operatic world with the "Swedish Nightingale."

Mdlle. Marie Cruvelli has left London for Paris.

Madame Stoltz, the celebrated contralto and eminent dramatic singer, who is still in London, has just signed an engagement with the Ministry of the Interior for the Grand Opéra in Paris. The terms of her engagement are munificent. Madame Stoltz will make her rentrée (after an absence of several years) about the middle of August, when the theatre re-opens.

MR. STERNDALE BENNETT'S CONCERT.

The concert of Mr. Sterndale Bennett took place on Tuesday morning in the Hanover Square Rooms, before a crowded and brilliant assembly. It was altogether one of the most interesting musical entertainments of the season. The programme, composed entirely of "classical," or in plainer language "good" music, was selected with Mr. Bennett's accustomed good taste, as the following will show:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Trio, in C minor ... ... ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Aria, "Adelaida" Signor Gardoni ... ... | Beethoven. |
| Two-part Songs { "The Sabbath Morn" / "Greeting" } ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Minuetto Espressivo (MS.) / Selections from Preludes and Lessons, Op. 33 | W. S. Bennett. |
| Air, "Batti, batti," Madame Clara Novello... | Mozart. |
| Chaconne, Violin, M. Vieuxtemps ... ... | J. S. Bach. |
| Romance, "Rappelle-toi," Signor Gardoni ... | Blumenthal. |
| Three Diversions, Pianoforte ... ... | W. S. Bennett. |
| Canzonet, Madame Clara Novello ... ... | Haydn. |
| Harpsichord Lessons, (by desire) ... ... | Handel. |

Mendelssohn's fine trio was performed in a style of first-rate excellence, as might have been anticipated from three such performers as Mr. Bennett, M Vieuxtemps, and Sig. Piatti, at the pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. The selections from Mr. Bennett's own works were heard with the greatest pleasure. The only novelty was the Minuetto espressivo, a little movement of such melodious beauty, that it has every claim to the epithet which Mr. Bennett has applied to it. The trio is quaint, fanciful, and very original. The selections from the Preludes and Lessons, a work which is growing into universal favour, played by the composer with delightful fluency, and a style wholly unaffected and peculiar to himself, was received with the loudest applause. On retiring from the platform Mr. Bennett was recalled, and compelled to add two more of the same light and attractive pieces to the four with which he had already gratified the audience. The Three Diversions (duets) were perfectly executed by Mr. Bennett and his pupil, Mr. George Russell, to whom the upper part was allotted. These graceful bagatelles, written many years ago, have lost none of their attraction. Each, in its way, is a gem; and, as the first is in A major, the second (one of the loveliest short pieces ever written) in E major and the third in A minor, they fall into the plan, and might collectively be entitled a sonatina. We wish there were a few more such sonatinas. But who is to compose them? The "Harpsichord lessons" was the Suite in E major, from the Suite de Pièces, terminating with the air with variations, familiarly known as the "Harmonious Blacksmith." It was played by Mr. Bennett with that full tone, expressive phrasing, and admirable legato in which he has no superior.

The Chaconne of Bach, one of the most prodigious morceaux de bravoure ever composed for any instrument, was magnificently executed by M. Vieuxtemps, and encored with enthusiasm. The modest but masterly pianoforte part, added by Mendelssohn, was played by Mr. Bennett to admiration, and the whole performance was perhaps the greatest treat of the concert.

The vocal music was as admirably sung as it was well chosen. Mad. Clara Novello and Sig. Gardoni need no praise; but a word must be said for the quiet and entirely satisfactory manner in which the beautiful part songs of Mendelssohn were sung by Mrs. Alfred Gilbert and Miss Cole. These were well accompanied by Mr. A Gilbert. In "Batti, batti" Sig. Piatti played the violoncello part from the score, Mr. Bennett supplying the rest on the pianoforte. Mr. Blumenthal accompanied Sig. Gardoni in his own song, which was very much admired. The beautiful Canzonet of Haydn, given with appropriate simplicity of style by Mad. Novello, was re-demanded.

Digitized by Google

The audience were delighted with the concert, and, indeed, had they been otherwise, they must have been very difficult to please.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The season of 1854 has come to a close. It was the tenth since the institution of the Musical Union, and one of the most prosperous on record.

The seventh séance, on Tuesday, the 27th ult., which brought an immense concourse of fashionable and aristocratic amateurs to Willis's Rooms, was for the benefit of the Director—or the "Director's Grand Matinée," as Mr. Ella himself entitles it. The programme was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet, in C, No. 77 | Haydn. |
| Septet, D minor, Op. 75 | Hummel. |
| "Les Arpèges" | Vieuxtemps. |
| Notturno, D flat, Pianoforte Solo | Döhler. |
| Septet, E flat | Beethoven. |
| Nottturno and Presto Scherzando | Chopin and Mendelssohn. |

Executants.—1st Violin, M. Vieuxtemps; 2nd Violin, Herr Goffrie; Viola, Mr. Hill; Violoncello, M. Van Gelder; C.-Bass, Mr. Howell; Flute, Mr. Remusat; Oboe, M. Barret; Corno, Mr. C. Harper; Clarinet, Mr. Lazarus; Bassoon, M. Baumann; Accompanyist, Signor Li Calsi; Pianoforte, M. Charles Hallé and Master Arthur Napoleon; Vocalist, M. Jules Lefort.

It was the first appearance, this season, of M. Vieuxtemps, who plays, if possible, better than before. It was a real treat to hear the great Belgian violinist in the quartet of Haydn and the septet of Beethoven. It was "fine fiddling," and no mistake. From the quartet, the allegro and the variations on "God save the Emperor"—from the septet, the andante con variazioni and finale, were given: so that there were enough variations in all conscience. The Arpèges of M. Vieuxtemps, with violoncello obbligato (capitally played by M. van Gelder), and pianoforte accompaniment (by Sig. Li Calsi), was an extraordinary performance. The piece, which is very original and ingenious, is full of outrageous difficulties. But what are difficulties to a player like M. Vieuxtemps? The applause at the end was of the warmest.

From Hummel's septet, the pianoforte part of which was brilliantly executed by M. Hallé the allegro, scherzo, andante, con variazioni (more variations), and finale were presented. The performance of this, as of the other full pieces, was first-rate. Döhler's notturno is the best of the performances of Master Napoleon, the "Portuguese Prodigy," who, notwithstanding the glowing and elaborate apostrophes of Mr. Ella and the Atlas, was announced to appear "for the last time at the Musical Union:" This is significant. The concluding bars of Chopin's notturno, introduced by M. Hallé, are sheer nonsense. The presto scherzando of Mendelssohn, however, made up for this. M. Hallé played it finely, although in the passages of octaves for both hands he placed the accents, to suit his own convenience, anywhere but where they were intended by the composer. Some romances by M. Jules Lefort varied the programme, which gave general satisfaction.

The eighth and last concert was one of the best of the season, and one of the best attended. The selection was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet in G. No. 81 | Haydn. |
| The Moonlight Sonata, Op. 27 | Beethoven. |
| Quartet in D, No. 3, Op. 44 | Mendelssohn. |
| Solos, pianoforte. Solo, violin. | |

Executants—1st violin, M. Vieuxtemps; 2nd violin, Herr Goffrie; viola, Mr. Hill; violoncello, Sig. Piatti; pianist, Mdlle. Clauss.

"The concerts of the Musical Union," says the Times, "have been more than usually successful this season, and Mr. Ella, their founder and conductor, has displayed both spirit and discretion in their management. His exertions have been of essential benefit to the art, since they have been instrumental in promoting a taste for the highest order of music among the aristocratic and wealthy classes of society. Fifteen years ago, the trios, quartets, etc., of the great masters were only to be heard in a few private circles, amateur or professional, where the performers (especially amateurs) thought more of their own playing than of the music. At present, the case is very different, and large audiences from the élite of society meet together fifteen times in the course of the spring and summer seasons, not for the sake of exhibiting their own incapability to each other, but to listen to the finest compositions executed by the most accomplished professional artists—and to listen, moreover, with strict attention and a sincere desire to appreciate. Among the events which have most signally marked the progress of the season just expired, has been the engagement of Herr Ernst, whose frequent appearance at the concerts has been a source of general satisfaction, and whose impassioned and intellectual playing of some of the noblest works of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn, is not likely to be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to hear him. In none of his previous visits to London has this admirable violinist more highly distinguished himself, or won over a larger number of adherents to his poetical and, in its way, unrivalled talent. As second violin, viola, and violoncello, Mr. Ella has continued, in the majority of performances, to enjoy the co-operation of Herr Goffrie, Mr. Hill, and Signor Piatti, whose places it would be difficult to fill up, were he unlucky enough to lose them."

With the remarks in reference to Herr Ernst, every lover of the highest class of intellectual playing must cordially agree.

We could not desire to hear the fine old quartet of Haydn, one of the vigorous inspirations of his green old age, more admirably performed than by M. Vieuxtemps and his associates. The first and last movements of Mendelssohn's splendid work, too, were executed with great breadth and dignity of style, and with fire and animation into the bargain. With the reading of the minuet and andante, however, we cannot agree. They are simple and flowing, not to be improved by rallentandos, etc. Nevertheless, since M. Vieuxtemps was the violinist, we say this with deference. The Arpéges of M. Vieuxtemps, performed with the same excellence, produced the same effect as at the "Director's Grand Matinée."

Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss played the first two movements of Beethoven's exquisite and very popular sonata, à la fantasia, to perfection, and the difficult finale (presto agitato) with remarkable spirit and energy. The adagio was played as charmingly as any voice or fiddle could have sung it; the sentiment was spontaneous, and the expression real. The minuet and trio were as playful and unaffected as anything we have heard. In her solos, too, Mdlle. Clauss was highly successful. Nothing could have been more graceful than the notturno of Chopin, one of his prettiest and least tormented. The hackneyed fantasia of Liszt (on Lucia), is not at all to our taste, and we have not the slightest wish to hear it again, either from Mdlle. Clauss or from any other pianist. It is necessary to state, however, that it was more applauded than either the notturno or the sonata. Who, then, can blame Mdlle. Clauss?

Miss Susan Goddard gave a Soirée Musicale at the New Beethoven Rooms, on Friday, the 30th ult., with the assistance of Miss Dolby, Miss Amy Dolby, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Sig. Cinao, and Herr Reichardt, in the vocal department; and Messrs. Deichmann (violin) and Hausmann (violoncello) in the instrumental. Mr. Benedict was the conductor. The programme was a good one. Mendelssohn's trio, in D minor, was well executed by Miss Susan Goddard, Messrs. Deichmann and Hausmann. Benedict and De Beriot's duet, for piano and violin, was also well played by the lady and Herr Deichmann, and both movements applauded. Miss Susan Goddard is a very promising pianist, and has made a great advance since we last heard her. We noticed this especially in Beethoven's sonata in C sharp minor (the "Moonlight"), which she performed with vigour and expression. The other instrumental performances worthy of notice were, the fantasia for violoncello, on themes from l'Elisir d'Amore, exceedingly well played by Mr. Hausmann; and a brilliant solo on the violin by Herr Deichmann. Miss Dolby sang Mozart's too much used, but never-tiring "L' Addio," as she always does, and Herr Reichardt gave Esser's pleasing "Abschied" with the greatest taste. Sig. Cimino introduced two Italian songs, and Mdlle. Sedlatzek sang the ronda finale to Cenerentola.

Digitized by Google

SIGNOR PUZZI'S BENEFIT.

This took place at Drury Lane Theatre yesterday evening week, and was literally a "monster" entertainment. The performance commenced with the first act of Sonnambula, for Mdlle. Agnes Büry, Signors Arnoldi and Bettini; followed by a miscellaneous concert; succeeded by the second act of Freischütz, for Mad. Caradori, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, and Herr Reichardt; after which the whole of the last act of Fidelio, with Mad. Rudersdorf, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Herr Reichardt, and Herr Formes; concluding with a ballet divertissement. The concert was supported by Mesdames Persiani, Amedei, Angles Fortuni, Misses Pyne, Messrs. Jules Lefort, W. Harrison, Allan Irving, and Herr Reichardt, as vocalists; and Signor Bazzini (violin), M. Prudent (pianoforte), Messrs. Horanyi, H. Distin, Hartman, T. Distin, Bezuth, Angyal, W. Distin, and Kunitz (horns), as instrumentalists. Mad. Persiani sang the aria, "Qui la voce," from Puritani, with extraordinary skill and fluency; and Herr Reichardt delighted the audience with his perfect expression in "Fond heart, adieu," a Lied by Esser. Mr. W. Harrison joined Miss Louisa Pyne in the duettino from Don Pasquale; and Miss Louisa Pyne herself sang Mr. Benedict's very pleasing new ballad, "A Morning Song," with excellent taste. Mad. Amedei made the usual effect in the grand air, "Ah! quel giorno," from Semiramide; and the three ladies united their talents in the well-known trio, "Le faccio un inchino," from Il Matrimonio Segreto. Signor Bazzini was vociferously applauded in the Carnaval de Venise, in which he introduced a great many very eccentric points. M. Prudent made a legitimate effect in his popular morceau, "La Chasse," which he played to perfection, and with such vigour, decision, and animation, that the audience were fairly taken by surprise, and unanimously recalled him after the performance. This accomplished virtuoso has been heard too seldom this year.

Madame Angles Fortuni made her first appearance in this country, and made a hit at once. She sang the aria d'intrata from Lucia di Lammermoor, "Perchè non ho del vento," with great brilliancy and facility, and proved herself a perfect mistress of the bravura style. Madame Fortuni's voice is a true soprano, with an extensive range, and clear and agreeable in quality. A more decided success could not have been achieved. She was enthusiastically cheered at the conclusion from all parts of the house and re-called. Signors Vera and Pilotti were the conductors.

There was nothing further to notice. The theatre was crowded in every part, and the audience was in ecstacies all the evening. Signor Puzzi did not himself appear among the instrumentalists, although many of his visitors anticipated one of his solos on the horn.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The members of the "Chorus" of the New Philharmonic Society gave a dinner last week at Radley's Hotel, Blackfriars Bridge, to their Superintendants, in acknowledgment of their able services on so many occasions, and particularly for their admirable arrangements by which the members of the "Chorus" were enabled to be present at the opening of the Crystal Palace, on the 10th of June last.

Dr. Wylde accepted the invitation to preside on the occasion; and, under the direction of the Superintendants, Messrs. Lockyer, Stroud, Heming, and Webb, "Non nobis, Domine" and several glees and part songs were sung with great effect.

Dr. Wylde, in proposing the health of Her Majesty, said that, as nothing could exceed the enthusiasm which the name of Her Majesty always excited among all classes of her subjects, and on all occasions, he felt it was only necessary for him to mention her name in order to secure on all sides the most hearty response; but, he added, there is one feeling which Her Majesty possesses which is rarely mentioned on festive occasions, but which he could not help alluding to on the present one; he alluded to her love for music, observing, that the support she extends to its cultivation, and the example she sets all of us, in promoting its advancement on account of its beneficial and humanizing effect on the mind, cannot but tend to increase, if it be possible, our admiration, and strengthen the feeling of loyalty and respect which is uppermost in the mind of every Englishman. He (Dr. Wylde) believed that this feeling was particularly strong in the hearts and minds of all musicians, be they professors or amateurs.

Enthusiasts for their art they must be, or they would not have overcome even its first difficulties—enthusiasts for the Queen they cannot help being, for that feeling which leads them to desire and search for the "unseen beautiful," fits them to appreciate those virtues which adorn the character of their Queen, and which, though not perceptible to "the human eye," exercise around us far and wide their all controlling influence. In conclusion, Dr. Wylde said: "Gentlemen, I give you the health of Her Majesty the Queen, the supporter of our 'art,' and of everything which conduces to the happiness and advancement, in a social point of view, of her people."

Dr. Wylde afterwards proposed the health of the Superintendants, saying that more upright, more honourable men to deal with could not be found, or more energetic men, combining great urbanity of manner, with decision of purpose. He felt it the greatest pleasure to be associated with them, and concluded by saying that not only were the members of the Chorus deeply indebted to them, but that he and the directors felt fully the services they had rendered the society, and counted with great satisfaction on their continued exertions for next season.

The Superintendants, Messrs. Lockyer, Stroud, Heming, and Webb, severally returned thanks, and Mr. Stroud proposed "Success to the New Philharmonic Society," coupling with it the health of Dr. Wylde, which was most heartily responded to.

---

Miss Ursula Barclay gave her first concert on Friday evening, the 30th ult., at Willis's Rooms, under distinguished patronage. The vocalists were Misses Dolby, Fanny Rowland, Ursula Barclay, Mr. Theodore Distin, Signors Ciabatta and Nappi, and Herr Formes. The instrumentalists: Mr. G. A. Osborne (pianoforte), Mr. H. C. Cooper (violin), Mr. Alfred Nicholson (oboe), Mr. R. Blagrove (concertina), and Messrs. Distin (sax horns). Miss Ursula Barclay sang a duet with Signor Nappi, and was encored in Mr. Waley's song, "Sing on, ye little birds," with oboe obbligato by Mr. Alfred Nicholson. This was a most pleasing performance, and well merited its success. Miss Barclay also sang a ballad by Mr. Frank Romer, "The past and present here unite," and "The Fountain"—both with nice expression, and joined in two duets—Mendelssohn's "I would that my love," with Miss Fanny Rowland, and Alary's Notturno, "La Gita in Gondola," with Signor Nappi. The room was very full. Mr. W. S. Cusins was the accompanyist at the piano.

New Philharmonic Society.—Our readers will perceive by our advertisement column, that the concerts of the fourth season of the New Philharmonic Society are already announced. The success of the past season has placed beyond a doubt the prosperity of the society. We hear that nearly 400 members of the musical profession in the metropolis are subscribers, and these—though forming only a small number of the actual subscribers—show the estimation in which the exertions of the society in a good cause are appreciated by the profession. We are informed that it is the intention of the directors to invite some of the most distinguished members of the profession to become "associate directors," in order to have their assistance in the selection of new works, etc.

Herr Jansa's Morning Concert took place at 47, Wimpole-street, Cavendish-square, and was attended by a very elegant and fashionable company, on Friday, the 16th ult. The following artists lent their assistance:—Vocalists—Mesdames Caradori, Agnes Büry, Janda, Herren Castelli, Pecz, Hölzel, Formes, and Reichardt; Instrumentalists—Herr Pauer (piano), and Signor Piatti (violoncello). The principal morceau in the programme was the andante con variazioni (Op. 47) of Beethoven, for pianoforte violin, played by Herr Pauer and Herr Jansa. The other important piece was a trio, by Herr Jansa, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, a work of decided merit, and very finely performed by the composer, in conjunction with Herr Pauer and Signor Piatti. The vocal portion was well sung, especially the charming "Lebewohl" of Mendelssohn, by Herren Pecz, Castelli, Hölzel, and Formes, and the same composer's "Fruhlingslied," by Mdlle. Agnes Büry.

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

"Specification of Carlo Minasi." Concertinas. George E. Eyre and William Spottiswoode.

This is a pamphlet setting forth the particulars of "Letters Patent granted to Carlo Minasi, of Camden Town, in the County of Middlesex, Professor of Music, for the invention of 'Improvements in Concertinas.'"

It is the first time we have been called upon to review a Book of Patents; but, inasmuch as it relates to musical matters, our columns are patent to Patents. Mr. Carlo Minasi, an enthusiast in the cause of the concertina, has, with great assiduity, applied himself to improve it, and has succeeded in rendering it more easy to the performer, and altogether more manageable than it was before. As the provisional clauses of the Patent would be understood by the concertina player only, we shall refrain from entering into particulars, and merely state that Mr. Carlo Minasi's special improvements consist in, firstly, the constructing concertinas with partitions on both sides of the plate of the pan or note frame which holds the notes, so as to form chambers on both sides, instead of one; secondly, in providing two or more pans, either at one or both sides of the instrument, whereby a key played on may cause a note to sound either in the inner or the outer pan, or in both pans simultaneously; thirdly, in making levers for sounding the notes; fourthly, preserving a uniformity in the note chambers; fifthly, in adapting a damper board, so as to make the notes sound quickly; sixthly, in a new mode of pressing the bellows; seventhly, in making double acting notes; and, lastly, in adapting the notes to the unequal length of the fingers.

We do not pledge ourselves to thoroughly understanding all the above divisions; but we have no doubt the concertina player will at once detect and appreciate their peculiar merits. To explain his inventions and improvements, Mr. Carlo Minasi has furnished three diagrams, and describes them at length. He is entitled to credit for turning his attention to the improvement of an instrument which has lately grown into so much favour, and has attracted the attention of such eminent composers as Herr Molique and Mr. Macfarren.

---

"Dear Edwin, much 'twould Grieve Me." Ballad—Melody and Words by D. Morison.—Symphonies and Accompaniment by Sir H. R. Bishop. Jullien and Co.

This song has a good melody, somewhat in the Scotch style. The words describe the vain attempt of a maiden to prevent her faithful swain from going to seek his fortune at "the diggings." The swain, however, an example in his way, is true, and having got the gold, brings it back to his beloved. The accompaniments by Sir Henry Bishop are admirable, and there is an air of plaintiveness about the whole which cannot fail to attract. We have no objection to the point which occurs in page 4—lines 3 and 4—where the major key succeeds the minor (on the words, "laden, To her he'd come again") since, although the transition at first appears somewhat abrupt, it expresses very prettily the sentiment of the words. Lovers, we suppose, moreover, if they be faithful, always "come back" in the major mode.

---

"Dig! Dig! Dig!"—Song. "The Look of Love"—Ballad. Francis de Yrigotti. Jewell and Letchford.

If Mr. Yrigotti will alter the F natural in the bass—page 2, line 1, bar 3—to F sharp, the whole of his second phrase will be, as it ought to be, in G, and his "Dig! dig! dig!" dedicated to "all merry gold-diggers," will be quite as good as Mr. Henry Russell's "Cheer, boys, cheer!" There is a line in the poetry, too, which demands reconsideration. Mr. Y. says:—

"Dig! dig! dig!
As through the world we roam."

That is impossible. To "dig," properly speaking, you must not "roam," but stay at the "diggings."

The "Look of Love" is a tolerably nice ballad, and Mrs. Rose Dalton's words are appropriately "sentimental." But we cannot make out, by any exertion of ingenuity, what the composer intends by the harmony that occurs in the last two bars of line 1, page 3. The melody, in the first bar, is F sharp, E, A, B—quavers; and the accompaniment has C, in the bass, supporting E, G, B. In the second bar, the melody is C, dotted crotchet, G, quaver; while the accompaniment has A, crotchet, C, quaver, in the bass, alternately supporting E, G, B! As the same thing occurs in the second verse, it would seem to have been intentional.

---

"The Wooing Season"—Ballad. F. de Yrigotti. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

A lively ballad enough. Here again, however, Mr. Yrigotti must be warned against incorrect harmony. At page 2, line 1, bar 1, the dominant chord, on the tonic pedal, is unceremoniously quitted, the tonic D, descending to A, while the dominant chord is preserved. In page 5, line 1, bar 4, too, we find a harmony which is in no key at all. The chord of G, in the preceding bar, is followed by A, in the bass, supporting E and B, the melody descending from B, by B flat, to A, leaving the chord of A without its third—an ingenious expedient to get rid of consecutive fifths, by substituting something worse.

---

"Fairy Land." Sung by Miss P. Horton. Words and Music by Mrs. Maberly. Addison and Hollier.

The accomplished authoress of the above song has conferred a boon upon young ladies gifted with contralto voices. To a pleasing melody, it joins the merit of being wedded to words above the average of the modern ballad school. We can recommend "Fairy Land" as an admirable drawing-room song.

---

"The Lord's Prayer." Composed by James Metherell, Robert Clarke.

A smooth piece of harmony for four voices—treble, alto, tenor and bass—sufficiently devotional in character, divided between the keys of F and its dominant, and containing no point striking enough to demand particular notice.

---

Herr Jacques Rosenhain, a Hamburghian pianist well known in the musical salons of Paris, gave a morning concert at the Hanover Rooms on Thursday, it being his first appearance in London for a lengthened period. Herr Rosenhain displayed his talents both as a composer and instrumentalist. As a pianist he is neat and precise, energetic and correct, and plays great difficulties without any apparent effort. His compositions are graceful and elegant, and betray facility and readiness of invention. We can bestow equal praise upon his more ambitious efforts, if we may judge from his third trio, in F minor (MS.), Op. 50, which we heard on Thursday. This trio is the work of an admirable and intelligent musician, and shows an intimate acquaintance with the classical forms bequeathed by the great writers. It was heard with very great interest. Three little pieces, "Morceaux de Salon," "Danse des Sylphes," and "Lutte Intérieure"—are charming specimens of M. Rosenhain's lightest manner—the last especially, which is sparkling and elegant. No less pleasing is the "Mazurka," played by Herr Rosenhain at the close of the concert. Two vocal compositions by Herr Rosenhain were given, which afforded much pleasure. The first, mélodie, "Adieu à la mer" (MS.); the other a romance, "Ombre du Mystère." They are both melodious and well written for the voice. The Mélodie was well given by Mad. Pochkoltz-Falconi, and the romance sung to perfection by Herr Reichardt. B sides what we have named above, there were three other pianoforte solos, two German songs, (sung by Mad. Nissen-Saloman); a duo for pianoforte and violoncello, and a Mélodie, "Je veux oublier," all the compositions of Herr Rosenhain, and all promising more or less merit. The violoncello duet is a work of remarkable interest, and was very finely executed by the composer and M. Jacquard, one of the most accomplished violoncellists on the Continent, who has been heard several times in London this season, to the real gratification of connoisseurs. The rooms were crowded to the walls.

Digitized by Google

SUPPRESSION OF THE THEATRES.

In 1642, there appeared an ordinance of the Long Parliament, commanding the cessation of plays, on the plea that "public sports do not well agree with public calamities." The actors for a time obeyed this injunction, though their means of support were thereby destroyed; but gradually theatres again began to open, when the Long Parliament issued its second mandate. This was dated September 2, 1647, and stated that "the distressed estate of Ireland, steeped in her own blood, and the distressed estate of England, threatened with a cloud of blood by a civil war, call for all possible means to appease and avert the wrath of God." This decree not having the desired effect, a far more stringent one was issued on the 11th of February, 1648, commanding the immediate and total suppression of the theatres under great penalties. Those who presumed to follow their profession were considered as rogues and vagabonds; and, being convicted, were to be publicly whipped; every spectator was to forfeit 5s. to the poor; and, lastly, the lord mayor and magistrates were authorised to pull down and destroy all boxes, galleries, seats, etc., used for stage exhibitions. These orders were strictly enforced; the theatres were demolished, the actors dispersed.

Charles the First passed from an apartment in Whitehall to the scaffold; but the "poor player," though ruined in his avocation, was true to his sovereign, and this loyalty furnishes a bright page in the actor's history. On the 14th of September, 1655, the performers at the Red Bull, and at Southwark Fair, enlisted themselves into the army in the cause of royalty. Most of the players (except Lowin, Taylor, and Pollard, who were superannuated) likewise took part with their sovereign. Mohun became a captain, and whilst serving in Flanders received the pay of a major; Hart was a lieutenant in Prince Rupert's Regiment; Burt was a cornet in the same troop, and Shatterel a quartermaster. Allen, of the Cockpit, became a major and quartermaster-general at Oxford; whilst Swanston, of the Blackfriars, was the only player of note who sided with the opposing party.

Music appears to have had its troubles in these perilous times as well as the drama. In the "Actor's Remonstrance," published in 1643, the following complaint is made, in reference to the closing of the theatres, and the little patronage given to the musician:—"Our music, that was held so delicate and precious that they scorned to come to a tavern under twenty shillings for two hours' salary, now wander with their instruments under their cloak—I mean such as have any—into all houses of good fellowship, saluting any room where there is company with—'Will you have any music, gentlemen?'"

Before the promulgation of the severe ordinances referred to, the performances of the stage had been frequently interrupted, even from the commencement of hostilities between the king and his parliament. When the fate of their royal master was sealed, the surviving dependents on the drama were obliged to return to the exercise of their profession. In the winter of 1648, they ventured to act a few plays at the Cockpit, but were interrupted and silenced by some soldiers, who conveyed them to prison. After a few similar attempts in their own proper quarter, no public exhibitions are recorded for some time. Performances, however, were occasionally given at the houses of the nobility in the country, and likewise in the vicinity of London. One of the places of shelter for the prostrate drama was Holland House. The fury of religious zeal threatened the complete extinction of the art; but its entire overthrow was happily prevented. In 1656, Sir William Davenant, to whom the stage is considerably indebted, gave "entertainments of declamation and music, after the manner of the ancients," at Rutland House, Charterhouse-square. Two years later, he opened the Cockpit, where he performed without molestation. Charles the Second ultimately returned from exile, patents were granted, and the Restoration saw a new era opening for the drama.

---

Mrs. Robert Cartwright gave a matinée musicale at her residence, No. 16, Craven Hill, on Saturday last. The programme contained several vocal and choral compositions of Mrs. Cartwright, and, in addition to some standard works of acknowledged worth, included a most welcome novelty to this country, namely, Beethoven's "Elegischer Gesang," which was sung for the first time in England by a chorus of distinguished amateurs. Besides the amateurs, Mesdames Rudersdorff and Anichini, Miss Messent, Messrs. Montem Smith, Blumenthal, Brinley Richards, and Aguilar, assisted. Mr. Aguilar was the conductor, and deserves especial commendation for the manner in which he directed the choruses. The saloons were filled by a fashionable and aristocratic company.

REMINISCENCE OF WEBER.

It was in 1828 when Weber arrived in London to superintend the bringing out of his Oberon, which great opera he had written for Covent Garden Theatre. All London was on the tiptoe of expectation, for his fame had preceded him, Der Freischütz having been brought out previously at the English Opera House with immense success, in spite of the translation and curtailment. The overture was encored every night, and the boys in the street whistled the "Huntsman's Chorus." In due time the great composer arrived and the rehearsals commenced. A season or two previous, the musical world of London had been wrought up to the most intense excitement by the announcement that Beethoven would be present at the performance of his ninth symphony, which he had written for the Philharmonic Society; but this did not take place; his extreme deafness and increasing infirmities precluded the possibility. Weber was under the average height and rather slender, with a gait somewhat resembling that of a sailor ashore. His face was a most faithful image of the soul—truly classical. The nose, rather large and slightly aquiline, supported a ponderous pair of spectacles. On being introduced to the orchestra which was to interpret his music, he was received with a general rapping of fiddle bows and waving of hats—an enthusiasm, alas! which was soon to experience a damper. The rehearsals at first were conducted in the Saloon, and it was a week or more before any thing could be made to go to his mind: for though the orchestra was very respectable, yet they probably had never dreamt of what was required of them, under the conduct of so fiery a spirit. He would snatch the violoncello from one and show him how he wanted a passage played. Then again he would do the same by the clarionet and horn, for on all those instruments he was a fine performer. But the luckless wight who personated Oberon was an object of general commiseration. On him the composer vented a double portion of his indignation. He would stop him here and stop him there, till the poor fellow almost trembled to sing before him. Vocalists or instrumentalists he would check unceasingly, and make them repeat a passage till it was done to his mind. Woe to the individual who should presume to alter a single note in the score, or add the smallest note that was not there, which some at first would do by way of embellishment. In short, the whole company began to feel pretty much as a flock of pigeons suddenly beholding a hawk in the midst of them. But on the other hand, he was delighted with the performance of Braham and Miss Paton (Mrs. Wood). They alone appeared to enter into his spirit, and rendered his music entirely to his mind. He clapped his hands when Braham sang the scena. As the day of performance approached, both orchestra and chorus appeared to realize something of what was required of them, and the little man would sometimes condescend to smile. And such a smile! It put one in mind of what Dr. Burney says of Handel, "When he did smile, it was like the sun bursting from behind a cloud." At length the last day arrived, and the overture had to be rehearsed. He stood on the stage, with the score before him, directing the orchestra. How many times he stopped them in the first movement little matters; but it was easy to see that a storm was brewing—on the heads of the poor flutists the electric fluid descended, and must have scorched though it did'nt kill. At last he could contain himself no longer. Seizing his score, he dashed it on the stage, exclaiming in broken English, 'I vill go mine own way,' and made for the street. But he had a tough customer to deal with in Fawcett, the stage-manager, a crabbed old disciplinarian, who was watching the proceedings. He made after the excited composer and endeavoured to stop his singular exit. Charles Kemble joined his entreaties, and the two induced him to return and finish the rehearsal. At the performance of the opera he sat in the orchestra and conducted for several consecutive evenings. At his appearance the applause was tumultuous—the whole house rising: a reception which must have amply compensated him for the weary toils of composition, and the vexations of rehearsing. He received £300 for the opera. Poor fellow! it was his last receipt and his last composition of any importance. He was not in good health when he left Germany, and the London fogs finished him. Mozart's Requiem was performed at his funeral, a befitting tribute to departed genius. That great work should never be performed at the funeral of any but a great artist. No others are worthy. No king or mere politician—no one whose chief merit consists in dying rich, is worthy of such honour.

---

Mr. John Thomas's Morning Concert came off on Tuesday last, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The programme was entirely made up of popular music, the piece approaching to the classic being Bordèse's scena, "David chantant devant Satil." The chief interest, of course, was centred in Mr. Thomas's harp performances, and these consisted of Parish Alvars' Grand Fantasia on airs from I Montecchi; duet for two harps—"Souvenir du Nord," by Mr. John Thomas, with Mr. J. Balsir Chatterton (his "professor"); Autumn and Spring, two characteristic pieces, by Mr. Thomas; and Parish Alvars' Grand Studio for the harp—"Imitazione del Mandolino." Both the pieces by Parish Alvars were splendidly performed and loudly applauded. The "Autumn" and "Spring" pieces were also brilliantly executed, and received with great favour. M. Prudent executed, on the pianoforte, his own very popular and elegant fantasia on La Sonnambula, and created a great sensation. M. Sainton played, in his finest manner, a solo of his own composition. Sig. Gardoni sang Blumenthal's romance, "Le Chemin du Paradis," and Mrs. Arthur Stone, Madame Bochkoltz-Falconi, Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Signor Nappi, Mr. Herberte, Mr. Allan Irving, and M. Jules Lefort contributed a variety of songs. Mr. Charles Salaman and Mr. Cipriani Potter were the conductors.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

MONDAY.—Madame Oury, Matinée Musicale, Granard Lodge, Roehampton, Three o'clock.——Sadler's Wells Theatre, Grand Concert. Half-past Seven.——Madame Dreyfus, Grand Concert, Hanover-square Rooms, Three o'clock.

THURSDAY.—Mrs. W. Hale and Mr. C. Cotton, Soirée Musicale, Philharmonic Rooms, Newman-street.

FRIDAY.—Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, Grand Morning Concert.

SATURDAY.—Orchestral Union, Fourth and last Concert, Hanover-square Rooms, Three o'clock.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC.—The FOURTH CONCERT for the EXHIBITION of the STUDENTS will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Saturday Morning next, July 8th, to commence at Two o'clock. Single tickets, 5s.; Family tickets (to admit Four), 16s.; to be had at the principal Music-sellers, and at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.—Conductor, Mr. ALFRED MELLON. The LAST CONCERT will take place on Saturday, July 15, at the Hanover-square Rooms, commencing at Three o'clock. Mendelssohn's Symphony in A Major; Pianoforte Concerto, Beethoven; Overtures by W. S. Bennett and A. Mellon; Fantasias for Oboe and Clarinet. Vocalists—Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, and Mr. Benson. Solo Instrumentalists—Mr. Alfred Nicholson, Mr. Maycock, and Herr Pauer. Tickets, 5s. each; to be had at the Music-sellers.

MADLLE. VERNETTI PARAVALLI, from the Theatres of Milan, Venise, and Turin, has the honour to announce that her First Annual Grand Concert will take place on Wednesday, July 19th, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the most distinguished patronage, and assisted by eminent artists; amongst whom, Madlle. Annie de Lara. Reserved seats, 10s.; Tickets, 7s.; Orchestra, 5s. Further particulars will be duly announced. To be had at R. W. Ollivier's, 19, Old Bond-street; Cramer, Beale and Co's., Regent-street; Leader and Cocks', New Bond-street; and at Madlle. Paravalli's, 6, York-street, Portman-square.

MADAME OURY has the honour to announce to her Friends and Patrons, that her ANNUAL MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at the residence of Lady Vassail Webster, Granard-lodge, Roehampton, on Monday, July 10, at Three o'clock, for which the following eminent artistes are engaged:—Madame Marie Cabel, Herr Reichardt, M. Lefort, Signor Ciabatta, Mr. Allan Irving, and M. Jacquart. The celebrated German Band, from Brighton, will perform their most favourite pieces under the direction of Mr. Oury, from Five until Seven, in the grounds. Tickets, One Guinea each, to be had of Messrs. Cramer and Beale, 201, Regent-street; and at Madame Oury's residence, 36, Great Marlborough-street.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—In answer to many inquiries, Subscribers are respectfully informed that the Concerts for the Fourth Season will commence in March next. 201, Regent-street.

THE ENGLISH GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—Mrs. Enderssohn, Mrs. Lockey (late Miss M. Williams), Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. H. Phillips. All communications relative to engagements in town or country, to be made to the Secretary, R. Carte, 100, New Bond-street.

MADAME NISSEN'S SOIRÉE MUSICALE will take place on Wednesday Evening, July 12, at the Educational Institute, Cadogan-gardens, Sloane-street. To commence at Eight o'clock. Reserved seats, 15s. each; Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; to be had of the principal music-sellers, and of Madame Nissen, 48, Duke-street, St. James's.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall. Principal Soloists, Messrs. Barret, Richardson, Lazarus, Baumann, Lovell Phillips, Rowland, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, Godfrey, Hardy, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, and Zeiss; added to which are Messrs. Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged to perform at Concerts during the London Season. For terms, address to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

DUTY OFF TEA.—On and after the 6th of April, all our prices will be again reduced 4d. per pound, as the following list will show:—Strong Black Tea, 2s. 8d., 2s 10d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 2d., 3s. 4d., and 3s. 8d. Best Assam Pekoe Souchong Tea, of extraordinary quality and strength, 4s. 0d.; Former Price, 4s. 4d. Strong Green Tea, 2s. 8d., 3s. 0d., 3s. 4d., 3s. 8d., 4s. 0d., 4s. 4d., 4s. 8d., and 5s. 0d.; Good Coffee, 11d., 11½d., and 1s. Prime Coffee, 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d., 1s. 3d. Rich Mocha Coffee, 1s. 4d. Rare Choice Old Mocha, (20 years old) 1s. 6d. Teas, Coffees, and Spices sent carriage free to any Railway Station or Market Town in England, if to the value of 40s. and upwards. PHILLIPS and COMPANY, Tea and Colonial Merchants, 8, King William-street, City, London. A general Price-Current, sent post free, on application. Sugars are supplied at market prices.

THE Successful Results of the last half century have proved beyond question that ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the Human Hair, and is now universally acknowledged to be superior to all other preparations for the Hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey—strengthens weak hair—cleanses it from Scurf and Dandriff—and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of the Beard, Whiskers, Eyebrows, and Mustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For Children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. In dressing the hair nothing can equal its effect, rendering it so admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, and imparting a transcendent lustre. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. —Caution!—On the wrapper of each Bottle are the words, "Rowland's Macassar Oil," in two lines.—Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

MILITARY BANDS—REED AND BRASS.

C. BOOSE'S MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS, in submitting to the Army and the Musical Public a few of the latest improvements in the above CELEBRATED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, beg to return their sincere thanks for the patronage so liberally bestowed on their establishment; and to assure those who have not hitherto honoured them with their commands, that their undeviating principle of business is to manufacture instruments of the very best description only. By this means, Boosey and Sons trust to ensure the permanent patronage of their friends. A fair and moderate price is fixed on every Instrument. CLARIONETS.—Either of Cocoa-wood or Grenadille, with 13 German Silver Keys; of Box-wood, with 13 Brass ditto; or of German Silver, with 13 Keys of the same metal. The whole of these comprise every new improvement. FLUTES AND PICCOLOS.—In the usual keys, for Amateurs or Military purposes, either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with German Silver or Brass Keys, and every new improvement. FIFES (Boosé's Improved).—Either of Cocoa or Box-wood, with 4 German Silver or Brass Keys. BASSOONS.—The new French Model, of Maple-wood, with 16 Brass, or German Silver Keys. BOOSÉ'S UNRIVALLED CORNET-A-PISTONS.—The great success that has attended the introduction of Boosé's new patent Cornet, and the many flattering testimonials the beauty of the model and the exceeding richness of its tone have called forth, have induced the manufacturers to extend the improvements still further, and they have now the pleasure of announcing, that they have succeeded in adjusting to the same model, the Rotary Cylinder Action. By means of this beautiful and light action, the most rapid passages can be executed with marvellous quickness and dexterity. Price, with Valves, 7 Guineas, with the new Rotary Cylinder Action, 9 Guineas. Either instrument strongly Electro-plated (equal to Silver), 2 Guineas extra. CORNETTO SOPRANO, in D or E flat (for Brass Band); VALVE TRUMPETS, Althorns (Barytone), with Three Valves in B Flat, E Flat, or F. EUPHONIONS (Bass), in B Flat or C, with Four Valves. BOMBARDONS (Bass) in E Flat, or F, with Four Valves. All these Instruments can be had either with Valves or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Althorns are made on two models—either with Bell up or forward. The Euphonion is a new Valve Instrument, infinitely superior to, and rapidly superseding the Ophicleide. FRENCH HORNS either with Three Valves, or on an entirely new model, with the Rotary Cylinder Action. These Horns, Boosey & Sons can with confidence recommend as superior to any yet supplied to the Profession. Better cannot be made.—TROMBONES, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. In the usual Keys, either with Slides, Valves, or the new Rotary Cylinder Action. The Valve Trombone may be had either with the Bell up or forward.—THE NEW ROTARY CYLINDER ACTION. With this action, which is exceedingly light, the most rapid passage may be executed with marvellous dexterity and quickness. It is, further, more simple and much stronger than any patent actions that have hitherto been made.—VALVE, OR FIELD BUGLE, in B flat or C. By a simple contrivance, the valves of this instrument may be detached at pleasure, and placed in a small leather case, and the instrument remains an ordinary Field Bugle.—OPHICLEIDES, in B flat or C, with 10 or 11 Keys. Cavalry Trumpets, Turkish Crescents, Triangles, Military Tambourines, Drum Heads, Reeds, Music Stands, Music Paper, and every requisite for a Reed, Brass, or String Band.—DRUMS (BASS), Boosé's Improved, of Brass. The advantages in these over Wooden Drums, are, an infinitely superior tone and great durability, without any increase in weight. Boosey & Sons have received the most flattering testimonials from the many Regiments they have supplied with these Drums, both at home and abroad. Tenor and Side Drums, also of Brass.—BASS DRUM STICKS. Boosey & Sons have succeeded in manufacturing a Drum Stick of an entirely New Material, which requires no covering, and will last for TEN OR TWENTY YEARS, and thus a remedy is provided for the constant expense of recovering Drum Sticks. The Regimental Facings, and other colours, being tastefully introduced, render this Drum Stick an exceedingly handsome appendage to the Drum.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street, Musical Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to the Army.

NEW GALOP.—A magnificent Portrait of Sir Charles NAPIER, embellishes the title page of "The Baltic Galop," by Albert Wagner, price 2s. 6d. Published by Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

THE NUN'S PRAYER.—This very popular Melody, composed by Oberthür, is now published as a Song. Price 2s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

HERR ROSENHAIN.—The three favourite pieces played by this Composer, at his Concert, on Thursday, are—Ballade and Calabraise, 2s. each; and "Lutte Intérieure," 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MESSRS. BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce that they have just published a complete edition of Donizetti's Opera, "La Fille du Regiment," for the Pianoforte Solo, forming No. 6 of their Edition of Foreign Operas for Piano Solo. 28, Holles-street.

SIGNOR GORDIGIANI'S NEW SONGS.—The favourite Romances are—Il Nome di mia Madre, 1s. 6d.; O, Giovinetta, 2s.; Vorrei morir (sung by Mario), 2s.; La Giambella, 1s. 6d.; O miel pensier, 1s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.—The solo pieces played by this distinguished pianiste, at her Concert on Wednesday evening, were Mayer's étude 61, "La Fontaine," price 3s.; Chopin's Nocturne in F minor, 3s. 6d.; and Kullak's fantaisie étude, "Perles d'Ecume," 4s; in which she was honoured by a double encore and recall. London: Copyrights, published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

DRAWING ROOM PIANOFORTE MUSIC by celebrated composers. The Alert, by Osborne, 3s.; Fantaisie on Rigoletto, by Kuhe, 4s.; La Danse des Fées, by Nordmann, 4s.; Feu Follet, by Kuhe, 2s. 6d.; Border Strains, by Holmes, 2s. 6d.: Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

GOLLMICK'S CHANSON à BOIRE.—Every player should possess this graceful and beautiful composition, the most popular of all Mr. Gollmick's late publications. Price 3s. Also, a second edition of the Europa Galop, 3s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW MUSIC for CONCERTINA.—BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for CONCERTINA and PIANO, arranged by G. Regondi. Now ready, Verdi's Rigoletto, in Three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, Three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, Three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, Six Nos., 3s. each. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

NEW MUSIC for CORNOPEAN.—BOOSEY'S REPERTOIRE for CORNET and PIANO, arranged by STANTON JONES, &c. Now ready:—Rigoletto, in three Nos., 3s. each; Ernani, three Nos., 3s. each; Linda, three Nos., 3s. each; Sonnambula, six Nos., 3s. each, &c. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

FIRST CLASS PIANOFORTE MUSIC BY FIRST CLASS COMPOSERS.—Madame Oury's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Gollmick's Farewell, 4s. Charles Voss's Fantaisies on Sonnambula, Linda, and Rigoletto, 4s. each. Prudent's Le Lac, 4s. Kuhe's Fantaisie on Rigoletto, 4s. Benedict's Quartet in Rigoletto, 4s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

LISZT'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS FOR THE PIANO.—Grande Paraphase de Concert (on "God Save the Queen.") 3s. Valse Impromptu, 3s. The same, easy edition, 1s. 6d. Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford-street.

THE BULGARIAN POLKA, by MONTAGNE, just published, illustrated with one of Mr. Brandard's happiest figure sketches in colours, price 2s. 6d. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street, and all music-sellers.

Digitized by Google

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Oratorios and Concerts in the Provinces during October and November next:—

Madame NOVELLO,
Mrs. LOCKEY,
Mrs. ENDERSSOHN,
Mr. LOCKEY,
Mr. HOBBS,
Mr. H. PHILLIPS,
AND
Mr. SIMS REEVES.

PIANISTE,
Mr. J. L. HATTON.

CONDUCTOR,
Mr. LAND.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Operas and Concerts in the Provinces during August and September next:—

Mdlle. CRUVELLI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Mdlle. MARAI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Madame COTTI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor LUCHESI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor TAGLIAFICO,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor SUSINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor POLONINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND
Signor TAMBERLIK,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)

REGISSEUR,
Mr. A. HARRIS,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND CONDUCTOR,
M. JULES BENEDICT.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS FOR AMATEURS.—Mozart's Quintet (the Rondo only) arranged by McMurdie, price 4s. Gollmick's Duet from Belisario, a very brilliant piece, 5s. Gollmick's Minerva, Valse de Concert, 4s. Alvars' Greek Pirates' Chorus, 4s. Nordmann's La Donna e Mobile (Rigoletto) 4s. The above is a very choice selection. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BEETHOVEN'S WORKS, Edited by Mr. CIPRIANI POTTER.—The celebrated "Andante in F," and "Rondo in G," each 3s. London: R. Mills, 140, New Bond-street.

LAURENT'S VILIKINS WALTZ, Leonora Waltz, La Belle Française Waltz (all illustrated), price 3s. each. Laurent's Partant pour la Syrie Quadrille, 3s. These dances are played at Buckingham Palace, and at every public and private ball. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE STARS of the WEST WALTZES, by MONTAGNE, just published, with a magnificent Illustration in colours, by J. Brandard, of two English and French Beauties. This Waltz, founded on national melodies, is the most attractive set that has been produced for many years. Price 4s. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

EWER & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Mulder, Richard— | | |
| Rêverie sans l'ombrage ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| La Bal. Valse de Salon ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Les Gondoles. Tarentelle ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Les Vendanges. Mazurka ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Fête sur la terrasse. Marche brillante ... | 2 | 0 |
| Promenade du matin. Pastorale ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Wagner, Richard— | | |
| March from Tannhäuser ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Terschak, Adolf. Nocturne ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Taeil, Alfred. La danse des fées ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Krüger, W. La Harpe Eolienne ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Egghard, Jules, Chanson érotique ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Evers, Charles. La Coquette ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Langen, Mathilde— | | |
| Royal Prussian Galop, (as performed at Her Majesty' State Ball by Mr. Weippert's band) | 1 | 6 |
| For the Tenor— | | |
| Vieuxtemps H. Elegy, with Piano accompaniment ... | 4 | 0 |
| ——— the same, arranged by the composer for Violin or Violoncello (performed by Herr Romberg at his Concert) ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

London, Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford Street.

Will be ready shortly.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM. A sacred Cantata, composed by Charles Steggall, Mus. D., Professor at the Royal Academy of Music. Vocal score with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Price to subscribers, 10s. 6d. Ewer & Co., 390, Oxford Street.

COMPOSITIONS by JACQUES ROSENHAIN, PUBLISHED IN ENGLAND.

Op. 2. First Grand Trio for Piano, Violin, and Violoncello
Op. 4. Six German Songs with English versions
Souvenir Romance
Andante Religioso
Trois Petits Duos à 4 mains, très facile
Andante for the Violoncello
Deux Rondeaux Élégants
Twelve Songs without words, for the Pianoforte
Op. 10. Concertino for the Pianoforte
Op. 13. Grand Duo for two Pianofortes, or Piano and Harp
Op. 15. Morceau de Salon
Op. 17. Douze Études caractéristiques for the Piano, (adapté par Cherubini pour le Conservatoire de Paris, et par M. Fétis pour celui de Bruxelles)
Op. 18. Variations sur la Norma
Op. 28. Nocturne et Valse brillantes
Six Esquisses sur des Thêmes Italiens
Divertissement sur la Parisina
"L'Aube naît et ta porte est close"
Romance pour une voix
Idem, avec des paroles Italiennes
Serenade pour une voix
Polka de Concert
Op. 31. Romances sans paroles for the Piano
Op. 38. Duo for Pianoforte and Violoncello (or Violin)
Polka de Concert for the Piano
Op. 39. Andante et Rondo
Cora et Trène
Nocturne
Op. 40. Six German Songs, with English version
Op. 45. Ballade et Calabraise
Op. 47. Deux morceaux de Salon pour Piano et Violon (ou Violoncello)
Op. 52. Trois Mazourkas pour le Pianoforte

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 28. SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

DEATH OF MADAME SONTAG.

Long before these lines can be printed, the melancholy fate of Henriette Sontag, Countess of Rossi, and one of the most celebrated vocalists of modern times, will have been known to our readers. Mad. Sontag expired at the city of Mexico, on the 17th of June, and was carried off after six days' illness by an attack of cholera. A most amiable lady, an affectionate friend, a devoted wife, the admired and honoured of all who knew her, among whom were numbered princes and nobles, her untimely loss cannot fail to be universally deplored. In London, the death of Mad. Sontag has created everywhere the deepest regret. It was in London, many years ago, she first made her reputation, and in London, more than twenty years later, that she returned to the stage to renew all the glories of her former triumphs. Indeed, since the death of Mendelssohn, we know of no bereavement which has produced so powerful a sensation in musical and other circles.

It will not be out of place on the present occasion, to say a few words about the career and talents of so great a favourite and so eminent an artist. Mademoiselle Sontag appeared, for the first time in this country, at Her Majesty's Theatre, on the night of the 19th of April, 1828, as Rosina in Rossini's Il Barbiere di Seviglia, and at once established herself as one of the most accomplished vocalists of the day. In her execution of Rode's air and variations particularly, she fairly took the audience by storm, few of whom had ever before heard so much ease, grace, and facility united. The pure and delicious quality of Mademoiselle Sontag's voice, however, was that in which lay the chief and abiding charm of the singer; and, if the public were delighted and astonished at the wonderful agility displayed in Rode's variations, and the consummate ease shown in the "Una voce," they were, perhaps, more enchanted with the faultless intonation, exquisite delicacy, truthful expression, and almost artless method exhibited shortly afterwards in Mozart's "Dove sono," or a simple German lied. The sensation Henriette Sontag created, in 1828, in London was unprecedented, and she became the idol of the opera-house and the concert room, and was all the rage at the nobility's concerts in private. Towards the end of the season the star of Mademoiselle Sontag became somewhat dimmed in its lustre by being placed in close contiguity with a luminary of even greater radiance and magnitude—that of Malibran—and the admirers of the German cantatrice, not without cause, trembled for their idol. Malibran and Sontag, however, only appeared for a few nights together, and their talents were so entirely distinct and diametrically opposed, as to preclude direct comparison. As well at the present day endeavour to compare Madame Bosio with Madame Grisi. Still both singers had their enthusiastic partizans, who upheld their favourite at the expense of her rival; and a war of opposition, no doubt, would have been carried on had the two singers been brought together another year. Fate, however, willed otherwise. At the end of the season 1828, Mademoiselle Sontag left England, and did not return until 1849. She married Count Rossi in 1829, and retired from public life. Misfortunes of a pecuniary nature having plunged her husband into pressing difficulties a few years since, the Countess Rossi was determined to make use of her talents for the benefit of her family; and accordingly she opened a treaty with Mr. Lumley, which terminated in an engagement; and, after an absence of twenty-one years, Madame Sontag made her rentrée at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Saturday evening, July the 7th, 1849, as Linda, in Donizetti's Linda di Chamouni. Mademoiselle Sontag was unfortunate in having to appear directly after Mademoiselle Jenny Lind, whose blind worshippers could recognise no superior merit in any other singer. The talents and accomplishments of Mademoiselle Sontag, however, could not be concealed, nor kept down by any feeling of party or prejudice, and for two seasons the fair artist was in the highest esteem at Her Majesty's Theatre, and helped Mademoiselle Sophie Cruvelli to sustain the tottering fortunes of that house. She all but renewed the triumphs of 1828, and would, in every probability, have renewed them to the fullest extent, but for the pervading influence of the Swedish Nightingale, who seemed to have absorbed the ears, eyes, and hearts of all the opera habitués.

When the establishment of Her Majesty's Theatre broke up, Madame Sontag accepted an offer to go to America, whither she went in 1852, and continued to give performances up to a short time before her death. Coming immediately after Mademoiselle Jenny Lind, and having Mademoiselle Alboni directly to oppose her, she, nevertheless, made triumphant way wherever she went, and became one of the greatest favourites that ever visited the New World. Of her career throughout the United States, and the southern settlements of America, the Musical World of the two last years furnishes abundant information.

---

Henriette Sontag was born at Coblentz, in Prussia, of one of those families of comedians of which Göthe has given a description in Wilhelm Meister. At the age of six she made her appearance at Darmstadt, in Das Donauwiebchen, an opera very popular in Germany, in the character of Salomé. Three years afterwards, having lost her father, Henriette went to Prague with her mother, where she played children's parts, under the direction of Weber, who was then director of the orchestra of the theatre. Her precocious success obtained her permission to enter the Academy of Music of that city, although she had not yet reached the age required by its rules. There for four years she studied vocal music, the pianoforte, and the elements of singing. An indisposition of the prima donna gave her the opportunity to appear for the first time in a part of some importance—that of the Princess of Navarre, in Boieldieu's opera, John of Paris. She was then fifteen. The flexibility of her voice, her beauty, the agitation which stirred her heart and filled it with mysterious presentiments, secured for her a success which augured well for the future. From Prague, Henriette

Digitized by Google

Sontag went to Vienna, where she met Madame Mainville-Fodor, whose example and good counsels developed the rich gifts which she had received from nature.

Singing, alternately, German and Italian opera, she was able to prove her powers in both, and to choose with deliberation between the caprices of Italian music and the sober accents of the new German school. An engagement having been offered her, to sing in German opera at the theatre of Leipzic, she went to that city, the centre of philosophical and literary discussion, and acquired a great reputation in Weber's Der Freyschütz and Euryanthe. It was vouchsafed to Madlle. Sontag to dedicate a magnificent organ, and a vocalisation almost unknown on that side of the Rhine, to the performance of the vigorous and profound music of Weber, Beethoven, Spohr, and those new German composers who, severing alliance with foreign scepticism, had given freedom to the national genius. Overwhelmed with homage, celebrated by all the brilliant men of the day, the students singing her praises, and followed by the hourras of the German press, Madlle. Sontag was called to Berlin, where she appeared with immense success at the Königstadt Theatre. At Berlin, Der Freyschütz was represented for the first time. At Berlin, a Protestant and rationalistic city, the centre of an intellectual and political movement which sought to concentrate within itself the life of Germany, at the expense of Catholic Vienna, where reigned the spirit of tradition and sensuality, the gaiety and the light melodies of Italy—at Berlin the school of dramatic music, founded by Weber, had found its standing point. Madlle. Sontag was received with enthusiasm as an inspired interpetress of the national music.

Availing herself of leave of absence, Mdlle. Sontag went finally to Paris, and appeared at the Italian Theatre on the 15th of June, 1826, in the part of Rosina, in Il Barbiere di Seviglia. Her success was brilliant, especially in Rode's variations, which she introduced in the singing lesson. This success was confirmed in La Donna del Lago and L'Italiana in Algieri, many parts of which, written for a contralto voice, she was obliged to transpose. Upon her return to Berlin, she was received with redoubled manifestations of interest. She remained in this city until the close of the year 1826; when, abandoning Germany, and the school which it had founded, in the very sanctuary of its nationality, she herself fixed at Paris. Madlle. Sontag first appeared in the character of Desdemona, in Otello, on the 2nd of January, 1828. She was one of that constellation of virtuosi who at that epoch charmed Paris and London; and among whom Pasta, Pisaroni, Malibran, and herself shone as stars of the first magnitude.

The fortunate object of Mdlle. Sontag's choice was a member of the diplomatic body then accredited at the court of the Tuileries. Count de Rossi, although a very young man, was already, at that critical period of polical affairs, Conseiller d'Ambassade of the Sardinian mission. He had the looks, manners, tastes, and gifts of conversation that distinguish the travelled man and the real homme de qualité, and which no adversity can diminish. Fearing the prejudices of his noble relatives, and of his royal master, it was determined to conceal the wedding for the time being. It was consequently solemnized in secret, with only two or three intimate friends as witnesses.

If at Paris Madlle Sontag was admired by the public at large for her talent and her beauty, her gentle and amiable character, and her generosity in private life, gained her the esteem of all circles. One trait amongst many may be cited.

Her parents were, as we have stated, artists, with very limited means. This she never forgot; and her short experience of adversity in her earliest years was sufficient to awaken every sentiment of charity. She was known by all the exiled Germans whom adversity had driven from their native land to seek charity and sympathy in France.

In 1835 the Sardinian Cabinet, to reward Count Rossi for his services, appointed him Envoy and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Confederation of the Rhine, at Frankfort. The only event which signalised Madlle. Sontag's residence at Frankfort was an act of charity. The overflowing of the Danube had produced desolation at Pesth and Buda, and appeals had been made to all parts of Germany, and particularly to the rich town of Frankfort, the commercial as well as the political capital of the German Confederation. Madame de Rossi, amongst other distinguished persons, was applied to. She at once responded to the call, and assembling all the amateur musicians and singers, so numerous in every German capital, she gave an oratorio with their assistance, at which she, of course, herself sung, in the cathedral at Frankfort. The receipts of this concert were beyond all expectation. Prince Metternich addressed an autograph letter to the Countess, thanking her for this act of charity to the subjects of the Austrian Emperor.

Though she had no taste for the publicity of the stage, having gone unscathed through all its temptations, the Countess Rossi had an innate enthusiasm for her art, and cultivated it as assiduously as when she was the young prima donna. In Frankfort and Berlin, and St. Petersburg, her house was the resort of all that was renowned in the artistic world. Her charming voice now resounded in the halls of palaces; and instead of a public, she had kings and princes for her guests. Yet she was the same simple-minded and unaffected woman, with a mind pure as in infancy, and a heart beating only with good and tender emotions. She repeatedly sang for public charities, and her name was sure, as in former days, to benefit the institutions in whose behalf she came forward. But this bright destiny, which time seemed to have consolidated, during the revolution of 1848, from circumstances of a private nature, was completely changed.

With her temper unruffled, her calm mind undisturbed, the mother and the wife remembered the early days of the prima donna, and how her voice and talents had achieved fortune and honour. The instant her determination was whispered, all the theatres of Europe were open to her. She selected Her Majesty's Theatre, in London, and Mr. Lumley offered her 7,000*l.* for the season. This she accepted; and once more stepped on those boards where twenty years previously she had stood in all the freshness of youth. The house greeted her with shouts, with wavings of handkerchiefs, with tears—for she had many friends who remembered her hospitality in her high estate.

Tempted by the brilliant success which had attended the professional career of Jenny Lind and other artists, Madame Sontag made up her mind to visit the United States in the autumn of 1852, and arrived in New York on the 19th September. She commenced with a series of concerts at Metropolitan Hall, which proved successful, and stamped at once her popularity. From New York she went to Boston and Philadelphia, where she continued to give concerts, and establish her reputation with the American public. In New Orleans she entered into an engagement with M. Masson, director of the principal theatre in the city of Mexico, to play in opera, for a fixed period of two months, with the privilege on his part of continuing the arrangement for three months longer, at a salary of 7000 dollars a month. Before she started for Mexico, she despatched her agent, Mr. Ullman, to Europe, with instructions to secure all the available talent that could be procured for the formation of a new opera company, to meet her in New York on her return. That gentleman, we understand, was already far advanced in his arrangements, when the sad calamity which has deprived the artistical world of one of its brightest ornaments was made known.

It is stated that Madame Sontag was to appear at the theatre in Mexico on the 17th June, in the opera of Lucrezia Borgia, but the performance was postponed in consequence of a sudden attack of cholera, which terminated fatally on the 17th. It is unnecessary to say, that her demise caused a general and profound sensation of grief. At her interment, which took place in the church of San Fernando on the 19th, an immense concourse of persons was present, including all the Foreign Ministers, the members of the Philharmonic Society, and most of the artists resident in the city.

Nothing can more forcibly illustrate the uncertainty of human projects, than the melancholy fate of this accomplished artist. Her ambition was to reconstructsome of that fortune, the loss of which had plunged her from the rank to which her talents had raised her into the poverty whence she had sprung. There was no selfishness or unbecoming pride in this. Devoted to her husband and her children, it was for their sakes that she again applied herself to a life of toil and fatigue. Success had almost crowned her efforts, when death deprived her of the advantages of enjoying the fruits of her labours. From the period she set foot in America, until the close of her Mexican engagements, her profits, clear of all expenses, would have been nearly 100,000 dollars, and she had calculated that another season or two, with her new company, would have doubled this amount. Her agent in Europe had concluded engagements for her return, which in forty nights would have brought her 60,000 dollars more. A short time since she purchased a château and domain in Germany, with a part of the proceeds of her American tour. Alas! for the vanity of human hopes!

Digitized by Google

THE LIFE OF MOZART.

(*From the original of Alexander Oulibicheff.)
(Continued from page 435.)

CHAPTER XXI.

1791.

As soon as Mozart returned to Vienna, where, at last, a brilliant triumph, an official appointment, more cheering prospects, and—death awaited him, he put the finishing stroke to the most popular of all his chefs-d'œuvre; the overture to Die Zauberflöte, and the Priests' March, at the commencement of the second act, were composed, or, at least, written down, two days before the first representation, which took place on the 30th of September. Titus had been performed on the 6th of the same month.

From the 30th of September (the dates are here of the greatest importance), Mozart was therefore at liberty—since no demands were made upon his time by other works—to devote his entire energies to the composition of the Requiem which the Unknown had commanded. Spurred on by the fact of having received the stipulated price beforehand, and the desire "to try what he could do in this branch of the art as well," he worked day and night with unflagging zeal, and a degree of interest in the task of composition with which none of his former works had ever inspired him, and which the gradual progress of his complaint was unable to damp. The fainting fits to which he was constantly subject while engaged on the score of Die Zauberflöte, again attacked him, although he would not allow them to keep him from his task. His exertions increased in the same proportion as his weakness, the attacks becoming every day more frequent and more severe. His wife, uneasy at these symptoms, and at the unusual despondency of the patient, took every pains to enliven and amuse him. One fine autumn day, she drove out with him to the Prater, and Mozart then plainly told her the secret connected with the Requiem.

"I am writing it for myself," he said, weeping. "It will soon be all over with me: some one certainly has given me poison."

This remark fell like a heavy load upon the heart of his poor wife. She endeavoured to persuade him that such thoughts were merely the effect of his imagination. A medical man was called in, and ordered the patient to lay the fatal score aside. Mozart obeyed the injunction, but only became more melancholy, for he felt too well that this sacrifice would not save him. He was now obliged to keep his room, without being allowed even to work. While he was thus under the necessity of sitting in melancholy inactivity, the representations of Die Zauberflöte, some few of which he had himself directed, continued to excite a feeling of enthusiastic delight throughout the great city of Vienna. Every one wished to see the opera. Gold poured like rain into the treasury of the theatre, and people quarrelled with each other for tickets. The theatre resounded continually with exclamations of pleasure and applause, which were heard outside the building! Every echo in Germany appeared to be awakened by the genius of Die Zauberflöte. And how was the composer occupied, while his work was rendering so many rich and happy, and increasing the number of pleasant moments in everyone's life? He was looked for in the orchestra—but another held the conductor's bâton. He was sought in the theatre—but he was not there, though, it is true, his spirit still wandered in the battle-field which he had rendered celebrated by so many immortal triumphs. All this time, Mozart, alone, and with his eyes fixed upon the clock, followed the representation in his mind. "Now," he would say to himself, "the first act is finished.—Now the oath, 'Dir, Grosse Königin der Nacht,' is being sung,"—and then it would suddenly strike him, that, as far as he was concerned, all was over, and his eyes would turn with horror from the hands of the clock, which would suddenly appear to move round much more quickly than usual.

The few days that he was compelled to remain quiet, however, procured him some slight alleviation. On the 15th November, he felt so well as to be able to compose a short cantata: Das Lob der Freundschaft (The Praise of Friendship) for a freemasons' lodge. The excellent manner in which it was performed, and the favour with which it was received, seemed to animate him still more. He now requested most pressingly that the score of the Requiem should be returned to him. His wife, thinking he was out of danger, did not hesitate to comply with his demand, but scarcely had he again put his hand to this work of Death, when both his moral and physical sufferings recommenced with redoubled force, and all hope vanished. This time, the struggle was not destined to last long, and, five days after the Masonic festival, Mozart betook himself to his couch, whence he was never more to rise, but where he was continually employing himself with the sublime ceremonial which he resolved on for his obsequies.

While Mozart, with his limbs all swollen, and unable to move on account of a kind of paralytic lameness which affected his whole body, lay upon his death-bed, he received his appointment as Capellmeister to St. Stephen's Cathedral. This post was in the gift of the body of magistrates of Vienna, and, from a very early period, a large salary, besides several other considerable sources of income, was attached to it. Soon after this, the managers of the first theatres in Germany, whose eyes had been opened by the splendid receipts attending the representations of Die Zauberflöte, disputed with each other for the possession of the composer, whatever terms he chose to fix. At the same time, he received letters from Presburgh and Amsterdam, proposing that he should engage, for a handsome sum, to furnish certain compositions of various kinds periodically, in other words, musical miscellanies.

When Mozart was informed of all these unexpected pieces of good luck, which followed so closely upon each other, he exclaimed:—

"Just now, when I could live quietly, must I depart! Now must I leave my art, when, no longer a slave to fashion—no longer fettered by mere speculators—I could obey the impulses of my own fancy, and, free and independent, write what my heart dictated; I am snatched from my family—from my poor children—at the very moment I should have had it in my power to adopt better measures for their welfare! Did I not predict that I was writing this Requiem for myself?"

During the fourteen days that he suffered fearfully from

* This translation, which has been made expressly for the Musical World, is copyright.

Digitized by Google

the disease to which he succumbed, and which the physicians declared to be—or, at least, thought to be—imflammation of the brain, the wonderful good nature and gentleness of his disposition did not desert him for a single instant. He was perfectly resigned, although a gnawing pain was feeding on his vitals. He knew the day of his death some time beforehand. On the evening of the 5th December, as his sister-in-law, Sophie Weber, came to inquire how he was, Mozart replied :—

"I am glad you have come; you must remain with me to-night; you must see me die."

His sister-in-law endeavoured to reason him out of this idea, but he continued as follows :—

"No, no, it is in vain. I have already got the taste of death on my tongue; I scent death, and who will console my Constanze, if you do not remain?"

Sophie hastened to inform her mother of the state of affairs, and then hastened back. At the bedside of the dying man, she met Süssmayer.* The score of the Requiem was lying open on the counterpane. After turning over the leaves for some time, and looking at his work with humid eyes, Mozart gave his pupil certain instructions, which are now for ever consigned to secresy in two graves, and which, some thirty years later, were destined to occasion so many disputes, and so much ill-feeling. After this, Mozart turned to his wife, and recommended her to keep his death secret until she could inform Albretchsberger of it, saying:—

"For to him, by all laws, human and divine, does my place belong."†

In the meantime, his physician had arrived, and ordered cold lotions to be applied to the patient's burning head; but this so shook Mozart that he instantly lost all power of speech and motion. He still retained his faculties, however, as was proved by one of his latest actions. The dying man was seen to blow out his pale lips and cheeks, as if to remind Süssmayer of a certain effect he was to produce in the Requiem. The lofty soul of the great master then flew upwards to the source of all light and harmony.

---

CHAPTER XXII.

1791.

According to the account of Sophie Weber, on the day following this night of tears, the people came in crowds under the windows of the deceased's residence, sobbing and weeping aloud. They deplored his loss just like his own family. This was not the ordinary tribute of grief paid by amateurs of music to the memory of a great musician, but the truest and most beautiful funeral oration; the expression of that unequivocal sorrow, which manifests itself, with irresistible force, at the death of a benefactor of the human species. There are too many men whose existence is embellished, or ennobled by music, or whom music consoles, for this not to be the case. "La sua vita era, così dire, una fortuna publica; una publica calamità la sua morte," said an Italian author, whose name I do not recollect, and never was there a truer word spoken.

Prague distinguished itself by the manifestation of the greatest sympathy which could possibly be paid to the memory of a private individual. As soon as the melancholy intelligence was known, all the musicians of the theatre and the whole city met, of their own free will, to celebrate a solemn funeral service for the deceased. A requiem of Rösler was selected for the ceremony, which took place in the parish church of St. Nicholas. The day before, the inhabitants of Prague were duly informed, by printed notices, of what was going to take place. On the day appointed for the ceremony, all the bells of the parish church were tolled for half an hour. Almost the whole population of the city was present, so that neither the so-called Welscher Platz could contain the carriages, nor the church, although capable of affording room to nearly four thousand persons, all admirers of the deceased. In the middle of the church was placed a magnificently illuminated catafalque, around which stood twelve pupils of the Gymnasium, with crape scarves over their shoulders, and torches in their hands. The orchestra, directed by Strohbach, was composed of one hundred and twenty of the first musicians. These artists, some of whom had played the overture to Don Juan at its first production, and at sight, performed the Requiem with a unanimity of expression, of feeling, that was shared by the entire city. Tears of friendship and gratitude flowed down the cheeks of all present as they prayed for the eternal peace of one who had procured them such great and elevated enjoyment. Thus was the memory of Mozart honoured in his well beloved city of Prague. What would the public have experienced if, instead of one of Rösler's compositions, they had heard the Swan's Song, which the deceased had breathed forth with his latest breath? His "Lacrymosa Dies illa" alone should have been performed on this day of real tears. The great master well knew that he only was capable of producing in music the expression of hopeless woe, like that which the universe itself had suffered.

While, in Prague, honours, such as are paid only to people of the highest rank, were shown to an empty coffin; in Vienna, the family of the deceased actually did not know how they should pay for the expenses of his burial. A separate place in the church-yard was too much for the means of the survivors, and Mozart's corpse was laid in a common grave.

Some strangers who happened to visit Vienna, in the year 1808, wished to be shown the spot where his bones reposed. It was impossible to point it out to them. Other bodies had taken possession of the graves of this description, which, from time to time, had been emptied! But, after all, what does it signify where a little dust rests? Who would ever think of erecting a monument on the spot? For my own part, I should prefer a flower, that, quickened by the ashes of the deceased, and blooming afresh every spring, would represent a type of the musical generations of mankind, who will derive their sustenance from the life of Mozart's intellect, without fear of ever exhausting it.

Of the two sons Mozart left behind him, the younger, Wolfgang Amadeus, born in the year 1790 or 1791, selected the career pointed out, to a certain extent, by his family and christian name. He became a musician. Several journals have mentioned him as a talented pianist and composer. One day, as his father was playing, he heard his son scream out in the same key. "He will be a Mozart," said our hero, laughingly. It is, however, very doubtful whether this playful prophecy would ever have been fulfilled, even if the child had enjoyed the incalculable benefit of his father's instruction. Nature reposes a long time, before she produces a second Mozart. Besides, she makes no unnecessary exceptions to her most constant rules, and, in the present state of music, it is very doubtful whether a second Mozart—that is to say, a second universal musical reformation—will

---

* Mozart's pupil, who completed the Requiem.

† Albrechtsberger, one of the most learned theorists and professors of composition of his day, and Beethoven's master, actually did obtain the post to which Mozart had been appointed.

Digitized by Google

ever be required. If the art of music were to be lost, the first Mozart would suffice to find it for us again, in all its entirety and all its beauty.

(To be continued.)

JULLIEN'S FAREWELL TO AMERICA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

New York, June 27.

Last night, Jullien took his farewell of America, and a "concert monstre" was given for his benefit at the Crystal Palace. After ten months of continuous labour, he resigns his bâton, and returns to Europe. During this period, he has familiarized the American public with the greatest works of the best masters; he has shewn what can be done with a good orchestra when properly directed; he has brought to light native musical talent of the highest order; and has convinced the astonished public that they possessed, in their Bristow and their Fry, composers of whom the American nation might reasonably be proud. And they have not been ungrateful; as soon as his benefit was announced, the New York Harmonic Society held a meeting and resolved unanimously—"That the services of this Society be tendered to M. Jullien to assist at his benefit concert on Monday evening, June 26, at the Crystal Palace." The Sacred Society of Newark, the Harmonic Society of Williamsburg, and the Sacred Music Society of Brooklyn also assisted, the whole forming a chorus of six hundred voices, who sang the "Hallelujah Chorus," "The Heavens are telling," and the prayer from Mosè in Egitto with very fine effect.

And while the members of the musical societies thus did honour to one of themselves, the general public lagged not behind. A tremendous rush to the Crystal Palace commenced at six and continued incessantly until nine, by which time the amazing number of forty-two thousand persons had paid for admission. Every place in the building where standing room could be obtained was packed with human beings, and the entertainment was well received throughout.

The programme consisted of the usual variety, but included two new features:—first, the andante from a symphony by M. Jullien, entitled The Last Judgment, and, secondly, the war marches and national airs of the present belligerent nations of Europe, including "Partant pour la Syrie," and the "Marseillaise," "Rule Britannia," and "God save the Queen," the Muscovite Hymn from Pietro il Grande, and the "Song of the Cossacks," and lastly "The Turkish War March." The movement from the symphony, which is very imposing, was received with great applause, and the audience prepared for the national music.

It was to be feared that something of jealousy might still have lingered in the American mind, that the recollection of "Rule Britannia" might have awakened old feelings of strife and discord, and that the sympathies with the Russians, openly expressed by Mitchell and other renegade Irishmen, might have found some echo in this immense assemblage of Americans. But such fears were at once dispelled by the reception given to "Rule Britannia," and when the first notes of "God save the Queen" were heard from the orchestra, the whole of this mighty mass rose as one man, the greater part standing uncovered during the performance and encoring the air with republican lungs quite as ardently as the most loyal assembly of Britons. Many of the audience joined in the chorus, and nothing could exceed their enthusiasm. Here was living proof that the Irish "patriots" are estimated at their real worth; that the Anglo-Saxon heart in America is a reflex of that of their brethren across the Atlantic, and that the public feeling which directs the destinies of America is in accord with the allies and the justice of their cause. The Russian hymns, notwithstanding their musical merit, were received in solemn silence, while the Turkish War March was vociferously applauded.

Before the conclusion of the first part of the Programme, an agreeable episode occurred. Mr. Fry, the composer, accompanied by Mr. Bristow and other American musicians of note, stepped on the dais, and, after an effective speech, presented M. Jullien, in honour of the Musical Congress held under his direction at the Crystal Palace on the 15th inst., with a magnificent gold wreath. The chaplet is of considerable value, and is in shape of a laurel crown. It was subscribed for by the members of nearly all the orchestral societies in America and by other admirers of M. Jullien, including many of the bankers and principal citizens of New York. The presentation was attended by enormous cheering from an audience which Mr. Fry said was as large in numbers as the free citizens of ancient Athens, the State of antiquity which had given us the great models of art. The wreath is of the orthodox bays-fashion, and extremely well executed. A golden tablet accompanies the memorial, on which is inscribed:

Laureate
TO JULLIEN,
FROM 1500 PERFORMERS
AT THE
FIRST MUSICAL CONGRESS IN AMERICA,
AND UPWARDS OF 30,000 OF
HIS WARMEST FRIENDS AND ADMIRERS PRESENT AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, NEW YORK.
June 15, 1854.

M. Jullien addressed the audience in a short speech and thanked them for an event so flattering and gratifying. He stated that it had always been his aim to popularize music, first in France, then in England, and lastly in America. He availed himself of the opportunity to pass an eulogium on the works of Messrs. Fry and Bristow, gentlemen of whose genius, fancy, and science he had no doubt, and retired amidst cheers again and again repeated.

Thus ended a scene, honourable alike to the recipient and the donors of the testimonial. The one received it for his endeavours to popularize the fairest of the fine arts; the others gave because they appreciated and had benefited by those efforts. M. Jullien leaves to-morrow, the 28th, for England.

---

Mdlle. Wilhelmina Clauss leaves London this morning, vid Dieppe, for Paris.

The Late Signor Anfossi.—The whole collection of valuable double basses have just been purchased of the executors by Mr. Mount, of the Royal Italian Opera. These fine instruments, five in number, are by Amati, Panormo, Lott, Forster and Gagliani; the latter instrument was formerly in the possession of Sig. Dragonetti, by whom it was bequeathed to Sig. Anfossi.

The King of Portugal.—Arthur Napoleon, the young Portuguese pianist, having been to pay his respects to His Majesty the King of Portugal, shortly before the departure of his Majesty from this country, was very graciously received; and, as a mark of the interest felt in his young compatriot, his Majesty has presented Master Napoleon (through the Portuguese Ambassador, Count de Lavradio) with a handsome opal pin set with diamonds.

Digitized by Google

A LETTER FROM ITALY.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

MILAN, 8th July, 1854.

SIR,—How true were the last words of the celebrated Madame Roland, when, at the place of execution, and pointing to a colossal statue of Liberty, which stood close to the scaffold, she exclaimed, "Oh, Liberty; what crimes are perpetrated in thy name!" It is not only upon important national or political questions, but also in the affairs of ordinary life, that we most frequently find the loudest advocates and brawlers for "liberty" the greatest tyrants whenever and wherever power is placed within their reach. It would, however, be quite out of character to attempt to make your journal the vehicle for any discussion of this question, notwithstanding the interest it possesses with reference to the present degraded position of "modern Italy," and the serious doubts which cannot fail to arise in every observant and unprejudiced mind as to the fitness of the people successfully to maintain a free government if placed by circumstances within their reach.

But I am led to allude to the subject from the "intolerant" spirit which pervades both the people and the press of Italy against all foreign musical artists, but more especially the "Inglese," who come to this "land of song;" no matter whether they be parties of established fame, or the modest and timid débutant venturing before the public, after the devotion of so much time, and expending, it may be, nearly their last shilling in the ardent pursuit of instruction and advancement in a difficult and precarious profession.

Never was this "cloven-foot" more clearly displayed than with reference to Clara Novello, at the Scala, during the last Carnival, when, after she had created repeated bursts of applause, which these "illiberals" would willingly have withheld, but which was fairly extorted from them by her splendid execution of the music in Rigoletto (certainly immeasurably superior to any one I have heard in the part of Gilda), the leading journal of Milan, true to the animus, exclaimed, on her leaving for England to this effect:—

"Adieu, fair Clara; return to the white cliffs of Albion. Your talent may do very well for them in England, but does not suit the refined science of Italy. Poor Clara!"

And this "refined" twaddle was actually copied into all the other papers as something very talented, superlatively clever, and piquant! Why, the majority of their singers at their leviathan "La Scala," for the last three years, have been below—far below—mediocrity; and, of their six new operas during that period, all of them have been fiascos, "consigned to the tomb of the Capulets," some of them unequivocally damned; decidedly the best of them—the Luigi Quinto, by Mazzucato—most ungenerously receiving the "cold shoulder" of his own countrymen, from the exertions of "a clique" with whom the composer, it is rumoured, in spite of his undoubted talent, is unpopular.

It is always our "egregio maestro" this; our "bravo valente primo tenore" that; or, our "distintissima squisitamente, bellissima prima donna soprano assoluto" so and so, until I am quite sick of taking up a newspaper, from the disgusting affectation, national vanity, and unfair prejudices which its columns are sure to contain.

Both your correspondents at this place (for I see you occasionally have two), I presume, are Italians—at least it is a fair inference, or they would most surely (if Englishmen, like myself), have called your attention to this glaring nuisance, and have saved the occupation of your valuable time in perusing my present humble communication.

An intelligent, gentlemanly, and well-educated Italian (and I have met with some few here, who, in intellect and principle, would do honour to any country, even to "the noble Roman of the high and palmy days") will fully admit the arrogant exclusiveness of his countrymen, more especially if he has been in England, and witnessed the different reception which all foreign artists experience there; but, with the mass here, this fancied "supremacy" is innate—so much so, that, cosmopolite as I am, I really should not regret to see a little "turning of the tables" on the part of my fashion-led friends in London for a short time, just to "hold the mirror up," and show the Italian artists their own conduct reflected. "Veluti in speculum."

But I will leave off grumbling, Mr. Editor, and endeavour to amuse you with a little chapter and verse of the "wise saws and modern instances" of these talent-crushing worthies. With them it is an admitted certainty that no English, French, or German, can sing equally to an Italian; nay, one of these enlightened geniuses had the unparalleled effrontery boldly to state in his paper, the other day, that it was quite out of the question for a German, or any other than an Italian violin, to do justice to Italian music! I could not resist exclaiming, with the "sententious" Jacques:—

"A fool—a fool;—I met a fool i' the forest,—
A motley fool!—And in his brain,
Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage, he hath strange places crammed
With observations, the which he vents
In mangled forms!"

Another intellectual gentleman of the Press I find is in London as correspondent to a certain Italian journal here, and thence he thunders forth his dogmas, which are reverberated on this side of the Alps, to the delight and amusement of his silly countrymen, and the depression of all the rising hopes of such foreign artists, whose fears and anxieties make them weak enough to place any confidence in his trashy absurdities, and his bombastic self-conceited ignorance. Here is a fair, but not extreme, specimen of his criticism. Speaking of Cruvelli, he says:—

"The Cruvelli will always be an acquisition to a French Opera, but can never rise to the true height of an Italian Theatre. But that does not prevent the London journals from lauding her to the skies in the most ridiculous manner, while the true talent of OUR "Bosio" remains quite in the shade. After having heard the latter in Rigoletto it is not possible to listen to Cruvelli afterwards, even in her favourite part in Fidelio, without experiencing a species of painful disgust."

Bravo, Mr. Italian!—Our talent—our discrimination is gigantic—immenso!

"O, upright judge! A second Daniel!"

Poor Clara Novello! Poor Cruvelli! I must tell you a delicious little bit of this "oracle's" general information and research. He says, "the Opera" (Covent Garden), was not well attended on the evening in question in consequence of the attraction of the——(What?)—the illuminations in the city, it being the Queen's Birthday!

Here's a discovery! worthy only of exclusive Italian intellect. Hear this, ye great ones east of Temple Bar. Hear this, ye worthy citizens who have the honour of serving our glorious Queen. Hear this, and know your great sacrifices are duly appreciated; and your many-coloured sparkling lamps (although too much "like angels' visits, few and far between") outshine all other attractions! Weep, OUR Bosio—OUR "Egregios"—OUR "Straordinarios"—and OUR "Squisitamentes." Weep—the Italian Opera is deserted,—deserted for a City Illumination!!!

"A worthy fool—motley's the only wear."

A few more last words and I have done. In spite of all these narrow-minded, self-conceited Italians, let my countrymen and countrywomen keep their onward course, and English genius and English perseverance will, beyond all doubt, eventually achieve the same perfection in music as in every other branch of art and science to which they have been directed.

You must not suppose, by the foregoing, Mr. Editor, that I am some disappointed, jaundiced, used-up vocalist, or some unfortunate singer, who, as my old friend Matthews used to say, had "lost his G—." No; I never had the honour of belonging to the musical profession, nor have I any connexion with it. I am only—but no matter what I am—I am simply an English gentleman, and consequently A LOVER OF FAIR PLAY.

P.S. You are at liberty to insert this letter if you think proper. I have sent you my name (IN CONFIDENCE) as a guarantee for my statements. It would not do to let it be known here. If you notice this, I may intrude upon you again.

Digitized by Google

THE 100TH PSALM.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR—In your World of last week I find a letter from a member of the Sacred Harmonic Society, respecting the 100th Psalm. In my ignorance of the musical doings in London, I never dreamt but the correct version was used by the conductor of the said society, and organist of St. Paul's. Allow me to state that, at a recent public rehearsal of our new society, the original version was sung with fine effect by a chorus of nearly 200 voices, from a work called "The National Psalmist," published by Mr. Hackett some ten years ago, and who is the conductor of our society here. Old tunes which have suffered from new arrangements will be found in the work alluded to.

I remain, yours, &c.,

J. PRATCHILL,

A Member of the Society.

Church-road, Stanley, near Liverpool.

NATIONAL GALLERY.—THE VANDALS

To the Editor of the Musical World.

SIR,—Mr. Danby Seymour has rendered good service to the public by directing the attention of the House of Commons to the monstrous abuses which still prevail in the management of the National Gallery. Hitherto the appointment of select committees on the subject has been apparently for the sole purpose of quieting public clamour, and of white-washing the "pumice" stoners of the national pictures, in despite of evidence. This state of affairs ought no longer to be tolerated; and, unless the House of Commons be prepared to abdicate, and to cease to perform its legal functions, the National Gallery must be rescued out of the hands of the academic Vandals.

Another job is now in preparation. The collection of pictures of the German Prince Louis D'Ottingen Wallerstein, in Kensington Palace, is about to be foisted on the nation as a bargain. Dr. Waagen, whose power of purchasing and baptising bad pictures, and of bestowing upon them great names, is undeniable (e. g., the Berlin Gallery), is now employed in preparing the catalogue. John Bull should "mind his pockets," unless he desires the honour of being plundered.

Yours obediently,

A WITNESS BEFORE THE SELECT COMMITTEES OF 1850 AND 1854.

July 4.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Maria di Rohan was performed at the Imperial Opera-house, for the benefit of Fräulein Demeric, the principal parts being sustained by that lady, Mad. Medori, Herren Mirate and Ferri. The Italian season was brought to a close by a pot-pourri, consisting of the third and fourth acts of Il Trovatore, the second act of Il Giuramento, the cavatina from Il Barbiere, and, finally, the second act of Norma. Mesdames Medori, Bendazzi, Borghi, Fräulein Demeric, Herren Bettini, Debassini, Ferri, and Laura appeared in the course of the evening. The house was very full.

Herr von Flotow is engaged on the composition of a new opera for the Imperial Opera-house. The principal part is intended for Fräulein Wildauer.

NAPLES.—A new opera entitled Annella di porta Capuana, the libretto by Sig. Bardare, and the music by Sig. Fioravanti, was produced at the Teatro Nuova, and unmercifully hissed. The curtain went down on the first act, and when it rose again, to commence the second, such a storm of sibillation was raised that the opera was withdrawn, and the actors retired. Several pieces were cut out, and it was tried a second and third time, but with no better success.

PADUA.—At the Teatro-Nuova, Sig. Pacini's new opera, Medea, continues its success. The music is pleasing, and improves on closer acquaintance. Mad. Alaimo is very much admired in the part of Medea; the baritone, Guicciardi, sings with energy; the tenor, Charles Braham, is also well spoken of. Verdi's Il Trovatore has been produced with equal success, the principal parts by Mad. Alaimo, Sigs. Landi and Guicciardi.

MILAN.—The theatre of Santa-Radegonda has re-opened its doors to the public with Ricci's opera Il Nuovo Figaro. In spite of the tediousness of some of the pieces, and the monotony of others, it was favourably received in the present dearth of novelty. The next opera will be Donizetti's Elisabetta.

A dress concert has been given at the theatre of the Filodrammatici. A new violinist, Sig. Corbellini, was highly successful in a solo part on Verdi's terzetto of I Lombardi Florence.

Rossini has gone to Lucca, where he has been advised to take the baths on account of the bad state of his health.

LEGHORN.—On the 24th June a new opera, Ermelinda, by Sig. Battista, was produced at the Teatro Leopoldo with considerable success. The execution was good, and many pieces were applauded. In the second act Sig. Amodio was much admired in an aria, "Donna impudica e perfidia." In the third, the duet between Mad. Mulinari and Sig. Ciardi, and the aria sung by Mad. Mulinari, were encored. On the second representation, the success was even greater than on the first night.—Donizetti's Marino Faliero is in rehearsal. The part of the Protagonist will be sustained by Mad. Amodio.

THE OPERA HOUSE, ST. PETERSBURG.

THE Italian Opera House, "Bolshoy Teátro," or Great Theatre, as it is called, stands in the centre of a large square. The site is excellent, but the effect of what might have been a handsome pile of masonry, is ruined by bald, stucco-daubed sides, with green verandahs, under which carriages take up and set down, and a paltry portico in front. That theatres need not be eyesores may be learnt at Dresden, Berlin, and Hanover; but in this instance it may have been thought desirable to erect a pendant to some of the other hideous public buildings that disfigure St. Petersburg—which has obtained an architectural reputation to which it has no claim, and which has been entirely created by the convulsive admiration of its own orthodox population, or the speculative laudations of distant authors.

The salle is not more imposing than the exterior, being large and ugly, while the decorations and fittings are ineffective and tasteless. The floor of the pit slopes steeply up from the orchestra, so that the view from the front seats is not limited, as with us, to occasional glimpses of the heads of the taller performers. At Covent Garden and the Haymarket, an opera-box is admirably adapted to the exclusion of air and sound, and, by the ingenious device of a partition wall, the view of the house is so completely blocked out, that only two persons can see what is passing on the stage, of whom one always gets a stiff neck in the attempt, while the rest of the party, who cannot see through the wall, now and then hear a fragment of some very noisy chorus, provided they are not suffocated before the end of the overture. At St. Petersburg, the divisions between the different boxes reach no higher than the backs of the occupants' chairs. There is no attempt in this theatre, as in those at Berlin, Dresden, etc., to invoke the assistance of statuary, or other ornamental forms, in piling the successive tiers one above another; the supports are mere carpentry, and not architecture. But the boxes can both hear and see, and people are not stifled. A box at the opera at St. Petersburg is, in fact, a pleasant luxury, and not, as in some places, a dismal dungeon.

We have hurried through the entrance-hall and lobbies, because they are best left as quickly as possible. A European visitor is astounded when he mounts the staircases, and walks round the box doors. The steps and floors swarm with servants in squatting or sleeping attitudes, many taking a quiet nap, with their heads comfortably pillowed on "schubes" of the richest fur. The scene is picturesque, for the flunkies of the grandees are dressed in brilliant liveries; but, delightful thought! the soft skins of the squirrel, the fox, the racoon, the sable, and other sleek beasts, in which these men are rolling, have just been thrown off by their masters and mistresses, by whom, after the opera, they will be resumed. The European lady would perhaps object to this arrangement, and might even doubt whether such practices be really tolerated anywhere except at Khiva and Bokhara; but when we add that the same servants will, at twelve p.m., compose themselves to rest on the drawing-room sofas, we anticipate further scepticism.

As the odour in the lobbies is not altogether satisfactory we shall adjourn to the salle, premising that the price of places, though rather cheaper than with us, is not regulated according to the low scale prevalent in most of the continental theatres. In the centre of the grand tier, or bel étage, is the imperial box, with a private chandelier, a private curtain of red velvet, a private gilt split crow (or double-headed eagle) above, and at the door two grenadiers from some regiment that ends in "off," who keep going through the bayonet exercise as vigorously as if they were inflicting a "correction" on the enemies of the orthodox faith. The Emperor and his family seldom if ever exhibit their august persons beneath the official canopy, but prefer to be near the stage, and His Imperial Majesty usually sits in an omnibus box, a position not without its advantages, especially on ballet nights, when His Majesty's opera-glass is always actively employed. Those who seeks for good looks on the grand tier will not find them, but, en revanche, the toilettes are ravishing, and the arrangement of the hair, and the combination of brilliant colours, leave nothing to be desired by the most refined taste. We much doubt whether there is a single dame or demoiselle d'honneur of the imperial court whose toilette can be fairly criticised above once a year, and we can only express the immeasurable inferiority in the æsthetics of millinery of our own wives, sisters, daughters, and promises, to those of our enemies, by saying that Russian women dress, and that the English wear clothes. We must add, on the other hand, that if a solitary beauty should appear in the house she is certain to be a foreigner, and that any face of surpassing loveliness is sure to be coloured by Anglo-Saxon blood.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A SUBSCRIBER TO THE OPERA.—There is no truth in the paragraph which appeared twice in La France Musicale. MDLLE. SOPHIE CRUVELLI is in Germany, and will not arrive in England until the period fixed for the provincial tour, which, in conjunction with other artists of the Royal Italian Opera, she has undertaken with MR. BEALE.

 Owing to the space occupied by the Memoir of the late MAD. SONTAG, the Sketch of MR. BRAHAM'S life is postponed till next week. The same cause obliges us to defer our notice of the Royal Academy Concert, the Quartet Association, and other articles of interest.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 15TH, 1854.

THE departure from this life of the Countess Rossi, better known to the world as Henriette Sontag, will be learned with deep and universal regret. A great artist, and a lady who was an example to her sex, are equally lost to us; and while those who only knew her on the stage of her triumphs will have to lament a gap in the sphere of their amusements, those who were intimately associated with her, and could testify to the excellent report of her virtues, will deplore the woman they regarded with affectionate esteem even more than the great singer they applauded and admired.

The artistic life of Mad. Sontag was strange. Two triumphs, divided by a long period of repose in wealth and luxury—a triumph in early youth, and a triumph in mature age; these were its stages. A fortune won by talent and perseverance, lost by unanticipated mishap; won again by the same talent and perseverance, the former ripened by experience, the latter made more eager by adversity; these were its incidents. The climax is indeed distressing. The second epoch of a most extraordinary art-life nearly completed, the second fortune gained, the plans for retirement in ease and comfort all laid down and settled, the mansion and estate purchased—where the twice artist, now again Countess, hoped to pass the remnant of her days in the bosom of her fatherland, to whose renown her genius had contributed, in the midst of her family, by whom she was adored—all seemingly tended to a happy sunset, the clouds of which should be coloured and brightened with the glory of the past.

But it is not man that disposes. The happiness so richly deserved, the peace so honourably earned, awaited Mad. Sontag elsewhere. Death took her who had adorned life so well; a terrible pest, which scourged the City of Mexico, made no distinction between the accomplished artist and the common herd; and among the two hundred whose dissolution marked the progress of its ravages day by day, on the 12th of June was counted Henriette Sontag!

This was a sad end to such a pure and admirable life. But it should serve as a warning to all, from the highest to the lowest, from the most prosperous and contented to the poorest and most miserable. Here was one whose whole career was exemplary, who had filled the outward circle of the world with her artistic renown, and the inmost circle of her own fire-side with the happiness that flowed from her domestic qualities. Her fine endowments, and her woman's heart, had both their good fruit—the one in helping the advance of civilisation by the practice of a beautiful and incorruptible art, the other in acting as a model for those to imitate who were growing up about her. But this did not save her from the common lot; this did not avert from her an early death; this did not protect her from the poisoned breath of the cholera.

Nor should it. The wisdom of Providence is shown in its dispensations. If virtue is to have any other reward than that which rests in its own consciousness, if to be good is not of itself to be happy, the reward and the happiness belong not to the earth. If death be a curse, it is as much a curse to-morrow as to-day—since what is to-morrow but to-day? It was the happiness of Madame Sontag to have lived well, to have added her part to the refinement of her fellow-creatures, and to have paid every obligation to which she was bound by duty or affection. It will be the happiness of those who were nearest and dearest to her, and whom her unexpected demise has left to mourn, to remember her with respect, and to be enabled to talk of her to others who knew her not, as of one whose career was without a spot or stain. She has gone to a home where they must hope to join her,—and the best and the fittest way to do honour to her memory is to endeavour to emulate her virtues, to develope the influence which her irreproachable life has exercised.

M. JULLIEN, Mad. Jullien, and several of the artists who formed part of the American expedition, arrived in England on Saturday, by the "Arabia." It is worth noting that, during the ten months in which M. Jullien and his troupe have been sojourning and travelling in the United States, not one accident, and not one case of illness, occurred. The fact is almost without precedent.

MADAME ALBONI has returned to Paris. Her visit to England was, therefore, simply a pleasure-excursion. She was at the Royal Italian Opera almost every night. It is greatly to be regretted that she did not come to terms with Mr. Gye, since, when Grisi's "Farewell" performances are accomplished, the theatre will stand in need of some fresh stimulus, to arrest the force of the reaction in the public mind, which must inevitably follow upon such an unusual degree of excitement.

M. VIEUXTEMPS, having fulfilled his short engagement with the Musical Union, left London for the continent on Saturday.

HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—A concert for the benefit of the Hospice St. Gothard was held yesterday se'nnight. Mdlle. Cesarini was encored in "O, luce di quest' anima." Miss Hermann was also encored in a song. Signor Cajani repeated a violin solo. Signor Operti and Miss Fox both performed on the piano, the lady a sonata by Beethoven, and was much applauded. Signors Campanella, Kinni, Liberali, Depetris, and the Misses Poole (nieces of Mr. Poole, the dramatist), lent the monks of St. Gothard some valuable aid on this occasion. Miss A. Poole is a very youthful vocalist, with a pretty face and a nice soprano voice; but her nervousness was too great to enable us to offer any opinion of her singing. The concert was not well attended.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Otello was reproduced on Saturday, with Mad. Viardot as Desdemona in place of Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli, and Sig. Lablache as Elmiro in the room of Sig. Tagliafico. Desdemona was one of the first parts in which Mad. Viardot, when Mdlle. Pauline Garcia, appeared before the public. It is not, however, one of the most conformable to her abilities. She frequently sings and acts with great effect—witness her acting in the first and second finale, and her singing in the last act (all, excepting the grand duet); but the general impression left after the performance, is not such as the great artist leaves when she plays Fides or Valentine. Her conception, however, of the gentle Desdemona, displays the highest intelligence.

Sig. Lablache was magnificent in the malediction scene, and awed the whole house by the reality and power of his acting, and the grandeur of his voice. He had little to do in the other parts of the Opera. Sig. Tamberlik was in his best voice, and he and Sig. Ronconi created the old furor in the dramatic duet, "Tu m' inganni."

The opera was not received with great enthusiasm, although the principal artists obtained a recall after each act and at the fall of the curtain.

On Monday Lucresia Borgia was given—one of Mad. Grisi's farewell nights. The house was crowded in every part, and the performance was admirable.

Ernani was announced for Tuesday, but was withdrawn in consequence of the illness of Mad. Bosio. Two acts of the Prophète were given instead, followed by La Prova d' un Opéra Seria. Mad. Viardot may be said to have had the whole evening to herself. Mad. Viardot is always ready to come forward to fill the vacancy in the bills caused by illness or indisposition—the terms are not synonymous—of any of the artists, and in this respect, at least, she is of vital importance to the management.

On Thursday, Donizetti's La Favorita was produced for the first time this season, the change in the distribution of parts being Sig. Lablache for Sig. Tagliafico in the Chief Monk, and Sig. Bartolini for Sig. Belletti in Alfonso XI.

Although certainly not one of Donizetti's best works, La Favorita holds possession of the stage by its interesting story, the fine situations afforded the prima donna and tenor for acting, and the splendour and variety of the mise-en-scène. The music is laboured, and has not that genial and graceful flow which characterise the composer's operas, serious and comic. In attempting to be grand, Donizetti failed to be himself, and we find little of his natural melody and ease in the Favorita.

The performance, on Thursday night, was almost equal to any we have heard at the Royal Italian Opera. Mad. Grisi, however, was somewhat indisposed, and only sang because Her Majesty had signified her intention of being present. The indisposition was hardly apparent, and must have worn itself out in the second act, since we never heard Mad. Grisi sing the grand air, "Mio tesoro," more magnificently. In the last scene, too, she sang and acted transcendently, and seemed fully equal to her best days.

Sig. Mario, in Fernando, began somewhat coldly, and sang the first romanza, "Une ange, une femme," with a nonchalance rather disappointing to his admirers. He used his mezzo voce and falsetto throughout, and did not sing one chest note. Such exquisite breathing, nevertheless, has its charms, and we were charmed—softly. Sig. Mario, as is usual with him, warmed up as he went on, and in the last two acts sang as powerfully as ever. The pretty air, "Angiol d'amore,"—the melody of which, by the way, we can never remember—was rendered with all the old force and suavity combined, and the famous duet which precedes the death of Leonora, given with the stereotyped effect, as we may say. At the fall of the curtain, Madame Grisi, and Signors Mario and Lablache were recalled with enthusiasm, and showers of bouquets thrown on the stage.

Sig. Lablache was grand and impressive as Baldassadare, but we prefer the glorious basso when he is oily and pungent. Sig. Bartolini looked as little like a king as possible, but he sang well, and was useful in the concerted music. Mdlle. Bellini, as before, was graceful and fitting in Inez, and Sig. Soldi was as vociferous as ever in the king's henchman.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The performances of the past week present nothing new. Masaniello is being postponed from day to day, and the Huguenots has been withdrawn, in consequence of Herr Formes being compelled to attend to some engagement abroad which will detain him away for a fortnight. Meanwhile Lucresia Borgia, Norma, Sonnambula, and Lucia di Lammermoor, have been given variously, the last alone creating any enthusiasm. The theatre, nevertheless, has been well attended; but the visitors yearn for some novelty. To-night Fra Diavolo is announced, with Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves in their favourite parts of the Brigand and Zerlina. Here, at all events, will be something as good as new.

DRAMATIC.

OPERA COMIQUE.

St. James's Theatre.—In each successive part undertaken by Madame Marie Cabel we trace some new beauty, some hitherto undiscovered grace, which raises her in our estimation both as an actress and a singer. Madame Cabel need not be compared with other artists, who have their peculiar merits. She has her own; among these is a wonderful clearness and rapidity of execution, a captivating ease and grace in the execution of florid and bravura passages, a certain exquisite naïveté both in her acting and singing, and a perfect originality of conception—which last is one of the great secrets of her success. The first two operas in which she appeared may be considered as mere displays of vocalisation, written expressly to show her off as a clever and accomplished executant of vocal tours de force. We recognised a wonderful proficiency in the execution of scales, trills, and cadenzas, whose great forte lay in ornaments and fioriture; but as regards her capabilities as a real and legitimate artiste, we knew less.

Since the production of La Fille du Régiment, La Sirène, and, above all, Les Diamants de la Couronne, however, we are able to give a more decided opinion on the beauties and characteristics of Madame Cabel's talent.

We have now to speak of operas which possess a fund of graceful, original, and captivating melody, in which the exponent of the composer's thoughts has something more than mere cobwebs to tread upon; in which all the higher qualities of the artist are called into play, and in which conception expression and execution are equally necessary for success. All these qualities Madame Marie Cabel will be found to possess to a very high degree by her performance in the operas above-mentioned. In the last-mentioned she surprised us both by the superiority of her acting and singing. It is true that Auber's Diamants de la Couronne is one of his most charming operas, abounding in expressive phrases, real melodies, delightful piquant effects, and pleasing and varied combinations; and it is also true that M. Scribe and M. St.-Georges never wrote a neater and more lively book.

Under such auspices, therefore, Madame Cabel had a fair field for the display of her talents, and her success was triumphant. In the cavern scene of the first act her acting was excellent, and she looked a charming and piquante bohémienne. In the second act, as the lady of rank, she was elegant and distinguée. In the third, as the queen, she displayed a commanding dignity as the sovereign, and a feminine grace as the woman, the combination of which was peculiarly fascinating. Her singing was perfection throughout. Her air of the first act, "Adieu, Seigneur, il faut partir," was given with true feeling; the duet of the second act (with Mdlle. Girard, a clever singer and lively actress), "Dans les défiles des Montagnes," was rendered with admirable spirit and quaintness. But her great triumph was the allegro, "Ah! je veux briser ma chaîne," the variations at the end of which were sung with astonishing grace and brilliancy, and enthusiastically applauded. In the cavatina, "Je suis femme, je suis reine," Madame Cabel sang with genuine expression and simplicity. The significant epigram: "Il n'y a que cela de faux," pronounced with charming point and archness, brought the curtain down amidst a hurricane of applause and a shower of bouquets.

Digitized by Google

The other parts were but indifferently filled; and on that account Madame Cabel's task was so much the more difficult. The house was crowded.

Olympic.—The new farce, called Perfect Confidence, produced on Monday night, affords Mr. Robson an excellent opportunity of displaying his talents in the serio-comic line. Mr. Easy is a jealous man, who is plunged into all sorts of miseries by his suspicions. But, after all, Mr. Easy does not suspect without some cause; he sees a stranger kiss his wife's hand without hindrance, beholds the bouquet he gave her as a love-token in the possession of the same individual, hears him boast of her kindnesses, and is shown by him a document of a promise of marriage from her. This would be enough to upset a brain constituted of stronger materials than that of poor Easy, who straightway fancies that Mrs. Easy is desirous to make herself an early widow, and is driven to utter despair. Of course, all is explained, and Easy finds that his wife has been only dallying with the stranger, who after all is no stranger, to hinder him from paying his addresses in a quarter where they are not acceptable. The mixed doubt, fear, consternation, and horror of poor Easy, as his wife's backslidings, one by one, rising in enormity, are made known to him, from the kissing of the hand to the promise of marriage, was represented with astonishing power by Mr. Robson, who was almost too real and too literal for the comedy of the piece. The scene in which Easy thinks his wife is going to poison him was, however, inimitably comic. His looking in her face so lovingly and earnestly, expecting she would relent in her murderous design; his growing horror, with the variations of his countenance, as he sees nothing in her face but calm unmitigated astonishment, which he construes into sanguinary determination, with his fall back into despair, constituted such a picture of the grotesque as would have awakened laughter under the ribs of death. Although the farce is constructed of the very slightest materials, and that the incidents are not all new, it is so smartly written, and the part was so well suited to Mr. Robson, that the success on Monday night was unequivocal, and a long run may be predicated in its favour. Mr. Robson was called for at the end, and received with the greatest enthusiasm. Perfect Confidence is taken from the French piece Pas Jaloux.

Surrey.—If a run of thirty successive nights to crowded houses be a test of the worth of an opera, The Jewess is worthy. Since the production of Mr. Balfe's The Devil's in It, Halévy's work has been the most successful hit. Mr. Planche's extravaganza of The White Cat has been revived for Miss Julia St. George, who looks well, sings nicely, and acts agreeably.

Sadler's Wells.—A concert was given here on Monday. The selection consisted of upwards of thirty pieces, most of which were encored. Mr. John Thomas was called on to repeat Parish Alvars' "Harp imitation of a Mandolin," but declined the honour. The duet, "La festa," sung by Signors Gardoni and Belletti, a Scotch song, by Miss Stabbach, and the "Una furtiva lagrima," by Signor Belletti, were re-demanded and re-sung. The instrumental feature was the pianoforte playing of young Arthur Napoléon. He was loudly encored. Miss Louisa Pyne was re-called, after Rode's air and variations.

Strand.—The idea of a number of curious and amusing situations growing out of two persons living opposite to each other and falling in love is not new to the stage, but we have seldom seen the notion turned to better account than it is in a very capital farce produced at this establishment last Wednesday, called Opposite Neighbours, by Mr. Howard Paul. One side of the street is inhabited by the most enterprising of Lotharios, while the other is rented by a most charming girl (of course), who makes wax flowers for a livelihood. He ogles and stares at her to the last degree of amatory persecution, until she is compelled to move. On the other hand, he is warned out of his lodging at the same moment, on account of arrears of rent. It would seem now that they would be no longer neighbours, but it turns out that she by accident gets into the apartment he has just vacated, and he rents her's by mistake, and in less than ten minutes after the change, they are again opposite each other. Just as the Lothario is congratulating himself on the novelty of their removal, he is informed by his new landlord that his late reference is most unsatisfactory, and again he is a pilgrim. In despair, he at length climbs up to her window by means of a ladder, which breaking after he is at the top, he manages to climb into her mansarde, and soften her objections by some well-applied speeches, in which romance and destiny have considerable to do. Miss Featherstone, as the "young lady," played with spirit and grace, and introduced a couple of songs, both of which were encored. Mr. Belford played Fresco, the hero, with considerable dash and vivacity, with the seeming determination of making the most of what is really a very good part.

REVIEWS.

"Early one Fine Summer's Morn." Written and composed by E. J. Loder. Addison and Hollier. Manchester and Liverpool, Hime and Co.

We were aware that Mr. Loder was an accomplished musician, but we were not aware that he was a poet. Here, however, it is proved, in a quaint romaunt of the old English school, how a maiden comes to a hermit to confess her sins, and how the holy man says he can see no guilt in the maiden; how the maiden sighs, and how by "an incident" the hermit guesses her to be in love; how "a youth" appeared "from behind a tree;" and how the hermit immediately turned doctor, and bestowed the youth upon the maiden, as the only medicine for her malady. "Oh!" quoth the hermit, "Now I know this malady—but of it none e'er died." The hermit was wrong; but the metre of Mr. Loder is right; and the music to which he has set the romaunt is charming—quaint as the verses, simple and melodious, and accompanied with that piquant and refined taste in harmony for which the composer is noted.

"Rose of the World." Written and composed by Alphonso Matthey. Lewis and Co.

An unpretending ballad in the sentimental style, with a pretty melody. The accompaniment is well written, and the words are sensible.

"Home is such a Magic Word."—Song. Composed by Croshaw Johnson. Campbell and Ransford.

"The Dream of Bliss."—Song. Composed by Croshaw Johnson. Webb.

These are both extremely nice ballads, graceful, unaffected, and correctly written. The melody of "Home is such a magic word," is in the Scottish style and accent, and Mr. Linley, the poet, has supplied some very appropriate verses about "Auld lang syne," and so forth. "The Dream of Bliss" is a very effective song for a barytone. The melody is flowing, and the accompaniment carefully made. The progression (page 2), beginning with the transition into E flat, and leading back to the key, is musician-like.

Digitized by Google

"La Gaieté"—Morceau de Salon. "La Catarina"—Mazurka de Salon. By Croshaw Johnson. R. W. Ollivier.

Brilliant and extended morceaux de danse, well suited for drawing-room display, and well adapted for teaching. The "Gaieté" is in the style of a galop. The first theme, in F, is lively and well marked, the second, in B flat, elegant, and the third, in D flat, with reiterated notes in triplets, showy and effective. The "Catarina" is not so difficult; but it has more character, and is quite as spirited. It is in A flat; and a pleasant contrast is afforded by the episode, which is very pretty, being in the brighter key of E.

"Satilliti"—Schottische. "The Spirit's Song"—Nocturne. By Croshaw Johnson.

The schottische is animated, but somewhat commonplace. The nocturne, on the contrary, is refined and ingenious. The theme is expressive, and the accompaniment gracefully distributed. The key of this piece is B flat. Mr. Johnson has dedicated it to Mr. Sterndale Bennett, which may account for the unusual pains he appears to have taken with it.

THE ORGAN AT THE PANOPTICON.

A slight notice of the so-called and well-called "Grand Organ" at the Panopticon appeared in this journal some weeks since. Some notice of so fine a piece of handicraft had been long deserved at our hands, and we gave it;—but this as an instalment—a sop to Cerberus (or the Messrs. Hill)—an acknowledgment of our obligations, to be redeemed when came holiday time, fine weather, and our capital friends the country professors. We always intended to give some description of a work which, if not perfect, is certainly without an equal in this country, and can choose no better time for commencing than when, as now, so many of our provincial subscribers, readers, and contributors are disporting themselves in the metropolis. A visit to the Panopticon will, of course, be among their doings here, and we believe they will willingly accept this paper by way of hand-book during their inspection of the organ.

Some one among the many astute, ingenious, and authoritative "catechisms" and "manuals" of the organ prevalent among us, commences, after the good old fashion, at the beginning of things, thus-wise:—"On looking at a large church organ, the first thing that strikes the eye is the case." Now, we like a good example, especially in print, and so mean to follow it. The case of the Panopticon organ must have been a puzzle to the designer, whoever he was. Since the days of Tubal Cain and Hiram (him of the Temple, we mean) there surely never were such monstrosities of work, in metal and wood, as the "designs" of our modern church-architects for organ-cases. Classic or Gothic, 'tis all the same. Sheer, square, flat ugliness, or, at best, an inappropriate affectation of tawdry ornament, almost invariably takes the place of invention and grandeur of style. And thus, somehow or other, it happens that the very men who can build such churches as that at Camberwell and the "Catholic and Apostolic" in Gordon-square, can think of nothing better than a mere bedizened box for the vestment of an instrument whose sublime and heart-stirring tones certainly deserve, and ought to suggest, the addition of corresponding grandeur and elevation in its exterior. But the Panopticon architect was in a greater difficulty than his church-building brethren. Here, the tapering columns and massive cornices of the Classic style, and the buttresses, tracery, finials, and "weather-boarding" of the Gothic, were equally forbidden. He was in something neither more nor less than a sort of Moresco-Byzantine temple, and must fit himself to it,—the want of all tradition notwithstanding. And how has he accomplished his task? Capitally, we think; and the general verdict, we believe, will be equally in his favour. The exterior dimensions of the Panopticon organ are unusually large;—some five-and-thirty feet in width, by twenty in depth, and fifty in height to the top of the swell-box. This circumstance of size alone gives much opportunity to the invention of the architect, as well as facility for the mechanism of the builder; although, as we shall have to point out, both have been cramped by necessities unconnected with the instrument itself. By a strange arrangement, the apparatus for the dissolving views, etc., is placed in an apartment at the back of the organ, and the tinted rays from its lenses must therefore necessarily pass through the centre of the instrument to be received on a transparent medium temporarily suspended for the purpose some twenty feet in front of the organ case. It is thus obvious that a space somewhat more than equal to the bulk of the diverging rays from the lenses before-mentioned must be reserved through the middle of the organ, perfectly free from architectural ornament without, and from pipes or the minutest thread of mechanical attachment within. Wherefore it happens that, to recur to our exemplary "catechism" or "manual," on looking at the Panopticon organ "the first thing that strikes the eye" is not merely "the case" but also a large square hole right in the centre of it, and through which, interior darkness alone prevents the organ-builder's mechanism from being seen. So well, however, has the architect managed his share in the matter, that this "hole" scarcely at all deteriorates from the very elegant and effective appearance of the exterior. Nothing of the kind, indeed, can be well more novel and striking than the general arrangement of the front. Two large "wings" or "towers," at the sides, containing a portion of the pedal-organ, and displaying some of the sixteen-feet work gilt, project boldly several feet beyond the general line of front; along the centre, and immediately above the usual impost, rises a very elegant piece of screen-work, decorated with gilding and polychrome; next comes the "hole" before mentioned, and above that a species of upper cornice, skilfully connected at the sides with the screen-work below. From this cornice project horizontally the two ranks of the "Tuba mirabilis"; immediately above them stands the sound-board of the solo-organ—its pipes gilt and in full view; and lastly towers up to the ceiling the swell-box, its Venetian front being richly and tastefully ornamented with gilding and colour. It is impossible not to admire the skill with which the architect has here wrought up some matters of very ugly necessity into an harmonious and beautiful ensemble. The continuous up-rising lines of carved work and gilded pipes with which the usual organ-case conceals its interior mechanism, were here clearly out of the question. The optician was to be considered, and a "hole" left for the display of his devices. But so well has the thing been managed that, notwithstanding the materials of the solo and swell organs are displayed in all their matter-of-fact and naked integrity, their position, the tasteful style of their decoration, and the pyramidical form they assume, contribute, rather than otherwise, to the striking and elegant effect of the whole.

We pass now to the interior of the instrument, and rejoice, as we go, to find how the English organ-builders are improving, and how little there is, in this instance, reprehensible, either musically or mechanically, compared with the amount of skill and care so generally manifested.

The art of making large organs is yet but in slow process of growth in this country. Without doubt, several organs have been completed here which it would take some controversial intrepidity to put down as otherwise than large. Large they are as to number of pipes, yet lack well nigh every other element of greatness. Speaking generally, they are mere magnifications of small organs. They look as though they were built patch upon patch—a kind of practical addition-sums worked in timber—a species of wooden literature, without end of parentheses and after-thoughts screwed on at each moment's convenience. In plainer phrase, they shew too little the thorough subjection of the carpenter to the draughtsman—the well-digested all-embracing plan—the full development of detail on paper—the engineering spirit, in short, necessary to perfect the vast and complicated machine properly styled a large organ. Putting the metropolis aside, there are a score or more of organ-builders dispersed over the provinces, quite ready, we venture to say, to undertake at a moment's notice the construction of an instrument four times as large as any of the Dutch leviathans, without fear, halting, or scruples of conscience; and yet we know full well that, even London included, the result, with very few exceptions, would be total and miserable failure. About our short-comings in this respect there is no especial miracle. The absence, in all our organ-builders, of an appropriately scientific education, and the presence, in a large majority, of unbounded prejudice and conceit, are quite sufficient to account for their hitherto slow advance towards real excellence. They know, practically, that certain masses of material have to be disposed in certain spaces, that frictional and pneumatic resistance has to be overcome, and that motive power has to be conducted hither and thither as occasion demands; but of mechanics scientifically—of the relations of power and resistance, of the just direction of forces, of the dynamic value of materials, and of the laws of pneumatic pressure, they know, speaking generally, next to nothing.

Digitized by Google

All this, of course, has reference to the work, or material structure of the organ. In the musical part of the matter,—the selection of tones, the just variety and proportion of scales, and the voicing, or mise en harmonie, as our French neighbours have it, the best of our builders are considerably more advanced. Yet even here, they are too much manufacturers and traditionalists,—too little artists and experimenters. They have too staunch a faith in their own merits, and too thoroughly the John Bull contempt for their foreign rivals.

The interior of the Panopticon organ, viewed mechanically, illustrates the remarks just made, both as regards the evident improvement now in progress among our builders, and the difficulties here to be encountered in the structure of so large an instrument. Neither in plan nor execution is the mechanism of the Panopticon organ perfect. We could not, for instance, compare it—neither, we are sure, would Mr. Hill himself do so—with that of the Paris Madeleine. The English public and their guides, the professors, have as yet not the taste to exact, nor have our workmen the skill to achieve, the thoughtful and exquisite finish of Cavaillé's performance. Yet Mr. Hill's grand organ, if it will not bear these extreme tests of comparison, is by much in advance of everything that he or any of his countrymen had previously completed. It is the best, the most perfect thing of the kind in England; and, so being, is eminently worthy the careful examination of all who are interested in the progress of organ-building. The disposition of the frame-work of so large an instrument is no trifling matter. Masses of material, of great weight and magnitude, frequently separated from each other by considerable intervals—in this instance peculiarly so, owing to the optical necessities before spoken of—have to be supported in all kinds of positions, and often at great elevations, by such an arrangement of frame-work as, while it affords all requisite strength, shall not, in the shaping and position of its materials, prevent the readiest access of eye and hand for such reparation and adjustment as the more delicate parts of the machinery may require. All this, with some trifling exceptions, has been skilfully and carefully effected at the Panopticon. Furthermore we must notice, in this place, the very capital idea of making the main timbers of the frame hollow; by which arrangement, while retaining sufficient strength for their more obvious office, they are made to serve as conduits of communication between the bellows and sound-boards, and thus dispense with those very necessary but troublesome appendages, the ordinary wind-trunks. This improvement—trifling as it may seem—is sufficient to assert for Mr. Hill the possession of a high order of constructive faculty,—to be further developed, we hope, in his next large work. The sound-boards are of excellent workmanship and unusually large dimensions. In this last particular we recognize an unvarying and important feature of Mr. Hill's practice. He, more than any of our builders, seems to appreciate the fact, that, without ample room round all the pipes on the sound-boards, it is impossible to produce the quality of a grand organ. With the small and crowded sound-boards which too commonly prevail, there come a host of evils—easily overlooked, as a matter of cause, but plentifully apparent in the general result. Insufficient supply of wind and consequent langnor of tone; flue-pipes so huddled and jostled together that they may be said to speak in the condensed atmosphere of their own breath; reeds whose bells touch and overshadow each other in every direction;—none of these things can consist with purity and grandeur of sound. Even bearable justness of tuning itself, under these circumstances, can only be arrived at by a system of coaxing and compromise, which sacrifices quality at every step. In fact, an organ-pipe can no more tell its story, in such a case, than a man can exert his strength in a crowd. But, on taking a tour among the sound-boards of the Panopticon organ (and which, by the by, there is plenty of room to do without danger to oneself or the sonorous army at one's feet), it is impossible not to be struck with the appearance of dignity and importance about everything around one. There is no big bully of a diapason treading on a brother's toes who is only lucky enough to find some uneasy place on the outskirts of the tuneful assemblage;—no little fussy mixtures hissing and spitting down their neighbour's throats;—no lank trombones warped and twisted out of their natural rectitude, because their minor kinsfolk lack elbow-room to say their say amidst the brassy conclave. Everything looks calm, grand, orderly, and business-like. We feel at once that the array of pipes before us is prepared to speak, and to speak with a purpose;—we recognise in the whole arrangement the spirit of large-organ-making.

The mechanism of the key-actions is, for the most part, very satisfactory. It has not the laborious and artist-like finish of the French work, but is clean, sound, and effective. In proof, we may state that the touches of the swell and solo organs, which are unaided by the pneumatic apparatus, cannot have a less extent of movement than fifty feet, and have—on account of the great lateral separation of the sound-boards—the extra disadvantage of double roller-boards, are exceedingly light, elastic, and agreeable. The pneumatic apparatus attached to the great organ keys is very well worth inspection as, perhaps, the best piece of handicraft about the whole instrument, and, with all its array of couplers, acts to perfection. To the general arrangement of the key-movements, however, we have two objections to make. The unusual extent to which the great-organ sound-boards are laterally separated (on account of the "hole" so often mentioned) made the ordinary form of the connection between the pneumatic apparatus and the pallets somewhat dangerous. Mr. Hill has accordingly substituted a modification which has, at least, the credit of considerable ingenuity. But it is also open to the reproach of being needlessly roundabout, and, from the frequent crossings in its planes of motion, imposes unnecessary frictional labour on the pneumatic apparatus by which it is wrought. And in the second place, we must object that the main horizontal lines of trackers, from the keys, traverse the interior of the organ at a very inconvenient level—too high to walk over, too low to walk under them — whereby a large amount of space is practically destroyed, and the entire freedom of perambulation so essential in instruments of this class, is rendered impossible. By these faulty arrangements also, and by the unnecessary crowding of other parts about the spot, instant access to the pneumatic apparatus is made a much more difficult affair than it should be. As the bellows do not stand within the organ, and as the area occupied by the instrument is very considerable, these constructive defects might have been easily avoided.

We must next notice, as a highly creditable evidence of care, the employment of the pneumatic apparatus specially for the pedal organ; whereby the performer, in executing difficult passages, is freed from the annoyance of great depth or weight in the pedal touch. The same useful auxiliary is applied to the draw-stop action, and with most excellent result. Every one who has played on a large organ—except in the case of the best French examples—must have experienced the fuss, worry, and expenditure of strength to be endured in the management of its registers. Some of this inconvenience is due to the distance which the motion has to be carried, and to the vis inertia of the materials employed; but much more to the want of mechanical skill in planning the course of the action, and to the clumsy style in which the work is executed. By a very adroit use of Mr. Barker's invention, however, all this evil is avoided at the Panopticon. The registers of the most distant sound-boards—those of the swell and pedal organs, for example—are commanded by a mere feather-weight of exertion; and as the composition pedals are also connected to this mechanism, they partake of all its advantages.

Digitized by Google

The bellows are placed in an apartment behind the organ, and are wrought by a small oscillating steam-engine. For the mechanical arrangements of this department, of course the engineering staff of the establishment, not Mr. Hill, is responsible, and we are bound to say they are anything but creditable. A certain speed of piston, it is well known, is essential to regularity of action, especially in the case of small engines, and as this speed would be neither safe nor convenient for the feeders of an organ-bellows, the crank-shaft to which these are attached should have been on a second-motion, and driven at a much lower rate of speed than the crank-shaft of the engine itself. As, however, in this case, the feeders are connected directly with the fly-wheel shaft of the engine, a vigilant superintendance is necessary to correct the evils of a motion, irregular if sufficiently slow, and if regular too rapid for security so far as the wear of the feeders is concerned. Furthermore, a mechanical head would not have required five minutes to devise some automatic means of regulation whereby the expenditure of steam in the engine should have been exactly proportioned to the expenditure of wind in the organ.

In concluding our review of the mechanical department of this organ, we must again record the pleasure we have derived from its inspection. It is not perfect; and we have elsewhere stated why perfection in this species of art is not yet to be expected among us. But it makes a great stride in the hoped-for direction. It atones for hosts of old faults, and gives abundant promise for the future. No one who knows the English organ as it has been, and has sufficient acquaintance with technicalities to perceive what it may and ought to arrive at, can examine Mr. Hill's new work without high gratification at the many evidences of unsparing skill, care, and artist-like endeavour, with which he has distinguished it.

The musical qualities of the Panopticon organ will be considered at length in our next paper.

---

Madame Oury's Matinée Musicale was given on Monday last, at the residence of Lady Vassall Webster, Granard Lodge, Roehampton. The services of Herr Reichardt, Sig. Ciabatta, Mr. Allan Irving, M. Jules Lefort, and Mad. Marie Cabel—German, Italian, English, and French, by the way—were retained as vocalists; while M. Jacquard, the talented violoncellist, was added to M. and Mad. Oury, on the violin and piano, as instrumentalists. The concert was further varied and enlivened by the performances of M. Oury's German band, who played in the gardens at the conclusion of the in-doors entertainment. Mad. Oury executed some pleasing bagatelles of her own composition, and performed a fantasia on airs from Rigoletto in brilliant style and with great applause. She also joined M. Oury in a duo concertante on Les Huguenots, for piano and violin. The vocal features were Herr Reichardt's "Adelaida," and Mad. Cabel's air from La Sirène and a cavatina from La Promise. Herr Reichardt gave Beethoven's cantate with great feeling and expression; and Mad. Cabel enchanted her hearers with the charms of her voice and the wonders of her execution. Sig. Vera presided at the piano.

Madame Nissen-Saloman's Soiree Musicale was given on Wednesday, at the Educational Institute, Cadogan Gardens, Sloane-street. The vocalists, in addition to Madame Nissen-Saloman, were Signors Gardoni and Flavio, Mr. Allan Irving, and M. Jules Lefort; the instrumentalists, M. Jaques Blumenthal, Herr Pauer, and Mr. Charles Salaman (pianoforte), Mr. John Thomas (harp), Herr Deichman (violin), M. Leon Jacquard (violoncello), and M. Vivier (horn). The most admired performances were M. Vivier's exquisite romance, "Une Plainte," for voice and horn obbligato—admirably sung by Madame Nissen-Saloman, and loudly applauded. The horn part was played to perfection by M. Vivier himself. Rosenhain's second trio in D minor, Op. 33, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was executed in capital style by Mr. Charles Salaman, Herr Deichmann, and M. Jacquard; two Swedish romances, by Mad. Nissen-Saloman, were encored; and M. Blumenthal's romance, "Rapelle-toi," was well sung by Sig. Gardoni. The concert, which was under high patronage, attracted a numerous and fashionable assembly. M. Benedict, Sig. Pilotti, and Sig. Vera, were the conductors.

Madame Dreyfus gave a morning concert at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Monday last. The selection was supported by Mdlle. Sedlatzek, Mad. F. Lablache, Signor Gardoni, Signor F. Lablache, and Mr. Eustace, as vocalists; and Signor Li Calsi (pianoforte), Signor Noronha (violin), M. Paque (violoncellist), and Mad. Dreyfus (harmonium.) The interest of the concert attached to the bénéficiaire, whose performances last year on the harmonium, an instrument invented and perfected by M. Alexandres, were so much admired. The harmonium is of the family of the seraphine, but an immense improvement on that once popular instrument, all its defects having been remedied, and sundry new inventions applied in its construction. It is admirably adapted to small churches, chapels, and schools, where it is now extensively used, and, as a drawing-room organ, it will be found greatly useful. In the accompaniment of sacred music it possesses certain advantages over the piano. Mad. Dreyfus' performance set off the harmonium with advantage. Her playing was characterised by a simplicity and plainness in good keeping with the music she executed on Monday. Her best efforts were in the fantaisie from the Prophète, and in the trio, with pianoforte and violoncello, by Sebastian Bach; in both she was distinctly applauded. Signor Gardoni sang two romanzas; Mad. Lablache sang a homely ballad; Mdlle. Sedlatzek introduced the "No, no, no," cavatina from the Huguenots, and Mr. Eustace sang Esser's "Fond heart, adieu." The rooms were exceedingly full. Mr. Frank Mori accompanied the vocal music.

Mdlle. Louise Christine received her numerous and distinguished patrons at a very interesting Soirée Musicale, held at her residence in Eaton-square, on the 23rd ult. It will be remembered that Mdlle. Christine made her début as a harpist, with much success, during the last winter. Since that time, she has been repeatedly heard in public, and her reputation now, as a clever and graceful player, is very extensive. On the evening in question, Mdlle. Christine played several solos, by Alvars, with much good taste, and, in a duet with Miss A. Goddard, displayed equal power and feeling. All the efforts of the fair bénéficiaire were well received, and a song of her composition (rendered by Madame F. Lablache), was much applauded. The names of the excellent artists who assisted Mdlle. Christine, are as numerous as the distinguished persons who in the French sense, also "assisted" at the concert. Suffice it to say, that the former party were successful in entertaining their aristocratic visitors, who appeared to enjoy every item of the programme.

Madame Corinna de Luigi and Signor Lorenzo gave a selection of music at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday morning, under very distinguished patronage. The vocal engagements were Signors Belletti and Gardoni, Mr. Allan Irving, Madame Angles Fortuni, and Miss Alleyne. Madame de Luigi, who has a fine mezzo-soprano voice, executed "Non più mesta" with skill and effect, and sang in several duets and trios. Madame Angles Fortuni confirmed the favourable impression she made on the occasion of her début at Drury Lane. Miss Alleyne (not the fair Grace, but the little black-eyed, dark-haired), helped herself to the lion's share of the laurels. She was loudly encored in two arias—the latter, "Come per me sereno," from La Sonnambula. Signor Lorenzo, who cannot fail to be remembered at Her Majesty's Theatre, has a fine bass voice and made a highly favourable impression in a "Romanza" of Verdi. Mr. Allan Irving gave one of the tenor songs from La Favorita; and Signor Bazzini, in a solo on the violin, elicited loud applause. The room was fully and fashionably attended. Among the visitors were the Countess Walewski and Lady Jersey.

Miss Rosetta Vinning, King's Scholar of the Royal Academy of Music, has left that Institution to commence practising as professor of music and singing in the county of Devon. On leaving the Academy she obtained a first class certificate. Miss Rosetta Vinning received instructions at various times from Mr. Balsir Chatterton, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Macfarren, all of whom testify to her abilities and capacity as a teacher.

Digitized by Google

MR. MACREADY AND THE BIRMINGHAM AND MIDLAND INSTITUTE.—We have great pleasure in laying before our readers the following copy of a letter received by the Artizans' Committee, formed to aid in augmenting the funds of the Institute, from the eminent tragedian, Mr. Macready. The prospect of again hearing the fervid thoughts of our own Shakspeare embodied by the eloquent voice—which we feared was silent for ever—of one whose fame is so dear to us, is a pleasure of no ordinary kind. The spirit in which the letter is written, and the object in whose behalf the tender of his estimable aid is made, render the anticipations of Mr. Macready's visit still more pleasurable. The following is the letter:—

"Sherborne House, Sherborne, Dorset, June 7th, 1854.

"DEAR SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 29th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a resolution passed by the Artizans' Committee of the Birmingham and Midland Institute, requesting a Dramatic Reading in aid of their subscriptions.

"I cannot express in terms too forcible the degree of sympathy, and the earnest gratification, with which I observe the growth of such associations throughout the country, believing, as I do, the elevation and enlightenment of the many to be the only security for the maintenance of order, that essential good, and for the permanence of our national prosperity.

"It was with the deepest interest, therefore, that I read the reports of the meetings in which your Institution originated; and I should be really delighted (I cannot adopt a more formal or less hearty word) if I were able to contribute in the humblest degree towards the advancement of the objects proposed in its formation. But, unhappily, I cannot calculate upon my health, as once I could, nor have I from the discontinuance of their exercise, the confidence in my powers on which I could formerly rely.

"Still, though very loth again to confront a public audience, I am anxiously desirous of being associated with your Institution, and would overcome many scruples to realise the wish, and to testify at the same time the feelings of attachment which, unimpaired by time, I still cherish for the home of my boyhood.

"If it accords with the views and wishes of the committee, I will endeavour to arrange, for some evening late in the autumn, or towards the close of the year, a Reading, which I hope may give them satisfaction. "I remain, dear sir, yours very faithfully,

"Mr. Frederick Grew, Hon. Sec., &c." "W. C. MACREADY.

DUBLIN.—The annual concerts of Mrs. and the Misses Allen took place at their Academy, 5, Gardiner's-row, Rutland-square, on Friday and Saturday last. The class who played the early lessons last year performed this year several pieces of Logier, Herz, and other composers, in concert, with solos interspersed, while the more advanced class, Mendelssohn's Wedding March, Reminiscence de Beethoven, Haydn's symphony in D, Heller's Hommage à Schubert, Beethoven's celebrated overture to Egmont, Meyerbeer's overture to Les Huguenots, Herold's overture to Zampa, Reis's Triumphal March, in concert (the four last pieces engaging twenty performers.) The solo pieces were chosen from the modern compositions. The Misses Allen performed some duets for two pianos. The concerts commenced each day shortly after one o'clock, and did not terminate until nearly six o'clock. Upwards of two hundred persons were present, all of whom seemed pleased with the young performers, whose playing and taste gave proof of the care, attention, and judicious system of tuition which have gained for the academy a fashionable celebrity.

MUSIC.—I consider music to be the most graceful accomplishment and delightful recreation that adorns this hard-working world, and renovates our busy, overcharged existence. Its negative import is great. It provides an amusement for our people, and keeps many from the ale-house and midnight brawl. Its positive importance and value are inestimable; for the combining chords that regulate our whole being are so interwoven, sense with principle, that the very character assumes a clothing from external circumstances. I am aware that, from every altar, however pure and sacred, fire might be stolen and desecrated; but we should emulate the flame which, while it enlivens all around, points to the skies. I would not confine music to any walk in life. Not alone in the sacred cathedral, not alone in the costly theatre, nor in the gilded saloons, nor confine it to six-guinea stalls; but I would hear our nightingales sing in every grove and trill on every bough. I would have the happy art enliven the domestic tea-table, add variety to the village-school, and linger in the sanctuary. —Lord Carlisle.

FOREIGN AUTHORS' COPYRIGHT IN ENGLAND.

(From the Musical Times.)

THIS protracted matter still rests undecided. On the 4th, the Judges Crompton, Williams, Erle, Wightman, Maule, and Coleridge, delivered their opinion in favour of the right; while the Judges Alderson, Parke, Pollock, and Jervis, took the opposite side. The final judgment of the Lords—who are represented by Lord Brougham, Lord St. Leonards, and Lord Cranworth (the Lord Chancellor)—remains still to be given.

We have never been able to account for the doubts which appear to weigh with the minority of the Judges on this question. Copyright is granted to the "author of any book first printed and published in this country." On the most careful examination of the words of all the copyright acts since Queen Anne, there is nothing to limit the meaning of the words "Author of any book" to the subjects or to residents in this country, but quite the contrary; for the condition ("first printing and publishing in this country,") can be as well fulfilled by a foreign author's representative as if he were here to do it himself; the benefit to English literature is thoroughly complied with, by his providing that his book shall be printed in England, and the act gives copyright to the authors who do so. In the VIIth Section of 41 Geo. III. c. 107, it speaks of it not being lawful to import, etc. "any printed books first composed, written, or printed and published in any part of the said United Kingdom"—evidently contemplating the case of printed and published books, composed or written out of England.

In the early books of the Stationers' Company, several foreigners entered for their copyright; and if we wish to gather the intention of Anne's Act, we ought to remember that the most important books were then published in Holland, or the Low Countries, and that it was the English policy to induce all authors to print their books in England, so to advance literature, and they offered the substantial reward of copyright in return.

With what honesty can this country distinguish between the brains it may rob and those it may not, by the mere accident of the author's birth-place.

The VIIth section of 8 Anne, cap. 19, evidently contemplates that foreigners will avail themselves of the Act which confers copyright on the "Authors of any book," as it provides that nothing of the Act shall be construed to hinder the importation of books in Greek, Latin, or any other foreign language printed beyond the sea.

It is to be hoped that the Lords, to whom this important question is now referred, will make an early decision, and that it may be in accordance with national honesty and the real interests of literature, securing the Author's rights in the fruit of his own brain, whatever may happen to be the land of his birth or adoption,

---

EMILE PRUDENT has left London for Paris. He returns to England in October.

THE "STUTTGARTER MUSIKSCHULE."—Of all higher schools of music, which, in imitation of that in Leipsic, have been founded in Munich, Berlin, Cologne, and other cities of Germany, there is not perhaps one which can boast of having made so much progress in so short a space of time as that under the direction of Hofrath Schilling in Stuttgart. Among other promising pupils is a young pianist of the name of Truka, from Graz, who bids fair to become one of the first artists of the day. A young lady, also, of the Heinefetter family, promises one day to rank high as a singer.—From the "Hamburger Fahrerzeitung."

MRS. MORGAN CLIFFORD gave a Soirée Musicale at her residence, 15, Eaton-place, Belgrave-square, last Thursday week, to a large circle of her fashionable friends, when the following selection of music was performed, under the direction of Dr. Wylde:—

Scena, (Der Freischütz), Miss Grace Alleyne, Weber; Sonata, piano and violin, Dr. Wylde and Herr Jansa, Beethoven; Song, "L'Addio," Mad. Amadei, Mozart; Aria, Sig. Ciabatta, Rossini; Fantasia, pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss, Liszt; Bolero, Miss Grace Alleyne, Mercadante; Melodies for the Violin, Herr Jansa, Jansa; Lieder ohne Wörte, pianoforte, Mdlle. Clauss, Mendelssohn; Duet, (Semiramide), Mad. Amadei and Sig. Ciabatta, Rossini.

---

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ENSUING WEEK.

TO-DAY.—Orchestral Union, Fourth and Last Concert, Hanover-square Rooms, Three o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—Mdlle. Vernetti Paravalli, Annual Concert, Hanover-square Rooms.——Mr. W. E. Evans, Classical Concert, Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, Eight o'clock.

THURSDAY.—Mr. Blagrove's Violin Soirée, Blagrove Rooms, Eight o'clock.

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENTS.

CONCERTINA QUARTET CONCERT.—Mr. W. E. EVANS (of Cheltenham) begs respectfully to announce a CLASSICAL CONCERT by his Quartet Party, assisted by the eminent artistes, Mdlle. Ferrari, Sig. Ferrari, Sig. Nappi, Sig. Giulio Regondi, and Sig. Li Calsi, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Wednesday Evening, July 19th, 1854, commencing at Eight o'clock. Tickets, 5s.; Reserved ditto, 7s. 6d.; to be had at Messrs. Wheatstone's, and principal music-shops.

MADLLE. VERNETTI PARAVALLI, from the Theatres of Milan, Venice, and Turin, has the honour to announce that her First Annual Grand Concert will take place on Wednesday, July 19th, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the most distinguished patronage, and assisted by eminent artists; amongst whom, Madlle. Annie de Lara. Reserved seats, 10s.; Tickets, 7s.; Orchestra, 5s. Further particulars will be duly announced. To be had at R. W. Ollivier's, 19, Old Bond-street; Cramer, Beale, and Co's., Regent-street; Leader and Cock, New Bond-street; and at Madlle. Paravalli's, 6, York-street, Portman-square.

T. SPENCER, Music Paper Ruler, 4, Stafford-place, Vauxhall Bridge-road, near the Bridge, solicits the attention of the musical world to his List of Prices, which will be forwarded, post free, on application. Very superior Paper, 12 or 14 staves, at 16s., 18s., 20s., 22s., and 24s. per Ream, and from 1s. per Quire.

BOOSE'S NEW MODEL CORNET-À-PISTONS. Price Seven Guineas. In calling attention to a new and very beautiful model Cornet-a-Piston which Messrs. Boosey and Sons have lately completed, they would beg to observe that, with the assistance of the most able professors in London, they have succeeded in uniting in this instrument a perfect intonation with a clear, rich, and brilliant tone never before attained to such perfection in the cornet-à-piston. It can, further, be played without effort, even by one inexperienced in the use of brass instruments. BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers and Music Publishers to Her Majesty's Army, and the Honourable East India Company's Service, &c.

MILITARY MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Militia Regiments or parties joining Bands, and in want of Instruments, Music, or a Band Master, are invited to apply to Messrs. BOOSEY AND SONS, 28, Holles-street, Military Instrument Manufacturers, and Music Publishers to her Majesty's Army and the Hon. E. I. C.'s Service. The high character of their Instruments and Journals for Reed and Brass Bands are acknowledged throughout the Army.—A Register kept of the most experienced Band Masters.

BOOSE'S BRASS BAND JOURNAL.—The Annual Subscription reduced one-half, namely, from four guineas to two guineas. Messrs. Boosey & Sons, in announcing the above important reduction in the price of Boosé's Brass Band Journal, commencing from May 15th, beg to inform their Subscribers that no reduction will take place in the quantity of matter in each number, which, as heretofore, will consist of a variety of quick steps, dances, and operatic pieces, &c. A number is published and forwarded to Subscribers on the 15th of every month. Price to Non-Subscribers, 5s. per number. This Journal can be performed by a Brass Band of any size. A list of back numbers may be had on application. Boosey & Sons, 28, Holles-street.

MR. JOHN THOMAS' NEW HARP COMPOSITIONS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| Spring—Characteristic Morceau ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Summer ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Autumn ditto ditto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| The Parting—Romance ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| The Tear ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu, my Native Country! ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Adieu de Salzbourg ... ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| Le Matin—Impromptu ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Le Soir ditto ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Four Recreations, in 4 Nos. ... ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |
| First Concerto ... ... ... ... ... ... | 9 | 6 |
| Andantino of ditto (arranged as a Duet for Harp and Piano) ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |

BOOSEY and SONS, 28, Holles-street.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI has removed to 22, Manchester-street, Manchester-square.

TO COUNTER TENOR SINGERS.—There is a Vacancy for an Alto Voice in the Choir of Winchester Cathedral. Candidates should be familiar with the Choral Service, and able to read music with facility. Persons of inferior qualifications need not apply. For particulars apply to J. Lampard, Esq., Southgate-street, Winchester.

RIGOLETTO.—The following numerous arrangements of this very popular Opera are now ready.

VOCAL—THE ENTIRE OPERA, 12s.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Caro Nome che il mio Core (sung by Mdlle. Bosio) | Sc. e Polac... S. | 2 | 6 |
| Cortigiani, vill Razza Dannata ... ... | Aria ..... B. | 3 | 0 |
| Figlia! mio Padre! a te dappresso ... | Duetto, S. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| La Donna è Mobile (sung by Sig. Mario) | Canzone ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Parmi veder le Lagrime ... ... ... | Aria ..... T. | 2 | 6 |
| Questa o quella per me pari sono (sung by Sig. Mario) | Ballata . T. | 2 | 0 |
| Signor, nè Principe io lo vorrei! ... ... | Duetto, T. & S. | 4 | 0 |
| Somiglia un Apollo quel Giovane ... | Sc. Terz. e Tempesta | 5 | 0 |
| Tutte le Feste, al Tempio ... ... | Sc. e Duet ... | 4 | 0 |
| Un dì, se ben rammentomi ... ... | Quartetto, S. C. T. & B. | 4 | 0 |
| V' ho ingannato—colpevole fui ... ... | Sc. e Du fin ... | 3 | 0 |
| Possente amor mi chiami ... ... ... | Melodia ... T. | 2 | 0 |
| Zitti, zitti, moviamo ... ... ... | Terz..S. T. & B. | 3 | 0 |

ENGLISH VERSION.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Fair shines the Moon to-night (La Donna) ... ... ... | | 2 | 0 |
| Ditto ... ... ... ... ... | as a Duet ... | 2 | 6 |

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Voss ... | Grand Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | "La Donna," Barcarolle, Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Galop di Bravura, Rigoletto ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia (Quartett) ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Oesten ... ... | Homage à Verdi (Fant.), Rigoletto ... | 3 | 0 |
| H. Cramer ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Kuhe ... ... | Fantaisie, Brillante Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Mdme. ... | Fantaisie, Rigoletto ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Truzzi ... | The Minuet in Rigoletto ... ... | 1 | 6 |
| Benedict ... ... | Grand Fantaisie ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Oury, Madame ... | Grand Galop ... ... ... ... | 2 | 0 |
| Reyloff ... | Bouquet de Mélodies ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE, FOUR HANDS.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| The Favourite Airs from Rigoletto, by Nordmann, in two books, each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | | 6 | 0 |
| Nordmann ... | La Donna è Mobile ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| „ ... | Bella Figlia ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| „ ... | Galop di bravura—Rigoletto ... ... | 4 | 0 |

DANCE MUSIC.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| „ ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| Montagne ... | Festa da Ballo, Galop ... ... ... | 2 | 6 |

FLUTE AND PIANO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Clinton ... ... | Two Mosaiques from Rigoletto, each ... | 4 | 0 |

CONCERTINA AND PIANO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Regondi ... ... | Three Potpourris, each ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bosen ... ... | Three Potpourris, each ... ... | 3 | 0 |

CORNET AND PIANO.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Stanton Jones ... | Three Potpourris, each ... ... | 3 | 0 |

ORCHESTRE.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Tinney ... ... | Rigoletto Quadrille ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Laurent ... | Rigoletto Valse ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Tinney ... ... | Mario Valse ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| Montagne ... | Festa da Ballo Galop ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |

MILITARY BAND.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Boosé ... ... | Grand Selection Rigoletto (from 'Boosé's Journal') ... ... ... ... | 15 | 0 |

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.

Digitized by Google

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Operas and Concerts in the Provinces during August and September next:—

Mdlle. CRUVELLI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Mdlle. MARAI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Madame COTTI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor LUCHESI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor TAGLIAFICO,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor SUSINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor POLONINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND
Signor TAMBERLIK,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
REGISSEUR,
Mr. A. HARRIS,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND CONDUCTOR,
M. JULES BENEDICT.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.—The Pieces played by this distinguished Pianiste, at her Concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, London, were:—Mayer's Etude, Op. 61, "La Fontaine," price 3s.; Chopin's Nocturne, in F. Minor, 2s.; and Kullak's Fantaisie Etude, "Perles d'Ecume," in which she was honoured by a double encore and a recall. London: Copyrights published only by Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

LES DIAMANS DE LA COURONNE.—Madame MARIE CABEL.—The Airs from Auber's celebrated Opera, now performing at the St. James's Theatre, are published for Pianoforte Solo, in 5 books, price 5s. each; Duets, in 3 books, 7s. each. The Overture, Solo, 3s. 6d.; Duet, 5s. Two Sets of Quadrilles (Solo and Duet), by Musard, 4s. each; also arrangements for Orchestra, Military Band, and Pianoforte, by Herz, Burgmuller, Cramer, Bertini, Wolff, &c. London: Wessel and Co., 229, Regent-street.

HARMONIUMS.—CAUTION.—George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond-street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Oratorios and Concerts in the Provinces during October and November next:—

Madame NOVELLO,
Mrs. LOCKEY,
Mrs. ENDERSSOHN,
Mr. LOCKEY,
Mr. HOBBS,
Mr. H. PHILLIPS,
AND
Mr. SIMS REEVES.
PIANISTE,
Mr. J. L. HATTON.
CONDUCTOR,
Mr. LAND.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL, BRADFORD, YORKS.—The Committee of Management are desirous of making arrangements with a competent TEACHER of MUSIC for conducting Singing Classes, on a large scale, in connexion with St. George's Hall, for which the Committee are willing to afford every facility. Applications with particulars to be addressed to Charles Ollivier, Secretary. St. George's Hall, July, 1854.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall; Messrs. Barret, Lazarus, Baumann, Remusat, Lovell Phillips, Mount, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, D. Godfrey, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, Zeiss, Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crozier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged for Oratorios, Operas, and Concerts, in town or country. All communications to be addressed to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artizans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION, and SOFT AND FAIR HANDS AND ARMS, are fully realized and sustained by the use of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Preparation, which, by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels of the SKIN, promotes a healthy tone so essential to its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance. Freckles, tan, pimples, spots, discoloration, and other cutaneous visitations are eradicated by the KALYDOR, and give place to a radiant bloom and transparency of complexion.

During the heat and dust of summer, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

CAUTION.—The words ROWLANDS' KALYDOR are on the wrapper of each bottle, and their signature, A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, in red ink, at foot.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 29. SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

EPITOME OF THE CONTROVERSY

CONCERNING THE AUTHENTICITY AND HISTORICAL ORIGIN OF MOZART'S "REQUIEM."

It was generally known that, at Mozart's decease, his last composition, the Requiem, was not finished, and that three pieces, the "Sanctus," "Benedictus," and "Agnus Dei" were the work of Süssmayer, who, by adding them, completed the score. The fact, however, of the incomplete state of the Requiem was some thirty years later, so to say, forgotten, although it had never been previously disputed or doubted, since the many different editions of the Requiem had been published under the name of Mozart alone, and similarly mentioned in conversation, newspapers, and advertisements. But the long forgotten circumstance was again mooted in 1825, in the Cäcilia, a new musical journal, founded and edited by Gottfried Weber, a celebrated critic, and author of a theory of musical composition. Herr Weber printed in his paper a letter addressed, on the 8th December, 1800, to Herren Breitkopf and Härtel, music publishers in Leipsic, and made public by them in the course of the same year. The letter was as follows:

"Mozart's composition is so unique, and, I am bold enough to assert, so far beyond the reach of the majority of living musicians, that any imitator, especially if part of the work were not his own, would even meet with a worse fate than the raven that tricked itself out in peacock's feathers. The circumstance which has given rise to our present correspondence, namely, the completion of the Requiem being entrusted to me, was brought about in the following manner. Mozart's widow perceived very clearly that her husband's posthumous works would be greatly sought after: Death, however, had overtaken him while engaged upon the Requiem. In consequence of this several composers were asked to complete it, but some were unable to undertake the task from press of business, and others unwilling to compromise their own talent by placing it in juxtaposition with that of Mozart. At last, the work was intrusted to me; it was known that, during the lifetime of Mozart, I had often played and sung the pieces he had already composed; that he had frequently spoken with me concerning the development of the work; and that he had communicated to me the plan, as well as the principle features of his instrumentation. All I dare hope is: that I have been fortunate enough so, at least, to have executed the trust reposed in me, that connoisseurs may here and there discover some few traces of his never to be forgotten precepts. Mozart himself completed the four vocal parts and bass, together with the figuring, of the "Requiem" and 'Kyrie'—'Dies iræ'—and 'Domine Jesu Christe,' but merely sketched out, here and there, the motive of the instrumentation. In the 'Dies iræ,'* his last verse was—'qua resurget ex favilla' (the second verse of the "Lacrymosa"), and his share of the work the same as in the first pieces. From the verse: 'Judicandus homo reus est,' the 'Dies iræ,' 'Sanctus,' 'Benedictus' and 'Agnus Dei,' were written entirely by myself, except that I took the liberty, in order to give the work more uniformity (he means unity) to repeat the fugue of the 'Kyrie,' at the verse: 'Cum Sanctis' etc."

Since this document served as the foundation of the whole controversy of which we are now treating, and Süssmayer's words form the only historical testimony, based upon an intimate acquaintance with the facts, as far as the musical part of the question is concerned, namely, that which involves the authenticity of the Requiem, and the manner in which it was completed,—we are bound to state at length our opinion of the contents of his letter. Süssmayer, who, in 1791, was hardly five and-twenty years of age, is universally acknowledged to have been Mozart's favourite pupil; and, for many years previous to the epoch just mentioned, his most intimate friend, initiated into all his musical ideas; his copyist; his assistant; even his collaborateur, and almost a member of his family. He accompanied Mozart on his last journey, and it was he who wrote the recitative to Titus, because Mozart had not the time himself. To him, also, are universally ascribed two pieces of the same opera—an air, though I do not know which, and the pleasing duettino in C major, between Sextus and Annius. More than this, if we can place any confidence in the assertion of Herr Seyfried,* another, but much younger, pupil of Mozart, the master wrote in fact nothing of the score of La Clemenza di Tito but the overture, the trios, and the two finales, all the rest having been instrumented, under his supervision, by Süssmayer, who composed, alone, the airs of Servilia, Publius, and Annius. Herr Seyfried obtained these particulars from Dussek, the friend in whose house Mozart resided at Prague. I think this is sufficient proof that Süssmayer was a musician of great talent; most undoubtedly well skilled in the technical part of his art, possessing no common intelligence, and, above all things, completely initiated in the secret of Mozart's style, since he must have possessed all these qualities to induce a man like Mozart to employ him in the composition of one of his operas. In addition to this, we learn from Gerber's Lexicon, that, after having been appointed Capellmeister at the National-Theater in Vienna, Süssmayer composed sixteen works for that establishment, one of which, Der Spiegel von Arkadien, was successful throughout Germany, and took its place by the side of the national music. Another work, I due Gobbi (the Two Hunchbacks), which he composed in 1796, with Paer, created a furore in London. Had his earthly career been longer, he would, perhaps, have become one of the first dramatic composers of his country,

* In order to render the allusions clearer to my readers, I must observe that, under the title "Dies iræ," I not only include the piece beginning with these words, but also the "Tuba mirum," "Rex tremendæ majestatis," "Recordare," "Confutatis," and "Lacrymosa." The fugue, "Quam olim," and the "Hostias," form a part of the "Domine," which Süssmayer declares to be Mozart's, as well as the "Requiem," with the "Kyrie" and "Dies iræ," as far as the seventh bar of the "Lacrymosa," which Süsmayer is said to have completed.

* The same who published Beethoven's Studies.

Digitized by Google

but he died at the age of seven-and-thirty, that is to say, almost as young as his master.

Such a man was the completer of the Requiem, and no ignorant copyist, as several of Herr Weber's opponents have endeavoured to show, although, by so doing, they merely prove that the epithet of ignorant may more justly be applied to themselves. We feel very much inclined to believe the sincerity of one whom Mozart, in some measure, adopted, but still, after a little reflection, to any one possessing a certain amount of critical power, the question will arise, whether all the assertions contained in Süssmayer's letter are to be credited? Some of them certainly appear indisputable, and are really so. Let us begin with these. Süssmayer went through, with Mozart, several times, the pieces which were completed—namely: the "Requiem," with the "Kyrie," the "Dies iræ," and the "Domine," that is, more than four-fifths of the work as it at present stands, not even reckoning the final pieces, which are nothing but a repetition of No. 1, from the verse, "Te decet hymnus." Mozart had explained to Süssmayer the plan and principal features of the instrumentation; the four vocal parts were already composed; a figured bass determined the whole progress of the melody, and the commencement of the various orchestral figures was noted in the original manuscript. From this it follows that, in order to complete the manuscript as Mozart himself would have completed it, Süssmayer had only to draw a little upon his memory, and it is easy to perceive that he did not neglect to do so, if we only examine the instrumentation of the pieces in question. It is evident that no one else was capable of finishing a work, so much beyond the majority of the musicians of the day, although to Süssmayer it was an easy and almost mechanical task. And yet the completion of the Requiem has been ascribed to others rather than to him! and he, the recipient of the great composer's thoughts; he, who knew by heart all that was omitted on paper, could wait, with incomprehensible phlegma and indifference, until, when others had rejected it, the proposition was finally made to him, instead of himself offering to undertake so honourable a task, and one which he alone was capable of accomplishing! What are we to think when we see him looking on and not troubling himself in the least about the masterpiece in question being delivered over to the unguided efforts of some other person whose conception of the work would not probably coincide, even after the lapse of ages, with the original one? What reply can be made when I add that, in this case, Süssmayer had a most sacred duty to perform? The chef-d'œuvre was confided to him with the greatest confidence in his probity, and he was answerable for it in the sight of Heaven and all Christian Europe. If this were not so, would Mozart have conferred with him so long concerning the Requiem? Why did he so carefully explain the plan and principal features of the instrumentation?—why speak with him on the subject only one hour before his death?—why did he this, if he had not felt that he was near his end, and in that dreadful moment was aware he had not finished his work, and that, therefore, Süssmayer would have to undertake the task? Is it to be believed, also, that the widow would apply to others when she could and ought to apply to Süssmayer alone, while the latter speaks of so remarkable a proceeding as of the most ordinary event? His behaviour appears as inexplicable as that of the widow. We shall, perhaps, hereafter be enabled to explain both one and the other anomaly.

I now come to a second point for consideration. Süssmayer asserts that the "Lacrymosa," one of the most touching and melodious parts of the work, was his production, from the line, "Qua resurget ex favilla," that is to say, from the seventh bar. It is true that the original manuscript, as we are acquainted with it, goes no farther, but there is a much more impartial witness than Süssmayer, and, according to his testimony, we are justified in believing the "Lacrymosa" to have been completed in Mozart's life time. This witness is Benedict Schack,* the first tenor in Schikaneder's theatre, and for whom the part of Tamino, in Die Zauberflöte, was composed. As a friend and frequent guest of Mozart at that period, he was perfectly acquainted with all the particulars relating to the Requiem, and speaks as follows:—

"As soon as a piece of the Requiem was finished, Mozart, sitting down at the piano, had it tried by his friends. Even the day before his death, he caused the score to be brought him, and, although in bed, sang the alto part himself. Schack sang the soprano; Hofer, Mozart's brother-in-law, the tenor; and Görl (for whom the part of Sarastro was written), the bass. They were beginning the "Lacrymosa," when Mozart burst into tears, and let fall the book. Eleven hours afterwards, he had ceased to live."

Everything in this account bears the impress of truth. The singers were all well known, and are individually named. They left off at the first bars of the "Lacrymosa," but it is a question whether Mozart's work left off there also. Schack does not say so; and it is the more improbable, as the "Domine," the fugue, "Quam olim," and the "Hostias," which follow the "Lacrymosa," were in the original manuscript, as Süssmayer himself confesses. Besides—and this is a far more weighty argument—it is only the custom to try finished pieces, or such as are so far complete as to contain, at least, some complete musical phrases. Would they then have commenced the "Lacrymosa," if not even the first part had been completed, and it had ended with the eighth bar? Most certainly not. They left off because the composer was overtaken by the pangs of death just as they had commenced this mournful composition.

After four-fifths of the work have been secured in pleno for the composer, there remains one question, the most important, or more properly speaking the only question of all those raised concerning the completion of the Requiem, which is this: Is Süssmayer the real and sole composer of the "Sanctus," "Benedictus," and "Agnus?" In this respect his assertions are as positive as it is possible for them to be. He says: "The 'Sanctus,' 'Benedictus,' and 'Agnus' were entirely composed by me," and we possess neither a proof of the fact nor any contradictory testimony; neither are we able to come to logical conclusions or raise material difficulties against it—in a word, we have nothing to oppose. If the judges in matters of art delivered their judgments in conformity to the rules which govern sentences in civil law, the property claimed by Süssmayer in the above-mentioned pieces would unhesitatingly be allowed, since there is no one

* The intimate relations existing between this celebrated singer and Mozart, is proved by a circumstance universally known among the music publishers of Vienna. Schack used to compose operas, whether good or bad I know not, although I remember hearing one, Die beiden Anton's, which contained a melody, "Einst verliebte sich ein Jüngling," etc., very popular in Germany, twenty years ago. Mozart used often to call on Schack, for the purpose of going out for a walk with him. While Schack was dressing, Mozart would frequently sit down at his desk, and compose or alter, here and there, to while away the time, any piece he might happen to find there. Hence, Schack's operas contain many passages in which, as the expression goes, "Mozart's whiling away the time" is very evident.

Digitized by Google

who endeavours to dispute his real or asserted right. But Criticism is not bound by the rules which guide the Courts of Justice. In the eyes of critics the best proofs of the authenticity of a chef-d'œuvre are contained in itself, and, in order to bring to light an important theft, they find it, in most cases, sufficient to confront the plagiarist with his plagiarism. To the braggadocio who boasts of having jumped an extraordinary distance at Rhodes, Criticism says "Why dost thou not jump here as high or as far as you jumped at Rhodes?" My readers will not accuse me of injustice to Süssmayer, but of the various works he produced, and many of which were published in his name, not one has survived, not even Der Spiegel von Arkadien, which was the most successful. We cannot, at most, regard Süssmayer as better than a second-rate composer, and his present celebrity is entirely owing to Herr Weber. If, however, Süssmayer, when so young a man, was competent to compose three pieces of the Requiem, which, although, in certain respects, inferior to those preceding them, did not contrast unfavourably, either in thought, style, or colouring, with a score acknowledged to be the masterpiece of the greatest musical genius of any age, we are compelled to admit one of two things: Süssmayer either began by being Mozart, and ended by becoming Süssmayer, or the spirit of the master descended from Heaven upon the scholar, to inspire him with the conclusion of the Requiem. If this latter was the case, it must be owned that the master's spirit paid him only one visit. If a miracle really occurred, I prefer the latter.

Thus we are perfectly satisfied, even on the last point. We are certain, as far, at least, as moral certainty can exist in any matter, that Süssmayer did not entirely write the "Sanctus," "Benedictus," and "Agnus Dei." Whether he found manuscript notes of the principal ideas of the pieces in question, or heard them played on the piano accompanied by oral directions from Mozart, is no longer quite clear, but one thing is positive: that he was guided in his work by certain hints. I will go even further, and assert that, on trying the pieces which Süssmayer claims as his own, it is an easy task to recognise the passages where the hints were sufficiently numerous, as well as those where they were not, and also where they were altogether wanting. In the "Benedictus" and "Agnus," for instance, Mozart's idea appears to have been indicated with sufficient clearness to render it possible for these pieces to be carried out to the full length originally intended. Such, on the contrary, is not the case with the "Sanctus," which bids fair only at the commencement to surpass in loftiness of thought every other "Sanctus" on record. What grandeur! What solemnity! We prepare to listen with our whole souls, we stretch our nerves of hearing to the utmost, when suddenly, —in a moment—all is over! Who would be so generous as to make Süssmayer a present of these ten bars? No one—not even Herr Weber. The fugue of the "Hosianna," too, which follows, is merely the commencement of a fugue, the first exposition of the subject of the four vocal parts, without the slightest contrapuntal elaboration or development. In addition to this, we have not the counter-theme, which, according to the arrangement of the vocal parts, should have been assigned to the orchestra; and the orchestra does nothing except double the voices. It appears to me that the passage of the "Hosianna" which reminds the hearer of Händel's finest themes was peculiarly adapted to form a contrast with another passage of equal power; it would have repaid anyone to complete it, and, if the continuer had been capable of producing anything in this style, worthy of being compared with the magnificent fugues of the "Kyrie" and 'Quam olim," then or never was the time to do it. I must also call the reader's attention to the fact, that the "Hosianna" is repeated after the "Benedictus" in another key. Now, we heard the beginning of the fugue, which we first heard in D, also in B flat, without one note being changed or added.

Süssmayer has himself betrayed where his guide failed him. Where the master stops, there the scholar stands still. "In order to give the work more uniformity (?), I took the liberty to repeat the fugue of the 'Kyrie' at the verse 'Cum Sanctis.'" A fine method, truly, of imparting a greater degree of unity to a work, by making it conclude with the beginning.

These remarks, to which I have been led by a careful examination of the score, and which for me are more than mere conjectures, are confirmed in a remarkable manner by the following passage in a letter written by Herr Seyfried, Mozart's pupil, to Herr Gottfried Weber.

"It is the universal opinion" (he is speaking of the universal opinion in Vienna, where the great composer lived and died), "that Mozart left his Requiem, to the 'Hostias' inclusive, completely scored. Süssmayer added the rest from the rough notes subsequently discovered. After the 'Benedictus,' it was Mozart's intention to work out the 'Hosianna' fugue in B flat, but, in order to publish the work with as few alterations as possible, Süssmayer contented himself with repeating this passage from the 'Sanctus,' and, for a similar reason, pursued the same course at the conclusion (that is to say, he repeated half of the 'Requiem Æternam,' and the fugue of the 'Kyrie'), although Mozart had a new theme in his head for the composition of the final pieces."

From all this we clearly perceive what extraordinary care Süssmayer took to avoid doing anything more of his own than was absolutely necessary in the task which was entrusted to him, and which could be entrusted to him alone, of completing the Requiem. He did not wish "the raven to be detected under the peacock's feathers," and for this the world is eternally indebted to him. I think I have now exhausted all that can be said on his letter; let us, therefore, return to Herr Weber.

---

Concertina Quartet Concert.—Mr. W. E. Evans, of Cheltenham, professor of the concertina, desirous of exemplifying to the London public how the works of Mozart, Beethoven, Haydn, and Mendelssohn, might be brought within the reach of the general lovers of music by means of the concertina, gave a Recital of Classical Chamber Music on Wednesday evening, at Willis's Rooms, in which he was assisted by Miss L. Taylor, Miss Watcham, Mr. P. Watts, and Master W. Evans, for the concertina quartet; Signor Giulio Regondi for solo concertina; and Master J. B. Mills, pianoforte, as instrumentalists; and Madame Ferrari and Signors Nappi and Ferrari as vocalists. The concert proved a misnomer. There was only one quartet played—Haydn's No. 77—and that did not provoke much applause. We listened and looked in vain for the classical chamber music of Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn, which the quartet concertina party was to illustrate. The only performance on the instrument which excited genuine applause was the solo by Giulio Regondi on La Favorita, which created a furore. The vocal music was much liked. Madame and Signor Ferrari sang the now popular duetto, "Qual voce," from Verdi's last opera, Il Trovatore, with great effect, and the lady and gentleman added several solos, which appeared to please the audience no less than the duet. The attendance was moderate.

New Organ.—A new organ of considerable size, built by Messrs. Gray and Davison, has just been erected in the Independent Chapel at Blackburn, Lancashire, and will be opened in due form, by Mr. Henry Smart, on Thursday next, the 27th instant.

Digitized by Google

THE FESTIVAL AT ROTTERDAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

DEAR EDITOR,—Having decided to assist at the Grand Musical Festival at Rotterdam, agreeably to an old established custom, I bought "Bradshaw's Continental Railway Guide;" then I put money into my purse (honestly, if thou wilt), and packed up my best black suit (the one I usually wear at the concerts of the Old Philharmonic, and the one which lately has become rather rusty—I mean my coat, not the Old Phil.!) I dressed myself from head to foot in black and white-checked garments (a prerogative of the subjects of her liege Majesty the Queen Victoria, and one which has, besides the agreeable wear, that advantage of increasing your hotel bills by three-fourths—which true fact, however, does not interfere with an Englishman's patriotic enthusiasm of exhibiting his nationality), and, having cabb'd it to the London-bridge station, suffered from there all the torments of a second-class journey to Dover, passed the detestable two hours' short sea passage, enjoyed a capital and cheap repast at Calais—Mr. Editor, start not! I shall not give you an account of the dinners, wines, nor hotel bills, as that subject is connu, and even arch-connu! through Serjeant Talfourd's travelling sketches;—and passed on to Liege. There I peeped into my eighteenpenny Continental Bradshaw, and saw that the train for Cologne would start at one o'clock. I sauntered about till then. Arriving a few minutes before time at the station, I found that the train had changed some days before to another hour, and learned that all the travellers had the same misfortune with that celebrated book. I dashed it down, regardless of expense, and said naughty words without number. I swore (the privilege of a true Briton) that I would expose it in the Times newspaper, and so forth; and, finding no other remedy, I went by a later train, grumbling all the way, and, as I found out later, amusing all my fellow-passengers by this impuissant rage, which determined me to become as bland and smiling as a spring onion, so as not gratuitously to amuse the foreigners, who, being themselves so good-natured and even-tempered, did not by any means relish the change, and wanted the British lion to roar again, which I modestly declined.

Having arrived at Cologne, I bought Eau-de-Cologne of the veritable Farina, and put myself on board of the steamer for Rotterdam, having gone all that round-about-way for the sake of meeting several of the German musical critics, who also went to Rotterdam for the musical festival, and who, some being of the old school and some of the new school (also called the disciples of the School for the Music of the Future), kept up during the whole of the else rather tedious passage, an incessant debate about music. The old pretended to be enthusiastic about Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and Mendelssohn; the new ones called Mozart the überstandenen Standpunkt, which means something like a passed-by period—a thing to be done away with now, having had enough of it—having served its time. You may perhaps believe that the latter were joking, or passez-moi le mot, poking their fun at the eternal truth of an imperishable fact; but no, they honestly meant it, and looked upon us as bagwigged old-fashioned unenlightened heathens. At last I lost my patience, and told them roundly that their Zukunfts music (music of the future) was no better than Deutschlands Zukunft (the future of Germany). What that is or will be you can read in Heine's Winterreise, which is prohibited in Germany (the veritable reason that you can get it anywhere there!) Having listened for some time to the enthusiasm of the worthy Professor X. in honour of Schumann's music, I felt the same soporific influence again, which came over me, at the performance of his symphony at the Old Philharmonic, and which caused me to fall into a deep sleep, the calmness of which, however, was soon disturbed by a kind of vision mixed with nightmare. In that unenviable state, I fancied myself before a musical police office, where the illused, yet serene, Miss Polyhymnia was giving audience to a host of crooked-backed ill-shaped beings, calling themselves phrases and periods, who ran against each other with the most uncouth movement, knocking each other about and tumbling disagreeably over each other. Most of them wore rusty garments and pigtails, which some of them had cunningly hidden in newly shaped hats, but still you could see the pigtail dangling through. Some unhappy looking females were carried in also, some without heads, others wanting legs to stand upon. These simpered that they were called Mesdames Melody and Co.; all of them complained violently against having been pressed into service by one Herr Schumann, to wage war against some old-fashioned gentlemen called Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, who were lodged on the top of a steep rock, called Parnassus, at the hotel Apollo, and whom, to knock down, they were driven up with whips, having for food only a hodge-podge pudding made out of the unread remains of the "Neue Zeitschrift für Musik," and served up with the celebrated "Weimar Sauce." They further complained of their deranged digestive organs being incapable of consuming the nectar and ambrosia of the gentlemen on the hill, and having had their limbs broken by the useless effort of climbing it, which had caused them to be called, everywhere, Mountebanks! I awoke with a frightful headache, wished Schumann's disturbed emissaries "down to the disturbed spirits," and found myself before that city which gave birth to the celebrated "Erasmus Rotterdamus."

I landed my trunk, and, walking by the side of the porter who carried it, witnessed a scene which defies description. From every house flags without number were greeting the eye. All the inhabitants were in the street bowing and smiling to all the arriving strangers, running towards them to offer them their service in finding lodgings for them, and, in truth, treating them like members of a large family gathering together for a Christmas dinner. I housed my trunk, and went off to the rehearsal of Israel in Egypt.

The temporary building was decorated with hundreds of flags, and surrounded by myriads of people from the lower classes, who cheered the strangers and looked with intense joy at every movement of the throng going thither. On entering the immense hall, I was struck by the chaste simplicity and admirable taste displayed. The orchestra rose amphitheatrically at the further end—the conductor having a raised kind of a pulpit, so as to make him visible to all the performers. Round the room were the arms of the twelve different "Gesangvereine" forming the chorus, with their corresponding flags. There were two large well-painted tableaux, the one a figure representing Rotterdam receiving a lyre from three angels, and the other, over the orchestra, playing it. The rehearsal had commenced, and I was soon struck by the agitated manner with which Herr Verhulst conducted, and the rather noisy manner with which he addressed the performers. I thought, however, his over-anxiety might be the cause of that, and the performance would, no doubt, be more satisfactory. With this hope I walked on Thursday, the 13th, to the "Festgebäude" (anglice, the Feast-building), amidst crowds of carriages containing lovely females, dressed à la Française, all smiling and looking joyful; everybody was in the street, but, notwithstanding the immense number of persons, I never saw anything like it for order and civility—no pushing. Although police-officers were stationed at short distances as well as horse-guards, they had no need to interfere, as all went as smoothly as possible, and thereby as livelily and merrily as a marriage procession. In the Hall also, the best possible arrangements were visible everywhere. Nearly 700 chorus singers (amateurs) and 200 musicians filled the orchestra, and, with the audience, formed an assembly of 4,500 persons. The building was capitally ventilated, and excellent for sound.

An overture by Herr Hutchenruyter (the conductor of the Rotterdam orchestra), a clever and well-scored work, opened the concert, and gave great satisfaction. Handel's Israel in Egypt followed. Mesdames Jenny Ney, Dolby, and Offermanns; and Messrs. Roger, Formes, and Pischeck, were engaged for the solo parts; and the strange mixture of nationality and style may in some way be excused, by the necessity which the committee was under of having celebrated names in their programme. Considering that it was the first time of performance of this work, and the absence of tradition which reigns in England concerning it, some allowance must be made for the unsatisfactory parts of the performance—namely, Roger was out already in the first recitative; Mdlle. Ney broke down in the duet, notwithstanding the steadiness of Mad. Offermans, and had to begin it again; while Pischeck and Formes gave their duet in a manner more suited to the celebrated Puritani duet, Suoni la tromba, which, however, did not prevent their being encored in it, and it must be owned that they gave it la seconda volta molto più piano, whether from judgment or from exhaustion I will not decide. To Miss Dolby must be awarded the laurels of the evening, excepting, however, the interpolation of a cadenza, which we do not know to have been written by Handel; her success was remarkable, the purity of her style differing so strongly from the theatrical delivery of the other vocalists. The orchestra, consisting almost entirely of Dutch musicians, went exceeding well, notwithstanding the fidgetty conducting of Herr Verhulst, who worked with hands and feet and head and body, but did not come up, with all that exertion, to what we consider indispensable in a conductor—self-possession, steadiness, and decided purpose. The chorus contained a great many fine fresh voices, and worked for amateurs remarkably well. The public was delighted with the performance altogether.

A brilliant illumination on the water, representing large vessels of war, and steamboats, etc., followed the concert, and the joy of the lower classes, who sang and danced without riot or drunkenness, with pure merriment, until two or three o'clock (night) in the busy streets, finished the first day of the Grand Festival given in honour of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the "Society for the Advance of Music," instituted by Vermeulen, Rector of the Latin School at Rotterdam. The instigator and promoter of the festival is Van Baalen, the eminent (rich) bookseller and noticeable amateur and protector of artists at Rotterdam, who has proved himself the head and soul of that really grand and liberal enterprise.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The past week has furnished nothing new. On Saturday and Monday La Favorita was repeated for the second and third times; on Tuesday Ernani, with Madame Bosio and Signor Tamberlik, and Signor Bartolini as Don Carlos; and on Thursday, Lucrezia Borgia and the second act of Il Barbiere. These, all but one, appertained to the farewell nights of Madame Grisi, whose last performances are fast drawing to a close.

On Friday morning a grand concert was announced, in which Madame Grisi was to have made her last appearance in England at a concert. Visitors came from all parts of the country, and the theatre was crowded to suffocation. But the audience was fated to be disappointed. Upon entering the theatre an ominous poster was to be seen, stating that Madame Grisi was ill and could not sing. But the programme was rich in names and morceaux, a hope was entertained that amends would be made for a disappointment. Among other things, Rossini's Stabat Mater was to be given, and with Signor Mario in the first tenor part. The concert did open with the Stabat Mater, but Signor Mario did not appear when it came to his turn to sing the "Cujus Animam." When he did come, more than half-an-hour later than he was expected, he was received very cordially, but at the end of the air, which he sang mezza voce, there were some signs of dissatisfaction, with which the great tenor did not appear pleased. Enough to say, that Sig. Mario declined to appear again during the performance, and left the theatre; that the concert had to be curtailed, and all the pieces changed; and that Mr. Harris had to make five speeches, and could only establish order, after stating, that those who pleased might have their money returned. The entertainment was then allowed to proceed, but a great many had left the house.

The programme not having been followed, need not be noticed in detail. The Stabat Mater calls for no remarks. Mesdames Grisi, Albini, Signors Mario, Tambelik, and M. Zelger, sang the solo parts.

Mademoiselle Clauss and M. Vivier were both engaged, and their entrance on the stage at different times served materially to alleviate the perturbation caused by the disappointment. Mdlle. Clauss was greeted with great applause, and performed Mendelssohn's first concerto better than ever. The fair pianist was re-called at the conclusion, and honoured with a genuine "ovation."

M. Vivier played his piece called Le Chant du Chasseur, which was received with the greatest favour, and listened to with marked attention. The new and striking harmonic effects which he introduced in the course of his performance were as marvellous and inexplicable as they were in good keeping with the character of the morceau—a veritable chasse, so far as musical sounds can be made to paint, or to revive the memory of such a scene. The harmonies, modulations, notes sustained while the melody was going on, notes out of the accepted scale of the horn, and other extraordinary feats, were lavished by the great horn-player with singular prodigality and ease, and moreover were always in place, and consequently never obtrusive. The whole performance was remarkable, and was calculated to put any audience in a good humour. During its continuation the audience were silent and attentive, but when the applause that followed it subsided, the "Mario" row began again with redoubled fury.

The remainder of the concert calls for no particular remark. The magnificent singing of Madame Bosio, however, in the cavatina from Ernani (encored), should not be passed over without record, nor the equally wonderful "Non più mesta" of Madame Viardot Garcia.

Mr. Benedict conducted the whole of the concert with his accustomed ability, and the overtures to Oberon and Guillaume Tell were admirably performed under his direction—the latter amidst noises from the audience which drowned the thunder of the tempest, and overwhelmed the clang of the famous Pas Redoublé.

ROYAL OPERA, DRURY LANE.

The events of the past week were the repetitions of Fra Diavolo and Der Freischütz, both of which had been laid aside for some time, and the first appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves as Elvino in La Sonnambula, since it was performed by the Drury Lane operatic company. Fidelio, too, was revived last night, after being shelved for some weeks; so that, if there was no novelty, there was at least something approaching to it. Mr. Sims Reeves's Elvino was as good as a novelty, since he had not appeared in that character for a long time. La Sonnambula was repeated for the sixteenth time on Wednesday night, and up to that time was entirely sustained by the talent of Mdlle. Agnes Büry, whose Amina is a very charming and graceful performance. Her success was undeniable, and La Sonnambula, we believe, has been performed as frequently as any other opera by the new company. Of course the opera has received a new life and a new impetus from Mr. Sims Reeves' undertaking the part of Elvino, which was so feebly supported by his predecessor, Signor Bettini. Elvino is, we should imagine, one of the most grateful parts for a tenor in the whole range of the lyric drama. The interest is nearly as much on his side as on that of Amina, and the music is attractive and pleasing. Yet how few tenors have won renown in the part! On the English stage Mr. Templeton's name is only remembered as being associated with Malibran, who did her best, to some purpose, to infuse passion and sentiment into him. Mr. Templeton, nevertheless, sang coarsely and acted without refinement. Mr. Sims Reeves is the only English singer who has thoroughly identified himself with the character of Elvino. It is one of his finest assumptions. He enters into the part with heart and soul, and sings the music to perfection. We know not which to admire most, the touching pathos of the second act, or the passion and energy of the last. The audience, generally led by display, preferred the latter, and were vociferous in their exclamations of satisfaction when Mr. Sims Reeves sang "All is lost now," which, as a matter of course, was repeated. A more genuine success could hardly be achieved, and the great tenor, with Mdlle. Agnes Büry, was re-called four times in succession.

Mr. Sims Reeves acts the part of Elvino correctly. He makes him a peasant, with just sufficient gaucherie to confer individuality on the performance. His acting in the earlier scenes was full of life, and nothing could be better managed than the reconciliation with Amina. The finale to the second act was admirably played, and we must do Mdlle. Büry the justice to say, that she supported Mr. Sims Reeves with great ability.

The theatre was very full. Masaniello, which was announced for last night, was postponed until Monday, the success of the Sonnambula necessitating its repetition.

Madame Caradori and Herr Formes having returned from Rotterdam, and Herr Reichardt having resumed his post as principal tenor in the German opera, Der Freischütz and Fidelio have been as efficiently executed, and drawn as good houses as earlier in the season.

A Soirée Musicale was given on Wednesday by Mr. Henry Greville, at his residence, Queen-street, May-fair, which was supported by Mesdames Grisi, and Bosio, the Misses McAlpine, Signors Mario, Gardoni, Bellini, and Ciabatta, and Mr. Blake. The concert was entirely vocal. Sig. Mario sang the air "Tu vedrai s' venturata" from Il Pirata, a romance from Halévy's Ginevra, and joined Mesdames Grisi and Bosio in two duets. Among the company invited were the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Duchess of Wellington, Marchionesses Waterford, Abercorn, and Ailesbury, Earl and Countess of Wilton, and a large assemblage of the nobility. Signor Schira was the conductor.

Digitized by Google

DRAMATIC.

ADELPHI.—The success obtained for the Courier of Lyons at the Princess's Theatre no doubt determined Mr. Webster to prepare a new version for the Adelphi, which accordingly was brought out on Saturday. The Adelphi version differs litle from the Princess's. Both are translated cleverly, and retain the original names. At the Adelphi, Mr. Leigh Murray plays the two parts played at the Princess's by Mr. Charles Kean, and with so much skill as to reconcile us in no small degree to the common-place horrors and utter poverty of the piece. It is odd that any manager should dream of producing a drama which does not appear to possess a single recommendation; but the public would seem to be affected towards scenes of rapine and blood, and to yearn for unnatural excitement. The Courier of Lyons achieved another success in London, and Mr. Leigh Murray was called for and greeted with tumultuous and well-deserved applause.

HAYMARKET.—Mr. Buckstone is always on the look-out for novelties. His visitors cannot complain of being bored with stale diversion. When a piece has a run at the Haymarket, depend upon it, it has been a legitimate success. The Knights of the Round Table was performed for the 54th time last night, but it was extolled by all the press on the occasion of its first performance, and it has proved a great source of attraction up to the present time. Mr. Buckstone withdraws the Knights of the Round Table to make room for a new three-act drama, to be produced this evening, called The Old Chateau.

But not of the Knights of the Round Table have we taken up our pen to speak, nor of Mr. Buckstone's enterprising management, which requires no pen to make it known, but of the far-famed Spanish Dancers—fourteen in number—who appeared on Wednesday evening, in a ballet d'occasion, and created an enthusiasm of no ordinary kind. The Emperor Louis-Napoléon had recently patronised these dancers at the Gymnase theatre in Paris, where they nightly threw the excited spectators into fits of delight and astonishment. Foremost among the fourteen comes the lovely Mademoiselle Perea Nena, première danseuse of the Theatres Royal in Madrid and elsewhere, who, as a dancer of the national pas of Spain, we have never seen equalled in this country, either for elasticity of limb, or perfect ease and precision. In her pirouettes, Mademoiselle Perea Nena spins round like a top, and, what is more surprising, stops at the exact instant the rhythm of the music requires, in an attitude as rigid as a statue's, which has quite a magical effect. It is a pity the fair danseuse confines herself entirely to the national steps. However well they are danced, they are too much alike to please long, and the unvarying employment of the three-time is monotonous to the ear. The Seguidilla, danced by Mademoiselle Perea Nena and Senor Antonio Ruiz, excited tumultuous applause, and was redemanded by the whole audience. The gentleman, in addition to his being premier danseur to the Theatre Royal, Madrid, and elsewhere, is ballet-master and ballet-composer to the present company. Sig. Antonio Ruiz is a vigorous artist, and dances skillfully and without effort. The remainder of the company consists of six females and six males. Their chief merit lies in their ensemble dancing, which literally goes like clock-work. Nothing can surpass the precision with which they commence and finish their pas, except, perhaps, the accuracy of their castanet playing, which is really wonderful. The costumes are picturesque and becoming, and the Spanish dancers bid fair to attract all London, if they stay long enough. Their performances are well worth a visit, and the spectator, we are satisfied, would return home well pleased, had he nothing else to attract his attention during the evening than the black eyes and beaming looks of Senora Perea Nena.

---

MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE, the popular composer and pianist, arrived in London on Thursday from the United States. Mr. Wallace, we understand, brings with him two operas he finished during his absence from England.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.

THE fourth and last concert took place on Saturday, when the room was crowded to suffocation. The principal feature of the concert was Mendelssohn's symphony in A major, the performance of which, in many respects, surpassed anything we had previously heard from the band of the Orchestral Union. The saltarello finale was prodigious for rapidity, point, and decision. It was the quickest presto we ever heard, and at the same time the most delicate. The andante con moto (which, though "con moto," is still "andante") was taken a shade too quick—only a shade. It was otherwise beautifully played, and well deserved the encore it received. The concert opened with an overture by Mr. Sterndale Bennett, Marie du Bois, composed some years ago—a quiet and delicious pastoral in E minor; and terminated with a new, dashing, and very clever overture by Mr. Alfred Mellon, entitled Romulus. Both were played well, and applauded heartily.

There were two solos, one on the oboe by Mr. Alfred Nicholson, and one on the clarionet by Mr. Maycock, the first composed by M. Barret, the last by Mr. R. S. Pratten. These were finely executed and eminently successful. Beethoven's early concerto in C, for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 15), was admirably played by Herr Pauer, and, being so rarely presented, was heard with extreme satisfaction. When Beethoven was like Mozart he was still Beethoven—the young giant—and there is a peculiar charm and freshness about his early music, in spite of the evident influence of the great composer who preceded him, and with whose genius he was filled and enchanted. The concerto was well accompanied by the band, and greatly applauded.

Some vocal pieces, sung by Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, and Mr. Benson, completed the programme. The introduction of songs would seem to insinuate that the Orchestral Union was about to change the plan hitherto adopted in its programmes. Let us hope the contrary. Nothing could be more unwise on the part of Mr. Alfred Mellon, who, if he has any confidence in the ultimate aggrandisement and prosperity of the institution he directs, will never cry "Peccavi!" or own that a concert of instrumental music cannot be in itself sufficiently attractive. The Musical Union has not done so; the Quartet Association has not done so—why, then, should the Orchestral Union?

---

SACCHINI.

"THE QUEEN, Marie Antoinette, who loved and cultivated the fine arts, had promised Sacchini that his Œdipus should be the first work produced at the Court Theatre of Fontainebleau, Sacchini had communicated this good news to our family, and he continued, as usual, to place himself in the way of Her Majesty as she passed from the royal chapel from divine service, and it was her custom to invite him to the music room. There she took pleasure in hearing some of his finest pieces from Arvire and Evelina, an opera which Sacchini was then completing. Sacchini having remarked that, several Sundays following, the Queen appeared to avoid his sight, felt uneasy at the circumstance, and placed himself one day so ostensibly before her Majesty, that she could not avoid speaking to him. She received him in the music saloon, and said to him in a feeling manner 'My dear Sacchini, it is said of me that I grant too many favours to foreigners. They have so urgently solicited me to have performed, instead of your Œdipus, the Phèdre of Mons. Lemayne, that I have not been able to refuse it. You see my position—forgive me.' Sacchini, with difficulty, concealed his disappointment, made a respectful bow, and was quickly on the road to Paris. He alighted at my mother's. He entered the room full of grief, and threw himself on the sofa; we could get from him only a few interrupted words—'My dear friend, my children, I am a lost man! The Queen no longer loves me!—she no longer likes me!' All our efforts were in vain to soothe him. He would not eat anything. He was subject to the gout, and an excessive oppression of the chest already alarmed us. We called a coach, and Guillard and I conducted him home. He was put to bed, and in three days was a corpse."

Digitized by Google

VERDI.

The following is a list of the operas of this composer, with the dates, names of singers, and the theatres at which they were produced:—1. Oberto Conte di S. Bonifacio, 2 acts—Mdmes. Marini and Shaw, Signori Salvi and Marini—1839, at the Scala, Milan. 2. Un giorno di Regno, in 2 acts—Mdmes. Marini and Abbadia, Signori Ferlotti, Scalesi—1840, at the Scala, Milan. 3. Nabucco, 4 acts—Mdmes. Strepponi, Bellinzaghi, Signori Miraglia, Ronconi, Derivis—1843, Scala, Milan. 4. I Lombardi, 4 acts—Mad. Frezzolini, Signori Guasco, Severi, Derivis—1843, Milan. 5. Ernani, 4 acts—Mad. Löwe, Sig. Guasco, Superchi, Selva—1844, Scala, Milan. 6. I due Foscari, 3 acts—Mad. Barbieri-Nini, Sig. Roppa, De Bassini—1844, Argentina, Rome. 7. Giovanna d'Arco, 4 acts—Mad. Frezzolini, Sig. Poggi Collini—1845, at the Scala, Milan. 8. Alzira, 3 acts—Mad. Tadolini, Sig. Fraschini, Colletti—1845, at the San Carlo, Naples. 9. Attila—Mad. Löwe, Sig Guasco, Constantini, Marini—1846, Fenice, Venice. 10. Macbeth, 4 acts—Mad. Barbieri-Nini, Sig. Brunacci, Varesi, Benedetti—1847, at the Pergola, Florence. 11. I Masnadieri, 4 acts—Madlle. Jenny Lind, Sig. Gardoni, Coletti, Lablache, Bouché—Her Majesty's Theatre, London. 12. Jerusalem, 4 acts—Mad. Julian Vangelder, M.M. Duprez, Alizard, Prevot—Grand Opera, Paris, in 1847. 13. La Battaglia di Legnano—Mad. de' Giuli, Sig. Fraschini, Collini—1849, Argentina, Rome. 14. Il Corsaro, 3 acts—Mad. Barbieri-Nini, Sig. Fraschini, De' Bassini—at Trieste, in 1849. 15. Luisa Miller, 3 acts—Mad. Gazzaniga, Salandri, Sig. Malvezzi, De' Bassini, Arati, Salva—1849, San Carlo, Naples. 16. Stiffelio, 3 acts—Mad. Gazzaniga, Sig. Fraschini and Collini—1850, at Trieste. 17. Rigoletto, 3 acts—Mdmes. Brambilla, Casolani, Sig. Mirate, Varesi, Pons—1851, at Venice. 18. Il Trovatore, 4 acts—Mdmes. Penco, Goggi, Sig. Baucarde, Guicciardi, Balderi—1853, Rome. 19. La Traviata, 3 acts—Mad. Salvini, Sig. Graziani, Varesi—1853, Fenice, at Venice.

DONIZETTI'S ELISABETTA.

The new opera about to be played at the theatre of Santa-Radegonda, Milan, entitled Elisabetta, and lately brought out at the Théâtre-Lyrique in Paris, is, as our readers are aware, a posthumous work of Donizetti's, nearly two acts of which were composed by the master himself, and the third made up of scraps from Donizetti's early works, strung together by his friend and pupil,* Signor Fontana, who has also here and there introduced pieces and fragments of his own manufacture. The following account of the score will, no doubt, be interesting to our readers.

The overture to Elisabetta is principally taken from the old one to the Esiliati; there are, however, a breve primo tempo, and an andante in 3-4 time quite new; the original allegro is preserved, but the crescendo and coda have been suppressed. The introduction, up to the commencement of the recitative, is entirely new; but the parlante and stretta belong to the old score. Next follows a romanza for the tenor, which is quite new; next a polacca for the prima donna, partly founded on the cavatina from the Esiliati. Next is another romanza, for tenor voice, also new; next, an aria for Michele, an abridged version of that in the Esiliati. The duo between Elisabetta and Michele, the Prayer (a quartet), the finale to the first act, are also compressed from the same work.

The second act begins with the ancient prelude. Some new couplets follow, in lieu of the former aria, "Morte, ah! vieni," succeeded by a romanza, which is also new. The remainder of this act is taken from the score of the Esiliati, without any alteration whatever.

The third act, as we have already hinted, is new from beginning to end. It is composed of an introduction and chorus; a romanza for tenor; a ballet; a rondo for Michele; a grand duet between the father and daughter; an aria for Nitza; a terzetto for Elisabetta, the Count, and Michele; and a finaletto, in which all the voices repeat the cabaletta of the preceding duo of the father and daughter.

* Donizetti, an idle man, would seem to have had as many pupils as Rossini—a lazy man.

The libretto is founded on Madame de Cotti's well-known story of Elisabeth, and was dramatised in Paris by MM. Leuven and Brunswick.

Altogether, as the work stands, Elisabetta is not likely to add to the fame of its celebrated and prolific composer.

THE RE-UNION DES ARTS.

To the Editor of the Musical World.

Sir,—On Wednesday, the 28th of June, the second season of the Ré-union des Arts was brought to a conclusion by a Soirée Musicale. Most of your readers are doubtless acquainted with the nature of this institution, and it is therefore almost needless for me to remind them that it was projected (in the words of the prospectus) "for the advancement of music and the cultivation of social intercourse among her professors." Every society must make ambitious professions at starting, and it is therefore not worth while to lay too much stress upon the noble objects the directors professed to have at heart, in endeavouring to promote a love of good music among a number of unmusical people, and to bring together in perfect social harmony composers, performers, and teachers. Such a sublime idea could only exist in the mind of a very imaginative individual; and if the saloons in Harley Street have not been always overflowing with attentive amateurs engrossed in intellectual music, and rival musicians in ecstacies with each others' new compositions, it is no more than any sensible person, who has seen a little of the musical world, might have expected. But it is to the constitution of the society that I wish to draw your attention.

The success the Ré-union des Arts has achieved, is owing to the attractions of its concerts, which, if not very progressive in their character, seem to give great satisfaction.

These concerts are supported entirely by the gratuitous services of eminent and talented artists, who, in addition to their liberal assistance in this respect, contribute by their subscriptions to the prosperity of the society. The inducements which the directors hold out to the profession for their generously giving their aid, are that they are supporting a national institution for the benefit of the art, etc., and assisting to promote their own advancement in their profession, etc.

It is not difficult to entice the profession into this sort of trap; but it might be expected that from the help the artists give, they would have some nominal share in the arrangement of the Ré-union; some suppressed voice in the election of its officers. But such is not the case. A committee of eight gentlemen have constituted themselves perpetual directors of the society—permanent recipients of all the honours and profits accruing therefrom. They issue warm self-congratulatory addresses, begging the subscribers to acknowledge their extraordinary efforts to instruct and entertain them. On the occasion of a concert, they receive all the members at the doors as personal friends, welcoming them with the warmth of private hospitality to a private entertainment. There can be no doubt that the system answers a director's purpose admirably. He invites his pupils to a series of concerts where the best talent may be heard for a trifling annual subscription. The pupils are delighted to observe what an important person is their friend-director. They recommend him to all their friends—his lessons increase, and he becomes a distinguished and wealthy member of society. Indeed, so well does the plan "work,' that I can imagine it would "pay" the directors to carry on the "Ré-union des Arts" at a loss, for the sake of the indirect advantages it offers. What an excellent thing, then, if the Ré-Union can be made profitable both directly and indirectly. Every one says it is. The directors, being sole proprietors, scorn to put forth a statement of their affairs. We may, therefore, judge from appearances; and, as artists perform for nothing, and there are no free admissions, and the rooms are always full, I think the commercial aspect of the society is most favourable.

But now for a serious word with Messieurs the directors.

The present system is in every way admirable, but can it continue? People will ask questions, and when it becomes known that the only parties deriving benefit from the Ré-union des

Digitized by Google

Arts are the directors and their pupils, I fear all the artists will withdraw their talent and subscriptions. The directors must openly announce the establishment in Harley-street as a private commercial undertaking, and pay for their concerts. They may rest assured that the musical profession will not long continue their services, after they have discovered that, instead of promoting the advancement of the art (vain cry!), they have been really assisting to advance a snug speculation for the sole benefit and glory of eight teachers of "music, drawing, and mathematics."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A SUBSCRIBER.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. J. A.—PERSIANI and ALBONI appeared together in 1848 at the Royal Italian Opera, in Rossini's Tancredi. PERSIANI took her leave of the London Italian stage in 1849, at the same theatre. She has not retired from the profession, however, having been singing at concerts in London during the present season. ALBONI made her first appearance before an English audience as Arsace in Semiramide, on the 6th of April, 1847, the night on which the Royal Italian Opera first opened its doors to the public.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 22ND, 1854.

AT a general meeting of the members of the Amateur Musical Society, Mr Henry Leslie, composer of the oratorio of Immanuel, was elected to the post of conductor of the concerts, in the place of Mr. G. A. Osborne, retired. Mr. H. Leslie is the fifth gentleman who has held this appointment. The first was Mr. Balfe, the second Mr. Lucas, the third Sig. Negri, and the fourth Mr. Osborne. Who may be the sixth, time will show.

The Amateurs would seem to be capricious. We are of opinion, however, that unless the office of conductor be vested perpetually in one stick, the performances have little chance of improvement. Where there is no certainty of tenure, there is no authority; without authority, there is no discipline; and in the absence of discipline, the attainment of excellence becomes impossible. In the course of a few years the Amateurs have been subjected to four various beatings, and now they are on the point of undergoing a fifth. If matters progress in this manner, they will have all their enthusiasm knocked out of them, and their energy will be numbed.

Just as too many cooks spoil the broth, too many sticks spoil the band; and the only way to prosper is to stick manfully to one. Despotism is wholesome where there are many fiddlers, and especially if those fiddlers are amateurs, well to do in the world, and who can cheerfully submit to a moderate fine for not presenting themselves at rehearsals. It is to be hoped, however, for the sake of the society, which has a healthy influence on music and its professors, that Mr. Leslie will introduce some stringent measure, by means of which attendance at rehearsals will be made imperative. Nothing else will do. We presume that the object of the Amateurs is to play as well as possible, and not to regale their friends and supporters with a mere scramble. They have undertaken a task which does them credit; let them endeavour, then, to accomplish it worthily.

While on this subject, we may as well allude to the Quartet Association, which has just terminated its third season. A radical error in the constitution of this society has gone far to militate against its entire success. The system of having alternate leaders is a bad one. M. Sainton and Mr. Cooper are both excellent artists, and qualified to play first fiddle in any quartet. Of the two we prefer one; but, as that is beside the question, we leave our readers to guess which. The object originally proposed was to arrive gradually at the highest perfection by means of the same four executants practising continually together. The idea was good, and, as the brothers Muller had shown, practicable. But it has not been carried out as it might have been by such players as Messrs. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti; and this mainly on account of the mistaken policy to which we have alluded. Here, then, is another illustration of the old saw about the cooks. The system must be changed, or the Quartet Association will stop far short of the proud position to which it aspired at the outset. Three seasons have passed, and nothing remarkable, nothing out of the ordinary routine, has been achieved. The quartets have, for the most part, been extremely well played; but that is all, and that is not enough to entitle the society to an exceptional rank among institutions devoted to the performance of chamber-music.

A proof of what may be effected by the diligent superintendence of one chief, invested with undivided control, yet anxious to do his duty, and make those who work under him imitate his example, may be seen in the Orchestral Union, whose performances have attracted so much attention during the last two seasons. The band of the Orchestral Union consists of thirty-one performers—sixteen stringed instruments, and the usual complement of "wind," bating two horns and two trombones. Under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, the little phalanx has been trained to a degree of perfection which may be almost compared with that of the Conservatoire in Paris. In this instance the adage already twice cited does not apply. Mr. Mellon has been the only cook, and has proved himself a good one. A second adage—"The proof of the pudding is in the eating"—may be adduced as an apt illustration of his deeds and his success. On the other hand, the Orchestral Union and its conductor must be admonished of an important fact, which they would appear to have overlooked. They have done more than they bargained for. They have not only shown what can be effected by talent and perseverance with an orchestra of sixteen "strings," against a force of fifteen "wind;" they have demonstrated to a certainty that a band thus constructed is imperfect, and must always be imperfect, no matter how good the individual performers, and no matter how admirable the precision and delicacy realised. There is no balance of tone. In passages of force—in tuttis for example—where the wind instruments, and especially the brass, are employed, the "strings" are quite inadequate. The effect is thin; the tenors, violoncellos, and basses, are inaudible, or nearly inaudible; and there is no approach to what is called body of tone. This is not the fault of Mr. Mellon and his band, but the result of a theory which cannot be developed in practice. Two tenors, two violoncellos, and two basses, are inefficient under any circumstances. When Beethoven spoke of sixty performers, as his ideal of an orchestra, he no doubt contemplated just such another set of wind instruments as that of the Orchestral Union—since those who are acquainted with his scores are aware that he seldom employs more than two horns in his symphonies, and rarely introduces trombones. The addition that Beethoven would have made, then, to the band of the Orchestral Union, in order to carry out his plan, would have been neither more nor less than thirty stringed instruments. Could we have entertained any doubts of the wisdom of such an authority, the performance of Mendelssohn's Symphony in A major (at the last concert of the Orchestral Union) would at once have set them at rest. In this great work the composer has used no trombones, and only two horns. The execution was marvellous for decision and correctness;* and yet, from first to last, we were conscious of that want of balance without which no orchestral performance can be satisfactory and complete; while in the forte passages (of the Allegro Vivace especially) the violas were useless, and the basses of little weight. We do not insist upon the whole of Beethoven's contingency; but we must warn the Orchestral Union that a high place among the European instrumental bands can never be hoped for, without at least double the stringed force they now possess. In the applause that has been lavished on their efforts we have heartily joined; but the time has come, when not content with this, they must take steps to place their institution on a durable basis. They must either reduce their "wind" by one half, and rescore the works of the great masters to suit their purpose, or they must add fifteen to their strings, and thus approach half-way to the goal which the immortal Beethoven has pointed out.

Digitized by Google

---

THE University System is undergoing one of those siftings and rummagings which Parliament periodically takes into its head to bestow on the antiquities of the land; the ostensible purpose being to render the "seats of learning" more practically available to the mass of the people,—the real motive, perhaps, going meanwhile a shade deeper. Of course, right or wrong, it would be quite beneath the pluck of Englishmen to suffer attack without offering a stout resistance. Statement is met by counter statement, commission by protest, report by memorial,—the odium theologicum, meanwhile, leavening, in no small degree, the whole lump of discord. Whether in the battle now imminent between the right honourables on the banks of the Thames and the right reverends on the more classic shores of the Cam and Isis, "heads of houses," "hebdomadal boards," vested rights, charters, and the like, will be able to hold their own against the keen utilitarian spirit now so plentifully sprinkled within the walls of St. Stephen's, remains to be seen. Some good, however, has already risen out of the threatened contest. Either through conviction or fear, the University authorities are bestirring themselves somewhat on the road to reformation. Henceforth the living are to take some place beside the dead. Modern languages, modern literature, modern science, may find elbow-room, unsnubbed by the ghosts of the departed. The natural philosophy of Faraday and the experimentalists, will have, at least, its chance of triumphing over that of Descartes and the mystics. Is it not possible, then, that our own art may be fortunate enough to get some step in the general promotion of things real and practical? We know the question is surrounded with difficulties. It is in vain, for instance, to expect any government assistance; under a semi-democratic constitution, such as ours, will the State trouble itself about imaginative arts—least of all about music. It will see after the health and, perhaps, morals of the people. It will do its best to provide them fresh air, clean water, decent lodgings, and Battersea schoolmasters; but if they want fiddlers they must find them, and pay them, themselves. Whatever aid, then, the universities can contribute to advance the study of music, must be voluntary on their part. Truly enough the "seats of learning" have, for centuries past, professed to teach music. They have, at least nominally, included it in their academical course. They have formally appointed professors, and, as formally, conferred degrees. But the system, as it now exists, has no vitality. Since the days of the madrigalists, when a "knowledge of music and singing at sight" formed part of every English gentleman's education, study of the subject has gradually dwindled down to mere liking and fashion. It has now become a mere matter of amusement, and, even as such, we suspect, takes but minor rank in competition with the pipe, the bottle, and the boat. We much doubt, for instance, the success of such an announcement as that "the professor of music will commence a course of lectures on the higher branches of the art." To make such a thing popular—to make it pay, in short—we much doubt whether the only prudent course open to the professor aforesaid would not be to promise, en suite, a "complete exposition of the art of double tonguing as applied to the cornet-à-pistons." So entirely, indeed, has music fallen out of serious consideration at the Universities, that the professorships, while retaining their legal privilege, carry with them no social importance save what is conferred by the personal qualities of the holders. Thus we find such men as Walmisley at Cambridge, and Blythe and Corfe at Oxford, plucking up resolution to toil through the wilds of Xenophon and algebra up to the degree of M.A.;—and in this very act of praiseworthy and voluntary labour confessing that, highly-sounding to outsiders as may be the titles, "professors of music," and "Mus. Doc.," they, in reality, give their holders no desirable amount of status in the Universities. But, surely, this condition of things might be improved. Surely, with a just recognition of the claims of a beautiful art, on the side of the Universities, and—what would certainly follow—a course of energetic action on the part of the Professors, music would make herself known as the great and useful, as well as the mere finical and ornamental. To say nothing of the spread of true taste and the principles which form it, musical lectures at Oxford and Cambridge would be of infinite benefit to that large class of men constantly in course of education for the Church. The clergy at present have a special craving for musical knowledge. They perceive its use in the public duties of their calling. They know their own deficiency in it, and failing its acquisition in those schools where they have been otherwise educated, very naturally fall into the hands of quacks. University lectures would be of infinite service to music, and church-music pre-eminently, if they went but the length of purging the clerical mind of that reverence for Ambrosian and Gregorian barbarisms with which—whether for purely musical purposes or otherwise—it has latterly been so seduously indoctrinated. On this point, the functions of the University Professors have been usurped by a set of men who, calling themselves "priests," appear to infer from their title a consciousness of authority to teach. And they do teach. Without anything beyond the merest alphabetical knowledge, without taste, without power, eithre

* Although, in the reprise of the minuetto after the trio, one or two violins did come in two bars too soon, but were immediately checked by the conductor.—Printer's Devil.

Digitized by Google

creative or appreciative, they have contrived to persuade a host of men, who must always possess influence from their position, that the perfection of church music is only to be found in the monotonous "plain song" of a period when art could not yet be said to exist, and musical sound itself was but dimly struggling for utterance amidst the first uncouth attempts to form an intelligible scale. Fortified with knowledge of their subject, and armed with authority to speak, what might not the University professors do in this behalf—especially against such antagonists! At least, they could shew that art was ever progressive; that neither pope, nor priest, nor king, had power to decree its limit or fitness, that the most beautiful was, is, and shall be the best offering of the creature to his Creator; and finally, perhaps, might be able to gently insinuate a key to the whole mystery of the Gregorian position, by suggesting that such vagabonds as Purcell and Croft—to say nothing of the archer heretics, Bach and Handel—had the misfortune to be born after the Lutheran Reformation.

The other University function with respect to music—the conferring of degrees—has difficulties peculiar to itself. Where the exact sciences are concerned, it is easy to determine with certainty a man's capacity. His qualities must be either affirmative or negative. The results of his work must come out either right or wrong. Mere catechetical accuracy, carried to the limit of an examination-paper, will place him Senior Wrangler of his year. Even if he go beyond this; if he add invention to scholarship; if he be another Newton, or Laplace, or Adams, he need dread no criticism on his proceedings. His discoveries must be susceptible of demonstration. If right, he is capable of so proving himself. There is no room for difference of taste or opinion. But the case is widely different with the imaginative arts, and with music probably more so than with any other. Who is to say of a composer that he is right or wrong, beyond the limits of the mere grammar of his art? Who will venture to provide some infallible mode of proof whereby his inventions may be adopted or rejected, not only for to-day but for ever? A candidate for university honours in music may be shewn to spell his harmonies correctly, to commit no absurdities in modulation, and to write good counterpoint. But beyond these,—and just, indeed, at the commencement of those qualities which only can define a musician's place in the world,—everything must depend on the taste, liberality, and enlightened feeling of his judge. In such a case, genius itself may happen to appeal to a tribunal utterly insensible of its charms. We can imagine that, fifty years since, Beethoven would have stood a good chance of being "plucked" at either Oxford or Cambridge. To these difficulties there can be no solution, save what may be found in the appointment of only the highest class of men to the professorships; and we willingly concede that, at both Universities, the duties of examination are now more zealously and ably performed than at any former period. Yet, considering the mint stamp thus set on a man,—considering the mysterious importance, in many people's eyes, of the syllables "Mus. Doc," we cannot help regretting that the tests applied are not of wider range and more searching difficulty. If University distinction is to carry with it any speciality of rank and influence in the world of art, every possible precaution should be taken against the chance of its frivolous or unworthy bestowal.

But if there be this difficulty and uncertainty where tests of merit are applied, what shall be said of those wretched impostures, the Lambeth degrees, for which not the smallest demonstration of ability is required? Incredible as it may appear in this practical country, it is nevertheless a fact, that his Grace of Canterbury may legally, if so minded,—and for aught we know, daily does,—confer the degrees of "Doctor of Music" and "Doctor of Medicine" on anybody who can prove his ability—to practice the art of his choice, think you, incredulous reader?—by no means;—but simply to pay the sum of fifty pounds, or thereabouts, for the distinction! So that, in the face of common-sense, and to the personal danger of Her Majesty's lieges, the primate may, at any moment, unkennel on society any number of Mus. Docs., to whom the resolution of a discord may be a direful mystery, or M.D's, utterly innocent of the difference between tetanus and tartar emetic! Incredible as is such a system, it is still more incredible that people can be found willing to avail themselves of it. And yet we know there are men of such feeble consciousness of merit that they will condescend to sneak into importance on the shoulders of this miserable sham! The thing is altogether a reproach to the intelligence of the age, and should be at once abolished. If "degrees" in music are worth retaining, they should be confined to the Universities which profess, and in some sort practise, enquiry into the merits of the candidates. If the Universities will not interfere in the matter themselves, it certainly seems desirable that the existing Parliamentary Commission should examine the propriety of stopping these Canterbury be-Doctorings, which commenced in an ecclesiastical juggle, and are perpetuated to the establishment of a titular equality between the merest quack and the ablest practitioner of his art.

MADAME MARIE CABEL.

THIS celebrated singer has been engaged by M. Perrin for five years, at a salary of forty thousand francs annually, with three months' congé. Madame Cabel is to perform during the first year of her engagement at the Théâtre-Lyrique, the scene of her first Parisian triumphs. She will then be transferred to the Opéra-Comique. The répertoire of Madame Cabel is to be selected by herself—a reserve being made in favour of Meyerbeer's L'Etoile du Nord, in which opera, if required by the direction, she is to appear at the Opéra-Comique at any time she may be called upon. In that case, s'il a lieu (no "Y-grec"), she is to receive an additional gratuity of seven thousand francs. A new opera is to be composed expressly for Madame Cabel's début at the Opéra-Comique.

The engagement was signed last week by M. Perrin, who came to London on purpose, and returned to Paris forthwith. Having been accorded the privilege of the Théâtre-Lyrique, M. Perrin, whose management of the Opéra-Comique has been marked by signal success, has now two theatres under his control. It remains to be seen whether he can make himself ubiquitous, and set them both a-going. Now that he has got Marie Cabel, he should look out for a tenor, as good in proportion. We wish he may get one.

FOREIGN MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.—On Thursday next the decision of the House of Lords will be given on this important subject, in the case of Boosey and Jefferys.

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

"March from 'Tannhauser.'" By Richard Wagner. J. J. Ewer and Co.

As, according to some German transcendentalists, it is the mission of Mr. Richard Wagner to announce to the world the "music of the future," he merits attention. But for that we should have dismissed the present composition with a line, which is as much as it is really worth. A more common-place, lumbering, and awkward thing of its kind we never perused. That, however, our readers may not accuse us of prejudice, we shall present them with a specimen. Here, for instance, is a lofty example of the "music of the future," which no one but Dr. Liszt is profound enough to understand.

Towards the end, this puerile, Frenchified, patchy tune is resumed, with all the pomp and stridency of the Wagnerian full orchestra (by which we mean one much noisier and much thinner than the legitimate full orchestra.) The rest of the march, including some school-boy progressions, laid down with an infinite quantity of swagger and bombast, is quite worthy of the above; and, at the end, the violins are screaming up to B flat in alt., with this kind of passage:—

as is Mr. Wagner's frequent and disagreeable custom. There is a "future" for you—oh! musicians! Surely the "as(e) in presenti" is preferable.

"The Celebrated Quartet from Verdi's 'Rigoletto.'" Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Jules Benedict. Boosey and Sons.

Those young ladies who, after seeing Mario in Rigoletto at the Opera, are desirous of recalling some of the pleasant sensations they experienced, will do well to possess themselves of this "transcription" of the prettiest and most dramatic piece of music in the work—the quartet, or rather double duet, in the last scene, which is so admirably sung and acted by Mdlle. Nantier Didiée and Mario inside, and by Mad. Bosio and Ronconi outside, the dwelling-place of Tagliafico, or rather Sparafucile, the assassin. The whole quartet is faithfully reduced for the pianoforte, and preceded by an introduction, based upon the popular air, "La donna è mobile." Mr. Benedict has done his work ably, as is his custom; and the piece is showy and effective, while easy enough to come within the means of performers of moderate skill. It is, in short, an attractive morceau de salon.

"Leonie"—Nocturne. Jules Brissac. Boosey and Sons.

In A flat, with an episode in E—easy and commonplace, but by no means ungraceful—style, melody, ornaments and accompaniments as "old as the hills"—a notturno, in short, of the received pattern, of which doubtless some hundreds, neither better nor worse, are in existence.

"Calabraise," for Piano; "Ballade," ditto.—By Rosenhain Boosey and Sons.

The "Calabraise" is a bagatelle, from the studied simplicity of which the taste and ingenuity of a musician peep out more than once, and are gratefully recognized. There is a good deal of character in the first subject in C, (whether of the Calabria or the Abruzzi sort matters little); while the second theme, in A minor, where the melody is first given in the bass, is extremely quaint. The whole is written with that care and neatness which Herr Rosenhain never fails to bestow even on his smallest pieces. We wish as much could be said of one out of one hundred of the bagatelles with which our music-presses are teeming. The "Ballade" is also a pretty trifle—a kind of pastoral in C major, with another very quaint episode in E minor, terminating with a brilliant coda. The first melody is natural and pleasing, and the accompaniments at each recurrence of it are cleverly varied. The whole is easy to play, but scarcely easy enough for so brief and unpretending a movement. For this, however, no real amateur will reproach the composer.

"Wiesbaden Galop." By Waldmuller. Boosey and Sons.

The "Wiesbaden Galop" may possibly sound new at Wiesbaden, but here it will strike every one as very old—a sort of rechauffé of themes, gathered from other sources, and not sufficiently altered to prevent them from being recognized. When the copyright act is cleared up and explained, some clause might be introduced to prevent composers from committing piracy on each other—since, if authors may be pilfered with impunity, it little matters whether it be by music-vendors without capital or music-makers without ideas.

"La Fascination."—Polka. By Victor. Boosey and Sons.

We cannot compliment "Victor" on a victory. There is no kind of fascination in his polka, which is made up for the most part of the chromatic scale, twisted about in all manner of ways. Unless in that time so mystically announced by the author of Modern German Music, Recollections and Criticisms, ("There comes a time at which the power of ugliness to charm" &c.,) we see little chance for the polka of Herr Victor gaining any admirers out of his own immediate circle. With the method employed by this composer, a thousand polkas might be manufactured out of the chromatic scale, one more worthless than the other. "La Fascination," in short, is what the author above cited would denominate a "less" polka.

"The Queen of a Day."—Quadrille. By Edward Francis Fitzwilliam. Boosey and Sons.

It will not be forgotten that a very pretty opera, called The Queen of a Day, the music by Mr. E. F. Fitzwilliam, was produced, with success, at the Haymarket Theatre, some time ago. The themes of the present quadrilles are selected from that opera. They are, however, very ill-suited for such a purpose, and are much more graceful and effective in the place where they originally stand. Except the opening of No. 3 ("Sir Henry de Vere") there is not one danceable figure in the set. The system of making quadrilles, etc., out of operas is a bad one; and its effect was never shown more plainly than in the present case, where some really nice music is rendered almost wholly uninteresting. By the way, what does Mr. Fitzwilliam intend by the following curious progression of harmony—Figure 5—"Turnwell"

Digitized by Google

It seems to us rather "turn ill" than "turn well".

"Hoist high the Flag again"—New National Song—Sung by Mr. Charles Cotton, Composed by E. J. Loder. Z. T. Purdy.

Mr. Loder is an old and hearty singer of national songs, and his strain in the present instance is vigorous and stirring. Musically speaking, there is no particular point to notice in this composition. The words of Dr. J. R. Wreford involve a patriotic Philippic (or rather Nicholaic) against the Russian bear, with some appropriate homage to the unconquerable nature of the British Flag, not forgetting a compliment to France, "our brave ally."

"To Arms." Composed by Stephen Glover. Z. T. Purday.

Another of Dr. Wreford's patriotic songs, and a spirited one. The music is bold, but by no means remarkable for novelty. At the present time, however, "England's patriotic appeal to her sons against the Russian despot," would be sure to find a multitude of echoes, and Dr. Wreford's lyric plenty of declaimers, were the music even less attractive.

"Deux Valses Melancoliques," for the pianoforte. By Frederic Chopin. J. J. Ewer and Co.; Wessel and Co.

These waltzes, which were written in the album of a certain Countess P—(Chopin was a great man for the ladies, and especially for countesses, duchesses, princesses, and so forth)—in 1844, three or four years before the death of the composer, having never been published in his lifetime, will be a bonne bouche for the admirers of the romantic and Polish composer. They are full of that tender languor for which all his music is characterised, and, moreover, are charming examples of his style. The first is in F minor, the second in B minor. Both are very short, and, for Chopin, uncommonly easy. As the mere announcement of their publication, will make all pianists—amateur or professional—anxious to possess them, we shall not attempt to describe them. And, indeed, there is no further description required, when we have said that they are pure Chopin—Chopin in his simplest and least affected mood, though as plaintive and sentimental as ever, if not as "swoony"—as the author of Modern German Music, Recollections, and Criticisms would say. In the one in F minor we find our old friend—which is always welcome—as Chopin—often as it occurs.

"To Horse, to Horse"—"Oh, had my Fate been joined with thine"—"Away, gay landscapes"—"Maid of Athens"—"Farewell, if ever fondest prayer"—"Though the day of my destiny's over"—"When we two parted." From a work entitled An Evening with Byron. Composed by George Linley. Campbell, Ransford, and Co.

We presume these musical illustrations of some of Lord Byron's most beautiful lyrics are intended for an entertainment made up, like the late Mr. Wilson's Night with Burns, of monologue and song. Mr. Linley has evidently taken great pains with them, and has been more happily inspired than usual with his subject. Some of the songs are very pretty, and one or two extremely graceful. "To horse, to horse, my coal black steed," has been set with a great deal of spirit; and for expressive melody, united to a carefully written accompaniment, "Oh! had my fate been joined with thine," deserves especial notice. "Away, ye gay landscapes" is flowing, but the second part of the melody is hardly so good as the first. The "Maid of Athens," though a clever song, does not strike us as set in a tone characteristic of the words; the opening in A minor is too plaintive for the half-playful style which the poet assumes in his address to the Grecian damsel. "Farewell, if ever fondest pray'r" is not without merit, but the return to the subject is more singular than orthodox:—

"Though the day of my destiny's over," in A flat, is one of the most attractive and neatly accompanied of the set. The most likely to be popular, however, although not the most original, is "When we two parted," which is set with equal good taste and simplicity, and if taken into consideration by a skilful ballad-singer, can hardly fail to become a favourite, both in concert and drawing-room. Altogether, these songs do Mr. Linley much credit.

Melodies of Ireland and Scotland.—An entertainment with the above title was given, on Monday week, at Willis's Rooms, by Mrs. F. E. Grosvenor, and attracted a numerous audience. The first part of the programme was devoted to Irish song, and the second to Scotch. The lecture is written in a most agreeable manner, and contains some new and appropriate anecdotes of national customs and manners. Between the parts, Mrs. Grosvenor made a divergency with English melody, and sang Dr. Arne's "The Soldier Tir'd," and "The Hunting Song," the last being encored. The fair lecturer speaks well, and sings with taste, and the "Melodies of Ireland and Scotland" may be commended as worth the notice of lovers of national song.

Amersham.—Two concerts were given here on the 4th instant at the Town Hall in this quiet old country town, by Mr. W. H. Birch the respected organist, in aid of the fund now being raised for the benefit of the wives and children of the soldiers ordered to the east. The principal vocalists were Miss Lizzy Stuart, from London, Mrs. Hancock, from Uxbridge, and Messrs. Knowles, Marriott, Mudge, and Bridgwater, from the Chapel Royal, Windsor. The instrumentalists were Herr Nurich, who performed two solos on the violin, and Mr. Range who played solos on the flute. Miss Lizzy Stuart sang "Annie Laurie," and "Bonnie Dundee," and the four-part songs of Hatton were effectively sang there by the four gentlemen from the Chapel Royal. Several choruses and madrigals were effectively rendered by the united choirs of the Uxbridge Harmonic and the Amersham Choral Societies. Mr. W. H. Birch conducted, and his MS. overture, which was fairly performed by the band, was listened to with interest. We trust the concert will prove remunerative, but we fear the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood did not feel so warm or sanguine in the cause as their more humble neighbours, or those whose kindly feelings prompted them to risk the expenses of a large concert for so admirable an object.

Baron Celli's Matinee Musicale was held at Willis's Rooms on Monday, the 3rd instant. The singers were Madame Persiani, Miss Stabbach, Miss Milla, Miss Tudor, Signors Belletti and Gardoni, Mr. Herberte, and Mr. Allan Irving; the instrumentalists, Herr Ries and Signor Bazzini (violin), and Mdlle. Caroline Valentin and Mr. Maurice Levy (pianoforte). Baron Celli supplied six morceaux for the programme—duetto "L'Invito Amoroso," sung by Misses Milla and Tudor; Arietta Scherzosa, "Le Modisto" (MS.), by Miss Stabbach; Melodia, "Il Delirio d'Amore," by Madame Persiani; terzetto, "I Capanari," by Messrs. Allan Irving and Herberte and Signor Belletti; terzetto, "Le Tre Prigionere," by Madame Persiani and Misses Milla and Tudor; and terzetto, "Fra l'ombre tacite" (nell' opera della Secchia Papita), by Madame Persiani, Signor Belletti, and Mr. Herberte. Madame Persiani was loudly encored in the Melodia, "Il Delirio d'Amore," which she sang with wonderful brillancy. The terzetto, "I Capanari," was much admired, and well sung. Mdlle. Caroline Valentin and Mr. Maurice Levy executed one of Mozart's duets for two pianofortes with great spirit, and Signor Bazzini played his Souvenirs de la Favorita on the violin with immense applause. Mr. Maurice Levy also performed a "Grande Marche" of his composition, which was received with favour. Signors Fossi and Li Calsi and Mr. Maurice Levy were the conductors. The concert attracted a large attendance to Willis's Rooms.

Digitized by Google

Mademoiselle Vernetti Paravalli, prima donna from the theatres of Milan, Venice, and Turin, gave an Evening Concert on Wednesday, at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square. It was Mdlle. Paravalli's first appearance in London, and she had for supporters Mesdames Taccani Comtesse Tasca, Marietta Albini de Vellani, Annie de Lara, Cesarini, Julie Mouat, Milla, Blanche Tudor, Signori Flavio and Onorati, and Messrs. George Tedder and Charles Cotton, as vocalists; and Mrs. Hales—late Miss Stevens—(pianoforte), and the Brothers Holmes (violin), as instrumentalists. The fair débutante, though decidedly clever, is hardly in the zenith of her power. Mdlle. Paravalli's voice exhibits unmistakable traces of being worn; but she showed, nevertheless, that her style and method were good. This was amply demonstrated in her first song, "Casta Diva," from Norma, which was sung with skill, and encored. Mdlle. Paravalli contributed largely to the programme, and introduced a pretty English ballad of her own composition, called "The Rose and the Heart."

Mr. W. H. Holmes' Pianoforte Concerts.—The third and last was as interesting as the others, and attracted as large and fashionable an audience to the Hanover Square Rooms. As the programme included no less than twenty-two pieces, it is impossible to give a detailed account of it. A masterly and ingenious Fantasia con Fuga, composed by Mr. Cipriani Potter, and admirably executed by Messrs. S. J. Noble and W. H. Holmes, began the concert; and a brilliant and effective duet for two pianofortes, by the same eminent musician, was equally well played by the composer and the concert-giver. Mr. Macfarren's fine quintet in G minor, for piano, violin, viola, violoncello, and double-bass, was attempted by Messrs. Gibson, Foalkes, Adlington, Schroeder, and Blakestone, all students of the Academy, and the first a pupil of Mr. Holmes. Mendelssohn's joyous Allegro Brillante, too, in A (Op. 92), was executed with infinite spirit by Mrs. John Macfarren (who is steadily advancing in her profession) and Mr. Holmes. Mr. Holmes himself introduced a new and ingenious capriccio on themes from Tancredi; a graceful romance, Deux Minutes, for two pianofortes and four players (Messrs. Maine, T. Chatterton, Noble, and Holmes); and some pianoforte solos, including a romance by John Field, and three pieces of his own—Scottish Chimes, Chimes of England, and Prince of Wales' March. His pianoforte playing, as usual, was finished, elegant, and spontaneous—real legitimate playing, and nothing less. Besides the above, fantasias on the harp (Mr. J. B. Chatterton), horn (Mr. C. Harper), piano (Miss Southgate), clarinet (Mr. Lazarus), and violin (Mr. H. Blagrove), were contributed; besides a tarantella for four players on two pianos (Miss Vinning, Messrs. Holmes, Pegler, and Noble); the adagio, scherzo, and finale from a very clever clarinet sonata (Messrs. F. Weber and Lazarus); Mr. Pegler's serenade, The Night Dancers, for four performers on two pianofortes (the composer, Messrs. Holmes, Noble, and Douce); and a number of vocal pieces, by Mrs. F. Taylor, Miss Lascelles, and Madame Weber, including a glee and a four-part song by Messrs. Foster, Land, M. Smith, and Lawler. Mr. S. J. Noble was the conductor. Mr. Land accompanied Mrs. Taylor in a song of his own. These concerts, which were chiefly instituted by Mr. Holmes, to make his friends and the public acquainted with the progress of his own pupils, have been eminently and deservedly successful.

Signor Paggi's Matinée.—This took place on Tuesday, at the residence of Mr. C. Salaman. Signor Paggi, a new comer, is one of the best oboists we have heard. His tone is mellow and agreeable, his style pure, and his execution irreproachable. These good qualities were developed in several pieces—the most striking of which were a song without words, entitled Il Rimprovero, and a brilliant fantasia, Rimembranze Napoletane, in the former of which the fine taste, and the latter the perfect mechanism, of Sig. Paggi was displayed to very eminent advantage. Sig. Paggi also played three pieces (two melodies of Rossini, and a canzone of his own, entitled La Farfulletta), with great success. He was greatly applauded in all his performances. Sig. Paggi is a Neapolitan by birth, and is likely to make his way. He appears unassuming, as well as talented—which is another point in his favour. He was assisted by Miss Ellen Williams, Mad. Nissen, Miss L. Pyne, Mdlle. Vestvali, Mr. A. Irving, Sig. Bettini, and Sig. Ciabatta (vocalists); by Messrs. G. Osborne and C. Salaman (pianoforte), who each played a solo, besides a duet together; and Mr. John Thomas (harp). The concert gave great satisfaction.

Manchester.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It is five years since we were favoured with an opera company—either from Her Majesty's Theatre, or the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. In August and September, 1849, we had, first—the lamented Madame Sontag, with the strongest company that ever came from Mr. Lumley's establishment, including Lablache and his son, Calzolari, Coletti, Belletti, etc., with Balfe to conduct; Tolbecque to lead; Piatti, violoncello; Anglois, double bass; and about seven or eight good performers on the other instruments—all from Her Majesty's Theatre. Next, we had Alboni, assisted by Polonini, Tagliafico, etc., etc. This year, the lovers of Italian opera in Manchester have been hoping to see the troupe engaged by Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., comprising Mesdames Cruvelli, Marai, and Cotti; Messrs. Tamberlik, Luchesi, Polonini, Tagliafico, and Susini, with Benedict to conduct, and Mr. Harris as régisseur, at our Theatre Royal in Italian Opera. But no! Last Saturday's Guardian announced the whole party as engaged for one concert! at our Concert Hall! which precludes their engagement at the Theatre Royal, or any other place in Manchester this season! Thus, unless the French Opera comes, or the Royal Opera Drury Lane Company, the lovers of opera here are condemned to another barren season. Nothing of musical interest has occurred lately.

Prior Park Exhibition.—(From a Correspondent.)—The students of the College of St. Peter and St. Paul, Atcombe, Stroud, gave their annual exhibition on Tuesday last. The entertainment was superior to the generality of college performances, and the selection of music far from uninteresting. As the Musical World is more devoted to the notices of musical than dramatic performances, I shall confine my remarks to the musical portion of the entertainment; but cannot refrain from observing what an excellent comic actor Mr. Coxon proved himself to be by his impersonation of Scapin in Molière's comedy of that name. A word of praise is also due to Master Welman, who delivered Beattie's poem "The Hermit" with great effect. The performance began with the chorus "Away, away," from Masaniello, which went well, but would have produced a better effect had it been sung with more spirit. Next came "Va pensiero," from Verdi's Nabucco, which was well sung by the chorus. Bishop's quartet, "Sleep, gentle lady," introduced a young gentleman (Master Rooker) whose contralto voice and expressive style won golden opinions. In the Preghiera from Mosè, Mr. Meade, who has a genuine bass voice, delivered the solo, "Dal tuo stellato soglio," with effect. Master Young, a mere child, to whom the music of Elcia was allotted, has a pleasing well-trained voice, and acquitted himself well. Mr. Williams, who sang the tenor solo, was suffering from nervousness to such a degree that it was painful to hear him. The chorus was excellent; the prayer was warmly applauded. After the Polacca and a selection from Ernani, including the conspiracy scene, in which Signor Gavica sustained the character of Silva, the first part was brought to a close by Haydn's "The Heavens are telling." The chorus was preceded by the recitatives "And God said" and "In splendour bright," which were well delivered by Mr. Pitchford. Mozart's "Gloria in Excelsis" (Mass No. 12); a German duo; Keller's "Lovely golden Light of Morning," sung by Masters F. and G. Young; the chorus of Sbirri from Lucrezia Borgia; Alphonso's solo "Si il furor di Borgia," by Mr. Meade; the duet between him and Rustighelli (Mr. Pitchford); Bishop's glee "Though he be now," by a chorus of twelve picked voices; and the chorus "Belo si celebre," from Semiramide, were included in Part II. Prizes were distributed to the most deserving students. The two silver medals were awarded to Masters Welman and Jarrett, and the performance was brought to a conclusion by Rossini's Hymn to Pio Nono. In the course of the entertainment, Mr. Williams played "A te, o cara" on the cornet-à-piston with applause. Mr. Esain, the Spanish pianist, also played, among other things, a galop of his own composition. The band was effective, and the general impression was that the performance reflected credit on the choir and its zealous and pains-taking conductor, Mr. Priest.

The Brothers Wieniawski have returned from Posen, and, after a stay of a few days at Berlin, proceeded to Munich.

Digitized by Google

FOREIGN.

ROME.—The Theatre of Apollo has opened with Verdi's I due Foscari. The execution was good, and the prima-donna, Mad. Luxuro Prétti, was much applauded. Linda di Chamouni is announced as the next opera. This will be followed by Signor Battista's opera, Ermelinda, and a new opera, entitled Odio e Amore, written expressly for the theatre by Sig. Defferari, the libretto by Romani.

IBID.—On the 18th June the Argentina Theatre closed for the season.

NAPLES.—At the Theatre of San Carlo, Verdi's Il Corsaro has been played with but little success. This disaster is attributed principally to the insufficiency of the singers in the principal parts, who were imperfect in the music and unable to cope with the exigencies of the score. Both the prima donna, Mad. De Rossi and Sig. Pancani, are described as having fallen off in the estimation of the public. Mad. Corrozzi-Zucchi is mentioned more favourably, and the tenor, Walter, sang his best. The decorations were magnificent, but the music is weak and the instrumentation poor.—At the Teatro Nuovo, Verdi's opera, Luisa Miller, has also been produced and condemned. In this instance the fault is attributed, not to the music, which has been successful all over Italy, nor to the singers, Mad. Cappelli, and Signors Brignoli and Villani, but to insufficiency of rehearsals, so that singers and orchestra were at loggerheads throughout the performance; the latter, more particularly, being described as superlatively bad.

MILAN, July 18.—(From our own Correspondent).—At the Teatro Santa Radegonda, a concert was given for the benefit of Signor Poletti, several artists assisting gratuitously. The flautist, Signor Briccialdi, obtained the "honours" of the evening. Signora Ersilia Pratesi (mezzo soprano), and Signora Amalia Diamonti (contralto), made their first public appearance. They were encouraged by the audience, although it was evident that the studies of both these young artists were far from being completed.

On Saturday, the 6th instant, the first representation of Lucia was given with Signora A. Fumagalli, the tenore Sarti, the barytone Sabatini, and the basso Lodetti. The general execution was far from being satisfactory. The barytone, Sabatini, was indisposed, and incapable of doing justice to his part. The basso, Lodetti, being a comprimario, but little was expected from him.

The Elisabetta of Donizetti, and Fontana, his pupil, has been in rehearsal for some time.

The Teatro Carcano was re-opened on the 9th instant, with Verdi's Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Signora Eufrosina Marcolini; Macbeth, Signor Prattico; Macduff, Signor Vincenzo Massini, Banquo, the Spanish basso profondo, N. Llorens. The voice of the prima donna has lost its freshness: nevertheless, she was applauded. The barytone, Prattico, might sing much better. The tenore, Massini, has a good voice, and has made progress since he last sang in Milan. The basso profondo, Llorens, was also favourably received. He has a telling voice, and has succeeded in establishing himself as a favourite. He has, however, much to learn. Verdi's I Masnadieri was produced on the evening of the 12th instant, with Madame Mauri Ventura, and the Signori Petrovich, Ippolito, and Llorens. Several years have elapsed since Signora Ventura commenced her career: her voice is not bad, but her intonation is faulty in the extreme. Her acting is certainly original! The tenore, Petrovich, has a voice of good quality, and sufficiently robust for large theatres. But he, like many others in this country, has acquired the bad habit of forcing his voice beyond its natural powers, more especially in the upper notes, which will doubtless, ere long, prove injurious. The basso centrale, Signor Ippolito, has not a bad voice, but he does not know how to make use of it. The basso profondo, Llorens, was also applauded in this opera. The promised new opera of the Neapolitan composer, Rieschi, is expected soon.

The young maestro, Emanuele Muzio (pupil of Verdi), and the author of several works, has been engaged to compose a new opera for the Scala, to be performed during the coming carnival. The celebrated tenor, Calzolari, has been engaged for the I. R. theatres in this city, and will sing in the new opera of Luigi Ricci, in the season of next spring. Signor Borachi, the new impresario, of these Royal Theatres, left hence a few days ago for Paris and London.

RIO JANEIRO.—The company engaged for Italian opera is composed of Mad. Zecchini (Mad. Charton is also expected shortly with Sig. Bouché), Mad. Casaloni, and Signori Laboccetta, Gentile, Arnaud, Zati, Whitworth, Ferranté and Barbieri. The dilettanti are much annoyed that they could not have Mad. De la Grange, although she had been offered eight hundred pounds a month, two clear benefits, equivalent to two thousand pounds, all travelling expenses for herself and five other persons, with a carriage and house. All the above named artists were well received on their arrival, and the opera chosen for their début was Donizetti's Elisir d'Amore. Mad. Zecchini was enthusiastically applauded, and Sigs. Ferranti and Laboccetta also came in for a good share of the honours. The second opera produced was Ernani, in which the baritone, Arnaud, was highly successful. The third opera was Rossini's Cenerentola, in which Mad. Casaloni created quite a furore. She was recalled six times during the performance. The ballet company has not yet arrived, but is expected very shortly.

ROTTERDAM.—(From a Correspondent.)—The great Festival for the twenty-fifth anniversary of the "Society for the Advancement of Music" took place on Thursday, 13th July, Friday, and Saturday, and consisted in three grand concerts on the first day; a festival overture (for the occasion) by Hutchenruyter (the musical conductor of the Rotterdam concerts), a very clever and admirably scored work, was followed by Handel's Israel in Egypt: Soli.—Mesdames Ney, Dolby, Offermanns Hoven, and Messrs. Roger, Pischeck, and Formes. Chorus of 700 and orchestra of 200, conducted by M. Verhulst (the overture by the composer Hutchenruyter). Miss Dolby sang well, and the best, but an extempore cadenza which she was guilty of was out of place. Mdlle. Ney was so much out of her element that the duo for two soprani finished in the middle, and was begun again, which did not prevent her making several more gross mistakes. The choruses went well to the orchestra; but Verhulst is a young conductor. The second day, Friday, brought us Haydn's Jahreszeiten (The Seasons), which went considerably better than the oratorio by Handel. Always excepting Roger's sliding and skating, and singing false, they sang some things admirably, but were by no means unexceptionable. The enthusiasm of the audience was enormous, and the joy about their festival quite naïve, juvenile, and refreshing for a London used-up man. All the streets were decorated with flags. The building is, although temporary (admirably fitted for sound), chastely ornamented; and, as Sterndale Bennett said to me, "They do these things better than we." All the inhabitants smile and bow to the strangers, and a more amiable reception visitors never received anywhere. The lower classes sing and dance in the streets for joy, and every one tries to be serviceable to you. Miss Dolby is enchanted with them, and says the same. Illuminations, fireworks, Vauxhalls, and military music meet you at all corners. All distinguished German professors and critics are here. Van Baalen, the eminent bookseller, is the soul of all, from A to Z, and deserves unlimited praise; the arrangements for access, etc., etc., are admirably conducted, with politeness unlimited. The greatest liberality and generosity are displayed in all and everything. Verhulst's Psalm (oxlv.), is clever, but exceedingly Mendelssohnian (borrowing and having are two). The 9th went "tant bien que mal," but is too difficult to demand a lenient criticism. Lubeck played well, but Coenen like a barrel-organ. Mdlle. Ney sang brilliantly, but not always in time—Mdme. Offermanns De Hoven like a thorough musician. The hall, 300 feet long, 90 broad, and immensely high, is well ventilated.

KONIGSBERG.—Fräulein Johanna Wagner has produced a great sensation as Clytemnestra, in Glück's Iphigénie in Aulis.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—Herr Pischeck has concluded his engagement, and Fräulein Leibhardt is at present the attraction. She has been favourably received by the frequenters of the opera, who consist mostly of English and French, and who, by the way, manifest a marked partiality for Mozart's works.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN.—(From our own Correspondent).—Since the conclusion of the opera season, the entertainments at the Royal Opera House have consisted mostly of ballets. As there are a great number of strangers at present here, and the weather is very bad, the attendance, contrary to expectation, has been tolerably good. On the other hand, the summer theatres, which, since last year, have gradually risen in public favour, have been very unfortunate. The company at the splendid Park Theatre, in the Wilhelm Stadt, has been compelled, on several occasions, to remove in the middle of the performance from the summer to the winter theatre. The same holds good of Kroll's establishment, where the entertainments have been given in the Königsaal.

STUTTGARD.—Herr Steger, the tenor, from Vienna, has appeared in Masaniello, Raoul, Edgar, and Arnold (in the trio from Wilhelm Tell). M. Adolphe Adam's Giralda has been represented with success. The season was brought to a close on the 28th of June, with Der Prophet. On the 15th August, M. Meyerbeer's new opera, Der Stern des Nordens (L'Etoile du Nord), will be put in rehearsal.—Mad. Marlow is engaged for ten years, with the promise of a considerable pension on the expiration of that period. Herr Kücken has gone to the fashionable bathing place of Nordeney, where he intends spending the vacation.

CASSEL.—Dr. Spohr, with his family, has gone to spend a short time in Switzerland. In Berne, the Verein für altclassische Musik, under the direction of Herr Edele, gave a performance, in honour of the respected composer, of his oratorio Letzte Dinge (Last Judgment), in the Cathedral church, and the Liedertafel afterwards serenaded him.

FLORENCE.—The anonymous composer of Matilde de Galigari, just performed at the Teatro-Nuovo, proves to be the Marchese Azzolino.

TRIESTE.—At the Teatro-Mauroner the Zingara (Bohemian Girl), of Balfe, has been re-produced with the most splendid success, every piece having been warmly applauded. Only a few months have elapsed since its first brilliant reception in this city during the last Carnival. A greater "honour" than this could not have been conferred upon its composer. The prima donna, Signora Brignoli Ortolani, the tenore Mazzoleni, and the basso Della Costa, were enthusiastically applauded. The new opera in four parts, Bianca Cappello, of the young maestro, Alberto Randegger (a Triestino), one of the favourite pupils of Signor Luigi Ricci, was represented for the first time on the 8th with success. The composer was called no less than fourteen times during the evening. The artists were the Signore Brignoli Ortolani (Bianca), Carolina Berini (Piero Bonaventuri), the tenore Remorini (Francesco Medici), the barytone F. Della Costa (Cappello), and Carapia (Mondragone.)

HANOVER.—Fräulein Tomala, from Pesth, is engaged for next season as is also Fräulein Schwarzbach. The latter, however, does not appear inclined to fulfil her contract. The Count von Platen and Herr Capellmeister Fischer have returned from their journey in search of novelty, and are said to have concluded engagements with several talented artists.

HAMBURGH.—Mad. Herman-Czillag took leave here as Abigail, in Nabucodonosor. She has been succeeded by Mad. Schreiber-Kirchberger. Masaniello has been given for the benefit of Herr Heer.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

SIGNOR GIULIO REGONDI has removed to 22, Manchester-street, Manchester-square.

TO COUNTER TENOR SINGERS.—There is a Vacancy for an Alto Voice in the Choir of Winchester Cathedral. Candidates should be familiar with the Choral Service, and able to read music with facility. Persons of inferior qualifications need not apply. For particulars apply to J. Lampard, Esq., Southgate-street, Winchester.

CONCERTS or ENTERTAINMENTS in the PROVINCES.—Mr. JOHN BLAGROVE (late Manager of Mr. John Parry's Entertainment) will be happy to undertake the arrangement and management of any musical tours in the ensuing Autumn and Winter. All applications to be addressed to Mr. John Blagrove, 71, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square.

ORGAN CONCERT.—Mr. W. T. BEST has the honour to announce that he will give a MORNING PERFORMANCE upon the Large Organ built by Messrs. Walker, for Huddersfield, at the Manufactory, 27, Francis-street, Tottenham Court-road, on Thursday next, July 27th. The programme includes J. S. Bach's Pastorale and Fuga; an Organ Composition by Schumann; and Handel's 2nd Organ Concerto. A limited number of Tickets may be had upon application to Messrs. Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, on Wednesday next. To commence at Two o'clock.

HARMONIUMS. — CAUTION. — George Luff and Son, makers to Her Majesty of the only Real Harmonium, to prevent the sale of inferior imitations, have reduced their prices, both for sale or hire.

PIANOFORTES, with increased and more equalized power of tone, superior touch, and great durability, in every variety and price, for sale, hire, exchange, or exportation. George Luff and Son, 103, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

THE SAXOPHONE.—RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and Co., 100, New Bond street, sole agents in this country for M. Sax's military instruments, in addition to a large stock of Sax Horns, Sax Trombas, Sax Trumpets, and Cornets, have just received a great variety of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, of Sax's new and beautiful-toned instruments, the Saxophone. "These new instruments (brass and played by a reed), possess a charm equal to the originality of their tone, and they carry to the highest degree of perfection, la voix expressive."—Report of Jurors, Great Exhibition.

RUDALL, ROSE, CARTE, and CO., 100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, have the honour of announcing that they have been appointed the Sole Agents in Great Britain for the Sale of the SAX-CORNETS, SAXOPHONES, SAX-HORNS, and all other Brass Military Instruments invented and manufactured by M. Adolphe Sax, to whom was awarded the only Council Medal of the Great Exhibition for Military Instruments in Brass, a list of which, with the prices, may be had on application, post free. It will be seen from this list, that M. Sax's Instruments can now be supplied direct from his own Manufactory, at a price not higher than the numerous imitations of them.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRA.—Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori; Leader, Mr. Thirlwall; Messrs. Barret, Lazarus, Baumann, Remusat, Lovell Phillips, Mount, Tolbecque, Nadaud, Payton, Mann, Carrodus, Vogel, D. Godfrey, Cioffi, Prospère, Chipp, Zeiss, Russell, Antoine, Guest, Standen, N. Mori, W. Thirlwall, Crosier, F. Godfrey, Gleadow, Anderson, &c. This celebrated Orchestra can now be engaged for Oratorios, Operas, and Concerts, in town or country. All communications to be addressed to Mr. A. Guest, Hon. Sec., 1, Kingston Russell-place, Oakley-square, Camden-town, or to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

REPAIRS of STRINGED, REED, and BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. — Messrs. Boosey and Sons beg to announce to the musical profession and the public, that, to enable them to execute repairs in the best possible manner, they have recently engaged from Germany one of the most skilful European artisans to superintend this department, and who thoroughly understands the mechanism of Musical Instruments of every description and model. Parties, therefore, intrusting the most valuable instruments to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, may rely upon their being treated with a care and efficiency unequalled in London. Boosey and Sons, Musical Instrument Manufacturers, 28, Holles-street.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION, and SOFT AND FAIR HANDS AND ARMS, are fully realized and sustained by the use of ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Preparation, which, by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels of the SKIN, promotes a healthy tone so essential to its general well-being and the beauty of its appearance. Freckles, tan, pimples, spots, discoloration, and other cutaneous visitations are eradicated by the KALYDOR, and give place to a radiant bloom and transparency of complexion.

During the heat and dust of summer, and in cases of sunburn, stings of insects, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

CAUTION.—The words ROWLANDS' KALYDOR are on the wrapper of each bottle, and their signature, A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, in red ink, at foot.

Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Digitized by Google

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Oratorios and Concerts in the Provinces during October and November next:—

Madame NOVELLO,
Mrs. LOCKEY,
Mrs. ENDERSSOHN,
Mr. LOCKEY,
Mr. HOBBS,
Mr. H. PHILLIPS,
AND
Mr. SIMS REEVES.
PIANISTE,
Mr. J. L. HATTON.
CONDUCTOR,
Mr. LAND.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES. — GOD SAVE THE QUEEN, newly harmonised, as sung at the opening of the Crystal Palace, June 10.—Messrs. CAMPBELL, RANSFORD, and Co. beg to acquaint the public, that from the numerous inquiries for the arrangement of the National Anthem, which gave such general satisfaction, under the able direction of M. Costa, they have published an edition suitable for private or public performance, price 1s. 6d.; separate voice parts may be had for the use of Choral Societies. Campbell, Ransford, and Co., 53, New Bond-street.

NEW ITALIAN VOCAL MUSIC, by GORDIGIANI.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Era un sorriso | T. or S. | 2 | 0 |
| Il fior della speranza | Ballata, MS. | 2 | 0 |
| Un uomo felice | Ballata, T. or S. | 2 | 0 |
| La Pellegrina | Arietta | 2 | 0 |
| Separazione | Arietta, T. or S. | 2 | 0 |
| L'Amore | Melodia | 2 | 0 |
| Vorrei morir | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Un Bacio | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Sonotto del dante | | 2 | 0 |
| O Giovinetta | Ballata | 2 | 0 |
| Lucietta | Canzonetta | 2 | 0 |
| O miei pensier | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| Esigenza | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| La Ciambetta | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| La pipa del nonno | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| Ancora t' amo | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| Il nome di mia madre | Canto popolare | 1 | 6 |
| Canto e Ballo | Scena à due voci | 2 | 0 |
| La Cerca | Duettino | 1 | 6 |
| Il Maggio | Notturnino à due voci | 2 | 0 |
| Pastorale | A due voci | 2 | 0 |
| Tutto ritorna | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| La Gita in Gondola | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| E quando di morir | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| Le due Fanguille | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| Il Canto del Menestrello | Romanza | 2 | 0 |
| La Rosa | Melodia | 2 | 0 |
| Ah non lasciarmi | Melodia | 2 | 0 |
| La Pensierosa | Romanza | 2 | 6 |
| Io t'amo | Romanza | 2 | 0 |
| La Boscajuola | Romanza | 2 | 0 |
| Tutti i sabati | Ave Maria | 1 | 0 |
| Speranza del mio cor | | 1 | 6 |
| Impressione | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Rimedio | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Impossibile | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Povera lingua mia | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| La Rivale | Duetto | 3 | 0 |
| Il Mezzo-Giorno | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| Il Salice e la Tomba | Duetto | 2 | 6 |
| Dormite | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Tra la la | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Saluti | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Rosettina | Canto popolare | 2 | 0 |
| Che | Romanza | 2 | 0 |

BOOSEY and SONS, 28, Holles-street.

CRAMER, BEALE and Co., beg to announce that they have made arrangements with the following eminent Artistes to give Operas and Concerts in the Provinces during August and September next:—

Mdlle. CRUVELLI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Mdlle. MARAI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Madame COTTI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor LUCHESI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor TAGLIAFICO,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor SUSINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
Signor POLONINI,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND
Signor TAMBERLIK,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
REGISSEUR,
Mr. A. HARRIS,
(From the Royal Italian Opera.)
AND CONDUCTOR,
M. JULES BENEDICT.

All applications to be made, by letter, to Mr. WILLERT BEALE, 201, Regent-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—CHARLES EVER'S CHANSONS D'AMOUR pour le PIANO.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1.—Turquie | 2 | 0 |
| „ 2.—Provençe | 2 | 0 |
| „ 3.—Russie | 2 | 0 |
| „ 4.—Suisse | 2 | 6 |

Complete, handsomely bound, illustrated, gilt edges, 6s.

EWER and CO., 390, Oxford-street.

VERDI'S IL TROVATORE.—The complete Opera. Price 21s.

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Di due figli vivea padre beato | Coro e Cavatina, B. | 3 | 0 |
| Mori di paura un servo del conte | | 3 | 0 |
| Tacea la notte placida | Scena e Cavatina, S. | 3 | 0 |
| Deserto sulla terra | Scena e Romanza, T. | 1 | 6 |
| Infida qual voce | Scena e Terzetto, S. T. e Bar. | 4 | 0 |
| Vedi! le fosche notturne spoglie | Coro di Zingari | 2 | 6 |
| Stride la vampa | Canzone, MS. | 1 | 6 |
| Mesta e la tua canzon | Coro | 1 | 6 |
| Condotta ell' era in ceppi | Scena e Racconto, MS. | 3 | 0 |
| Mal reggendo all' aspro assalto | Scena e Duetto, MS. e T. | 5 | 0 |
| Il balen del suo sorriso | Scena ed Aria, Bar. | 5 | 0 |
| Ah se l' error t' ingombra | Coro | 2 | 0 |
| Degg' io volgermi a quei | | 1 | 6 |
| E deggio e posso crederlo | | 6 | 0 |
| Or co dadi ma fra poco | Coro | 3 | 0 |
| Giorni poveri vivea | Terzetto, MS. B. e Bar. | 5 | 0 |
| Ah si ben mio coll' essere io tuo | Scena ed Aria, T. | 5 | 0 |
| D' amor sull' ali rosèe | Scena ed Aria, S. | 6 | 0 |
| Qual voce! come! tu donna? | Scena e Duetto, S. e Bar. | 5 | 0 |
| Se m' ami ancor | Duettino, MS. e T. | 3 | 0 |
| Parlar non vuoi? | Scena e Terzettino, S. MS. e T. | 3 | 0 |
| Ti scosta! non respingermi | Scena finale, S. MS. T. e Bar. | 3 | 0 |

BOOSEY and SONS, 28, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of 27, Notting Hill Square, in the parish of Kensington, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street. Sold also by ALLEN, Warwick Lane; VICKERS, Holywell Street. Agents: for Scotland, PATERSON & SONS, Edinburgh; for Ireland, H. BUSSELL, Dublin; and all Publishers.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's Lane, in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped, 20s. per annum—Unstamped, 16s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 32.—No. 30. SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1854. {PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

SKETCHES OF ENGLISH ARTISTS.

NO. III.

JOHN BRAHAM.

One of the most remarkable singers of his time, and one of the greatest ornaments of the English stage, was born in London, in 1777. When scarcely seven years old, Braham became a pupil of Leoni, the professor and vocalist, and the original Don Carlos in Sheridan's Duenna. Leoni—whose real name was Levi—when a boy, was engaged by Garrick and brought out in a musical entertainment at Drury Lane called The Enchantress, the music written by a well-known character named Handel Smith, who was called "Handel" from his intimacy with the author of the Messiah. The boy Braham made such astonishing progress under the instruction of Leoni, that at the age of ten, in 1787, he made his first appearance on the stage, at the Royalty Theatre, as Cupid in an occasional piece called The Birthday, written in honour of the anniversary of Queen Charlotte, consort of George the Third. The Royalty Theatre was under the management of John Palmer—Gentleman Palmer as he was called—who afterwards died suddenly at Drury Lane while performing in the Stranger. The first public vocal display of young Braham was in the air "Gentle God, whose sacred powers," an invocation to Hymen, composed by Carter, the author of several beautiful ballads, among which we need only mention "O Nanny, wilt thou gang with me." At this time, Braham had a voice of extraordinary sweetness and compass, and could already execute florid music with the greatest fluency and the most perfect ease. In Dr. Arne's bravura song "The Soldier tir'd," he was always enthusiastically applauded; when singing this song, Braham used to appear on the stage in a soldier's coat, which was much too large for him, and never failed to excite the merriment of the audience.

This occurred exactly sixty-seven years ago. How many of all those thousands who then applauded and laughed are now living? Perhaps not one, while the hero of our sketch is still green and flourishing, hale and hearty, happy and full of life. What various vicissitudes of fortune must Braham have witnessed in his time! What changes since public fame first opened to him have happened in arts and science, in manners "domestic and foreign," and in politics. He has lived and flourished under four successive reigns—George III., George IV., William IV., and Victoria—and has, perhaps, seen the greatest revolutions of which history makes mention. But Braham never meddled in politics; art was his sole pursuit. From the moment he first attracted public attention, Braham became a special favourite with the nobility, and his intimacy with their Majestics George III., George IV., and William IV. is matter of notoriety. It has been said of him "that he was a prince among artists as well as an artist among princes."

Having lost his master Leoni, who left England in 1789, Braham placed himself under the tuition of a Mr. Davis, with whom he prosecuted his studies advantageously. In a short time, he had so grounded himself in music and singing, that he was enabled to take pupils, and became the master of several of his fellow students who had begun to learn at the same time as himself. It is even recorded that some time before Leoni went on the continent, young Braham actually taught his own master how to sing some of Dr. Arne's songs, so much even then was thought of his taste and style.

Among the earliest and best friends of Braham were the munificent merchants Abraham and Benjamin Goldsmid, who perceived his talents, and took him under their especial protection. Braham was in no small degree indebted for his subsequent career as an artist to those kind patrons, and never speaks of them to this day without expressing his admiration of their generosity.

In the latter end of the year 1789, Braham's voice broke, and he applied himself with assiduity to the study of the pianoforte, taking lessons, among others, from Clementi and Dussek. He soon became a proficient on the instrument, and acquired a neat and ready execution. But he did not neglect his voice at this critical juncture. By the most careful attention it soon recovered its strength and quality and Mr. Ashe, the flute-player, having accidentally heard Braham, advised him to accept an engagement for the Bath theatre, which he could procure. Braham accordingly went to Bath, and while there took lessons from Rauzzini, an Italian teacher and vocalist, the Veluti of his day. This artist, from his superior dramatic powers, was called the Italian Garrick. It is related of him that, at the end of the Death of Montezuma, he acted so naturally that Garrick, who was present at the performance, came behind the scenes and embraced him. Independently of his musical and dramatic abilities, Rauzzini, we are told, possessed a fund of esprit, and many amusing anecdotes are cited of his wit and humour. He had so great an affection for Braham that his house and table were always at his command, and he paid Braham for every concert at which he sang—an unusual proceeding for a master.

In a few years, Braham made such advances in the art of singing under Rauzzini, that he began himself to give lessons in Bath; and in 1795 he obtained as a pupil Lady Nelson, then Mrs. Nelson, who was desirous of learning Italian songs to please her husband, Captain Nelson, afterwards the celebrated admiral. The fame of the young and rapidly rising tenor soon spread to London, and Stephen Storace, the composer, went expressly to Bath to hear him, and engaged him for Drury Lane Theatre in the spring of 1796, to make his début in Storace's opera of Mahmoud. The composer, however, died before Braham appeared at the end of the season.

So great was the success achieved by Braham at Drury Lane, that in 1797 we find him engaged at the King's Theatre, (the Italian Opera in the Haymarket,) singing with the famous Mad. Banti and the celebrated tenor, Viganoni in Zemira and Azor. Our young English singer alternated the first male parts—which, at that time, except in Mozart's operas, were always tenors—with Viganoni, during the first season of his engagement, but was afterwards retained as sole primo tenore.

Resolved upon visiting France and Italy to gain greater experience in his art, Braham went to Paris with the intention of remaining only a few days. He, however, stayed eight months, and gave several concerts, the first of which was held at the Elysée-Bourbon, under the immediate patronage of Madame Josephine, wife of General Napoleon Bonaparte. The price of admission was one louis-d'or. During his sojourn at Paris, Braham was offered a lucrative engagement at the Italian Opera, which, however, he declined, being resolved not to be diverted from his principal object in leaving England, which was to proceed to Italy, and prosecute his studies under the best masters.

Digitized by Google

When Braham gave his first concert at Paris—which we have just said was under the patronage of Madame Josephine Bonaparte—he received a communication from General Bonaparte, in which that illustrious captain expressed his regret that he would be unable to attend the performance. On the same day, the hero of Marengo quitted Paris for Egypt, and seized upon Malta en passant. Braham was intimately acquainted with Jerome Bonaparte, the brother of Napoleon, a simple citoyen, with whom he used frequently to play whist. On one occasion, alluding to the political differences between France and England, Jerome Bonaparte, with perfect coolness and simplicity, addressed our hero as follows:—"Citizen Braham, my brother the General is determined to invade and conquer England. No power on earth can prevent it. England must fall, and London be laid in ruins. But, mon cher ami, do not be frightened. Pray give me your address—the place and number of your house in London—and I promise you I will occupy it myself, and take care of it for you. Citizen Braham, don't be frightened." Citizen Braham was not frightened. He liked Jerome Bonaparte, in spite of his rhodomontade, and Jerome had a great regard for Braham, although he was an Englishman. This scene took place in the house of Madame Montansier, directress of the Théâtre de Montansier (Palais Royal)

Braham soon after left Paris for Italy, and was not long in the "land of song" before he obtained an engagement. His first appearance in an Italian theatre was at the Pergola, Florence, in an opera called The Return of Ulysses, composed by Basili, in which Braham played the part of Ulysses. Unfortunately, however, the Telemachus was upwards of six feet high, and the Ulysses being barely five foot three, when father and son came on there was a general titter throughout the house. But the singing of the English tenor speedily excited admiration, and Braham's success was unquestionable. While at Florence, Braham was introduced to the celebrated tenor David, the Rubini of his day, who when asked to name the best tenor in Italy, replied, with equal wit and modesty, "Dopo di me, il Inglese"—"After me, the Englishman." A great compliment, however, was intended.

From Florence Braham went to Milan, where he met his countrywoman, Mrs. Billington. This renowned vocalist was then married to a M. Fleissont, who was so exceedingly tenacious of his wife's celebrity, that he could not endure that she should encounter the slightest rivalry or opposition. Mrs. Billington and Braham were engaged to appear together in a new opera, composed by Nasolini. Nasolini was an ardent worshipper of Bacchus, of which Mrs. Billington's husband took advantage. While the composer was writing the songs for Braham, Fleissont was with him early every morning, and plied him with wine until he was unable to collect a thought or to put pen to paper. With great difficulty Nasolini was enabled to write a song and duet in the opera, which was called Il Trionfa di Claria. During all this time rehearsals were held in the theatre, and the manager, who daily applied for Braham's song, was put off with trifling excuses. Things could not go on in this manner, and at length Braham's anger was excited. He was determined to have his triumph as well as Claria, and succeeded to admiration. It was the custom of Mrs. Billington to try her song four or five times at the rehearsal, with all the cadences and ornaments she meant to introduce. Braham listened attentively to these, and learned by memory every passage and roulade. Nasolini, at last, sent the act and duet, where Braham had to sing immediately before the entrée of the prima donna. Our hero accomplished his plan with the greatest success, and in the course of the air introduced, in succession, every one of Mrs. Billington's cadences which he had heard at the rehearsals. When the lady herself came on to sing, she was so excited and enraged, that she failed to produce the slightest effect. In consequence of the drunkenness and neglect of Nasolini, the opera was produced in a mutilated state, and there was no grand scena for the tenor. The public were dissatisfied, and the opera was not allowed to proceed to the end. The manager, Gherardi, who came forward to apologise, was hooted off. On the following day, however, he issued an announcement to the public, worded in a most humble manner, promising, that, at the next performance, the whole of the opera should be given, and that "Citizen Braham"—it was during the time of the Republic—would sing a grand scena written expressly for the occasion. Fortunately for the impresario, Braham was gifted with an excellent memory, and could sing the most difficult music at first sight, so that in a few hours' study he was enabled to make himself quite familiar with the new composition. Both tenor and prima donna this time met with the most flattering reception, and were tumultuously applauded in their several performances. In after times, Mrs. Billington and Braham frequently alluded to this anecdote in England, and referred with infinite satisfaction to their reminiscences of Milan, the unhappy manager, Gherardi, and the scottish composer, Nasolini.

About this time Mrs. Billington was engaged at Covent Garden, under the direction of Mr. Harris. She was in the zenith of her power, and possessed a voice of extraordinary power and beauty. In an Italian bravura which she introduced in one of her performances, she used to take G in alt with the utmost ease. The same feat is recorded of Signora Sinclari, a vocalist of reputation in the time of Mozart, who transcribed some of the most remarkable passages she was accustomed to execute.

From Milan, Braham went to Genoa, where he sang with Marchesi, the Veluti of his day, in the opera of Lodoiska, for thirty consecutive nights. At Genoa he studied composition under Isola. While staying here Braham had to submit to a great deal of inconvenience in consequence of the city being besieged by the English under Lord Keith. He applied to General Massena for permission to leave Genoa, and was informed that on a particular day he would obtain an answer; but before the day arrived the English and Austrians had entered Genoa, and the French had quitted it. Massena had done all he could to prolong the siege, expecting that some good news would reach him from Bonaparte; and his expectations were not far wrong, since, a few days after the surrender of Genoa, he received an account of the victory of Marengo.

At Leghorn Braham was introduced to Lord Nelson, who took great notice of him. Our hero visited the admiral's residence almost daily, and generally dined there twice a-week. After dinner he frequently sang duets with Lady Hamilton, who had a splendid voice, and a real taste for music. One day, at the request of Lord Nelson, Braham tried over a march on the piano, which the hero of the Nile intended should be his funeral march. While he was playing, General Abercrombie was announced; but Nelson told Braham not to leave the room, and requested him to continue his performance. The two illustrious commanders meanwhile walked up and down the saloon and carried on an animated conversation in an under tone. At that moment Braham could hardly have felt the presentiment that he was destined, not long after, to compose the "Death of Abercrombie," and the "Death of Nelson," which during a long series of years he has sung to hundreds of thousands of his countrymen.

Braham did not proceed, as he had desired and intended, to Naples. His engagements in the North of Italy were too numerous and lucrative to admit of his paying a visit to that picturesque abode of fishermen and lazaroni. From Leghorn he went to Venice. It was here that Cimarosa began to compose his last opera, Artemisia, for Braham; but, like Storace with regard to Mahmoud, the celebrated Italian Musician died before the work was completed. Our English tenor took part in the funeral service of the composer with Naldi, and by his pathos and expression profoundly affected the audience. As there are some who are sceptical as to the fact of Cimarosa having composed his last opera expressly for Braham, we extract the following characteristic letter, which has immediate reference to the subject, and will at once set the question at rest:—

To the Editor of the MARTINO.

"SIR,—In reading an account of Cimarosa in the papers of the day, I thought the following communication might not be unacceptable to the musical world. I think it was about the year 1800 I was engaged at the Fenice, at Venice. Cimarosa was the composer of a new opera (his last) called Artemisia; the libretto by Il Conte Collerco. I was with the illustrious compositore almost every day. He was evidently dying, though full of wit, spirits, and repartee. He took a great quantity of cicuta. The mistress of the house in which he resided called one morning, and begged he would pray to the saint of her parish, assuring him he was very powerful. Cimarosa thanked her exceedingly, but said he was afraid it would be of no use, as not belonging to her parish the saint would, very probably, pay no attention to him. He knew his time was come, and prepared for death, and died like a good Catholic and sincere Christian. The part of Tenore Principale he had written for me, but, never having heard me sing, he composed the principal arias merely from what he had heard of me from others; and surely never was music better adapted. He wrote for me a beautiful scena, con coro, that had a wonderful effect, it was so delightfully instrumented. I regret I could not get a copy of it. The copyist was so outrageously exacting in his demands that I was obliged to leave Venice without the aria. Poor Cimarosa left the opera of Artemisia unfinished. Mayer, the celebrated German composer, was requested to finish it, but he, from real modesty, refused. The opera was performed in its unfinished state. The music was applauded to the very echo, mingled with the tears of the audience. Unfortunately the poem was very mediocre. I assisted at Cimarosa's funeral, sung a song, and in a quartetto composed by Bertoni. A funeral movement was performed, and, in the midst of the most solemn and soul-striking harmonies, little snatches of musical phrases, taken from celebrated operas of the composer—from the Orazzi, Ulysse, and Matrimonio—were heard from some wind instruments placed in a distant part of the church: subdued in pianissimo—seeming to come from the clouds—they had a startling and unearthly effect. My heart trembled and tears started from my eyes. Little did I then think it would be my fate to sing in the last immortal operas of two of the greatest composers—Cimarosa and Weber.—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

Digitized by Google

"Giovanni Braham."

"Tenore, ma scrivo con molto umilita un Inglese."

This letter was published in the Maestro, a musical journal which was born and died in the year 1844.

On his journey homewards to London, Braham sang at Trieste and Hamburgh, and accepted an engagement at Covent Garden theatre. He made his first appearance in a new opera, called Chains of the Heart, written by Prince Hoare, the music by Reeve and Mazzinghi, with a success that is even now remembered.

(To be concluded in our next.)

REVIEWS.

"A Treatise on Counterpoint and Fugue." By L. Cherubini. (Novello's "Library for the Diffusion of Musical Knowledge.") Translated by Mrs. Cowden Clarke. J. Alfred Novello.

Although the Treatise on Counterpoint and Fugue was only partially the work of the late Cherubini, and was prepared for publication by his pupil, M. Halévy, who (according to good authority) wrote the majority of the musical examples, it is still a work of great value and interest to musical students. Its appearance in Novello's Library for the Diffusion of Musical Knowledge must, therefore, be welcomed as a gratifying fact. The present edition is not only to be recommended on account of its being remarkably cheap; but it is got up neatly, with correctness, and in a very convenient form for those who are anxious to make themselves acquainted with the examples, and compare them with the precepts of the master. Our general opinion of the Treatise on Counterpoint and Fugue, and of M. Halévy's share in its composition, having been stated more than once, it is unnecessary to enter into further details. The announcement of the new edition issued by Mr. Novello, and an acknowledgment of the advantages it offers to the musical public, are all that is required.

A word, however, is due to Mrs. Cowden Clarke for her careful and sometimes even too literal translation, and for the short but interesting memoir of Cherubini which she has compiled from the biography of M. Fétis, first published in La Revue et Gazette Musicale de Paris, a translation of which appeared in the Musical World (1843.)

"A Treatise on Choir and Chorus Singing." By F. J. Fétis. Translated by the Rev. Thomas Helmore, M.A.

This translation of the Chant en Chœur, appropriately dedicated to the Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Mus. Bac., Oxon., is ably made. Something of the kind has long been wanted. Not that we are disposed to rate the labour of the learned and industrious Belgian critic and musician so very highly as Mr. Helmore appears to do; but that we think any hints from an intelligent foreigner, and especially one so well qualified as M. Fétis, on a matter of such universal interest as the choral worship of the Church, are entitled to attention and respect, and are certain to be read with interest.

The treatise of M. Fétis is elementary, philosophical, and progressive. It comprises a course of instructions in the art of teaching choral singing in churches, including a series of observations and recommendations on the means of obtaining an efficient and well-balanced choir, and a large quantity of purely theoretical matter. The ten chapters into which it is divided treat respectively of the choice and classification of voices, the proportion of voices in the choir, the concord of voices in the unison or octave, the concord and exercise of the voices in harmony, the modifications of sound in regard to light and shade, the various accents or tonal qualities of voices, the pronunciation of words and vocal articulation, vocalisation in chorus, the melodic, harmonic, and rhythmical phrases, and finally, of animation in singing. It may be easily believed that all these subjects have been discussed by M. Fétis in a lucid and masterly manner. We are inclined to doubt, however, whether the work can be made generally applicable and useful. There is too much in it for a manual, or a mere elementary book, and too little for a philosophical treatise. Nevertheless, we advise all who feel an interest in the subject to possess themselves of the volume, since by merely reading it attentively they cannot fail to add largely to their stock of information; while such as are inclined and have the gift might gather enough of valuable hints and a sufficient number of plans, starting-points, and gradual steps of progress, to enable them to produce something themselves, which, while less comprehensive and elaborate, would be more readily handy and available.

In any case Mr. Helmore, for the pains he has taken, is entitled to the thanks of the musical community, and especially of those congregations which look to the advancement of the choral service as a matter of infinite importance to the ends of religion.

"Novello's Analysis of Vocal Rudiments." J. Alfred Novello.

This is the "treble" book of a useful set of analyses, by question and answer, which have already obtained considerable circulation in the United Kingdom. As the motto suggests, it begins from "the rudiments," and goes through each successive step progressively. The utility of the work is unquestionable, and its small size and convenient shape will further recommend it to the masses.

"Cerisette"—Morceau de Salon—for the Pianoforte. Jules Brissac. Wessel and Co.

A lively, dashing, and sufficiently-brilliant movement in C major, easy to play, and showy into the bargain. It has a graceful episode in A flat; and a kind of variation in the first theme, on which the Henri Herz style of passage of reiterated notes is cleverly employed. The author has not gone to any popular opera for his themes, but has invented them himself—which is already a point in his favour, more especially since they are good and well contrasted.

"Not Yet"—Song. Words by L. E. L. Music by Eliza Hughes. Rudall, Rose, and Carte.

The first subject of this ballad is graceful, and the interruption of the full cadence and imitation of the last phrase of the melody in the symphony (page 2) is extremely pretty. The enharmonic transition, however, from the common chord of A flat to the dominant on B natural (page 3) is not happy; there is too much of E natural for a short ballad in E flat; and the return to the original key (page 4) is forced and ineffective. Had Miss Hughes, who is a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, consulted us about the publication of this song, we should have said, "Not yet"—decidedly.

"The Original Quadrilles." For the Pianoforte. Mrs. Ambrose Merton. C. Londsdale.

The title of these quadrilles is unfortunate, since they are by no means "original." There is one pretty figure (No. 3—La Poule); but the rest is trivial and insipid.

"Le Bal Costumé." Polka. By Mrs. Alexander Gibbs. Graddon and Gibbs.

A lively polka enough, and rhythmical, but so full of typographical errors, that it would be as well to have them all corrected before issuing another copy. The coloured portrait, too, of the composer (formerly Miss Graddon, the well-known singer), is neither a happy likeness, nor to be admired as a work of art. The polka is quite good enough, however, to make it worth the pains to scratch out the picture and rectify the errors of type.

Digitized by Google

"When o'er the Meadows green"—("Une Plainte.") Song. By Eugène Vivier. Wessel and Co.

The above is an English version of the charming romance for voice and pianoforte, with horn obbligato, which, under the title of "Une Plainte" was sung with such success by Madame Viardot Garcia at the recent concert of Mr. Benedict. The French words are full of sentiment, and the translation has been made with ability, and is almost as well fitted to the music as the original. Our favourable opinion of "Une Plainte" has more than once been expressed. There is a melancholy about it which is the more expressive since it is utterly free from affectation. The melody is one of the most plaintive which M. Vivier—whose tunes are always tinged with a certain hue of sadness, even where the themes are merry—has ever composed; and the pianoforte accompaniment is quaint, original, and musician-like. The horn obbligato is quite as interesting as the principal part, and the dialogue between the voice and instrument is managed with exquisite taste. It is long since a more attractive and beautiful song of its kind has come under our notice.

"Rossini: his Life and Works," is the title of a volume just brought out by the brothers Messrs. Escudier, authors of the Theoretical and Historical Dictionary of Music, at M. Dentu's, publisher and bookseller. This book, the most complete hitherto produced on the author of Guillaume Tell, is addressed both to musicians and the general reading public. It cannot fail to excite considerable curiosity in all classes, both on account of its original artistic appreciations and the numerous and interesting anecdotes with which it abounds.

Robbery at M. Jullien's.—At the Marlborough police-office on Monday week, James Anderson, a well-dressed young man, twenty-one years of age, was brought before Mr. Hardwick, charged with burglariously breaking into the premises occupied by M. Jullien, 214, Regent-street, and stealing therefrom two silver cornets, two flutes, and other musical instruments, of the value of one hundred pounds, the property of Messrs. Chappel and Beale. The burglary was effected at an early hour on Sunday morning. The whole of the property was identified. Inspector Lester, C division, informed the magistrate that the plan of operations in the committing of this burglary had been most cleverly contrived. A woman, with whom the prisoner cohabited, was placed in an adjoining street to the prosecutor's, in a state of complete intoxication, and refused to walk to the station-house. Hawkes and another constable were therefore obliged to leave their beats and carry her, and during the absence of these constables the entry to the premises was effected. Hawkes heard something exceedingly suspicious as he left his beat, which he mentioned to Mr. Lester, who hastened back, fortunately just in time. The prisoner was committed for trial.

No Song, no Supper.—When Fischer, the celebrated oboe-player, who was remarkable for the oddity of his manners, played concertos at the grand concerts given at the Rotunda, in Dublin, sixty years ago, a noble lord, who had been enraptured with his talent, came up to him, and, after having complimented him, gave him a pressing invitation to sup with a party of distinguished friends the following evening, adding, "You'll bring your oboe with you!" Fischer, who was a little nettled at that sort of invitation, hastily replied, "My lord, my oboe never sups!"

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Louis Schroeder, of Her Majesty's private band, by a sudden attack of cholera. Mr. Schroeder was celebrated as a trombonist in George IV.'s band, and has been ever since in the employment of the Court. He leaves a large number of orphan children, who will be placed under the protection of the Royal Society of Musicians, their father having been a subscriber to that institution. Mr. Schroeder's eldest son is a promising student at the Royal Academy of Music.

M. Jules de Glimes, the fashionable professor and conductor, left London yesterday for Ostend, where he intends passing some time before returning to Brussels.

QUARTET ASSOCIATION.

The sixth and last concert, on the 13th instant, was well attended, and the programme, though too long, was interesting:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet No. 6, in D, MS. | E. J. Loder. |
| Ottet in E flat, Op. 20 | Mendelssohn. |
| Trio No. 4, in D, Op. 70 | Beethoven. |
| Tema con Variazioni, Violoncello, Sig. Piatti | Piatti. |
| Double Quartet No. 3, in E minor, Op. 87 | Spohr. |

We like Mr. Loder's sixth quartet so much, that we should not be sorry to make acquaintance with its five predecessors, and with whatever number of successors it may chance to have. We remember very well a beautiful quartet of his in E flat, which used to be performed at the concerts of the Society of British Musicians; but that, if we are not mistaken, was unnumbered. The present one, in D, is a very ingenious and captivating work, and produced an undeniable impression upon the audience. There is great merit in each of the four movements; but that which seemed to be most readily appreciated was the Andante con Dolore, in B minor, a quaint and charming inspiration, full of grace and tenderness. It was warmly applauded, and the quartet altogether was so successful that we may reckon upon hearing it again next year, if (as we hope) the Quartet Association resumes its "sittings" in Hanover Square. Mendelssohn's octet was played with great spirit, under the leadership of Mr. Cooper, the other performers being Messrs. Sainton, Dando, and Alfred Mellon (violins), Hill and Webb (violas), Piatti and Paque (violoncellos). The scherzo and finale, however, were taken much too slow; and there was a want of delicacy in detail throughout the entire performance. The double quartet of Spohr was better executed. This, both in style and plan, made an agreeable and instructive contrast to the ottet. M. Sainton led the first, Mr. Dando the second quartet. M. Sainton was supported by the members of the Quartet Association, Mr. Dando by the other gentlemen (already named). The trio of Beethoven—which, as Mr. Macfarren has justly hinted, in his analytical programme, bears so strong an affinity to the pianoforte sonata in the same key (Op. 10)—was played with energy by Herr Pauer, Mr. Cooper, and Sig. Piatti; and the solo of the admirable Italian violoncellist proved an effective medium for displaying those qualities of tone and expression in which he is unrivalled.

The entertainment would have been all the better for the omission of one of the long pieces. Fancy a Philharmonic concert with four symphonies!

Mr. Sterndale Bennett has returned from Rotterdam, where, as one of the judges of the Society for the Advance of Music, he had been invited to attend the Great Music Festival.

Dr. Liszt is at present at Brussels, whence he will return to Weimar.

Madame de la Grange is at present at Baden. On returning from St. Petersburg, she stopped at Warsaw, and sang in Norma with considerable success.

M. Horace Vernet, the celebrated historical painter, has accompanied the French military expedition to Constantinople.

Mr. G. J. Versley, late of Sheffield, has been appointed organist of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington's new church at Bowdon, near Manchester.

Jullien has gone to his château in Belgium, at Laaken, near Brussels.

Herr Rosenhain, the composer and pianist, and M. Jacquart, the violoncellist, have returned to Paris.

A Hint for our Theatres.—In the theatre at Munich a soluble glass was applied to the woodwork and scenery, for the purpose of preserving and, as far as possible, rendering them incombustible. The process was first suggested in The Builder, many years ago. This glass was, in fact, a solution of free silica, in caustic alkali; and if the wood is properly seasoned there can be no doubt of the value of the application, especially if it was injected under pressure. Professor Wray's researches into the silica beds of the lower chalk, prove that a solution of this nature could be obtained easily and economically; and the advantages it offers certainly render its application desirable.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE fourth concert and the last of the present season took place on Saturday, the 8th inst., in the Hanover Square Rooms, which were crowded. We annex the programme :—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture (MS.)—"Pagenstreiche" . . | *R. Harold. Thomas. |
| Selection from MS. Opera . . . . | *Charlotte Rowe, Assoc. |
| Fantasia—"Souvenir de Spa." Violoncello, Mr. Schroeder . . . . . | Servais. |
| Aria—"Vanne, disse." Miss Bignall . . | Meyerbeer. |
| Duetto—"Vaghi colli." Miss Buckland and Miss Whyte . . . . . | Winter. |
| Part Song (MS.) . . . . . | *Elisa A. Hughes. |
| Concerto in D minor (1st movement). Pianoforte, Mr. John S. Stone . . . . | Mozart. |
| Cavatina—"In questa tomba." Miss Freeman | Beethoven. |
| Recit. & Aria—"Se m'abbandoni." Miss Ellen Williams . . . . . | Mercadante. |
| Choral Fantasia. Pianoforte, Mr. Adlington | Beethoven. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet—"Les Adieux de Raoul de Courcy." | Moscheles and Mayseder. |
| Chorus (MS.)—"The Gipsy's Life." | Alchymist. *Bolton |
| Recit & Aria—"Che Farò." Miss E. Trickett. | Gluck. |
| Part Song (MS.)—"Love's Whisper." . | *J. Parry Cole. |
| Concerto. Violin, Mr. Loades . . . | De Beriot. |
| Aria—"Come Dolce." Miss Eliza Hughes . | Rossini. |
| Song with Chorus—Miss Ellen Williams . | *Charlotte Carbery. |
| Aria—"Perchè non ho." Miss Tootell. . | Donizetti. |
| Coro—Guglielmo Tell . . . . . | Rossini. |

* Students.

We approve of the above selection, since it enabled the students to "exhibit," and thus helped to carry out the only object which the institutors of these concerts can possibly be supposed to have had in view. If the new compositions were none of them striking, and if the instrumental performances were none of them first-rate, they at least betokened diligence, and diligence is the mother of progress. At any rate, the friends and patrons of the institution were enlightened, and being enlightened were probably satisfied, if not absolutely in ecstasies with their young protégés.

